"2. Wiley advised he had been appointed Press Office for the Support Committee and had as his first act in this capacity obtained from the New York City Police Department a permit to parade on Fifth Avenue on 13 May. At the present time, he is attempting to locate a colored Congressional Medal of Honor Vietnam veteran to appear and speak on the day in question. At the moment, he is attempting to reach Gen. Westmorland to obtain a statement from him regarding the uplift of morale such a parade will have on the fighting forces in Vietnam.

"3. Today Wiley is also attempting to have an audience with George Meany, President, AFL, in order to enlist his assistance in obtaining participants for the parade. Wiley, in addition, is also going to request Mr. Meany to issue a directive to all AFL-CIO unions to send participants and back the parade to its fullest extent. According to Wiley, he has already seen Gleason, President of ILA and ILA has promised its full cooperation.

"4. The Support Committee has already lined up all of the veteran organizations in and around New York City who have promised that they will turn out their personnel in full. Wiley said that he has been in touch with the New York State National Guard, and they are going to furnish skydivers and a fly-over as an added attraction for the parade.

"5. Tomorrow, 27 April 1967, Wiley said that he has an appointment to see Cardinal Spellman to enlist his aid in sending to the parade parochial school children and as many bands as can be accommodated. In addition to the above, Wiley states that he had many of the foreign newspapers alerted and has received some assurance from various foreign groups that they would like representation in the parade.

"6. Finally, Wiley said that if he had difficulty with the military in New York City with respect to his request for a Negro Medal of Honor winner to appear for the parade, he may ask assistance from us. In summary, he said that if this thing bombs, the New Left, including Martin Luther King, Stokley Carmichael, McKissic, et all will never let the country forget it."

When the C/SRS, Paul Gaynor, reviewed this memo, Gaynor - adjacent to the last paragraph - commented, "No. He should deal with Army. There is only one such (colored Medal of Honor winner), a medical corps specialist."

On 1 May 1967, Tighe wrote a formal memo of a discussion with Wiley on that date regarding "A report from Wiley regarding the forthcoming parade in New York on 13 May." The body of the memorandum reflects among other matters that Wiley claimed he had phone contact with John Roach regarding possible White House support for the parade. John Roach was an assistant to Harry McPherson of the White House Staff. "Roach has promised the Committee substantial support."

A brief memorandum by Tighe, dated 3 May 1967, contains as an attachment an article from the 3 May 1967 edition of the New York Times concerning the "Support Our Boys in Vietnam Parade." The C/SRS brought the article to the attention of the Director of Security, Howard J. Osborn, who penned the word "Encouraging" on the transmittal slip. Tighe also wrote a brief memo with an editorial New York Times article attachment, dated 5 May 1967.

Circa 2 June 1967, Wiley prepared a report which he captioned, "Basic Theme of Letter to Ex-Presidents" outlining an effort to further the "Parade" concept.

On 15 June 1967, Tighe formalized information from Wiley, to wit:

> "1. Success has gone to Wiley's head. Since he and Gilmer, the Fire Department Captain in New York put on a successful "Support the Boys in Vietnam Parade," Wiley now wants to stage parades in 120 cities throughout the United States.
> "2. Much of his ambition stems from a remark that Tina is reported to have made to him and to which he agrees. Wiley said that Tina said he could make a million dollars in public relations work if he promoted something in which he was really interested. Wiley stated to me that this is true because he has not had his heart in his recent work for us. He said now he plans to start selling America.

> "3. He is so carried away by his exuberance that he requested permission to use up to and including $1,000 of our funds to establish an office, print up letterheads and use our funds to make long distance telephone calls to the various 120 cities. He plans to call his office, The Committee for Responsible Patriotism. From what I can gather, he has no support from any source but on his own initiative he prepared two letters, one to General Eisenhower and one to former President Harry S. Truman, which I have attached for your information. He requested that through our liaison with General Eisenhower and Harry S. Truman we approach them and solicit their support in his behalf.

At the conclusion of the last paragraph, C/SRS, Paul F. Gaynor, noted, "Yes. We cannot spend our funds for internal propaganda purposes."

There is a record of a 2 January 1970 phone conversation with Wiley concerning Wiley's involvement in pro-Viet Nam activity. "Wiley said had been coordinated at a high level with the Pentagon and he has their OK," regarding prisoner of war activity. The writer noted, "Discussion with Wiley relayed to P.G. I suggested that during next meeting with Wiley, he be told that while we do no (sic) disapproval of his actions in this respect, we cannot approve, sponsor or imply approval in any way. P.G. said 'OK tell him.'"

This record is quoted as follows:

> "Charles Wiley called collect and said his organization's campaign to get humane treatment for prisoners of Hanoi (i.e., signatures to petitions) was going very well and that they had 'tens of thousands' of signatures with the efforts his workers had put out. This activity, Wiley said had been coordinated at a high level with the Pentagon and he has their OK. Through the Pentagon, they have been in touch with the wives. However, they plan to

A blind memorandum regarding Wiley was prepared by CIA Covert Employee : SRS, on 14 April 1970, being directed to Paul F. Gaynor, who noted his concurrence. In total, the memorandum states:

> "Subject (Wiley) telephoned today after having talked with Mr. McCord and advised that he had unfortunately lost the race to be a Congressional candidate from his district. I extended sympathy but personally felt this resolved a problem that could have resulted in his termination should he have been elected a candidate.

informed me that he would then go ahead and file his return to IRS. Mr. Powell, however, of the Covert Tax Committee, did say that they had some questions concerning Subject's expenses under Schedule C. Specifically, whether Subject's trunk line to New York City, cable address, and trips to Washington had been reimbursed by the Agency. I informed Mr. Powell that we had no record of any such reimbursement and that these expenses were assumed by Subject, solely.

"It was indicated by Subject that it was hopeful his throat ailment would soon clear which would make it possible for him to visit Washington within the next week or two.

"It would seem prudent to me, prior to Subject's pending visit, that we prepare something akin to an agreement or letter of instruction which would clearly indicate to Subject that assignments to him, whether oral or not, would eventually be followed up by written confirmation of such assignment. Such a letter of understanding or agreement would, it seems to me, serve to protect Subject as well as the Agency in the event of any further problem or incident which might involve Subject. For example, many of Subject's activities may be construed as domestic political action and as such could be identified as an Agency contractual employee. At the same time, Subject can be assured of our continuing interest in him as a "standby" asset.

COVER

James E. McCord reported in a memo dated 1 May 1956 to the Chief, External Branch/SRS, that he approached Lee Pennington of the Americanism Committee of the American Legion to determine whether he, Pennington, would be agreeable to supporting CIA by providing cover for Wiley's work. Pennington wholeheartedly agreed to do so, stating that:

> "1. Should questions arise from acquaintances or friends as to where the index cards for the 1933-1936 are located, that Wiley can tell them that their typing is being handled by the American Legion Americanism Committee in Washington.
> "2. That in Wiley's work for the coming year in continuing the index of the Daily Worker, that he can advise his friends and acquaintances that the financing and continuation of this work is being handled by the Americanism Committee of the American Legion. Should anyone press him for further details, he can merely refer them to Lee Pennington, who will furnish them with the same story."

On 23 August 1958, Wiley wrote a report entitled "The Problem of a 'Cover'" in which he claims his original cover given him has worn thin and for all purposes is not existent. Wiley cites examples to back up his contention and makes several suggestions for improvement of cover or the establishment of a new one.

Apparently this latter memorandum initiated some action by SRS officers who were handling Wiley since in the fall of 1958. Records indicate that Wiley had begun to build cover as a newsman and holds press credentials in the North American Newspaper Alliance, Indianapolis Star, and National Review and he will attempt to obtain credentials from all newspapers and magazines with which he comes affiliated.

In an effort to provide Mr. Wiley with a more substantial mechanism for operations to increase his journalistic reputation, it was decided that he would set up a news-gathering service based in New York City and secure, where possible, the services of writers or journalists who would feed him news storeis from various points in the world. This would have the advantage of being a legitimate news-gathering service and at the same time possibly being later used as an information-gathering organization for intelligence purposes. Acting under instructions, Wiley, in 1959 or 1960, founded World News Analysis, opened an office in Flushing, New York, had press credentials made and conducted business to a certain extent in the name of this organization. Wiley has pretty much maintained this cover ever since.

PERSONAL ACTIVITY

Since 1966, Wiley's specific assignments for OS have been at a minimum, whereas his personal activities have increased. Much of his personal activity has been or might be construed as having been domestic political action. In 1970, his name was placed as a candidate for U.S. Representative from the 15th district of New Jersey, but he failed to receive the nomination. However, in 1972, he did campaign as an Independent candidate for the U.S. Senate in New Jersey. He received approximately one per cent of the ballots cast in the election won by Senator Clifford P. Case.

He has been active in and frequently the prime mover in a number of organizations of conservative or right-wing persuasion. As such, he has earned considerable reputation as a capable coordinator and organizer through actions in support of "pro-American" and conservative causes. The parades, receptions, petition gathering, demonstrations and other publicity making ventures in which he has participated have run the gamut of support for the Republic of Vietnam, U.S. war policies, strong national defense posture, the Nationalist Chinese, U.S. prisoners in foreign lands and anti-bussing for integration.

Among these organizations with which he has been prominently identified are:

Parents and Taxpayers: an organization opposing bussing for integration. He was doing public relations for this group as early as 1964 and has been periodically involved in this activity with this and other organizations to date.

Free China Support Group and The Committee of 1,000,000: these organizations are pro-Nationalist China and actively opposed the U.S. recognition of the Peoples Republic of China.

Young Americans for Freedom: a conservatively oriented youth group.

Committee to Unite America: as a member in 1971, he was active in its efforts aimed at lowering the level of public hostility toward government policies.

National Committee for Responsible Patriotism (NCRP): as its Executive Director and one of its founders in 1967, he has been its principal member and has been involved with managing its office, raising funds, and charting its activities. Operating principally with volunteers and donated funds, Wiley, who has occasionally received some private remuneration for his services, has organized numerous parades, receptions, motorcades, banquets and programs. He has arranged publicity and made a number of media appearances. In connection with these and other activities he has had close contact with labor leaders, the military and the White House. In April 1973, Wiley received a signed commendation from President Nixon in recognition of his efforts, which states:

> "Dear Mr. Wiley:
> "The overwhelming success of the recent New York parade in honor of our Vietnam veterans was truly heartening, and I know that the greatest share of the credit for this is due to the remarkable efforts of you and your organization. The tribute that was paid to our Nation's servicemen is an inspiring reminder of the pride all Americans feel for those who gave so much in the cause of freedom. I am sure I speak for citizens throughout the country in expressing deep appreciation for your unselfish dedication of time and talent to this patriotic project.

TERMINATION

During the course of the reorganization of the Office of Security, it was decided that the Security Research Staff would be abolished. This decision led to the preparation of a memorandum for the Director of Security from the Chief, Security Staff, dated 1 June 1973, captioned "Request for Director of Security Assessment Regarding Continuance of Functions and Possible Replacement." The last paragraph of this memorandum stated:

> "For immediate planning purposes, to fulfill the early deadline already established, it would be appreciated if you would review the attached outlines of existing functions and indicate your desires regarding the function (continue, continue with low priority, discontinue) and where you wish any retained functions to be placed in the reorganization structure. In the latter instance, I have attempted to indicate the more likely options for this to facilitate your assessment."

On 4 June 1973, the Director of Security indicated that "Special Access Sources" (Charles W, Lee P.) should continue on a low priority and be transferred to the Operational Support Branch.

On 8 June 1973, CIA Cover Employee (SRS), in a memorandum to the Chairman, Clearance Division Implementation Committee, OS/PSI, reorganization subject "Research Branch, Clearance Division, OS/DD/PSI, Implementation" noted that Special Access Source Wiley had been approved to be continued, but on a low priority basis and transferred to the Operational Support Branch.

Shortly after the implementation of the reorganization of the Office of Security on 1 August 1973, John Dempsey, Chief, Research Branch, verbally discussed and reviewed with Edwal Jones, Chief, Clearance Division, the disposition of certain SRS functions still in the possession of the Research Branch, but recommended and approved for transfer to other components of the Office of Security. Among those items discussed was "Special Access Source" Charles Wiley. Messrs. Jones and Dempsey agreed that Wiley was not worth the money spent, performed little or no useful service for the Office of Security, and in fact had done little or nothing to justify his keep. It was further agreed that Mr. Jones would discuss Wiley and make known to the Deputy Director of Security (PSI), Stanton Ense, the agreed assessment of Wiley.

Mr. Jones next informed Mr. Dempsey that a memorandum should be prepared reviewing the Wiley case, making recommendations as to disposition. A memorandum was then prepared by Louis Vasaly of the Research Branch, dated 18 September 1973, which recalled the history of Wiley's association with the Office of Security with a recommendation for termination. The only disagreement was as to timing. Mr. Dempsey recommended 30 June 1974; Mr. Jones 1 February 1974. The Deputy Director of Security (PSI) agreed with the 1 February 1974 termination date and suggested using the same procedure as in the Pennington case.

On 25 October 1973, Louis Vasaly and John Dempsey, both of the Research Branch, met Wiley at the Key Bridge Marriot Motel, Arlington, Virginia, to effect his termination. Wiley was most unhappy with the proceeding although claiming to understand that budget problems and curtailment of domestic activities lead to his separation. He acknowledged that written notice of his termination by his signature; however, he appended that the notice was "signed with the reservation that the terms will be appealed," and stating he would seek redress either with the Director of Central Intelligence or contacts on Capitol Hill.

Wiley was contacted twice more on 6 November 1973, and on 12 February 1974, both times in New York City, by Sidney Stembridge, Deputy Director of Security (P&M) and Louis Vasaly. At the former meeting, Mr. Stembridge politely explained to Wiley that CIA is no longer engaged in matters in which he had been assisting and that there was, therefore, no further need for his services. Mr. Stembridge indicated that the Office of Security might be able to assist financially in a limited sense beyond the 31 January termination date, but that would be the limit of any help.

RECEIVED FROM

On the latter occasion, Mr. Stembridge informed Wiley that he had been awarded a termination bonus of $4,000, which figure, in essence, represented his salary covered forward from 31 January through 30 June 1974. He again objected to OS help, expressing dissatisfaction with his termination, and rejected the terminal bonus. Mr. Stembridge concluded the interview by reminding Wiley that his termination was effective, previously executed Secrecy Agreement was still binding and Mr. Stembridge would be available to him for additional assistance if required. It was definitely made clear to Wiley that the next action is to come from him.

An "information only" memorandum from the Director of Security to the Director of Central Intelligence concerning Wiley was sent on 25 February 1974.

CHARLES WILEY'S CONTACTS AND RELATIONSHIPS WITH JAMES McCORD, LEE PENNINGTON, DONALD SWEANY AND HOWARD HUNT

JAMES McCORD

James McCord was the first representative of the Office of Security to have contact with Wiley and was undoubtedly the driving force behind the Agency's funding of the Daily Worker index. McCord was Wiley's primary case officer from 1956 through January 1962 and during this period, guided and was more or less responsible for Wiley's direction and control.

The nature of McCord's contacts with Wiley after 1962 are not exactly known since McCord left SRS in January 1962 for other positions within the Office of Security. The files do, however, contain the following information which indicate some contact between McCord and Wiley after 1969. The exact nature of these contacts is not definitely known, especially those in May - June 1969; however, the presumption is that Wiley at the direction of McCord may have reported on and photographed anti-Viet Nam War demonstrations in Washington, D. C., during that period and gave the results of his work to McCord who retired from CIA on 31 August 1970.

On 30 May 1969, Cecil Tighe of SRS recorded, "Jim McCord notified me today that Wiley would arrive in Washington, D. C., tonight for a meeting with McCord concerning some Mayday Project that has been assigned to Wiley."

On 5 June 1969, Tighe recorded, "Wiley telephoned from New York City on 4 June 1969 to request that I turn over to Jim McCord the light meter which we drew from Logistics for his use last month in connection with his photography work. Wiley said that Jim McCord planned to meet him in New York City over the week-end." Tighe then called McCord's office and instructed them that Tighe had the meter and it would be available in a package for transmittal to Wiley if someone would come by and pick it up. As of June 1969, no one had called or inquired further into the matter.

RECEIVED

On 6 June 1969, Tighe recorded that Jim McCord advised him on that date that he, McCord, had visited Wiley in New York City on the 4th and 5th of June 1969. McCord gave Tighe photographs from Wiley which had been "entrusted" to Wiley "many years ago" by Morse Allen. The photograph had the following names on the back: Vianamin Belitsky, Fred Borodin, Michel Reschal, and Deak Zoltan.

Memorandum, dated 12 March 1970 by CIA Cover Employee states: "Wiley apparently had telephoned Jim McCord and at the end of their discussion, Wiley, or McCord, had the call transferred to our number."

Memorandum, dated 6 April 1970 by CIA Cover Employee to Chief, SRS states: "I received the attached vouchers and an accounting from Wiley on Saturday. I note that among other things, he spent over $120.00 on film. Should this part of the accounting be referred to McCord, or do we accept it as presented? It is not clear that it meets Agency requirements, as all expenses are not matched up by necessary receipts."

A memorandum, dated 14 April 1970, captioned "Charles Wiley" states: "Subject telephoned today after having talked with Mr. McCord and advised that he had unfortunately lost the race to be a Congressional candidate from his district."

McCord may also have been in contact with Wiley during 1970-71 concerning the monitoring of a book to be written by CIA Covert Agent an ex-Communist and CIA source, who had been involved in certain operations for this Agency (not mentioned in the file) in Mexico. The Agency was rather concerned whether CIA Covert Agent would expose his working for CIA and assigned Wiley to help edit the book. The following excerpts from the file tend to support the above contention:

A memorandum, dated 30 June 1970, captioned "Contact Report, Charles Wiley," states: "Wiley further suggested that, along with Jim McCord, he continue to handle CIA Covert Agent and would brief CIA Covert Agent so as to keep him content until he, Wiley, returns from his European trip." (This very probably refers to CIA Covert Agent

A memorandum, dated 13 January 1971 captioned "Charles Wiley" states: "Says CIA Covert Agent has stated that he now wants to leave in some material (Mexico) that earlier McCord suggested not be included." (Apparently material for book CIA Covert Agent was writing with Wiley's assistance.)

A memorandum, dated 5 February 1971, captioned "Charles Wiley (records problem Wiley reported having with CIA Covert Agent states: "Wiley thinks that perhaps Jim McCord could reason with him if matters don't improve. says McCord isn't with us any more, but Wiley says still has high regard for McCord and might listen. Wiley believes he, Wiley, may be able to settle the problem, but if not, thinks we ought to have McCord talk to "

A similar memorandum, dated 9 February 1971, further outlines Wiley's problem with CIA Covert Agent and states: "Wiley suggested it's time to see what McCord can do with If we bring McCord back in, he ought to discuss the case with Wiley before he has contact with CIA Covert Agent

Another memorandum, dated 12 February 1971 reflects: called McCord. Details of discussion unknown; however, gather that Jim impressed with fact that any mention of the company or personnel by in his book would be at least potentially damaging to activities that are of interest currently."

In a memorandum, dated 19 February 1971, it is reflected that Vasaly "had brief telephone conversation with Wiley this p.m. He understood from CIA Covert Agent that CIA Covert Agent had conversed with Jim McCord recently but did not know the essence of the conversation nor any future plans for contact between them. Advised Wiley that it was our understanding that McCord had again emphasized the need for CIA Covert Agent to leave his Agency contact and any identification of Agency people out of the book's chapter on his 'Mexican Phase' and that apparently CIA Covert Agent had agreed."

In a memorandum, dated 23 February 1971, captioned "Charles Wiley," the problem with reportedly continues: said McCord had in effect okayed what wanted to include in his chapter on Mexican Operations"...

CIA Covert Agent told Wiley that McCord is out of it anyway and that another person is supposed to get in touch with CIA Covert Agent ...."Wiley will call McCord tonight for a briefing on handling the Mexican material. Afterwards, Wiley can stall for a week or so by saying he had to send the material to McCord for perusal and opinion."

A memorandum, dated 9 March 1971, captioned "Charles Wiley" suggests Wiley intended to contact McCord regarding the CIA Covert Agent matter in the near future.

A memorandum, dated 29 December 1971 records a conversation with Wiley concluding with the statement: "He repeated his holiday greetings and was a little concerned apparently that he hadn't had a card from McCord - wondered if anything had happened to him, etc."

On 28 June 1972, Wiley telephoned Louis W. Vasaly of SRS and remarked that he, Wiley, was really surprised at the depth the FBI must be covering this, i.e., Watergate, as he had already been approached and interviewed by a couple of FBI agents based on several long distance calls Jim, i.e., McCord, had made to him. Wiley further stated he only told them, i.e., FBI, Jim was an old friend and occasionally solicited information from Wiley, just as the Bureau did.

On 9 April 1973, Wiley called Louis W. Vasaly to inform him that his wife, Tina, had taken her life. Wiley suggested that Ruth and Jim McCord, Lee Pennington, Morse Allen, Cliff Carrico and Paul Gaynor be advised. Mr. Vasaly called Lee Pennington who in turn would advise Ruth McCord on the afternoon of 9 April.

LEE PENNINGTON

The exact degree of Wiley's knowledge of and association with Lee Pennington is not fully known from records available in the Wiley file. However, it is known that Pennington probably knew Wiley as early as 1954 from Pennington's work with the Americanism Committee of the American Legion and Wiley's index work on behalf of that organization. Wiley has claimed on several occasions to have a close association with Pennington without elaborating as to specific details. For example: On March 1967, Wiley prepared a report which states as follows - "In dealing with Don (Sweaney) and Lee (Pennington), both of whom know of my connection, I avoid any talk of my company activities. At one time, both knew some of my work because we received cooperation from them on certain projects. However, since Don went to his present job there has been little contact.

SEP 30 1975

I talk to Don as I do to everyone else. I ignore any questions or statements with double meanings, surreptitious glances, etc. This is because of two reasons - need-to-know rule and Don is seldom out of earshot of fellow workers. No one overhearing us will learn anything I don't want them to know.

"Since the recent exposure of company activities is the chief topic of discussion, and especially since I am considered by many as an 'expert' on one of the projects, there is little way of avoiding the subject without arousing suspicion. I have always taken the same stand, that of a critic - but with qualifications - regarding the area of my knowledge. Under the circumstances, it would be quite impossible to take any other position.

"During my discussion with Don, the only company business that was mentioned was the project with which everyone knows I am familiar. It is, therefore, obvious that I could not have said what was reported. I would suggest that someone other than the original source talk to Don. I would also urge that both Don and Lee be reminded not to mention, under any circumstances, their knowledge of me."

DONALD SWEANY

Wiley's knowledge of and association with Sweany is not fully known from the Wiley files, nor is there any reference to any such association in the Office of Security file on Donald Sweany. However, it can be presumed, based upon their mutual association with Lee Pennington at the American Legion, that they probably have known each other since 1954. Other than Wiley's comment concerning Pennington and Sweany, previously mentioned, there is nothing else from Wiley concerning Sweany.

RECEIVED FROM

C.I.A.

HOWARD HUNT

There is nothing in the Wiley files to indicate any contact or association with Howard Hunt. Sometime prior to 24 August 1970 and probably between the fall of 1969 and April 1970, Wiley provided SRS with a manuscript entitled "Give Us This Day," which was circulating amongst some New York publishers none of whom wished to publish it because of its controversial nature, i.e. Bay of Pigs operation. The writer of the manuscript was later identified as Howard Hunt. The exact details concerning this incident are not available in the Wiley files.

Further on this theme, on 19 June 1973, Wiley called Louis Vasaly of SRS to say that he had in his hands a copy of Howard Hunt's manuscript "Give Us This Day." Wiley was advised that he had probably forgotten but that we had had access to it several years ago when Hunt submitted it to a different publisher. (Wiley reportedly had made it available at that time). Wiley said that he believed that this publisher was going to take advantage of the recent publicity (meaning Watergate apparently) and, of course, bring it out under Hunt's true name. Wiley was told that we (SRS) had no interest in his copy and that he could return it to the contact who made it available to him. There was no further discussion on the matter.

The above is the extent of references to Howard Hunt in the Wiley files.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Thursday, June 19, 1975

United States Senate,
Select Committee to Study Government.
Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities,
Washington, D. C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:20 p.m., in Room S.123, The Capitol, Senator John G. Tower, presiding.

Present: Senators Tower (presiding), Baker and Mathias.

Also present: William Miller, Staff Director; Frederick A. O. Schwarz, Jr., Chief Counsel; Charles Kirbow and David Aaron, Professional Staff Members.

Senator Tower. Mr. Angleton, I understand that you came on very short notice. And I appreciate your accommodating the Committee.

YOu will have to be sworn.

Would you rise, please, and raise your right hand?

Do you solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give before this committee is the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Angleton. I do.

Senator Tower. Counsel, you may proceed.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES ANGLETON

Mr. Schwarz. I would like to first get your name and address on the record.

Mr. Angleton. James Angleton, Arlington, Virginia.

Mr. Schwarz. Just some procedural matters. You have a right to counsel, you understand that?

Mr. Angleton. Yes, I understand it.

Mr. Schwarz. And if at any time you want to stop to obtain counsel you have a right to do that. And if you wish to claim any of your Constitutional rights you have a right to do that, you understand those things also, do you?

Mr. Angleton. Yes, I understand them.

Mr. Schwarz. You were employed at the CIA for what period of time?

Mr. Angleton. From the beginning until December, the end of December.

Mr. Schwarz. 1974?

Mr. Angleton. 1974.

Mr. Schwarz. And were you the Chief of Counterintelligence at the CIA for that period?

Mr. Angleton. I was.

Mr. Schwarz. For that entire period of time?

Mr. Angleton. No, from 1954.

Mr. Schwarz. Were you also responsible for relations with Israeli intelligence agencies?

Mr. Angleton. That is correct.

Mr. Schwarz. Can you briefly state the connection, if any, between your counter intelligence work and the Israeli work, or put even more generally, how did you happen to have both those jobs?

Mr. Angleton. Well, if I could ask you some clarification, are we addressing ourselves here in terms of this meeting to the Szulc business, or are we trying to take up everything?

Mr. Schwarz. No, we are not going to try to take up everything. We may try to take up a few things beyond the Szulc business. What we are trying to do --

Mr. Angleton. I can direct my answers to you better if I know more where we are going.

Mr. Schwarz. We are going to the Szulc business, but it it would be helpful to have a few background first.

Senator Baker. If I may say so, so that Mr. Angleton will not be taken by surprise, there are one or two things that I would like to discuss. The nature of that material would be similar to what you have already discussed with Rockefeller, having to do with the Oswald situation and other things.

Mr. Angleton. Well, to begin with, I went into OSS in 1943, in 1943 from the infantry. And then Iwas assigned to an embryonic counter intelligence unit under General Donovan. My immediate chief was James R. Murphy, who had been a protegee and obtained his law degree in General Donovan's office. And he is a practicing attorney here in Washington. And he was Chief of X-2, which was the counter intelligence. And during that time a number of us were put together who had never had any experience in the subject. And that included people such as Jonnie Oaks, who was the head of the editorial page of the New York Times, and Ben Wells, and a tremendous cross-section of American life.

And therewas a training intensive in this country, and I was sent to London. And the purpose of that was to absorb the British experience, and more important, the breaking of German codes.

The breaking of the German codes, which is relevant to our activity, was really done in England. And by way of digression, the Germans were using a receiver machine called

NBR

Enigma, the blue prints of which were originally obtained by a Frenchman. And I might add that the Frenchman never received credit for it. And yet that perhaps was the most single important breakthrough of the entire war. And he had obtained it about eitht to nine or ten years prior to the outbreak of war, when it was non-operative. And he had the prescience to know that the systems could only be one thing, that it would be operative in a time of war.

I give this digression simply to point out that the fruits of that breakthrough would first go to the military and the military operations. And the counter intelligence use of it would be the bottom of the list of priorities, in one sense.

But it would mean that a compromise of the material in any fashion to the Germans would destroy the military uses. And during the war or when the Germans went into the war, they brought it up from 10 percent recovery to about 100 percent.

And I believe it was in the neighborhood of some 22,000 operational messages from the German high command. I know the Battle of Tobruk was fought on six intercepts.

So our job was to make use of the counter intelligence for the purpose of playing back German agents to their high command. And this was an elaborate deception. And when the war ended I would say that 99 percent of all reporting agents that the Germans had were under our control. And in fact when many of the German hierarchy tried to escape to the west under aliases, their only point of contact for most documentation and money was to our agent under control. And it was called the Safe Haven program.

So London was in a sense a staging area with full access to British, or the fruits of British activity, going back through their entire history. And it was the advance headquarters for General Donovan, and Mr. Murphy.

I was then sent to Italy in 1943. And I took over the counter intelligence for Italy, the OSS, AFHQ, Allied Forces Headquarters.

Subsequently I became the Chief of OSS Italy. And I want to say that my work then became more broad in terms of espionage and all the other branches of OSS. And I re-established the counter intelligence services. And I brought the French back into existence, particularly the man who originally acquired the code, and who worked on it for many years. And by this time it was shifted to the Saud! Saudi bloc.

I left Italy in 1947 or 1948 and came back, and was discharged and went into the Agency immediately. And during the period I was in the Agency, of course, I had both agent operations, long distance operations, and counter intelligence, and some sabotage, black propaganda, infiltration.

And probably the first overnight operation that there was, which was known as Plan Hope, which is simply putting the Italians in an airplane and having them fly over to the Roumanian border and make very primitive photographs of the whole region.

And I was sent back to the Air Force. And then I had code operations, embassy penetrations, and so on.

So, in a sense the resuscitation of the Italian service, Army and Navy, Air Force, and the Minister of the Interior, was American rehabilitation. And I am not going to go into the details of the political situation. There was the civil war in Greece, and the revival of the international Brigade and in fact the Soviets had built up, when they were not fighting the war, in the post-war period, assassinations, and instability.

And throughout this we had very close supervision from Mr. Murphy, and General Donovan. And we had special interest in the Vatican, and what was happening in Berlin behind the Curtain.

And the then acting Secretary of State for the Vatican, Montini, who is the present Pope. And so there was much to do through our channels, and General Donovan, with Montini, the Pope, who is now the Pope, one of the basic problems was the cold war. We did not buy the cold war, it came to us and we worked with the Germans, and as we broke down the opposition, we began to find that we were not getting the Germans, we were getting the Soviets.

But the penetrations and the operations which we ran during the military phase began to take on a character of their own in the civilian phase in the very long term Soviet objectives against the U.S. in particular, and against the allies.

And then I got into all fields of labor, subversion, illegal immigrants, and then revolution. I was in Greece. And our penetrations at that period were fairly high level and sophisticated, because of the reaction to Stalin.

And as the Soviet troops occupied new territories, it was faced with these ambiguities, the defectors coming over to us at very high levels.

And in the course of this, of course, was the Israeli immigration. Technically we were still a part of AFHQ, which was a combined and Allied Headquarters. And the British desires were that our activities be directed in supporting their responsibilities in the Middle East, and, therefore, to prevent the immigration.

And I think the only policy cable that was ever received during that period was one we sent to Mr. Murphy, and through General Donovan to the President. That was where we exercised our influences on the Italians to prevent immigration. And they addressed themselves to this issue, and they came back with an ambiguity, but it leaned toward the general proposition that we should not discourage the British nor hurt the British directly, but we should not interfere with the Italians to support the British position.

And so my dealings were with Admiral Maugeria, who had been Chief of the Italian Naval Intelligence, but was then the Commanding Admiral of the Turanian Fleet generally south, where all these illegal immigrants collected and were sent down.

And then they blew up the Irgum, and blew up the British embassy in Rome, who were my opposite numbers. And the man with whom we had set up as the Italian intelligence through the rest of the Israelis -- we had the members of the group, and then we had the dilemma again as to whether we turned them over to the British authorities, and so on.

And we were in a position to make decisions one way or the other. And eventually we came down on the side of releasing them.

And there is so much more of it. I am trying to keep the thread of it.

Mr. schwarz. So you developed some kind of a relationship, perhaps a friendly relationship, with persons connected with the new State of Israel or the hoped-for state of Israeli back in the 1940's?

Mr. Angleton. That is right.

7600011415

Mr. Schwarz. And was there any other significant reason why you kept the Israeli account, if that is the right expression?

Mr. Angleton. There wasn't one after I left there, nor was there one here in Washington.

But the other side of the Israeli problem was that you had thousands coming from the Soviet Union. And you had the Soviets making use of the immigration for the purpose of sending illegal agents into the West, and breaking down all the travel control, identifications and so on.

And so there was both a security problem and a political problem. And one of my men married, I might say, the head of the Zionist movement in Italy, the underground. So I had a connection to this man. He was very important.

So,coming back to Washington, I was Special Assistant to Colonal Donald H. Galloway, who was head of the clandestine side and covered the world, on all sides of clandestine activity.

And subsequently I was Chief of Operations for Espionage.

And in 1954 I had a special operational unit, and was made head of the counter intelligence.

Mr. Schwarz. In the period beginning in 1954 and lasting until 1974, when you left the Agency, did you have any relationship -- is the Israeli account the wrong way to say it?

NBR

Mr. Angleton. It is all right. It is as good as any other.

Mr. Schwarz. Did you have any relationship with the Israeli account?

Mr. Angleton. No. That began in 1951. There was no relationship between the Agency and the Israeli intelligence.

Mr. Schwarz. You mean at all, or prior to 1951.

Mr. Angleton. There wasn't any from 1947 -- 1946 on.

Mr. Schwarz. Then it began in 1951. And all I am trying to establish, and not spend a lot of time with it, is, do you have any relationship with Israel, Israeli intelligence, or the Israeli account on behalf of the Agency between 1951 and 1974.

Mr. Angleton. It was resonstituted in 1951. And I was the negotiator of the arrangement. The Mayor of Jerusalem, Pete Teddy Kollek, was at the other end of the negotiation. He was stationed in Washington. But during the Jewish Agency period he was head of the intelligence in Turkey, during the war and prior.

Mr. Miller. How was that agreement negotiated?

Mr. Angleton. It was negotiated by finding waat dis we have in common. It was reviewed by Admiral Hillenkoetter, who was then Director. And he was to be succeeded by General Walter Bedell Smith. And the decision was made during the war that Bedell Smith was to take over, and Allen Dulles return to this activity, that we would go ahead and re-establish a relationship. And after a lot of bureaucratic problems, they gave me the account.

Mr. Miller. What ws the nature of the arrangement that was agreed upon between the two services?

Mr. Angleton. In most simplistic terms, they were informed that we would not work with them against the Arabs, that we would work with them on Soviet intelligence and Soviet bloc intelligence and communism, where it existed.

Mr. Schwarz. Did that agreement -- which I take it was more flexible that -- but did it remain in effect throughout the period of your service with the Agency?

Mr. Angleton. More or less.

Mr. Miller. Was this agreement in the form of a paper?

Mr. Angleton. Paper and operations, discussion.

Mr. Miller. And under whose authority was the agreement made?

Mr. Angleton. Under the authority of the Director of Central Intelligence, and the Prime Minister of Israel on the other side.

Mr. Miller. And this involved the exchange of resources of both countries?

Mr. Angleton. The term "resources" is not quite correct. Everything except their own people. It was giving up papers and signals, communications intelligence, and all the other products of intelligence action.

7600011413

Mr. Miller. So the Director of Central Intelligence was aware of the agreement. Was the President?

Mr. Angleton. The President was aware of it. And the Secretary of State was the brother of the Deputy Chief of the CIA, and eventually was very much involved.

Mr. Miller. Where is a record of this agreement kept, as an instrument of the U.S.?

Mr. Angleton. The internal papers would be in the Agency. The letters, copies of the letters from Ben Gurion to the President or to the Secretary of State I assume are still in the Agency. I dealt with other departments in connection with Africa, and so on, underdeveloped areas.

If you are speaking as to whether there was a representative treaty which was cleared -- and people wanted these things cleared -- I don't think there were any clearances obtained from the Hill.

Mr. Miller. Was it regarded as an obligation or a commitment from the U.S. to Israel on certain matters?

Mr. Angleton. When you use the word U.S. while you may use it as contracting officers and all that, there was very little reduced to writing. And it is a custom of intelligence that intelligence supersedes writing. And there have been very few directors to my knowledge that would put their pen to hand to sign an agreement to some understanding. It is based on a fiduciary relationship and common understanding.

So, these were all understandings that were generated by events. WE had the arrest of the nine doctors, and the pogrom in Russia. And obviously you didn't go through a lot of bureaucracy, it was there for everyone to see. And it had a direct impact on the question of immigration of agents, and everything else that goes along with it. And I think that characterizes any good operation.

Mr. Miller. How was it possible for succeeding directors of the intelligence agency to understand what the agreements were between, in this case the Israeli intelligence service and the U.S. Intelligence Service?

Mr. Angleton. Very simple. They saw the production to begin with. And they met with directors or the head of Israeli intelligence. And they met with Ambassadors and prime ministers. And they were very much involved.

Mr. Schwarz. Just one more background question and then we will turn to the principle subject.

Following through on the subject of Israel up to your departure in 1974, is there any connection between your departure and handling of Israel? And if there is, what is the connection?

Mr. Angleton. Well, I think I have said it all to the 76000111419

~~commission -- I don't know how wisely. You can always get different information from different people. But Colby told them, so I would like to give him the benefit of the doubt on it. But over a period of time Colby -- who is not my cup of tea professionally or in any other way, and in my view is on the negative side of life -- and Dr. Schlesinger, before he went to Defense, said that Colby was the only other person on Watergate. So you have got certain persons who were prominent. And there was the negative aspect of self-inspection, and inferiors reporting on superiors, until they came through the snake pit.~~

~~And in the course of all of this there was time when he assumed the authority, and in total contrast to Schlesinger, he began to regard the Israeli account as something where we had to open the windows and let the air in. And he used phrases such as, we must help out Henry and a few other things.~~

~~Any position was that it was a political relationship, and that we were not bound, or should not be bound, to using the Agency on tactical ventures when we had relationships which had strategic implications.~~

~~But one must rembmer that there are still three million Jews in the Soviet Union. And the relationship is the only place where you do it with high level agencies who work for ideology and do not work for money. So it is unique.~~

And my second point was that everything should be run on the grounds of need-to-know, and should not go into the Arab Division until there was peace in the area. There was no identity of interest or fundamental interest between Israelis and an example is 500 Polish intelligence officers who were Jewish who immigrated to Israel. They knew more about Polish intelligence than the Poles. And the Soviets had worked with the Poles in the West, and trained them in Moscow, where you had the cohesion of 27 bloc services working together through their own congress party apparatus into a collective with Moscow.

And most important, our job was to preserve the integrity of the immigration from the bloc, because the problem of escape to Israel is a religious problem, it is not a political problem. There could not be a prime minister who would survive the day if he did not go along with the idea of the return.

And, therefore, there is a certain kind of parallelism, you might say, between handling the communications intelligence during the war and where a low priority makes use of it and endangers the whole with the question of immigration, where the fruits of that immigration come to this government.

(Recess.)

Senator Tower. Will you go ahead and resume the questioning?

7600011421

NBR

Mr. Schwarz. You were in the middle of an answer, I believe.

Mr. Angleton. What I am trying to say is that immigration is a source of very high level information, and it is very comparable with its problems as communications intelligence during the war when the lives of men were involved in troop movements.

And, therefore, the idea of opening up the doors and things, and so on, to me seemed absolutely contrary to the spirit, and what had been going on for 22 years.

And during that time we had obtained, for example, by way of production, Khrushchev's secret speech which practically created revolutions in Hungary and Poland.

I was just simply reiterating the problem of the immigration. This idea of opening the doors and letting the light in, and breaking down compartmentation, and breaking down the need to know, would inevitably put in jeopardy the immigration, if the Soviets should learn the extent of the activities.

Now, the production ran from everything, such as the secret speech of Khrushchev's against Stalin, it ran into the first hard information on nuclear explosives, and it ran into practically the whole gamut. And I think in a certain period of time it resulted in over 22,000 reports dealing with the Soviet bloc which were unique. And much of this came from, say, an engineer that had a factory, or what not, in other words, it had a very direct bearing on our own R&D and our own defense budget.

Now, our own way of handling it was to give false attribution, reports, so that if the report was ever compromised, it would not compromise the operations, or the immigration. And, therefore, that was one of the issues.

On the other issue was that to politicize the Agency, as I stated, on the tactical problems, which are going to be with us for a long time.

And to break down the fiduciary relationship-- which is after all a personal business -- all the men I have had were men who stayed in it and came back to headquarters and went back to Tel Aviv, they went to the National Security Council, and went back to Tal Aviv, et cetera, a small group of men. It was probably the most economical operation that has ever been devised in the U.S. Government. I don't think there was more than 10 people that were hired in the same process.

I started from the south side with two Jewish men who worked with me during the war. He sent them over as ordinary people under cover to establish the working hours of things, and I brought over six others and put them through some months of training, outside of the structure.

And one of them rose to be Deputy Chief of the Service. But it is a part of the whole fiduciary business.

NBL

For example, we had certain political overtones where we were used in an affirmative way under President Eisenhower. He wanted to make a real attempt to see if there could ever be a peace in the Middle East. And with Alan Dulles, his brothers, and myself, and Kermit Roosevelt, we put up a plan to bringing in Robert B. Anderson, who had been Assistant Secretary of the Defense.

And he was accredited as special emissary from the President. And I handled his base to Israel, which was secret, black, as we call them, to see Ben Gurion -- and Shaffetz was the Foreign Minister -- and Kollek, who was in the Prime Minister's office, and later Mayor.

And we took him back to Rome. And Kermit Roosevelt would take him over to see Nasser. And this went on back and forth on many trips, until the conclusions were reached that there could not be any peace.

But those types of initiatives could be done without publicizing or without destroying it.

Mr. Schwarz. In any event, some dispute in connection with these Israeli matters underlay your dispute with Mr. Colby, which underlay your leaving the Agency?

Mr. Angleton. Yes. He offered me jobs or what not. But these are matters of principle, as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Angleton, you described the fiduciary relationship. Were there points along the way where the U.S.

NBR

interests and the interests of Israel were in conflict?

Mr. Angleton. We never got into that. Of course, you only had to read the paper every day to see that.

Mr. MIller. But how did they come up ? You say they didn't come up at all?

Mr. Angleton. Of course, they came up. There wasn't anything secret about it.

Mr. Miller. But what examples can you give?

Mr Angleton. The recent visit of Rabun is a classic case. The so-called reassessment of the Middle East. The Times has better accounts of it than the Agency has.

Mr. Miller. I mean at your level.

Mr. Angleton. I don't quite get the thrust of your question.

Mr. Miller. What I am saying is that you had an unusually close relationship --

Mr. Angleton. It was not unusual. I have had it with many chiefs of services in 80 different countries, so it is not any more unusual than a lot of others. The Frenchman who got the code is closer to me than the Israelis are.

Mr. Miller. Similar to the relationship --

Mr. Angleton. I don't like the word unusual, because to me it is usual.

Mr. Miller. Delete that. If your working relationship with the Israelis, where you had conflict of U.S. interests --

Mr. Angleton. Give me an example of what you regard as a conflict.

Mr. Miller. Can you thing k of any?

Mr. Angleton. You are the one who is posing it. I think a lot of these things are illusions. But what would you regard as a conflict? I don't think there is a conflict regarding the Soviet Union or the balance of power. I don't think there is any question in my view --

Senator Mathias. May I suggest Suez as a conflict that might have posed --

Mr. Angleton. Which Suez are we talking about?

Senator Mathias. The Israeli-British-French attack on Suez.

Mr. Angleton. The U.S. Government position was that we had no commitments with Israel and we had no binding treaties. We had two allies that had just fought a war with us, and both of whom betrayed us. And Eden's head went with it. And that is very clear and well documented. The Israelis were not blamed because we didn't have any agreements with them, they had violated no agreements. The British had agreements. The British tried to give us a deception plan, should they have naval vessels in the Mediterranean, and they were there for a different purpose.

Mr. Kirbow. Let me see if I can make a point on just a common sense level.

NBR

Senator Mathias. Let me follow this Suez question a little more closely.

That is a point at which the U.S. policy differed from the policy which was adopted by British and France and Israel?

Mr. Angleton. Correct.

Senator Mathias. And would a situation of that sort confront you with difficulties in your operations because --

Mr. Angleton.There have always been crises with them.

Senator Mathias. And how do you resolve a crisis of that kind?

Mr. Angleton. You don't see the fellow for a few days.

Mr. Miller. I see.

So your method was to deal with them on those matters --

Mr. Angleton. A total neutrality of interest.

Mr. Schwarz. Could we turn to the subject of atomic technology?

Mr. Kirbow. Excuse me. I think for the record we should make it clear, I think Mr. Angleton has had an interview with the staff, and he has been made aware that a witness testified here under oath as to certain matters, and that that is the approach that we are going to take now.

Is that clear?

Mr. Schwarz. I want to ask the question generally first and then come to the other testimony.

Mr. Angleton, has the Central Intelligence Agency directly or indirectly transferred any atomic technology or know-how to Israel?

Mr. Angleton. From my knowledge, the answer is an absolute no. That would be one of those grounds that Mr. Miller was referring to, where the Agency, in the person of Mr. John McCone, had some of the sharpest words probably in the history of the relationship.

Mr. Schwarz. You mentioned those at lunch, and you might just put that on the record.

Mr. Angleton. I want to state that to my knowledge the Israelis themselves never raised the question of their atomic capability or their atomic interests, with one or two small exceptions, which was where there had been somebody who had been PGed from the U.S., were he ever to get his visa to come back and attend some meeting, something on that level.

Mr. Schwarz. I want to make sure that I have asked the question broadly enough.

Did the Agency take any steps to make available to the Israelis any personnel who had knowledge about atomic matters.

Mr. Angleton. None whatsoever.

Mr. Schwarz. And specifically with respect to a man -- let's go off the record for a minute.

(Off the record.)

Mr. Schwarz. Back on the record.

Do you know a scientist called Dr. Wilfred Mann?

Mr. Angleton. I do.

Mr. Schwarz. Does he have any knowledge of atomic matters?

Mr. Angleton. Yes. He was one of the originators.

Mr. Schwarz. To your knowledge was he ever put in contact with any Israeli person directly or indirectly?

Mr. Angleton. Not to my knowledge, never.

Mr. Schwarz. Do you know a journalist called Tad Sculc?

Mr. Angleton. I do.

Mr. Schwarz. Did you meet with him sometime this year?

Mr. Angleton. In March.

Mr. Schwarz. Where did you meet him?

Mr. Angleton. At the house of Ben Wells.

Mr. Schwarz. And did the three of you then go for dinner some place?

Mr. Angleton. That is correct.

Mr. Schwarz. At that meeting did you discuss --

Mr. Angleton. We went as Sculz's guests somewhere to dinner.

Mr. Schwarz. At that meeting did he raise with you the subject of the transfer of atomic technology from the CIA to Israel?

Mr. Angleton. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. What did he say to you?

Mr. Angleton. They prefaced his remarks by stating that he was not a professional scientist, but he was a Jew, and so was his good friend Hersh. And they had some strange ESP working in which one said to the other, have you heard what I have heard, and the other one said, I think I may have heard what you have heard. And then this thing went back and forth, and then it finally devolved, one said, did it have anything to do with Angleton, and the other one said yes, and it went on to where they discovered that each had had separate sources that I had been instrumental in acquiring plutonium for the Israelis, and as a follow-up, to help the Israelis on their know-how by sending Dr. Mann to Israel clandestinely. And they both had their stories, and they had a gentleman's agreement.

And the matter was published without notifying the other.

Mr. Schwarz. And what did you say in response?

Mr. Angleton. My response to him was, it was wrong. But he had not identified the scientist. So, I asked him --

Mr. Scharz. When you say it was wrong --

Mr. Angleton. His statement was wrong.

Mr. Schwarz. So you denied the story that atomic technology had been transferred to Israel?

Mr. Angleton. I said, it is wrong.

Mr. Schwarz. I just want to make sure what it is. It does constitute a denial.

Mr. Angleton. His story was wrong.

Senator Baker. Let me ask you, Mr. Angleton, do I understand by that that you mean every material aspect of the story was wrong and incorrect?

Mr. Angleton. I didn't mean quite that. I was more interested in the fact that, one, he knew Tad Szulc -- I am sorry, that I knew Hersh -- and that Hersh told him that his source was the man who gave him the December 22 article, and whether he "had been set up" --

Senator Baker. What December 22?

Mr. Angleton. That is the time they kicked off the entire furor on the past espionage thing.

Senator Baker. Against American citizens?

Mr. Angleton. Yes.

Senator Baker. Did they do that once?

Mr. Angleton. No, because neither disclosed their independent sources to the other.

Senator Baker. The point I am trying to clarify for my own purposes is that the conversation you just related you said was wrong.

Do I understand you to mean that every material aspect of that statement was wrong?

Mr. Angleton. Yes. But I didn't know my motives on a lot of questions that I had with him. Because this was the first live human being I saw that had actually allegedly heard from Hersh. And he thought they had been set up -- and that was the biggest agony in the Agency.

Senator Baker. And the person who set him up --

Mr. Angleton. Hersh told him, according to Szulc, that he was scared of the story, because this was his source on the December 22 article. And therefore he wondered aloud whether he had been set up.

Senator Baker. Did he say who had been the source of the December 22 information?

Mr. Angleton. Absolutely no.

Mr. Kirbow. Off the record.

(Off the record.)

Mr. Schwarz. I just want to make sure, in your conversation with Mr. Szulc as opposed to your testimony here today on the merits, did you deny to Mr. Szulc that you or the Agency had facilitated the transfer of atomic technology to Israel?

Mr. Angleton. I denied it. But the conversation drifted rapidly, because Szulc was talking about a very great agent that he had in the Agency. And he was bragging about the fact that he had more sources than Hersh had. And then he said, do you know Australia?

And I said, yes, I know Australia.

Does the word Sydney mean anything to me?

R

Yes, he word Sydney does mean something to me.

Do you know sho is bicycling in India?

And Isaid, I am afraid I am not with you.

And he said, Sidney X. And Sidney X is one of our most sensitive employees who retired, and is bicycling in India.

And I give this as an illustration of the cat and mouse business of this whole evening.

And he said he got that from his source.

Now, that man's name is Sidney Gottlieb. And he was the head of our technical services department, which means that there is a cross plant in our business. And the man who was bugging and performing all the hundreds of technical services, has access, unfortunately, to many of our operations.

There is one juncture point in the business where there is a breakdown of compartmentation. And for him to indicate that he knew Gottlieb, and the sources that had been raised in my mind, since I was talking about a scientist, plutonium, atomic energy, and all these matters, that his source might be in our Technical Services Division, which, if he was, he would know everything, or could get into everything.

But I didn't tell him that.

In fact, I expressed little or no interest in his source other than asking him a few questions, is he Jewish, and this or that and so on.

Senator Baker. Could I ask you a question at this point?

Mr. Angleton. Surely.

Senator Baker. What you are relating to me seems to imply that Szulc's information was very, very good on sensitive information?

Mr. Angleton. No. That information, sir, would have been unclassified.

Senator Baker. I am speaking more of the Sidney X Gottlieb relationship.

Mr. Angleton. But he only said that he was bicycling in India. But the way he went about it, do you know Australia, do you know Sidney, do you think this, and so on -- it was that sort of thing.

Senator Baker. Do you think he had a source in India?

Mr. Angleton. It started to worry me, because he was talking plutonium, which was scientific. Gottlieb, before he went to that whole department of his, was transferred to Carl Duckett. And that is the reason Gottlieb left.

Senator Baker. You mean he didn't want to work for Duckett?

Mr. Angleton. That is part of it.

And there are also questions of principle. You take it from one director -- it is lifeblood -- and get it to another director.

Senator Baker. Is this the same Gottlieb who was in charge of processing the photographs that were taken in Dr.

NBR

Fielding's office?

Mr. Angleton. His office would have been.

Senator Baker. Do you know of that situation?

Mr.Angleton. No, except --

Senator Baker. Het me ask you this and I will turn it back to counsel.

Was there any conversation in which Szulc or Hersh talked to Colby about thesematters? Did you ever get any impression that they were implying that Colby was their source?

Mr. Angleton. The only thing that came up is that when I saw Colby yesterday -- which is the first time since December -- he told me that he had bought a theory of mine on Szulc, but he did not look with any misgivings on Hersh. He said that one year before he had seen Hersh about the submarine article, and that had Hersh been a Soviet agent, the Soviets would not have permitted the operation to take place.

And I told him that he was erroneous, that to use that guide was simply not to understand what the game is all about.

And when Philby was stationed in Washington he helped the FBI in working on some communications intelligence which led to the identification of Klaus Fuchs. But in spite of Philby being a Soviet agent, the Soviets were prepared to let Klaus Fuchs go down the drain rather than hurt Philby.

Senator Baker. As an ultimate cover?

Mr. Angleton. Precisely.

He was a more valuable agent. If he had not been uncovered he would have been today Chief of British Intelligence.

In the case of George Blake, who was in the British secret service, he gave to the Soviets one year in advance the entire plans of our so-called Tunnel of Love, that is, the tunnel we built in Berlin -- very elaborate -- to tap all of the Soviet military lines.

Now, even one year in advance, they took no preventive action in order to save George Blake.

Now, what has happened since December 22 to the U.S. intelligence community, in the position that Hersh enjoys, with the prestige and the impact on the U.S. public, it stands to reason that you can't get them to give any baby talk as to what the Soviets would or would not do, when you see something that is the objective from the end of the last war to the present, and destroy the agent.

Senator Baker. Do you think Hersh is a Soviet Agent?

Mr. Angleton. I am not saying that he is a Soviet agent. To begin with, when I went back to see Wells, who was in counter intelligence with me in London during the war, I told him I could not buy Szulc's article regarding Hersh, the alleged meetings and that they had certain sources, and the introduction of Dr. Mann's name and so on simply didn't hold water, and something was wrong.

But Dr. Mann is a suspect Soviet agent, a friend of

NBR

7 6 0 0 0 1 1 4 3 7

Burgess, and a friend of Philby. And the home background which is a factual thing, is only known to very few services. And for him to introduce it into this scenario gave it a taint that lifted it out of just simply gossip.

How would he ever know the name Mann?

Senator Baker. That is what I was driving at, is it fair to infer from that conversation that there was an indication that Szulc had a very good source within the Agency?

Mr Angleton. Either that, or the way I look at it, I am prepared to admit, because of an article he wrote, in the cryptonym Easy Chair in the Oval Office of the White House.

Senator Baker. Talking about the bugging situation?

Mr. Angleton. That crytonym Easy Chair was the most s sanctified word in the Agency. And what it dealt with was -- it was called Easy Chair for the simple reason that if the Soviets were blocked, people abroad were moving into this house or this office.

Senator Baker. Off the record.

(Off the record.)

Mr. Angleton. But let me put it this way.

He said, I called Ben Wells to see you, because I wanted a safe place in which to raise all this stuff.

Mr. Schwarz. This is Szulc?

Mr. Angleton. This is Szulc.

NBR

7600011433

~~And in fact, I think they had been talking sometime before I arrived.~~

~~And with Wells' background, the New York Times abroad, nd Szulc's time abroad, apparently --~~

~~Senator Tower. Excuse me. Will you go back just a bit here? You raised a question of how did Szulc know the name of Mann and know about his association with Philby and Burgess.~~

~~Mr. Angleton. Yes.~~

~~Senator Tower. You raised the question but did not answer it.~~

~~How do you think he could have known it?~~

~~Mr. Angleton. This is what bothers me, that he is either unwitting, or has a source who has knowledge and is working for an opposition, or he has a source who is mischievously exploiting him by, who may be retired, and does know some facts, and therefore it is 10 percent true and 90 percent false.~~

~~I would assume his financial situation is such that he is very hungry. I mean that is my general observation, and that he is having a rough time of saving a very lucrative contract with Penthouse for supplying X number of articles. I mean, that is my general feeling.~~

~~Senator Tower. Let's go back a moment. You say that he could have come by knowledge of the Mann-Burgess-Philby relationship through an external source?~~

NBR

76000114 3

Mr Angleton. Yes, either witting or unwitting.

Senator Tower. The KBG knows this, and, therefore, it could have come directly or indirectly from that source?

Mr. Angleton. That is right.

Senator Tower. That is a possibility?

Mr. Angleton. That is a possibility. And he has some brains about the fact that he does have contacts -- he knows the Roumanian Ambassador better than anybody in Washington, and he knows the Poles, and he knows this. And it goes on and on.

So, he is dealing with bloc people who will be reporting back to their headquarters very detailed -- assuming he is totally innocent, and given his position in Washington, Szulc would be a normal, witting or unwitting, channel for them in disinformation and for any other motive.

So, as to whether he is himself knowing what he is doing, whether he is a dupe, is an outstanding question. But for a man who goes and socializes with the black --

Mr. Schwarz. Did Mr. Szulc ever work for the Central Intelligence Agency?

Mr. Angleton. I don't know. He may have for some of our people in the field.

Mr. Schwarz. Did he ever provide services?

Mr. Angleton. I have heard that, but I haven'tlooked at the dossier for the last ten years. He came to our attention basically in connection with the leaks in the Bay of Pigs.

Senator Tower. Will you go back to the Szulc-Wells-Angleton meeting?

Mr. Angleton. This basically -- the thing that began to really disturb me was, number one, his comment, as I said before, tha Hersh told him that the thing that really bothered him about this story was that it came fromthe same source who gave him the 22nd of December, without identifying him, and the fact that when he was going through this business that he had the best sources in the Agency, and that was Sidney Gottlieb, and here was a scientific allegation, plutonium and the scientist and all the rest of them.

And again, if he did have a live source in that area, that means he would have a live source across the board.

When he asked me about my successor, I told him that I was not prepared to respond to that, that every new man was entitled to one free shave.

And he says, I know your successor. And I don't think he actually mentioned the name. But in this article which has just come out he mentions him with his biographical sketch.

Senator Baker. Who was your successor?

Mr. Angleton. George Kalaris.

I had never known him before.

So obviously he was talking to me as somebody disaffected from the Agency, et cetera.I mean that is my view of why he was doing all this. Whereas my concerns were quite different than his.

Mr. Schwarz. Do you think it is possible, because of those different concerns, that your effort to deny the story did not get across to Mr. Szulc?

In other words, you are saying you had some concerns that dealt with the scientist being involved, that dealt with the newspaper source, that dealt with Easy Chair, that dealt with the statement that maybe the December 1974 article was inaccurate. And he pursued all these matters with some vigor and interest.

Do you think it is possible that because of that that whatever denial you made of the transfer of atomic parts of thestory didn't get across to Mr. Szulc?

Mr. Angleton. No, I think it got across to him.

Mr. Schwarz. Can you recall your words to him that denied the atomic transfer?

Mr. Angleton. My chief words to him was, I said, do you realize what a thing like this implies, and what it would do, depending on how the media picks it up, in destroying all the efforts in the Middle East?

Mr. Schwarz. But words like that are as consistent with beingtrue as being false?

NBR

Mr. Angleton. They were consistent, but they weren't stated in that fashion. They were stated in the fashion that Dr. Mann is a person who fits within the Philby, et cetera, complex in a false story of this sort, which comes to the British, who pull out a file on Mann, and they read down and go back into the fact of Mann's association with me, Mann's association with Philby, all this stuff of my actions with the Israelis and all that, regardless of what the U.S. Government tells the British or the French, or the Canadians, or the Australians, or the New Zealanders, all of whom have fundamentally the basic information -- it would be a confirmation to them, based on very high level secret information, that the story was true.

Senator Tower. Let me pursue just about three questions here.

Did Szulc specifically ask you whether or not, during the early sixties, fissionable material, along with nuclear technology and technological assistance, was passed to the Israelis?

Did he ask youto confirm or deny that?

Mr. Angleton. I can't remember it with precisely that type of precision. The story that he gave was a very lucid, straightforward story without any if's, and's and but's .

Senator Twoer. Did you deny only in part the validity of the question that he asked?

WARD & PAUL

NBR

In other words, if he askedyou about the passage of both fissionable material and technology, did you deny wholly or in part that there had been a passage of fissionable material?

Mr. Angleton. No, I denied his story -- I would like to keep that as his story, something he came and presented. And then when he got down into the other things, which had to do with technology, all I can say is that anyone who follows closely the Nasser, and then later on Sadat accusations against CIA, it is voluminous in terms of their spelling out the sophisticated gadgetry which they discovered, which came from Central Intelligence.

This is a thing that has always concerned us, because in the last war we lost -- and we still do this today, we don't know the extent of this -- we lost some of the installations which we had put in there.

Mr. Schwarz. When you say "we", you mean the CIA?

Mr. Angleton. The CIA -- the Israeli lost entirely --

Mr. Schwarz. When he say we put in there, you mean the CIA put in there?

Senator Baker. What installations?

Mr. Angleton.The line of sight, electronics --

Senator Baker. YOu are not talking about --

Mr. Angleton. I am talking about the signal intelligence. And there was some very sophisticated gear that was put in there. And I want to complete this -- because of the fact that most of the information which we gained from the SAM's, which had a direct bearing on using B-52's in Vietnam, we gained through Israel. We could read a whole lot of the computerizing and so on of those SAM's. And therefore we were prepared to give highly sophisticated equipment to Israel to work against that Russian business in order to transfer the knowledge to Vietnam.

So I told them, I said, yes, we have worked on questions -- we have always helped them out technologically. And I think I made the comment that any piece of gear we ever gave them, that they turned it to a far greater sophisticated use than we had, which was true in many instances.

And they would cannibalize and we would get the product.

But there was no -- so that this is clearcut, there was no attempt to lead him on regarding the nuclear one, because the nuclear one was very clearly stated to him, that the injection of Mann into the story had a certain significance of its own.

And I think Wells will bear me out very clearly on this, that the injection of that could not be magic, it had to come from somebody who is in the intelligence service. I mean that element -- and if this story without the introduction of Mann had been told, it would be just another of the many rumors.

And Senator, there is something I forgot, and I want to get back to it. After the Six-Day War the Soviets sent out a barrage of propaganda in Arabic fto the Middle East from Ardio Moscow that the CIA -- and then mentioned Bill Harvey, who was working for us, and whom I had put in touch with the Israelis during the Cuban business -- had met on a ship with Morris, the Chief of the British Intelligence, who had a background in the war with the Israelis, and had met there and prepared and carried out all the strategic part of the Six-Day War. And this is all PFIS. And there was a tremendous pike of Soviet materials -- they never got much into our media, because it is directed to the Middle East in Arabic, and which obviously they knew.

They used Harveys' name instead of my name, because professionally we were very close, and more important, I had introduced Harvey as the only officer to the Israeli operational people on the Cuban business. And, therefore, it showed they had knowledge of Harvey's, and so on.

The query then raised was whether the penetration was here or was it in Israel.

Mr. Kirbow. Did you express any concern to Mr. Szulc about the use of Dr. Mann's name in this article?

Mr. Angleton. Not Dr. Mann's name. My expression was that if you -- I said that article, false as it is, with the many things injected in it -- I will be very frank with you, I became scared of the thought, because, one, the story of these two journalists was so implausable, and I looked over to Ben a few times -- and I know him well -- and he had absolutely a stoney expression, no expression on his face. And this was something very, very queer, and the whole thing was initiated by him. And that was why I asked Mr. Szulc, did he come to you or did you come to him.

Senator Baker. Did he come to you?

Mr. Schwarz. He came to us.

Senator Tower. Let me ask you one specific question, yes or no.

Did you confirm to Szulc that during the late fifties subsequent to the Suez War that the CIA made available to the Israeli Government technical assistance and the availability of one or more distinguished nuclear scientists or physicists for the purpose of developing atomic weapons?

Mr. Angleton. That is completely false.

Mr. Aaron. Mr. Angleton, did you confirm or deny that to Mr. Szulc?

Mr. Angleton. I am stating that I never made any such statement. And I stayed off of the nuclear business.

Mr. Aaron. So you didn't confirm and you didn't deny, is that correct?

Mr. Angleton. It is very difficult for me to respond to that, because after all, this was a fast-moving discussion covering an awful lot of subject. And furthermore, in the back of my mind was the fact that we had problems with the Israelis in the nuclear field.

Mr. Aaron. What problems were those?

Mr. Angleton. They were very sensitive problems. And I don't think that they really shed any light on things that you are talking about here.

Mr. Aaron. Do you recall a conversation with me and Mr. Schwarz in which, in discussing this same matter, you said you felt under no obligation to either confirm or deny this story with Mr. Szulc?

Mr. Angleton. Yes, I know I used that phrase. There was a denial. And I think that Wells would second the fact that there was a denial. But when I got down to a lot of the other questioning, my thinking was to try to lead him around back into the meeting with Hersh, and lead him back to this source that had to do with Sidney Gottlieb, and so on.

Senator Tower. Are you saying in effect, then, that any questions he raised with you about the transfer of visual material or deeper technology, or manpower, for that matter, to the Israeli Government, was couched in circumlocutry terms of some kind?

Mr. Angleton. I will put it this way.

Senator Tower. That you got no direct questions of that sort?

Mr. Angleton. I would say this to you, Senator. When

7600011413

I left there -- and I think this is a very important point -- first, I will have to explain we went to the restaurant, he invited us to the restaurant, he was insistent on it. And we went there. And here in the restaurant the entire discussion was a recapitulation by him, in a restaurant that was fairly full of people. Hersh was a person who had requested a secret meeting in Wells'house, and then proceeded in a restaurant to regurgitate this entire matter.

Senator Tower. Which restaurant was it?

Mr. Angleton. It was the Sea Catch.

Senator Baker. Did you ever have any impression that it might be recorded, is that what you are driving at?

Mr. Angleton. I don't know. The thought crossed my mind. I looked at him, and he sort of -- he could hide a lot of things.

And so we got back to Wells' house. And it was very late. And he tried to get me to come back to his place. And I told him I just wouldn't do it. And that is how the thing broke up.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Angleton, in your long relationship and position with the Agency, did you ever express your concern to anyone out there that you thought this might have been a setup by a foreign source, or from internally?

Mr. Angleton. What might be a setup?

Mr. Kirbow. That this whole Szulc interview, story and everything else.

Mr. Angleton. I never discussed this with anybody in the Agency until we had this lunch.

Senator Baker. Do you suspect that now?

Mr. Angleton. I do not -- I don't know what to suspect, because I don't have access to files. And I think one has to review a lot of material. I think one has to review Szulc's files.

Mr. Miller. You spoke of that earlier, you described it as a dossier.

Mr. Angleton. Well, I think there is a file on it, a security file. I think he was one of the journalists, the first one, who made a reputation for blowing the whole Bay of Pigs, and so on. And I think the fact that he is foreign-born, and the allegations and so on. And so the Bureau has a similar file. And many of these files are created -- and they get to be accredited to the Pentagon, and therefore a routine security check is made.

Mr. Schwarz. Are you aware of any surveillance of Mr. Szulc?

Mr. Angleton. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Past surveillance?

Mr. Angleton. I don't know. I am not aware of it. As I say, I don't think I have ever seen his file for five or ten years.

NBR

Mr. Kirbow. In your official capacity in the CIA you never had any occasion to cross Mr. Szulc's trail or consider him as a person --

Mr. Angleton. I separated him once in a fight with a friend of mine.

Mr. Kirbow. But nothing in an official capacity?

Mr. Angleton. No.

Mr. Miller. Let me ask another question on this file matter.

Yousaid that to your knowledge there were files on Mr. Szulc. Were there files on other newspapermen?

Mr. Angleton. Yes, there are files on other newspapermen.

Mr. Miller. And other Americans?

Mr. Angleton. A lot of them.

Senator Baker. Hersh wrote a story about -- what did he say -- 7,000 files. Was that right or wrong?

Mr. Angleton. I think it would be many more. I have never counted them.

Senator Baker. How many? A hundred thousand, a million?

Mr. Angleton. Well, when you consider all visa checks -- and we do 500,000 visa checks on foreigners -- and the question of American sponsors and so on -- this thing on all of this is a question of the gradual deterioration of our efficiency, because our staff was cut in half, and we had the problems of the Watergate, and we had all of these things. And so a great deal of this stuff was there, but it wasn't being professionally worked upon.

Senator Baker. You have mentioned the Watergate twice, Mr. Angleton.

Can you shed any light on that period in the Agency's life, the impact that the Watergate investigation had or any involvement of the Agency in any of the so-called Watergate affairs?

Mr. Angleton. Of the Agency itself?

Senator Baker. Or anybody connected with it.

Mr. Angleton. I am sorry, sir, that is a debatable question there, and I want to get it accurate.

What was that again?

Senator Baker. I don't want to narrow it. I want to make it broad.

Mr. Angleton. I want to make sure I understand you.

Senator Baker. There are two parts of the question. One, do you know of any Agency involvement of those who were working in the -- working with the AGency in the Watergate, in your break-in or the preparation for the cover-up or the attempted cover-up?

Mr. Angelton. My answer on that is, I do not. And by that I am separating the midnight channel 26 things and the newspapers. I know Jim McCord extremely well.

Senator Baker. Are you aware of the letters that McCord wrote to the DCI after the Watergate suggesting how you could avoid having this blamed on the Agency?

Mr. Angleton. I am aware of what was in the press. Gaynor. And Paul Nabami recently died who wrote those letters, and it made great sense to me, and I had personal relationships beyond an official relationship.

Senator Baker. He wrote two to Gaynor and three to Helms.

Mr. Angleton. I didn't know.

Senator Baker. I believe so.

Mr. Angleton. In any event, I can say that Gaynor's connection, because he had great trust in Gaynor -- and he was a very stubborn man and he left the AGency on conviction, I assume, or troubles in the Office of Security.

Senator Baker. In connection with Watergate?

Mr. Angleton. He left much earlier.

Mr. Miller. He being McCord?

Mr. Angleton. Yes.

Mr. Miller. Why did he leave?

Mr. Angleton. I don't know. And I was really surprised that he didn't come by and say goodbye.

Senator Baker. Was he a prominent official at the Agency?

Mr. Angleton. He was not.

Senator Baker. Did he have a prominent responsibility?

Mr. Angleton. He was a man that had a very difficult case abroad, which meant that it had to be buried, no leakages. And I used him twice, and one was a pretty lengthy use of him. And he followed instructions to the letter. He strayed on the one. And it is not important. It is just something that he did something that wasn't very wise.

Senator Baker. Doyou know why he went into the Watergate Complex?

Mr. Angleton. I can't understand it, because I would say it was ideological with him. There wasn't any difficulty in understanding his views on a given subject.

Senator Baker. The equipment that was used, I am told, was a fairly primitive sort for that sort of operation. Does that agree with your appraisal of him?

Mr. Angleton. That is what I read. And that surprised me also, because as a rule -- let me put it this way, what I am saying is, it was the Soviets who made an allegation that in a certain country very close to us they were using a laser beam on a window of the Minister of Defense, and acquiring everything.

So, instead of using anybody in the clandestine side, I took McCord and the group and sent them to that country for six or seven weeks to work on it. So, McCord has great knowledge of the -- he knows the counter electronics. And

~~Mr. Angleton. Precisely.~~

~~And that is why I can't understand -- I mean, if the papers are correct in what they have stated, although many of the sources were people who also sell electronic equipment.~~

Senator Baker. I don't want to lead you too far away from the original subject. But I would be interested in knowing what if any information you can give us about the Oswald situation.

For instance, does the Agency keep a file, or does it have a file on Lee Harvey Oswald?

Mr. Angleton. They have a file. They have, I think, more than one. I think they have a subject file, and in that they have all the documentation that went to the Warren Commission through Mr. Raymond Rocca, who is my deputy.

And then there is a lot of undigested material that was brought out after the Warren Commission.

Senator Baker. Was there ever any inquiry? Or do you have any opinion as to whether Oswald was a Soviet Agent?

Mr. Angleton. Yes, I have a very strong opinion. I know the time factor, I will try to shorten this.

But I tried to prevail on Mr. Dulles that there should not be -- that there should be a statement to the effect that the Commission, in the life of the Commission -- that these are the conclusions on the available evidence. But given the fact that the Soviet Government has a Department 13, which is under the Central Committee, who is taxed with the assassination of Western Leaders, that the door is open, and that is for future generations to speculate. So that it would not be closing the door, that it would really mean the investigation would be pursued.

Senator Baker. John McCone, as I remember, was queried once on whether we could establish the bona fides of certain people, including Oswald.

Mr. Angleton. And Nosenko.

Senator Baker. Was there any advice by you at that time to McCone or other wise that the bona fides of that Soviet person or of Oswald ought not to be stated in categorical terms?

Mr. Angleton. During the period of the Warren Commission we prevented as far as we could any information from Nosenko going under the record, on a question of bona fides.

Senator Baker. Why?

Mr. Angleton. Because we didn't regard him as bona fides.

Senator Baker. What did you regard him as?

Mr. Angleton. We thought he was a dispatch agent who was sent to mutilated the leads of very high grade Soviet~~s~~ whom we had acquired prior to that.

Senator Baker. To mutilate leads relating to the Kennedy assassination?

Mr Angleton. Relating to assassination, KGB agents, VASSALL ~~Vassily~~, the British agents, and many agents in France, a alleged penetration in the U.S., et cetera.

Senator Baker. And did McCone accept your advice?

Mr. Angleton. He did, except that I understood that a lot of it has been declassified. And when he gave this interview recently with Schorr Shor, I called his executive officer Elder and I asked him, and he said, who in the Agency ever alleged to McCone that we now had re-established the bona fides?

And I said, he is an old man and doesn't think too well, et cetera, and don't give me that stuff.

And he said, well, I will give it to you.

And I never heard from him since. But McCone was a man whowould not have made this statement. He has total recall.

Senator Baker. I am sure he does.

Do you have an opinion as to whether or not Oswald was infact a Soviet agent?

Mr. Angleton. Well, let me put it this way.

I don't think that the Oswald case is dead. There are too many leads that were never followed up. There's too much information that has been developed later.

For example, in 1966, in a Soviet book on Cuba there is a photograph of Khrushchev, a photograph of Castro, a photograph of a man called [illegible] Alexiev, real name [illegible] Shettov, KGB, with the first

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000
WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Soviet Ambassador to Havana, and a man named Leontov, who was the Soviet KGB operational man in Mexico. When the Mexican police arrested Castro as a student, they found in his notebooks the name of Leontov, KGB, Mexico.

Now, photographs 61, and so on, are in a KGB journal for Soviet citizens abroad. It is a bible,75 percent KGB staff. Photograph of Brezhnev, Castro, Alexiev, Leontov.

Now, we had a double agent after the assassination, who made a number of allegations that he acquired from the Chief of KGB, Mexico, Yatskov and he was a superior of Leontov. Now, after the assassination Khrushchev was in Cairo on a state visit. And he pulled an American journalist aside, and totally out of context, expressed the view that there was a conspiracy, and it involved the Right Wing of the U.S.

The thingwas totally out of context. And he planted this bug in this fellow's ear.

WE had double agents who stated that the KGB put all of their personnel for six months on working on the assassination, and had concluded that an American Right Wing business under Johnson was to succeed in power. And I am not talking about petty informants. I am talking about men whowere ascertained members of the KGB and part of the Soviet elite.

And I can multiply that. Those cases, those leads have never been followed up. One is because of lack of manpower. Two, the general problem in Washington and the government that there is no forum which can adjudicate issues in the intelligence community of a counter-intelligence nature. I may have allegations, very firm, that relate to somebody in high office. But there isn't anyone, ombudsman or somebody, to whom you can go with the information and talk to the Soviets and pull the bureau and ourselves and everybody together.

FBI

Senator Baker. Could you give us at your leisure a memorandum of your recommendations in that respect, how that might be constituded?

Mr. Angleton. It would not be a pleasant one. I have submitted -- and I don't think it is breaking any confidence -- such a memorandum to the Commission. And I have submitted a personal letter to the Vice Prsident. And my whole plea was that my days were numbered, but regardless, that in and beyond the life of that Commission, that in his position as Vice President he had a rare opportunity the first time these matters were ever aired, and that the disaster of Hoover's death, and Gray, and the Watergate and so forth, has destroyed the counter-intelligence forces.

And this added thing of Hersh has about dealt the final blow.

~~Senator Baker. I hate to interrupt you, and I also hate to ask you this question, but can you make an evaluation of the effectiveness of the Agency, in particularly its counter-intelligence activities at this time?~~

NSR

NBR

Mr. Angleton. Very, very poor.

I have put in there, and I think it is very conservative, that it has put us back 20 years. But I think in the eyes of every intelligence service in the Western World, where we have had the leadership and we pulled everything together, and where they have looked to us for guidance and for traces and for understanding, that we have lost all of our prestige.

Senator Baker. Two more quick questions, and I will yield my turn.

Do you know of or have any substantial information about Russian KGB activities in the U.S. such as the infiltration of Congressional offices?

Mr. Angleton. There is a whole history of information that relates to the past and to modus operandi and to targets, and so on. And that is inclusive of all the American life, and in particularly visits to the Soviet Union, and so on. Thereare communications intelligence more sensitive which was broken during and after the war, KGB communications, New York to Moscow, and Washington to Moscow, et cetera. And there were cryptnyms given. And it runs into hundreds of thousands of messages, of which a small percentage have been broken.

And they relate to Hiss and many things. And most of those cases will not be subject to prosecution, because they would not be admissible. And there are a lot of problems there. We have worked on it, and we brought the British, the Canadians, and New Zealanders and Australians, because we have this common denominator of the military and other agreements where they do share common information.

And there are many unresolved cases.

Senator Baker. Do you know of any cases, though, dealing with penetration of a Congressional office?

Mr. Angleton. No. But my statement doesn't mean anything, because I can assure you that it is the last thingI have been concerned with in some months. But I have seen these allegations in the paper, I wouldn't be surprised. And this is the second time in my life, or the third time, I have ever been here. To come here and see how this whole set up is is quite a shock.

Senator Baker. What about communications intercept, Congressional conversations, are you aware of any methodical effort by the Russians or the KGB vis-a-vis Congressional telephone conversations?

Mr. Angleton. Absolutely. I think -- I am assuming now that the people in NSR are correct, they usually are, that the telephone, the formal telephone company traffic apparently, without the knowledge of the caller, is quickly shifted to microwave. That runs into hundreds of thousands of telephone calls.

NSA

Now, I used to be quite deeply involved in the penetration of embassies, and so forth, in my youth. And it is a fingernail, arm and body affair. It takes an awfully long time before you finally get into a code room and a place where you can do something securely.

What I am trying to say is that if you get enough depth on any target or any installation you begin to know much more about that installation than anybody who occupies it.

Senator Baker. If I were trying to confirm the rumor that the KGB had the capability and did in fact record as many as 30 or 40 thousand simultaneous telephone conversations, mostly related to governmental officials, and transmitted them to the Soviet Union, and kept individual files on them, would you confirm that for me?

Mr. Angleton. I would state that that is absolutely in my view correct. And I would say that the man who technically could respond to that would be Dr. Lou Tordello, a retired Chief of NSA who is now, I think, still a consultant there. And he is probably amore sophisticated person to relate the products of NSA to the realities of the question you asked.

And I think the other point I would make is simply that what their KGB has, which we never will have, is manpower. In other words, we have to narrow the size of the target some day the way the British did, and expel that 105,

Our State Department says that what happened in England has no relevancy here, because we have had a different setup, because among those expelled men who served in Washington, and who weren't in the U.K., were those who were on the Anglo-American Desk, which meant that there was an American whom they had handled in Washington who had been transferred to London where the case officer follows the agent.

And that statement, official statement, was put out without any consultation with the Bureau or ourselves. So, we are living in a dream world here in terms of Soviets, and time is short, it is detente, and it is all the fallacious fallation kind of discussions and arguments one hears on the subject. We have come to detente for information through operations and our understanding of it, not wishful thinking.

And our views are shared by professionals all through the Western World. And they laugh at the U.S. in terms of what detente has done. But what it has done to the intelligence services, or to the FBI, the FBI is only a shadow of what it once was. And so there isn't any real internal security protection.

The Bureau's problems -- and I had the case of a KGB officer threatening one of the people we are dealing with in the Mid-west, he was from the United Nations, a young KGB fellow. And I asked the Bureau, was he a ________?

And they said, we put him to bed.

They didn't put him to bed, he was where he wasn't supposed to be. And I tried to get the department to go in with him. And I am still up there.

NBR

~~on two or three points. And I said, I am exercising my rights under the CIA, and so on.~~

~~But he said, I have got to run, and it was about five past five. And I asked him if he understood in effect what he was doing, the implications.~~

~~And he said, that is the responsibility I would assume.~~

~~And I said, what about Mr. Meyer, and building up to be our successors?~~

~~And we were about the same age. And he introduced Meyer over the years into more sensitive operations, and all the foreigns with whom we worked, agents and what not. And the reaction to him universally was, he was to be the successor.~~

~~And he said, that is something I will have to negotiate.~~

~~And I said, what do you mean negotiate?~~

~~And he said, we will talk about it next week.~~

~~So, I got up and shook hands with him and walked out.~~

~~Senator Baker. Do you know of anyone having electronic surveillance conversational recording in the Oval Office other than the Presidential (?) capability?~~

~~Mr. Angleton. Never.~~

~~Senator Baker. Do you know of anyone who ever penetrated the Presidential apparatus?~~

~~Mr. Angleton. Never, Senator.~~

~~What has come out about the Joint Chiefs and all that stuff in the paper?~~

~~Senator Baker. I am speaking of anyone who might have penetrated the taping capability in the Oval Office?~~

~~Mr. Angleton. No.~~

Mr. Schwarz. Can I follow up some of the questions that Senator Baker asked you about Oswald?

What about the pictures, one of which was a picture of Leontov that was in a piece of paper found in Mr. Oswald's pocket when he was arrested in Mexico?

Mr. Angleton. There is an allegation.

Mr. Schwarz. What connection is there between that picture and that allegation and Lee Harvey Oswald?

Mr. Angleton. The only thing is, Oswald's trip to Mexico was to go to Cuba allegedly to contact the Soviets.

Mr. Schwarz. And was Leontov then in Mexico, or --

Mr. Angleton. I don't know, because the double agent whom we believe was actually controlled by the Soviets, Byetkov, gave us information which we would now regard as private, which would tend to absolve the Soviets of any implication with Oswald.

Mr. Schwarz. When you acquired from a number of sources the information that the KGB had spent some six months --

Mr. Angleton. We only acquired the hard stuff of six months and what they did from one man who was very high in the KGB.

Mr. Schwarz. Without getting into what his name was, when did you acquire the information?

Mr. Angleton. 1967, or thereabouts.

Mr. Schwarz. So it was after the Warren Commission had reached its conclusions?

Mr. Angleton. Did you have any such information during the life of the Warren Commission?

Mr. Angleton. I think the only thing was the Nosenko --

Senator Baker. Which was suppressed by whom?

Mr. Angleton. We suppressed it, because Nosenko arrived at a very brief time after the assassination as a KGB defector.

Senator Baker. And he is the one that you think now as a planted agent?

Mr. Angleton. Yes. They thought he was sent on a mission.

Mr. Schwarz. Suppressed by whom?

Mr. Angleton. Suppressed from the Warren Commission.

Mr. Schwarz. You said that Nosenko, one of the reasons you suspected Nosenko was a double agent, or a planted agent, rather, was because he was saying things that were contradictory to some other high quality person who theretofore had been giving you information before Nosenko came to this country?

Mr. Angleton. That is right.

Mr. Schwarz. What was the nature of the information relating to the Kennedy assassination that the high quality person had given you?

Mr. Schwarz. Let me say this so that it makes a little more sense.

In December 1961 a member of the KGB in Helsinki defected to us. His name is Golitzen. GOLITSYN He has never been in service, except Jack Anderson came out with an erroneous account of it, alleging that he had stated there was a plot to assassinate Nixon. He did not make such a statement.

Mr. Kirbow. Do you think this statement should be on the record?

Mr. Angleton. I don't mind it being on the record after the Anderson article. They have been looking for him.

Now, his is probably without any question the most major defection since World War II as far as Soviet intentions, Soviet organization, and Soviet operations are concerned. And the reason, among others, that it was so important was he had decided to defect many years prior to December of 1961, if the opportunity ever arrived. And therefore he used those many years breaking down the compartmentalization of the KGB in order to acquire the kind of information which would be most valuable to the US, and to our allies.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Therefore he refused many assignemtns abroad, but tried to always remain in headquarters and get himself appointed to investigative commissions and other things of this sort which would get into everybody elses's business. Among other things, he spent many years in the training schools for people who came back for six weeks from different parts of the world to brag about their achievements. And he absorbed all of this information.

And among other things, he stated that he gave the crytograms and circumstantial evidence of penetrations throughout the West.

And then the Soviets rapidly transferred 300 of their people after his defection. And as is normal in a case of this kind, the big problem is to write a damage report, which means the whole service would come to a standstill. And the objective would be to review all paper files and everything that showed his initials. And you usually would have three categories of information: you would have information which he definitely had knowledge of, and information which he did not have knowledge of, and information which you are not ceratin about.

Now, when we did a similar operation on the Sergeant Dunlop who was working in the National Security Agency and committed suicide, if I am not mistaken we came to approximately 400,000 documents that he could have had access to, although he may not have had. And it is interesting to note that after his assassination, in a search of the quarters, the Bureay, or whoever did the search, found six of my letters to NSA relating to information from Golitzen.

Senator Baker. Did you speak of the assassination?

Mr. Angleton. What did you say?

Mr. Miller. Did you say Mr. Dunlop?

Mr. Angleton. After his suicide. I am sorry.

Mr. Miller. You used the term assassination.

Mr. Angleton. I meant suicide.

Mr. Miller. The word is interesting, because it is charged, as you know, that he was assassinated.

Mr. Angleton. Maybe I was thinking out loud or something.

In any event, the 1969 Golitzen reports to NSA were in a plastic bag, as I recall, in the attic. And there was a question of whether he passed them before or after.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, what we were on was, I was asking you, you testified earlier --

Mr. Angleton. I just wanted to say Golitzen was so enormous to the Western world because we immediately moved on those cases which were perishable, the French, the British, and ourselves, et cetera. And we had never had a second Chief Director, which means the FBI type of Soviet, defector in our lives, and all of this out of the blue, and no contact as in Geneva six months after the defection of Golitzen.

Mr. Schwarz. And the date is when in relations to the Kennedy assassination?

Mr. Angleton. Well, this was a contact, this was not a defection. He came to us once for information prior to the assassination.

And then in Moscow the Soviets -- and I am not going into a lot of names, a member of the Second Chief Directorate, gave an American tourist a stack of documents from the Second Chief Directorate, the FBI, relating to how they got (blank), and others of our agents, which showed they didn't get them through a two-headed source, but they got it through a (blank) on our side.

So the leads rant into the thousands from Golitzen, and thousands and thousands of pages of transcript, interrogation, exhibiting photographs, and identifications, which in turn would refresh his memory on other courses. And out of that came the finalization of the case of Philby, Burgess, and all that, the Vassily case in the British Admiralty, and some other cases, and many cases in France and so on.

Mr. Kirbow. Did Oswald show up at that time?

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Mr. Angleton. No, not from Golit~~zen~~syn.

But when the assassination took place --

Mr. Schwarz. The Kennedy assassination?

Mr. Angleton. When the Kennedy assassination took place, Golit~~zen~~syn called me immediately and stated that the modus operandi with any defector from anybody's army to the Soviet Union required that he go through processing by the 13th Department of the KGB.

Mr. Schwarz. Which is their assassination department?

Mr. Angleton. Which is their assassination department, which is called their Affairs for Executive Action.

And there are two reasons for it. Number one was, to find out what sophisticated weaponry or training he might have had that would be of use to them. And number two, whether it was more valuable to reinfiltrate him into the National Army for future activity.

Mr. Schwarz. Of the nature of assassinations?

Mr. Angleton. Of anything. It could be sabotage, or intelligence, or whatever.

AND THIS WAS THE SOP on the dealing with military defectors.

Now. when the Soviet Government turned over to the US all the documents that led to the interest regarding Oswald stay in the Soviet Union, there was nothing there indicating processing by Department 13. Then after the assassination

Nosenko, whom we hid once in Geneva, he went back to Moscow. And in my view he would have never come back on the scene because they brought this CHEREPANOV Cheraponov thing in to have the locus shifted from where we would have controls, in Geneva, to Moscow where they would have all the controls. And that would be the Directorate. And therefore they would have the direct means of counteracting and mutilating the leads and the importance of Golitzen's defection.

But the tourist gave the documents to the American Embassy. And we photographed them. The Charge insisted on giving them back to the Soviets on grounds that it would be appropriate.

Mr. Schwarz. These are not the official documents dealing with Oswald but the documents that the man tried to pass in Switzerland?

Mr. Angleton. The Second Chief Directorate, he took all of the documents out of the FBI Soviet section and gave them to the tourist and we read how we got caught on things.

So there is the assassination. Cheraponov allegedly was chased to the Turkish border and shot. And in my view this is a myth, because in 1948 Cheraponov was stationed in Belgrade, and he tried to defect to us, and at another time tried to establish liaison and contact with the Birtish MI-6, at a time when Philby was Chief of Intelligence, meaning that the approach would have been under Philby in 1948, and then he reappears in the early 1960's as a member of the Second Chief Directorate.

That is enough of Cherapanov. But it is important only from the Soviet point of view, the best laid plans fall apart.

And then out of the blue, Nosenko, whom we would never have seen again, reappears after the assassination in Geneva, and tells us he wants to defect.

Mr. Schwarz. And he provided information which was inconsistent with Oswald being the Russian agent?

Mr. Angleton. I am coming to that.

So immediately we tried to get the breadth of his career so that we know where the priorities are. And the first thing he tells us is that while he was in the Second Chief Directorate in the American Section, Oswald's KGB dossier went over his desk. And his first story, as I recall it, was that it was two volumes or three volumes. And finally it went down to one volume and a small sheaf of papers.

Also he said that the dossier showed clearly that Oswald was mentally unbalanced, and that he was a poor shot, and therefore couldn't get a hunting license, and a lot of stuff of this sort.

And then on all of these outstanding leads -- penetrations, of the French, the Americans, the British codes, bugging of the Embassy, all of these different sorts -- Nosenko had something to do which diverted us from Nosenko's leads. And in the normal course of events, we might have put Golitzen in contact with Nosenko, which may have meant the assassination of Golitzen, because the whole approach of Nosenko was one where logically you would bring them in and have two bodies, one from the First Chief Directorate, that is, Golitzen, the CIA part of the system, and the other from the FBI part of the system, and therefore you would have a very strong balance against the KGB. But we didn't do that. Because there were certain things, litmus papers, questions put to Nosenko. And as far as I was concerned, if he was bona fide he would have answered one way, and he did not answer that way. And they had to do with some deeper secrets regarding a meeting of the 2000 members of the KGB and the Soviet Government in May of 1959, presided over by Shelepin and attended by many members of the Central Committee on the reorientation of the Soviet Services and the return to Leninism wherever intelligence operations has a political objective. And this is a part of the process of de-Stalinization. And so when we took him unwittingly chronologically through his career, he omits all of this phase. And we had three or four or five other test things, where their damage report would not show that Golitzen had access, because it was part of his way of getting in and breaking compartmentation. And therefore they would have no evidence that he had sufficient knowledge.

Mr. Schwarz. And so Nosenko looked funny to you, he looked wrong to you?

Mr. Angleton. Absolutely.

Mr. Schwarz. He looked like a plant to you?

Mr. Angleton. Precisely.

Mr. Schwarz. And among the information that he provided to you was that Oswald was a mental case and was a bad shot?

Mr. Angleton. Right.

Mr. Schwarz. And you had also received from Nosenko --

Mr. Angleton. Golitzen -- from Golitzen -- information that suggested the normal practice was for Department 13, which had responsibility from the Russian KGB for assassinations, to interview military defectors. And we had observed that when the Russians transferred documents concerning Oswald, that there was no reference in there to any such debriefing by Department 13. And another important part of it is that there was a man who was handling George Blake from London, who was Counselor of the Soviet Embassy. And when he returned he became head of the 13 Department, General Rodin. But he was there under an alias as a civilian. He was the Chief of the KGB in London, and a very high grade man. Then he took over the Department 13 and reinvigorated it.

Mr. Schwarz. And what was his connection with Oswald?

Mr. Angleton. I am saying that he was head of Department 13, and was head of Department 13 at a time -- I mean, he had a long history in that, in other words, the prominence of Department 13 and this is a point I think I should make, that the Agency, unlike the Soviets, does not have an assassination department. The Soviets have always had an assassination department, which is totally sealed off from the rest of the organization. People from the outside know very little about what goes on in that. People career-wise stay in there. And they report to the Chairman of the KGB, and drop off, who in turn report to the Politboro. And therefore it is an entirely sealed organization which is capable of all forms of action, whether it be sabotage -- an illegal sabotage or what, an illegal directorate which is independent of the rest of the KGB -- nuclear sabotage, and all this type of thing, and infiltration of enemy forces in the event of war. And of course assassination, the assassination of Ukrainian leaders in West Germany.

Mr. Schwarz. Do you recount that simply because it makes more significant the absence of any reference to Oswald because you are giving evidence as to the vigor of Department 13, or did you recount it because there is a more direct connection with Oswald?

Mr. Angleton. This is related to what I told Mr. Dulles, I thought it was absolutely wrong to close the door on the life of the Commission, and instead there should be a statement that we are not in a position -- that on the fact available to us during the given period, these are our conclusions. And then to spell out in detail Department 13 and its organization -- and the burden of proof shigts. But not only the burden of proof, but you never know when a worm goes into somebody's head to defect from Department 13. And that bring you up on the entire story.

Mr. Schwarz. So you have recounted the importance of Department 13. You have recounted the significance in your mind of the absence of any reference to Department 13 in the documentation on Oswald turned over by the Soviets to the US. And you have recounted the strange nature of the information provided by Nosenko.

Mr. Angleton. Correct.

Mr. Schwarz. Let me ask you another line of questions about each one of these items. As to the Nosenko information, you stated that that information was suppressed from the Warren Commission?

Mr. Angleton. The word suppression is probably not the right word because, I will be very honest with you, I was told the other day that the information was given classified, and it was given to Helms or somebody, or Mr. McCone, who passed it as a classified document. I have asked for it, but I haven't seen it.

Mr. Schwarz. Why did you say a moment ago that it was suppressed?

Mr. Angleton. Because I never knew where it went. When I was sitting in the position as to where that information would go, I was opposed to it. And my pfficial position was that. And I ghought until relatively recently that it never went.

And then all of a sudden they have declassified a lot of stuff. And Mr. Rocca Rocha, who was the point of record of the Agency's dealing with the Warren Commission, told me that Nosenko stuff was the stuff they were declassifying. Now, his role was not one of the executive nature. Actually it was simply because he was a great scholar and a great many other things, and therefore he had the most catholic background to handle something as eomplex as the Warren Commission, not in exercising executive power, but working on behalf of the Director and all the Directorates and everything pertaining to the Warren Commission. He is a tidy individual. And in fact Mr. Belin has made a great deal of use of him in the Commission's business, and he is the one that had done all the digging for the Commission, and so on, on a whole series of matters that I am not familiar with.

But my point to you -- and this is very difficult to explain -- is that the question of Nosenko created a very great division in the life of all counterintelligence as to bona fides, as in all questions of when you are dealing with double identification agents, there is always dispute.

But let me just line up the order of battle here. Our

Chief of the Soviet Division accepted the fact that the man was a provocation. His Chief of Counterintelligence accepted the fact that the man was a provocation.

Mr. Schwarz. Do you mean provocation, or providing false information?

Mr. Angleton. An Agent Provocateur.

I said he was false. My man said he was false. And it isn't a parrot affair, each one reads the same stuff and analyzes and come to their own conclusion. And Golitzen, who defected, based only on the Geneva, first encounter in Geneva, not the defection, had predicted in advance that because of the enormity of his defection they would send a provocateur into the West to destroy and mutilate his leads.

So it was a question of awaiting, you might say, who knocks on the door. And here is Nosenko.

Now, since then the Chief of the Soviet Division who is no longer there, has recanted in a way -- the Inspector General went into all this -- he is today the NIO dealing in Soviet Affairs, the National Intelligence Officer on Soviet Affairs. And his counterintelligence man, a fellow named Pete Bagley, who is the brother of the two Admirals Bagley, and one of the best men we had, left the Agency and is now in Belgium in private life. And I can go all the way through these other people who have been dispersed. But the record will clearly reflect that the preponderance of all individuals was that Nosenko was sent on a mission.

Mr. Schwarz. And provided false information?

Now, is it your current understanding that what was provided to the Warren Commission was the raw infomration brought by Nosenko, or was the Warren Commission also provided with the opinion of persons such as yourself and others as you have recounted that he was providing false information?

Mr. Angleton. I don't think the Warren Commission was ever faced with the issue of the internal issues of Golitzen or Nosenko.

Mr. Schwarz. You first said that the information was suppressed from the Warren Commission, and then you said no, it is your understanding now --

Mr. Angleton. Well, the word suppression isn't the right word, I said. One went to argue the matter and it was agreed by higher authority that the information shouldn't be --

Senator Mathias. There was a value judgment made as to the usefulness of the material?

Mr. Angleton. That is right -- and not to do what the Soviet in our mind wanted us to do, which eas to give it prominence and have it come out as an official part of the record and documents and articles, and so on.

Mr. Schwarz. But your current understanding is that the information was provided?

Mr. Angleton. That was classified, and never came out in public.

Mr. Schwarz. But was nevertheless provided to the Commission?

Mr. Angleton. It was made known to them in some fashion.

Mr. Schwarz. Was it made known to them at the same time that at leat certain experts withing the Agency thought it was false information?

Mr. Angleton. I think, as I understand it now, that in spite of our feelings, either Helms or McCone made a presentation of it.

Mr. Schwarz. But without mentioning your feelings, certain experts thought that it was false?

Mr. Angleton. I can't respond to that. I don't know.

Mr. Schwarz. What about the information derived from Golitzen, which indicated in your expert opinion that the documents provided by the Soviet Union were, I think you put it, funny, or strange, or misleading, because they did not include any reference to debriefing by Department 13, was that information provided to the Warren Commission?

Mr. Angleton. I don't know. I don't think so. But all I can say there is this, to be realistic. No one would expect the Soviet Government, regardless, to provide documents, secret documents, on Oswald, whether he was or was not their agent. And I say, I can go all the way back through history, the way they falsified the official record, they had it with the Italians in 1923, Constatinople, and cases on diplomatic issues, the complete thing was fabricated, and so on. And there is no way of testing them, the security is such that they can't be tested.

So we are not under any illusions of expecting them to state that he went through the 13 Department, which asked him the following questions.

Mr. Schwarz. So you say that as far as that matter goes there is no possibility that anybody on the Warren Commission was fooled?

Mr. Angleton. I mean, I don't think anybody was. I didn't follow the Warren Commission, Rocha followed it, and he was running over there all the time, and so on.

Mr. Kirbow. Let me ask you. There would have been no reason why anyone on the Warren Commission would have known that as a matter of everyday business that they did in fact run every defector through Department 13?

Mr. Angleton. I don't think we ever told them. But you see, Allen Dulles -- that is what I am coming to -- I used to see Allen Dulles regularly, and I was an advisor officially to him on a lot of headaches, and I dida lot of leg work for him. And I regarded him as a very personal friend. And I am Executor of his papers, among other things.

But the point I am coming to is, to try to give him guidance of what the jungle is around here in terms of the FBI's position and Mr. Hoover's, and so on, so that he would be more sensitive to the things, no longer being Director, that were no longer germain to his position on the matter.

Mr. Schwarz. Was there a connection between the FBI and Oswald?

Mr. Angleton. I don't know the full FBI story. I know there was a tremendous flap in the Bureau. And one of the best men they had in my view is a professional a man called Burt Turner, who I understand just got his law degree. And Burt Turner was one of the finest men on Soviet KGB activities in the US, one of the analyzts. And he was in the Washington Field Office. And it is my understanding -- and this is basically hearsay, but from pretty good sources -- that Burt Turner was handling the Oswald or~~e~~ related matters at the time the President made the trip down to Texas, and that there was some confusion that the Bureau had not turned over, or had not taken enough initiative in turning over, all the information on Oswald to the local police. I had been told that there was a black mark put against Turner's name, and that he confronted Mr. Hoover and stated he was not going to permit, or have it be known to his children, that his negligence was responsible for the death of the President. And he was pretty forceful about his position. And as a result, this was expunged or something to that effect. And that is the reason he went to the Washington Field Office instead of staying in Headquarters.

And then he retired. And I think his retirement had something to do with this fact.

But this is all by virtue of hindsight with the thousands of cases. And I cannot see any Western intelligence service seizing on facts that Oswald will return to the US, and then going and saying, we will get all of this, and we will send it to Texas.

What I am trying to say, is that the difference in their system. With the manpower and the computers, which are mainly ours, and whatnot, a situation of that sort is automatic. And we know enought about the Second Chief Directorate and the controls, the total controls, to know that if a Soviet returned automatically, to any part of the Soviet Union he went, there would be a dossier that would go, and there would be also an operational directive to put him on tap, check his mail, to do the following, and so on and to put an agent near him. There wouldn't be any leaking anything in the air on that. There would be total encapsulation of that individual until it was ceratin beyond a shadow of a doubt that he was not sent back as an agent.

Mr. Schwarz. A moment ago in talking about the line-up, as I think you put it, of views on Nosenko, you recounted the views of a number of people. And you said that one person had changed his mind or recanted subsequently. And you made a reference in that connection to an Inspector General's report. What was that report?

Mr. Angleton. At one stage in all of this -- and it was much later, after all the dust settled -- Helms got the Inspector General, who had come from the clandestine side of our business, to institute -- I don't like to use the word inspection, it is too authoritative -- to go into the Nosenko matter and see if there is anything there that he should know, because Helms is fully aware of the split on this whole question of bona fides, and it bothered him, because I had brought him in touch with Golitzen, and he was fully aware of all my activities, and travels and so on.

And so this person who was chosen began to interview everybody and reopen the whole thing. I mean, there were 21 safe leads of stuff if you really got into all of the Golitzen and Nosenko and the other things that pertained, as I pointed out. to the Warren Commission, to the asininity of what has happened, of 27 years of experience of myself and my two colleagues, that these are the facts, that there are 20 cases --

Mr. Schwarz. You said Warren Commission. You mean Rockefeller?

Mr. Angleton. Excuse me, Rockefeller.

There are 20 some odd cases that a counterintelligence officer in our busienss should know before he even begins to get his feet wet.

Now, when Dr. Schlesinger came in, and I started hearing all of these things of manaement by objectives, and synergistic and a lot of other things, being applied to the art forms which we had developed, I finally got so frustrated that I thought I would take him up on his own thing. So I got statisticians in to take all the safes and figure out the linear footage of every safe drawer, all the way on through, and to computerize how long it would take the normal case officer to come up to this elemental stage of being able to be launched.

That was sort of a preparatory business. And they figured it out and they said it would take 22 man years, we meant that if we were 100 percent incorrect, it would be 11 man years. And that was simply to apprise Schlesinger, and Colby, who had never been in counterintelligence, of what all this problem was about. They had the idea of transferring people back and forth and all the rest of it. And I nver chose anybody in that job as a rule who had [not] either been in the FBI or had not had very rich experience in counterintelligence. And normally I kept outside leaks to anybody in the business -- I had men who stayed with me for 11 years, Rocca was with me for 31 years, even though they went into operational situations abroad and returned, and so on.

And I say this to you, because here was an IG, and Inspector General, who had had a very lofty mission in Germany, where we used to have two or 300 new people --

Mr. Schwarz. Was this Mr. Ermine?

Mr. Angleton. No, he was never brought. He was Gordon Stewart -- and he is retired -- a very able man, and a fine executive. And I mean this sincerely. He is one of the really top-notch men.

But he as to undertake this burden. And it was a farce in terms -- so he would talk to people and get their views and so on.

When I went to the former Chief of the Soviet Division, who was then stationed in Paris -- and this is only hearsay, I never read the report -- the former Chief of the Soviet Division stated, when I look back it, perhaps I have given too much latitude to my subordinates. And he wouldn't say yea or nay, but he withdrew his very firm statement of the past that this man Nosenko was an agent provocateur.

Mr. Schwarz. Did the review concern in any way the handling of the matter with the Warren Commission?

Mr. Angleton. No, not to my knowledge. I mean, this may be something. I don't think I have evern seen the review -- in fact, I don't know whether the review was ever put in the paper. But I mention it simply so that you don't get the idea that it was just the ~~CIA~~ CI staff that had this view. This was a view that was shared by numbers of people who had dealings with Nosenko. And I think the greatest authority of all is Golitzen himself, who was in the KGB, and who knew everything. And he lived there for 16 or 18 years of his life.

Mr. Schwarz. Earlier you mentioned that you put Mr. Harvey in touch with the Israeli's during the Cuban business. And we have had a lot of testimony about Mr. Harvey, so we are moderately well aware of his activities.

Mr. Angleton. I am sorry.

Mr. Schwarz. We know who Mr. Harvy is and we have had a fair amount of testimony about some of the things he had done. What was the connection between him and the Israeli's during the Cuban business?

Mr. Angleton. I will put it very briefly --

Senator Tower. What is the Cuban business specifically?

Mr. Schwarz. The witness used the expression Cuban business. I guess I should ask first, what do you mean by the Cuban business, and second, what was is the connection between Mr. Harvey and the Israeli's on this matter?

Mr. Kirbow. You are really asking, what is the importance of putting him in touch with them in relation to Cuba?

Mr. Angleton. Bill Harvey was put in charge of taking over the Cuban business, the Cuban business being the Clandestine Services activity into Cuba. Now, what struck me, not having had any part of the Bay of Pigs, because of differences with Bissell, was that it seemed to me that both the Cubans and the Soviets knew everything that was being planned. In other words, they had the thing penetrated, and it was foredoomed.

Mr. Schwarz. Through the exile community in Miami?

Mr. Angleton. No, through Soviet agents and everything, and so on, there was no cover or second investigation or anything.

So when Bill took over in the Cuban business, then I decided that since we were very close friends that I would try to help him out by getting him a source totally unknown to everybody. And I went to the Israeli's. And I had them assign a man to Havana, whom I happened to know very well. He was born in Bulgaris. He can speak Russian and the Balkan countries' languages. He is today their senior man on Soviet intelligence. He was a young officer in the days I am speaking of. And he was sent to Havana, which meant that here he was -- and the communications were from him in a one time pattern, I mean total security, from Havana to Tel Aviv, to me, and from me to Bill. And no one knew of his existence or his identify, except Harvey and myself, and of course, Dick Helms.

Mr. Schwarz. McCone?

Mr. Angleton. I can't remember whether -- yes, McCone would have know, but he wouldn't have been interested.

What I am trying to say is, he knew.

Mr. Kirbow. Helms knew because he was DDP --

Mr. Angleton. He knew, because even before I went into this I told him what I was going to do, and he agreed, and so on.

And also I wanted a person, because there was a radio going to be put into Havana, and let somebody say we need a radio in Havana, or drop some men in. And then the point is, I get the radio to Tel Aviv, and to Havana and then put it someplace, and then tell him, you go to such and such a place and find the radio, and then have some men come in and call some men to make contact, with the view that I couldn't trust the whole setup.

So for many a long period of time this worked perfectly. This individual established his cover. They only had two or three people in the Embassy there. He would go to a Hungarian restaurant where the Soviet officers would also go. And he would spot one of the waiters or a headwater who was Jewish and it wouldn't be long before he would say, you are from the Israeli Embassy, and pretty soon one thing led to another, and his production was without question the greatest production there was.

Well, it got so complex in names and geography, and so on, that is when I came to the point that I brought Harvey together secretly with this individual, the only person I put in touch was an Israeli in this context. So later on the Soviets come out with the statement, is Bill Harvey on the with. It looks big today to you, but when you think of what the Agency's efforts were at that time in the Miami base with all the boats and the biggest Navy in the world, and all the rest, a little thing involving one man was not a thing that you went up and made a fuss to Mr. McCone about.

Mr. Schwarz. Did you know Mr. Harvey pretty well, was he someone you knew?

Mr. Angleton. Very well indeed. In fact, I just called him the other day, his mother died.

Mr. Schwarz. I heard that.

Did you know anything about his use of underworld figures in connection with --

Mr. Angleton. I know the allegations.

Mr. Schwarz. At the time did you know of that?

Mr. Angleton. I only know one incident.

Mr. Schwarz. Okay.

Mr. Angleton. Simply the Bureau, the FBI, ran a surveillance. And Sam Papich, who was the Liaison Officer of the FBI, who is now Head of the Criminal Commission in Mexico, was at my house around 10 o'clock at night. And the Washington Field Office or Headquarters Miami located Papich at my house. They were absolutely boiling, because they had surveiled the Mafia all the way from California to National Airport, and he had got off the plane and was met by a man who was the physical description of Bill to a teel. And they thought it was Bill. And they were checking with Papich what to do.

Italy

Mr. Schwarz. That was Mr. Roselli, was it?

Mr. Angleton. I think it was.

Mr. Kirbow. And the Bill you speak of here is Bill Harvey?

Mr. Angleton. Bill Harvey.

So I could get the gist of Bill's questions to them. And I told him -- I made a motion to put his hand over the phone and not to let them discuss it. And I said, tell them not to do anything until they hear from you.

And that is what he told them, he said, stand down on this and I will be back in touch.

And then Bill told me the whole story in detail of how he had gone over from California and followed him in this thing, and how Harvey had put him in his car and he went off.

Mr. Schwarz. That was in 1973 shortly before Mr. Harvey went to Rome?

Mr. Angleton. It wasn't shortly before, it was, I think quite a long time before.

So then I told Sam, I said, look, let's go very easy on this -- because I didn't know anything about Bill's connection with the Mafia and all that, but I did know him well enough to know that he was not a frivolous man, and that this thing happened, and keep in mind that ex-FBI men, contrary to public opinion, were not very much liked by Mr. Hoover when they left the FBI.

So I called Bill's house, and I asked his wife, is Bill around?

And she said, no, he is out to dinner tonight.

And I said, look, we have some very serious trouble. Would you please tell me where I can locate him.

And she said, he is at Duke Zeibert's. And I called Duke Zeibert's and I managed to get him. And I turned the phone over to Papich, because I did not want to be on the record showing that this was Angleton, et cetera.

And Papich talked to Bill, and actually I didn't hear the discussion. It was something about, I will see you tomorrow.

And Sam told the surveillance and all the other people to forget it, and the Headquarters would take over.

And that is my knowledge, direct knowledge of what Anderson and everybody else has stated.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Angleton, to your specific knowledge did Bill ever attempt to use the excellent contact he had in Havana to carry out the mission of eliminating the leader down there, or try to get any help out of him in that regard?

Mr. Angleton. He knows that I would have cut his throat.

Mr. Kirbow. That would have jeopardized your entire contact with the Israeli's?

Mr. Angleton. Yes sir.

NBR

Senator Tower. We will take a recess for about two minutes while we go up and vote.

(A short recess was taken)

~~Senator Tower. On the record.~~

Mr. Schwarz.

Mr. Schwarz. I don't have anything more.

Senator Tower. You have read this, and Szulc says in this galley -- this is a galley of the Szulc article in Penthouse:

"Although the details of the Israeli nuclear enterprise are still top secret, it is known that in the wake of the 1956 Suez war, the Eisenhower Administration resolved to provide Israel with all possible help in developing an atomic weapon. The Israelis had the theoretical knowledge, but they needed technological support at their Dimona nuclear research center in the Negev Desert.

"According to the top intelligence sources, the CIA was charged with the responsibility of providing this support to the Israelis."

Do you have knowledge that the CIA was charged with such responsibilities?

Mr. Angleton. Absolutely to the contrary.

Senator Tower. "--Angleton directed the effort?"

Mr. Angleton. False.

Senator Tower. That it totally false?

Mr. Angleton. That is totally false.

"Several nuclear scientists were secretly sent to Israel to work with Dimona scientists."

Mr. Angleton. False. I will interject here that the French sent 400 as a matter of the original deal with the Israeli's to Dimona.

Senator Tower. The reference here is to nuclear weaponry. And this means sent by the CIA, as I interpret it.

Mr. Angleton. It is false.

Senator Tower. "The most important of them, according to intelligence sources, was a British-born physicist, now an American citizen working for the US Government in Washington, with special and esoteric ties to the CIA."

Mr. Angleton. No. The allegation is false.

Senator Tower. The answer to your previous question would cover that one, too, I assume.

"Persons close to Angleton have confirmed this account in recent interviews. Reflecting Angleton's own position, however, they have denied assertions from other sources that the CIA team made fissinoable material -- plutonimum -- available to the Israelies from United States stocks."

Mr. Schwarz. As far as your are concerned is that statement right or wrong?

Mr. Angleton. I am saying, when he says deny it, I deny it.

Senator Tower. I think it was taken care of in that second paragraph, is where all the questions are raised.

TOP SECRET

NBR

Really, the CIA would be hard put to transfer any fissionable materials without the knowledge of the Atomic Energy Commission, would it not?

Mr. Angleton. Sir, I can assure you that the CIA -- I don't really know what the word fissionable means anymore. There is so much use of the atomic energy. We have atomic battery --

Senator Tower. By fissionable materials, I think the reference here is that could be converted to weapons.

Mr. Angleton. I just don't categorically -- in my whole history in the CIA, nothing ever involved fissionable material except intelligence about it or speculations regarding leakages and so forth.

Senator Tower. In other words, the CIA doesn't have control over any stocks of fissionable materials independently?

Mr. Angleton. No.

Senator Tower. And therefore the CIA could not acquire such materials except through the knowledge of the Atomic Energy Commission?

Mr. Angleton. That is right -- I hate to nit pick, but I want to simply state that there was a problem in the Agency once where you have, say, somebody simply approach you and state, I have access to fissionable materials, and therefore if it is a covert thing, and it raises a big policy question.

NBR

~~how do we deal with those kinds of cases, where someone allegedly, a confidence man, or whatnot, who wants to sell you the stuff? The purpose then was to penetrate, or try to penetrate. And I wonder if there wasn't a question at one stage as to what we do about it, and what the dangers would be if we use the diplomatic pouch, and there are thousands of questions. And it did happen in the Far East. And it was a false case, confidential case. But it did happen. There was an offer to sell us atomic fissionable material or something. But my point is, there has never been initiative to my knowledge, or an interest of the CIA in any shape or form wanting any fissionable material.~~

~~Senator Tower. Dave.~~

~~Mr. Aaron. Two small points. Mr. Szulc said that "In effect Mr. Angleton said at one point that should I surface Mr. Mann's name, Dr. Mann's name, he may go as far as to commit suicide."~~

~~Did you ever say that to Mr. Szulc?~~

~~Mr. Angleton. I don't think I said it to him. But in the back of my mind -- after I left you -- was what I think I told you -- and maybe I didn't tell you, maybe I told Colby, that is what bothers me -- the Royal Canadian Mounted Police still have an open espionage case in which a report of theirs alleges that either Dr. Mann being present or something that someone tried to cut his throat in Philby's house in~~

NBR

~~Washington, when Philby was stationed there. Now, whether we had the report or not I don't know. So I am a little confused as to that statement. Because I don't think the question of using Mann's name came up other than in the context of the allegation that Mann was sent by me, and would this mean, if it came out in terms of the Head of Services, who had called for phrases, British, French, et cetera, and they would have this confirmation, one, do they know anything about my Israeli activities now, and then the most damaging would be the entire information on Mann and Philby, et cetera.~~

~~Mr. Aaron. Let me just read one other segment of his testimony: "Angleton said after recounting the story of the transfer of atomic technology Mr. Szulc went on and said, Angleton said that he was rather taken back by this information, said that in effect he could confirm it with corrections: one, the timeframe was wrong, that it was not the early '60's, but indeed the late '50's after the Suez war, and number two, that as far as he was concerned there was not delivered by the CIA, or anyone to his knowledge any fissionable material such as plutonium or other material."~~

~~Mr. Angleton. I don't follow that at all.~~

~~Mr. Aaron. Did you make those two corrections?~~

~~Mr. Angleton. I don't understand what you are saying.~~

~~Mr. Aaron. Did you make those two corrections?~~

~~Mr. Angleton. I don't understand what you are saying.~~

NBR

76000 11590

Senator Tower. He is reading -- actually what he read a little earlier to you was in terms of trying to bring out that you did not agree with his story, that you did not confirm the validity of it.

Mr. Angleton. That part is correct. But I am not following this last part you are reading.

Mr. Aaron. Let me show it to you and you read it.

Mr. Schwarz. Would you identify the page and the line?

Mr. Aaron. The page is page 40, beginning at line 19 and running to the end of the page.

Mr. Angleton. That said in effect he could confirm it, that is the "it" business?

Mr. Aaron. Start back further and get the general story.

Mr. Angleton. This is false, on page 40, from line 8, "Mr. Angleton told me that essentially this information was correct," that is absolutely false.

And I never made any such statement that I could confirm it -- lines 19 and 20, "Angleton said he was really taken back and in effect he could confirm the two corrections." That is false.

Mr. Aaron. I think that covers it.

Mr. Angleton. And this is false: "one or more distinguished pure scientists or physicists whose services were available to the US Government", that is totally false.

Mr. Aaron. Let me ask one last question.

Mr. Angleton. When I say technical assistance, that is a quite different matter.

Mr. Kirbow. You do not mean technical assistance in the nuclear field whatever?

Mr. Angleton. He knew what I was stating was this stuff that has come out in volumes of Sadat's resume of CIA's help to the Israelis, which was accurate.

Senator Tower. By technical assistance here, as I understand it, he means technical assistance and nuclear weapons development.

Mr. Angleton. That is right. And that is deliberately on his part a misstatement of the fact. And that is what I am trying to say.

Senator Tower. He did admit to technical assistance in terms of intelligence?

Mr. Angleton. No, it wasn't a question of my admitting, I told him that it was well-known that in the whole field of ELINT and many things, that we have worked closely with the Israelis.

Senator Tower. But not specifically, technical assistance and nuclear weapon development?

Mr. Angleton. That subject wasn't in existence.

Mr. Aaron. Mr. Angleton, is it possible that one source of this story could be alleged operations by the Israelis intelligence service in the US in regard to the efforts to acquire nuclear technology or material?

NBR

Mr. Angleton. No.

Let me just state my own feeling about some of this. After he talked to me about having all those great sources which were better than Hirsch's, he said, I also have talked to Israeli intelligence. Well, I knew right away that that was a lie. I said, after 22 years' work with some people, they would have been having me out of bed at 3 in the morning. In other words, in 22 years I have never known them to withhold anything germain to our common activity. So that for American jounalists to go and try to pump things out of me regarding the subject, he wouldn't have got home before -- that is the first thing. That is the fact. And he said this Israeli fellow said something about, something I don't discuss, or words to that effect, I can't remember that part of it.

So there isn't much more to say about that.

Mr. Aaron. Were there Israeli intelligence efforts in the US in the 1960's or at any time aimed at acquiring either nuclear technology or information that would have a bearing on this story?

Mr. Angleton. There have been many efforts by many countries to acquire technical knowledge in this country, and that doesn't exclude the Israelis.

Mr. Kirbow. Do you have specific knowledge of instances

~~while you were employed with the Agency, Mr. Angleton? I believe that might be a fair question.~~

~~Senator Tower. In your capacity as Head of Counterintelligence, did it ever come to your attention -- did you ever have any certain knowledge that Israeli agents were actually trying to acquire nuclear secrets in the US, atomic secrets?~~

Senator Mathias. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest that perhaps we defer that subject for the moment. I am sure we will be meeting with Mr. Angleton again.

Senator Tower. Then, too, we can get the FBI matter in the meantime.

I have just a couple of questions that I would appreciate it if Mr. Angleton would give us his evaluations as an expert on. And they go back to his testimony relative to the Kennedy assassination.

As I recall, you said that immediately after the assassination Golitzen on his own initiative communicated with you and advised you that it was normal practice for a defector who had a military background to be processed in Department 13?

Mr. Angleton. Interrogated, or processed.

Senator Mathias. And that the implication certainly of this was that Oswald was an ex-Marine, and had been through this process, and that therefore at least that he might have been acting within the context of the Soviet plan, is that right?

Mr. Angleton. That is the thrust of what he was trying to say. His English is such that it is very difficult.

Senator Mathias. I understand. But then some years later -- my recollection is that you said it was in 1967 or 1969 -- you learned that the KGB had spent six month of employment of their top operators in the investigation of the Kennedy assassination, and wouldn't this fact in your mind negate the implication of the original Golitzen call or that they were involved?

Mr. Angleton. I want to congratulate you, because that man is a man who is also a suspect of Nosenko.

Senator Mathias. You mean in 1967?

Mr. Angleton. Just to show you the ground you are treading on, Golitzen gave us information regarding the penetration of our own organization. And we worked down to an identity. And the FBI disagreed with us. And I am talking about not a few minutes, but several weeks and months of work. And the Bureau's attitude was, you have got the wrong man, and the allegation therefore does not affect the CIA, and we advise that you send it to the Army.

And I might add, the man who wrote that memorandum was the Burt Turner I mentioned who was one of the competent FBI analysts. So it was in limbo. And we stated that "X" was the penetration agent, and the Bureau refused to accept that. And in 1967 a Soviet -- on whom we had a dossier on this thing, because he was once stationed in India, and therefore we knew who he was, and all the rest of it -- with an unknown coming to us as Nosenko was, he was a real man, we had years of surveillance on him, and so on. And he came, and he alleged -- and he was a TDY TDC, temporary duty in Washington here -- and he established contact with the first Mrs. Helms. And eventually I was called to take the case. And he stated that among his missions to the US was to effect the redefection or the return to the Soviet Union of a man, and that man was the man whom we had identified as a Soviet agent. And he went into the whole background, that this man was one of the highest grade illegals that they had ever had, and he was in our Agency.

So this had a tremendous impact on Burt Turner, because he was one of the two interrogating officers. And I can't talk to you about professional pride, but for a man of his competence to have done it the wrong way, that hurt.

So I had a question injected, which was, what do you know about George Blake?

Geo Blake

And then his response was, he says, we think he is dead.

Now, hwere is a man who is supposed to be Special Assistant to the Head of Counterintelligence in KGB, whose mother was a secretary to Litvinov, and he comes therefore from the aristocracy, as Nosenko does, because his father was the Minister of Maritime Affairs. And there is a statue of Nosenko's father. And Golitzen had told us that men chosen for very dangerous missions of penetration and duplicity came from the aristocracy. Everyone trusted them, and their fathers and their families are heroes of the Soviet Union.

So here was this man who said as to Blake, we think he is dead.

Two to three weeks later is when Blake escaped from Scrubb's Woods to the Soviet Union. Now, if he had come to the US to exfiltrate as the Special Assistant to the Head of Counterintelligence, to exfiltrate a person who worked in the West as an illegal from the end of World War II, and gradually worked into us, why wouldn't he have known the exfiltartion plans of George Blake, which would have been simultaneous, because he was a Headquarters man here on TDC.

So we handled him for six or seven weeks.

And some of the most telling parts of the interrogation was that when he went back to the Soviet Union he would have access to archives. And what was on our mind, and what cryptonym that we wanted him to work up -- and this would relate to the third part of the damage part on Golitzen -- what did Golitzen know that they did not know he knew? What agents in the West could be under our control as a result of Golitzen's disclosures regarding those things?

And you can see the tremendous quality this man had of almost getting from our man those four or five crytonyms, which would have told them what they wanted to know, because there are cases they are not sure whether he knows or doesn't know, and so on. And these are officials, and so on.

So he wasn't given that. He was given stuff that was sort of medium low level stuff, you couldn't call it chicken feed -- but we never told him we disbelieved in him. And he said, if you do those things for me, I have an opportunity, because of my mother and so on, to become Head of the American Department of the KGB.

And the other thing he wanted, was, we took him to the Soviet Agency and we came out later for contacts, and he stated there was a telegram there, and he had been requested to acquire all the information possible on the whereabouts of Golitzen and Nosenko. And I was actually in Wisconsin. And I called my Deputy long distance and I said, if there is any proposal put up by that individual that would expose -- and I use the crytonym name of Golitzen -- don't.

A week later is when he got to Moscow and he sent a cable to tell us that he can give them word on everything on Golitzen.

Coming back to what you stated, with our litmus paper and with our analysis of him, we treated him as a walk-in, as a part of the thing to confirm Nosenko's bona fides, and the build-up. And he is the one who gave the full description of the fact that for six months the place was immobilized for this investigation, of all the high level all over the works, is the way he put it.

Senator Mathias. You contrasted the way that the Russians treat a returned defector, ahd the way we treat them. And in that connection, to your knowledge was Oswald every interrogated when he teturned from Russia?

Mr. Angleton. I don't know -- I probably would know, but I don't know whether the military -- normally that would fall within the jurisdiciton of the military, since he was a military man who defected. So I don't know the answer to that.

Senator Mathias. What about from Cuba?

Mr. Angleton. I can't answer that.

Senator Mathias. Or at any time?

Mr. Angleton. I think the Bureau interviewed him.

Senator Mathias. The Bureau, not the CIA?

Mr. Angleton. I am certain we never did, no.

Senator Mathias. But you think the FBI did?

Mr. Angleton. That is just my sensation that they did.

Senator Mathias. We will follow that up.

This is the very last question. You referred to files that are maintained on persons who have some contact with the Soviet Union and the Soviet nationals. And I would like to pursue that in a personal way.

About two years ago Arbotov was in this country, and he came to lunch in my office. And we had several members of Congress there. Would this kind of thing be a matter of record?

7600011599

~~Mr. Angleton. If there was any technical coverage from the Soviet Embassy, then my answer would be yes.~~

~~Senator Mathias. My recollection is, he came with one person with him, whose name I don't remember.~~

~~Mr. Angleton. If the Bureau had him under surveillance, and he came here -- now, I am getting onto ground I don't know -- the newspaper said Mr. Hoover gave an order that the Hill was off-base, and when the Soviet came here he was never surveilled, and whom he saw was unknown. That is what the newspaper said. My own observation would be in any technical coverage of an installation, the door of an individual, would result in dossiers on all people who had contacts, if the man was suspect, or there is a reason.~~

~~Senator Tower. Excuse me. You are talking about a Soviet person visiting members here on the Hill?~~

~~Senator Mathias. Yes. And what I am trying to get at is the circumstances under which a file or dossier might be~~ opened on a member of Congress, and I offered myself as a guinea pig that Arbatov lunch as a starting point.

At this point my question is on purely hypothetical point. I plan to go next week with the Senate group which is making a parliamentary visit to Russia. And may see Arbatov in Moscow, I would assume it would be likely. Would that become a continuing entry in such a dossier as far as you know?

Mr. Angleton. We don't have any coverage in Moscow.

Senator Mathias. Is that the kind of thing that --

Mr. Angleton. We are not living in a very ideal world in the Agency. We can't even process the hard material.

Senator Mathias. Since it is a hypothetical question, let me make it even more hypothetical. Let's say our mission, instead of visiting Moscow, visits Rome or Paris or someplace, where it is very easy for you to operate. And there were meetings with Russians who were known to have visitied me in Washington. Would that be the kind of thing which would get to a Congressional file?

Mr. Angleton. No. I imagine the British MI-5, though, because of the Russians in London, would pass through liaison to us, if there was something suspicious, would pass through a report on the meeting. And we have examples where Czech defector told us about a member of Parliament, a Soviet agent, and what the cryptonum was, and how he was recruited. And you have got other cryptonyms on British members of Parliament that you have not then identified. We know what they passed or some of the stuff which was passed.

Senator Mathias. Assuming a file was set up on that lunch two years ago --

Mr. Angleton. The file wouldn't be set up there on the fact -- with your name on it, it would be the Soviets, and you would be buried in the file, which would probably be that thick, of that Soviet activity in the US. And there would be the fact that he was here, and that he went to New York, and he did this or that.

Senator Mathias. So that wouldn't show up in Mathias' file, that would show up in an Arbatov file?

Mr. Angleton. That is right. That is the way it is supposed to be. And the only time where I can see a file would be opened on an American Congressman or Senator would be where there was a substantial basis for opening up that file. But that wouldn't be at the initiative of the CIA, it would be a matter that would go to the FBI and the Attorney General, and then there would be somebody in the Senate or the Congress who would be contacted and notified, and so on. And I think Mr. Hoover's practice was that he would learn through his own sources that a person who is not good was going to have lunch with a Congressman or was cultivating him, and he would pick up the money -- or this is what they say. And I think this is the way he handled it -- he would simply call him on the phone and say, I think you should know the following, and there would be a notification that Mr. Hoover notified, et cetera. He called me once when there wasn't enough time factor for him to send a letter to me. He said, you are doing something at such and such an hour, you should know that this man is a homosexual, or so on and so on. And it may have been useful to change the course in a hurry. But it is formalized in the Bureau. When Mr. Hoover intervened on those things, it was either a question of time or a question of emphasis. But the formal part goes on regardless, if a person, regardless of who he is, is involved, or is passed a document, or comes up in a telephone tap, or any number of things, their is a record on it.

NBR

Senator Mathias. In other words, you are saying what a political friend of mine once said, that you don't get news unless you make news?

Mr. Angleton. That is one way of looking at it.

Senator Mathias. That is all, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Angleton. I want to commend you again on that question, because that fixes several things. Because if there is one thing I regret about leaving the Agency, it is the unresolved cases. And that is one of the biggest, because we know so much about that person when he was in India. And he was the most sophisticated, cultivated, high level intelligence person.

7600011513

~~Senator Baker. What would you do, Mr. Angleton, to try to rehabilitate the Agency in particular in counterintelligence capability, since you feel that it is deteriorating, what things in particular would you do?~~

~~Mr. Angleton. My feeling is that the Agency has to go through the purgatory that -- these fires that no man would put out -- and therefore let it be shocking or whatever. And let all the political repercussions take place, and if you go to purgatory, my view is, the bigger the fires, the better. So my view is, let it all come out. And let people take the consequences. I am not a believer that an agency can have two fathers. And I don't believe in inferiors reporting on their superiors by directive. And I don't believe that the Agency below the Director has to be responsive to two authorities.~~

~~Senator Baker. What two authorities?~~

~~Mr. Angleton. I mean the Congress and the Executive. In other words, if Colby is asked, what do you know about Chile, my view is that on Chile would yoy please ask the White House. And that is what I am trying to get at, at least so then they can come back with Colby after the Executive part has told Colby what it might be. But to throw the burden on the Director to respond to a question on Chile, gives him -- he is always in that dual position. And something doesn't seem to work that way. And the lower you go in the Agency, even to~~ my level, to be resonsive to more than one authoity is chaos. And I am not making any puns.

Senator Baker. To be responsible to the Congress and to the --

Mr. Angleton. The word response is what disturbs me somewhat, because the secrets that we have just been discussing here are so germain to everything in this country relating to the world balance of power and what the Soviets will strike at, and what the role of detente is. That is what I am trying to get at. The Executive -- in other words, the intelligence community has never really had a day of peace in a way. When Hoover passed away, and Gray came aboard, everyone in the intelligence community believed, now we can normalize this situation. It has never been normal before. Mr. Hoover never attended an Agency meeting. Mr. Hoover never permitted one of his representatives to go beyond this jurisdiciton question. And you cannot run a government that way, and you cannot run counterintelligence that way. So when Mr. Gray came to see Mr. Helms, and Helms called me in before him and said, what position should I take, and I said, he wants to come and normalize relations, and he wants to reestablish liaison. And he said, I wouldn't accept it form him, they are the ones who brok it off. Therefore tell him that when he has read your correspondence with Mr. Hoover, and reviewed all of that, if he feels that he is capable of handling it, that you will be prepared to sit down and discuss the question of liaison, because liaison is a tiny part of the question of penetration and double agents and all the rest of it.

And in fact that happened, and everybody thought, we had got a captain that didn't make admiral aboard who will settle this. And then we will have his demise.

And then you had Mr. Ruckelshaus come in as as acting Director. And then the Watergate and all of that. So there has never been a stabilizing factor in this Government as it relates to, not counterintelligence alone, but the intelligence community. And now I amstrongly opposed to professionals being Directors.

I would say that a professional Director of the Agency doesn't work, he doesn't have a basis on the outside, or the perspective. And I think the Rockefeller Commission's observations were first rate in terms of the idea of two Deputy Directors who have to be confirmed and whatnot. And I think that no directorate should be expected to follow the nuts and bolts and at the same time handle all the duties of meeting and all the rest of it and try to keep an eye inside the business.

Senator Baker. What do you think of the Rockefeller Commission reports?

Mr. Angleton. I don't see anything wrong with it.

Senator Baker. Do you think it will work?

Mr. Angleton. I really don't know this area. So I am not competent to speak or go around seeing what will happen in Congress, just on the simple question of Chile and the leakages and the damage that is done to US posture abroad, how much of it does this take?

Senator Baker. It wouldn't take many. That is an argumentative thing.

Mr. Angleton. All the cases we are discussing, in the hands of the wrong people, and our files in the hands of the wrong people, would have very decisive political impact upon our elections. That is what I mean, to be very frank about it.

Senator Baker. How would that happen?

Mr. Angleton. There are all kinds of information which, if it falls into the wrong hands or should they want to use it for their own ulterior motives, would be absolutely damaging.

Senator Tower. In other words, this information could be used by politicians as a political football?

Mr. Angleton. Precisely. But a man who would do it damages --

Senator Mathias. Would you give an example?

United States Senate,
Select Committee to Study Governmental
Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities,
Washington, D. C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:10 o'clock p.m., in Room S-407, the Capitol, the Honorable Gary Hart presiding.

Present: Senators Hart of Colorado (presiding), and Schweiker.

Also present: William G. Miller, Staff Director; and Joseph diGenova, Charles Kirbow, Jim Johnston, Britt Snider, Loch Johnson, Elliot Maxwell, Elizabeth Culbreath, Bob Kelley, Michael Epstein, Rick Inderfurth, Charles Lombard, and Pat Shea, Professional Staff Members.

P R O C E E D I N G S

Senator Hart of Colorado. Gentlemen, let's go ahead and be sworn and get under way if you don't mind.

Do you swear the testimony you're about to give will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Angleton. I do.

Mr. Miler. I do.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Thank you very much.

Mr. Angleton at least has been before us before, and routinely we remind all witnesses that they preserve all of their constitutional rights, including the right to counsel, the right to remain silent and so forth and so on, and to have a member of the Committee present during all of the testimony.

It is my understanding we have no prepared statements to start with, so I think I'll just open it up to staff questions and interject some of my own, and I understand that the general subject matter to be discussed here today -- and we are interested in your expertise regarding the question of counterintelligence. So, we'll just have the staff members start.

TESTIMONY OF JAMES ANGLETON

ACCOMPANIED BY SCOTTY MILER

Mr. Johnson. I wonder if we could begin by having both of your gentlemen give us some information on your backgrounds, beginning with Mr. Angleton.

Mr. Angleton. I entered the OSS in 1943 from the Army, went into training in Washington and environs and then to London, and then eventually to Italy, and I took over as Chief, Counterintelligence in Italy, and eventually took over as Chief, OSS.

I returned in about '47, '48, and various jobs in both espionage and counterintelligence. At one time Chief of Operations and eventually Chief of Counterintelligence, and that was from about 1954 until 1974.

Mr. Johnson. Mr. Miler?

Mr. Miler. I entered OSS in 1946. I was sent to China. I was in China until 1949, transferred to Japan, became involved in intelligence aspects of the Korean War. I served in Thailand, the Philippines, as I said, China, Japan, Ethiopia. I traveled extensively, was a station chief abroad, and for the last ten years I have been in Counterintelligence, first in the Special Investigations, and subsequently as Chief of Operations for Mr. Angleton's Counterintelligence Staff.

And when I left the Agency in December of '74, that was my position.

Mr. Johnson. So both of you left the CIA in December, 1974.

Since that time we understand there have been some changes in how counterintelligence is conducted at the CIA.

Could you give us some understanding of those changes?

Mr. Angleton. I would like to defer to Mr. Miler on this, if I may?

Mr. Miler. Yes.

My understanding is there have been some rather fundamental and substantive changes which are a continuation, actually, of changes that were made first in 1973, in July of 1973 when many of the centralized counterintelligence functions were decentralized and reallocated to different components of the Directorate of Operations. Such things as agent approvals and security, operational security reviews for intelligence collection and covert action operations, the oversight on intelligence operations, and oversight on counterintelligence operations in the field were decentralized. Research and Analysis has been curtailed, and the emphasis on it has changed.

There have been changes in the record procedures.

Mr. Johnson. Could you be more specific on these changes, for example, in research?

Mr. Miler. In research, the research is now, as I understand it, pretty much on a case by case basis, not in an overall perception of worldwide or national counterintelligence problems. There is no -- the application of historical cases, historical problems is not being applied, as I understand it, to current operational efforts or investigative needs. There is an entirely different philosophy being applied as to what may be required in terms of understanding the counterintelligence threat to this nation. There is very little emphasis, if any, or concern with such things as deception and disinformation. There is little application of analytical and assessment work to the overall role of foreign intelligence and security services in political action.

There have been some fundamental changes in operational philosophies stemming from an application of what is termed management by objectives as it is being applied in the CIA to operations, and there is a -- has been a distinct change in some of the attention which has been previously placed on the problem of penetration from foreign and particularly hostile intelligence services into the American community.

And there has been a very, very substantive change in the perception and the conduct of counterintelligence in that there has been what is in my view a very serious erosion of security and compartmentation of operations, and leakage of information which has not been to the best interests of a national counterintelligence effort.

Mr. Johnson. So, from going from a rather centralized apparatus to a decentralized situation, the dangers of penetration have increased.

Mr. Miler. The dangers of penetration have increased significantly, and this extends also to the methods by which relations with foreign intelligence services are conducted.

Mr. Johnson. But how do you respond to the criticism that during your tenure and Mr. Angleton's tenure, too tight a rein was kept on counterintelligence information, and individuals in the field at the station level failed to get the information they needed to conduct their counterintelligence operation?

Mr. Miler. I would have to respond to that, Mr. Johnson, and I could only respond to it in the context of specifics. To my knowledge, and as practiced from my position as Chief of Operations, whenever there was information which was judged to be of significance, importance to a field station, that field station was advised, unless there was some overriding security source protection or other considerations, and the decision then not to advise them was made at the Deputy Director for Operations, as it is now called, or the Director level.

There was, certainly, a very tight security, a very tight compartmentation of counterintelligence information and activities, which in my view was essential, and still is essential, and will be even more essential in the future if we are to regain a counterintelligence initiative and to do our job in the future. And I think this is the fundamental question that the management of the CIA and the Senate and the Executive have to decide, is do we want a counterintelligence effort, and if so, then we have to get to it, and we have to put our best minds to it.

Mr. Johnson. Were there instances during your period in counterintelligence where the Counterintelligence Staff would conduct its own counterespionage activities, without the knowledge of the various geographic division chiefs?

Mr. Miler. There were very few of them, with the chiefs. There may have been some.

Mr. Johnson. In those cases where there were such operations, were they cleared with the DDO?

Mr. Miler. Every single one of them was cleared with the DDO and/or the Director and/or the Deputy Director.

Mr. Johnson. On important counterespionage operations, could you tell us in more detail what the approval and clearance process is?

We know that for covert action the 40 Committee frequently becomes involved. What about for important counterespionage operations?

Mr. Miler. Well, Mr. Angleton might want to qualify my response, because obviously he was involved more in this than I was, but there would be the two primary considerations. One was a strictly CIA, counterintelligence or counterespionage activity. The derivation of the authority for this came from the statutes which set up the CIA and from National Security Council directives 53, 55 and so forth. The authority rested in there. The approval would go to the then DDP, now Deputy Director for Operations, the Deputy Director and/or the Director.

The authorities, if it were a significant counterintelligence or counterespionage case, the authorities, as I understood it then, might require the Director to go outside the Agency to the White House or the Attorney General and so forth.

Alternatively, we in the CI Staff might be directed to coordinate this with the FBI. We would go to the FBI, explain the case and so forth. The FBI would then go to the Attorney -- the Department of Justice and get authorities, whatever authorities they would require in order to pursue the investigations, conduct the case, and do it according to whatever stipulations that the Department of Justice would put on it in order to either neutralize the suspected spy or agent, and/or conclude the case by prosecution.

And I am talking now of primarily in terms of a serious counterespionage case involving an American citizen.

Mr. Johnson. Mr. Angleton, do you know of any instances where the CI Staff or higher authority within the CIA went outside the Agency for approval for important counterespionage operations?

Mr. Angleton. I know of cases, yes.

Mr. Johnson. And what would the approval system be?

76000011259

Mr. Angleton. Well, it would be an ad hoc discussion between the Director and the Secretary, and probably others, the Attorney General.

Mr. Johnson. Does this happen frequently? Is this a typical procedure for a major counter operation?

Mr. Angleton. If it's a major matter, it's on the basis of need to know.

You have another kind of case where a foreigner came to me and stated his government had a defector from the Bloc, an excellent agent, and they would be prepared to give us the agent if we would take it over lock, stock and barrel, handle it in such a fashion that there would be no exposure, because of the political consequences to their government.

I would go to the Director and the Deputy Director, spell out the matter, and come to a determination with them whether we wanted to take the case on. This particular case involved not only a person who had been in the intelligence service of the opposition a long time, but he had access to codes, and also a great deal of deciphered material. So it was kicked back and forth, and there was a determination made that we would take it over, the staff would take it over in its entirety.

And therefore, it meant that I called in Scotty and we pulled together our team, we sent them abroad. We handled the man in the field for a long time, and then eventually brought him back here.

In a case of that sort, the instruction was agreed upon by all concerned, and the Director's instruction was that the Division was not to be informed, the Division where this individual came from, the Bloc area, should not be informed; that the Bureau, only two or three people in the Bureau, by name, should be informed, and that we would run the operation and bury the individual at the end.

Now, it went along --

Mr. Johnson. Did you say "bury the individual"?

Mr. Angleton. I'm not using it in your Committee terms.

Mr. Kirbow. You'd better clear that up for the record.

Mr. Miler. We would integrate him in to the American society in such a way that he would be non-identifiable.

Mr. Angleton. He would be buried.

Mr. Miler. May I just add here also that the authorities, the approval are very specific in terms of the agents' and the CIA's responsibility to advise and get the approval of the Attorney General in bringing someone like this into the United States.

The Director got this approval. It was a formal letter to the Attorney General, a formal reply. There was a formal but very limited advice to the Immigration. All of the legal requirements required by the Attorney General, Immigration, all other agencies, were done. However, in this instance, they were done on a very narrow, select basis, directly to Attorney General and so forth, rather than to go through the normal bureaucratic chain of command out of the CIA and its various components.

Mr. Angleton. With the added fact that we did not disclose all of the facts, nor identity.

Now, this is important, because the individual was of such prominence that the country concerned would be placed in jeopardy diplomatically, the place where he was residing on tour. There would be intensive investigations by his headquarters, and therefore we had to have covers. And so we laid on in such a fashion that another service received information regarding the target country that would induce them to take certain observable actions, and then to spread the word that the fellow had actually defected to another country, so that their entire investigative thrust would be directed toward that country.

Senator Hart of Colorado. So far we've talked about process, and I think we'll keep going on it, and return to it, but I would like to quantify some of this if I can.

First of all, by terms of definition, is the phrase or the term "counterintelligence" interchangeable with counterespionage?

Mr. Angleton. It can be. I think technically counterintelligence is regarded to be all forms of investigative activity, travel control, your data files, your dossiers, all of the systems that go into counterintelligence as such.

Out of that emerges a product, and one of the products is counterespionage.

Senator Hart of Colorado. I see.

How big was the Counterintelligence Staff?

Mr. Angleton. When? Well, when it was in its prime it was around, it was 200 some odd people. After this decentralization took place, when we lost international Communism, which in no service in the world has it ever been divorced from counterintelligence; we lost our police division where we train police from throughout the world; we lost operation 3(approval, which is approval of agents; we lost our controls over the Technical Services Division; we lost the geographic representation; we lost liaison, which was the liaison was with the FBI and 26 other government agencies who do investigations.

Mr. Miler. They took counterintelligence and liaison away from the counterintelligence component, if you can imagine such a situation.

Mr. Angleton. So that reduced us to less than 80 people, and this comes to, Senator, if I can just point to one of the most important things in the legislation or in whatever the Executive does, is that you cannot have in my view a Director of the FBI and a Director of CIA who are independent of one another. You have to have some higher authority to whom you can make an appeal when decisions of this sort are made so that it is aired, and it is not done without the knowledge of anyone, and then breaks, as it did, in the New York Times and what not.

Mr. Johnson. Yesterday we had the Bureau representatives telling us that there was really no problem or conflict when it came to questions of this, and that there was no problem with higher authority. Apparently you would disagree with that.

Mr. Angleton. I disagree in total with that. I'm saying the decline in the Bureau over 20 years from when they had very high grade counterintelligence until today when there has probably been -- well, it is least effective.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Why is that?

Mr. Angleton. Well, I think it has to do with the number of diversions it had in the days of the Vietnam war, when internal security lost a tremendous number of men to other assignments and duties.

Second, I don't think that counterintelligence or the real thrust of Soviet Bloc intelligence has ever been brought up to policy level, and, more important, anything that involves penetration has always been swept under the rug. In other words, the question of penetration in this government or penetration in any agency has never been brought to a responsible level of finding out how it happened and what has gone wrong.

And let's take one defector who said -- in this case he spent 16 years in the Soviet Union in the KGB. He gave us over 180 leads of penetration in France, and it occasioned my drafting a letter for Mr. McCone to give to President Kennedy to give to DeGaulle. DeGaulle secretly sent to this country one of his highest trusted military men. He was here incognito. He met with the defector for three days.

The French original reaction to President Kennedy's letter was, it was Soviet provocation, because this was at the stage when France was making certain very sensitive agreements in the atomic field and otherwise with the United States, and therefore these allegations of penetration had a very direct bearing on those negotiations. And so the General who came over was totally prepared to believe this was provocation, but after three days with the defector, in a meeting with Helms and myself, he stated without any question that this man was 100 percent bona fide, because he could ask him those questions right on the nerve of their secrets, and he got the responses.

Now, this defector also gave considerable data on the status of penetration in the U.S. Government, documents which he had seen in Moscow, cryptonyms of operating agents, documents which could only have been prepared by our organization, and many other cases going back into the early '50s, going almost to Cabinet level. So all of this information was made available to the Bureau. But in due course Mr. Hoover regarded or made the pronouncement -- and I won't say when he makes a pronouncement that it is one that has been recommended to him from higher level -- that the defector in question was probably a provocation, and the Bureau ceased contact with that individual, and I would say they have not had any contact with him since 1965.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Why did Hoover make that decision?

Mr. Angleton. Well, among other things, this defector wanted to have access to ongoing and to past cases with the view that he had a tremendous amount of data that he could not relate to anything, but if he could see things that were going on, then it would be meaningful to him in terms of what he had to contribute. And I can take the example that, with another allied service; immediately we brought them into it and he had seen certain naval documents that dealt with infrastructure and budget. This happened to be British.

In time they found the documents, and when they presented them to him, he could identify those he had seen and those he had not seen. This led to the apprehension of vassal Vassil, who was in the A admiralty. And this was the quality of his information.

All through the west agents were apprehended on the basis of his information. But there is a tremendous bulk of it which is made up of fragments, made up of documents he's seen where we have not been able to identify the document; a great number of cryptonyms of reporting sources where we cannot find the body to fit the cryptonym. So this is the reality. And he is being contacted perhaps by nine different intelligence services.

Now, there is no one who has supported the question of his mala fides. In other words, everyone, to a man, has stated that he is bona fide, that they have never been able to disprove a statement of fact that he has given as a statement of fact, although they do not necessarily agree with his hypotheses. That is the official statement.

Mr. Miler. May I just add two things on this?

First, Mr. Johnson, it goes back to the business of compartmentation and not advising stations. In the case Mr. Angleton cited, the Paris station of the CIA was not told anything about the information, and I think this is a very good example of why you would not.

The second point I would like to follow up on is with respect to this defector's information, there were five leads which were passed to the FBI about penetration which involved the CIA, for action. And one case was solved, but it was solved only after the FBI officially sent us a letter saying that they concluded that there was no substance to this information.

They had to reopen the investigation --

Mr. Angleton. And they also said: send it to the Army.

Mr. Miler. Yes, send it to the Army.

Now, they had to reopen the investigation when their surveillance spotted a man coming out of the Soviet embassy, and it was subsequently proved that he was a Soviet spy.

Mr. Angleton. Now, that individual had performed four separate missions for Soviet intelligence since about 1938 or '39. One, he had been dropped in by the Soviets into Germany on a mission with the WT set, to be captured in order to be played back and to penetrate the German intelligence.

Second, he had moved from that into the penetration of VLASOV the Vassilov movement, which were the captured Russians in the German -- in the VLASOV Vassilov Army.

Third, he had penetrated the anti-Soviet forces in Germany, and then he was taken on by us in 1948 or '51 is when they sent to renew his inks.

So he was with us from '51 to around '60.

Well, when the defection occurred, it was '62.

Mr. Johnson. And Mr. Angleton, you used a term that is unfamiliar to us: his inks.

Mr. Miler. Secret inks.

Mr. Angleton. Secret inks. In other words, the Germans had captured a Soviet agent who had the same kind of inks, and so therefore the inks were compromised, so they laid on a large operation in Berlin and trained him in highly sophisticated inks. And he is now residing not too far distant from us.

But I might add that it is very important to note that while we maintained that he is a Soviet agent, and the Bureau disagreed and told us to send this off, we had a development occur which it is not necessary for me to go into, it's still a relatively live case, in which proof positive came that he was a Soviet agent, and it was in the face of that proof positive that the Bureau moved in and interrogated him. And that is what prompted him to go to the Soviet embassy.

7600011277

WARD & PAUL

And after some hours there he came out, he was asked why did you go to the Soviet embassy, and he said I went there to get my personal history and particulars regarding my family since those are the questions you have been asking me. In other words, instead of -- in this case the man had a wife who was having an affair off and on with a Japanese military person here -- instead of recruiting the Japanese and the wife to work in to him, because what we wanted was a confession, because the point I want to stress here is in a case of this sort, a penetration there, he is not there as a solo person. He is there as a spotter. He is a person used for entrapment abroad. He is a person who can originate an operation, induce you to go into the operation and bring in a weak element, and put them in a position for further recruitment. And I can stretch this on and on.

And the classic example is the Philby case. Philby would have been Chief of British Intelligence. He was also identified positively in the end by this defector. When the defector first knew about it, it was called the Ring of Five in the Soviet intelligence, five people, Philby being one.

But from the time he knew about it, in actual fact it was a ring that went into the twenties, because the purpose of the penetration is simply not to be a passive figure; it is to be an aggressive figure who creates situations for recruitment. And that case has never been prosecuted. The man has never confessed. He's never been broken. And yet it was in the heart of our SB, Soviet Division activities.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Could you give us, back to the quantification, could you give us some figures for numbers of counterintelligence cases handled per year?

Mr. Angleton. Scotty, you can.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Just so we can have an idea of the magnitude of volume.

Mr. Miler. Well, for example, one program that we had going was an attempt to record penetration recruitment attempts of U.S., American officials abroad, strictly abroad. And over a ten year period the number of attempts to recruit and penetrate hit close to 1200. So we were running around 250 or so a year, just in that one small area of counterintelligence concern.

The number of cases that we had would vary, but I would say that from defectors in the last ten year, from Soviet and Soviet Bloc defectors, we averaged around 150 cases a year. At one time -- I do know that at one time we had over 500 active cases which required investigation.

We were concerned with approximately 140 to 160 double agent operations a year. We had investigations which would probably have a range, 25 to 30, significant investigations that were going on, in addition to which we would have a number of investigations, leads and operations with cooperative foreign intelligence and security services which would probably hit an average of about 50, if you would.

There were other operations which were generated from other investigations and so forth, leads from the FBI, leads from the military services, which would perhaps hit 30 or 40 a year.

Senator Hart of Colorado. What about the number of cases involving penetration, successful or otherwise, of the Agency itself?

Mr. Angleton. Well, the basic responsibility would be the Office of Security. In other words, we would work with them, but it tends to be a one way street, as it should be, namely, they are responsible for personnel and for installations. But from the one defector alone, I would say there were five hard leads.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Over what period of time?

Mr. Angleton. Of this one defector who came out in December of '61. But his leads were going back to '51, 1951.

Mr. diGenova. Is this the same defector with whom the 7600011031

FBI has had no contact since 1965?

Mr. Angleton. That's correct.

Mr. diGenova. Has the Agency had any contact with him since 1965?

Mr. Angleton. Yes, we've had it, but we've had our ups and downs.

Mr. diGenova. And what have those ups and downs been attributable to?

Mr. Angleton. Well, they are basic -- well, first, there are two different attitudes in the American intelligence community regarding defectors. One of them is to give them the harsh treatment and to treat them as second class citizens, and we actually have taken on more salvage cases in the Counterintelligence Staff and rehabilitated these people. In fact, we came into that case basically because the fellow had gone sour. And --

Mr. Kirbow. Meaning he had failed to continue cooperating or was not giving you the right information?

Mr. Angleton. That's right. Well, no, it was simply that he refused to cooperate any further, because one didn't appreciate the ideological reasons for his defection.

So these ups and downs would go on -- I mean, we would have to change case officers because they would simply have a breakdown in communication.

Mr. diGenova. Did the failure of the FBI to utilize this asset inhibit you in any way from using the asset or the Agency from utilizing it?

Mr. Angleton. Absolutely, because so much of the information that we wanted to take up with him was also related to FBI information.

Mr. diGenova. In other words, you needed access to information the FBI had, and you couldn't get it?

Mr. Angleton. We could get it but they wouldn't give permission that their information would be submitted to him.

Mr. diGenova. In other words, you had a third agency rule blocking you?

Mr. Angleton. A third agency, also in the attitude. For instance, in one session in which I participated, the Bureau asked him to give the name of a source. He refused to give it on the grounds that the man was in the KGB, was a friend of his, and he didn't want that man's name ever to get back to the KGB because it would mean the man's life. And therefore he had a direct confrontation, refusing to give it, very understandable.

begin 3

Mr. diGenova. Was this lack of cooperation directly attributable to Mr. Hoover, to your knowledge?

Mr. Angleton. no.

Mr. diGenova. Was this problem ever brought to the attention of the President of the United States at any time?

Mr. Angleton. No, but he raised it with the Attorney General Mr. Kennedy, he had a direct meeting with him.

Mr. diGenova. And what, if anything, happened?

Mr. Angleton. Only encouragement.

Mr. diGenova. Could you amplify on that?

Mr. Angleton. Well, the Attorney General handled him very well indeed, but nothing further came out of it.

Mr. diGenova. But there was no commitment on the part of the Attorney General to see if he could budge Mr. Hoover to assist the Agency?

Mr. Angleton. Well, the issue didn't come up in that fashion, just the general, the general agreement that he was prepared to work for the United States at the highest level, because the intelligence he had went far beyond simply KGB. It went into Soviet policy. It went into Soviet reorientation. It went into Soviet Bloc. It went into Soviet defense matters. It went into some of the major secrets. And therefore it wasn't simply counterintelligence. It had to do with policy or political action.

He knew, for example, the identity of a Prime Minister who was a Soviet agent, who at that time was trying to get us to go into several political arrangements, and he knew exactly how he was recruited and how he was being used as an agent of influence.

So these were matters that went beyond simply intelligence scope.

Mr. Kirbow. How long is a man like that good for, Mr. Angleton? I mean, by this time, or a decade from now, a lot of that information is of no longer any value to you.

Mr. Angleton. No, that's not so. It is a fact that the man has a computer mind. In other words, if you took all of his interrogation reports, they ran to some 20 filing cabinets. You try to have anyone retain in their mind, to apply that same data against a new problem that comes up, it requires an individual who lived that to be able to look at a case that has arisen, and he knows the case officer on the Soviet side, and he can give an analysis that this fellow was on the Scandinavian desk and that he was promoted to this, and that his background is ciphers. He had not told you that he was ciphers before because it wasn't relevant. So it's a new, added factor.

And then you find that someone is known as a code clerk, and therefore the pieces begin to fit together, that the man who was sent to the field by the Soviets to handle some unknown American is a cipher expert, and therefore you look among who are the code clerks.

Mr. diGenova. I'd like to --

Mr. Miller. Could I interrupt just a moment?

You spoke in this instance of 20 file cabinets from the interrogation of one defector.

Mr. Angleton. Yes.

Mr. Miller. What kind of volume did you put together in your years in this activity? If this is the product of one interrogation, what kind of volume did you put together to make a workable capability?

Mr. Angleton. Well, the first thing was to computerize everything, and the second was to break it out case by case, British cases, Australian cases, New Zealand cases, Dutch cases, Finnish cases, French cases, Italian cases, all the way on across the board, American cases; and then to take all of the data, all of the voluminous stuff that was pertinent to each of the leads, including the unknowns, in other words, Unknown 1, Unknown 2, Unknown 3, etc.

So you had the ability to pick out a file on X subject or X individual, and there would be the direct quotation from the interrogation, and then whatever traces there were of follow-ups, action taken, dissemination, etc.

Mr. Miller. Just to press that -- yes.

Mr. Miler. I think your question is the total volume of the files that were available to the Counterintelligence?

Mr. Miller. Yes. I was impressed by the fact that one interrogation yielded 20 file cabinets, and was wondering the total volume.

Mr. Miler. What were the figures on the cases to read?

Mr. Angleton. Well, I think I've already presented that once, but when we were dealing with the new management and it was all this business of objectives and management by objectives, and the idea of changing Counterintelligence personnel every two years and new faces and open it all up and the rest of it, we ran a basic job on how many, if you took 20 cases that were imperative for a Counterintelligence officer to read, what the statistical side would be. Those 20 cases would run into enough linear footage, which according to the mathematicians in the Agency would take 22 man years to read, or if they were 100 percent incorrect, 11 years to read. Those would be the 20 basic counterintelligence cases.

And the purpose of it was simply to show that it was a profession, and that there had to be longevity to build up Counterintelligence officers.

Mr. Johnson. Generally speaking, within the counterintelligence organizations, it seems to you perform four activities: liaison, research, operations and security.

Could you give us an idea of your own priorities in terms of distributing manpower across those four activities?

Can you break it out that way?

Mr. Angleton. Well, it is difficult to break out, but the primary thing of all is the question of penetration in the U.S. Government, and then in allied governments. That would be my priority. In other words, when we had a defector from the Cuban service who had information of an agreement made between the KGB and the DGI in Cuba to work against the U.S. and how they would differentiate the priorities, and areas where the KGB was oversurveilled, the DGI would take over the surveillance of our personnel and so on.

The moment this defector arrived in the United States, I sent Scotty to the airport immediately to see him because that's the number one priority. Here was an individual whose job was to work on Americans and who allegedly had seen information from one of our embassies. Now, that is the highest priority, and particularly because information of a counterintelligence nature is perishable. Some is and some isn't.

The moment there is a defector, the opposition runs a damage report. So you know certain information will be known to them immediately that is compromised, and they will take action to correct it. But there are certain secrets that the man knows that their damage report will not turn up. Those you put on the back burner. But the ones you reach for first are those that are perishable, and this is -- the priority is established by the fact that here is a live, highly valuable source force, and we only have so much time to extract the cream off of him and determine those things that would disappear.

Mr. Miler. But the whole thrust of all of our operations, research, analysis, everything, was toward that goal. And much of the reason for the security of the compartmentation for the CI activity was to protect that concern.

Mr. Lombard. I wonder if I could ask a question concerning the Bureau.

Would it help today if there was a separate Bureau under the Attorney General for counterintelligence, separate from the FBI?

Mr. Angleton. You are posing the same problem that the RCMP in Canada had. In other words, they set up, I might add because of us, because we brought them into counterintelligence in a way they had never been brought into it, we brought them down when this first defector, this major defector came out, and the cases that were revealed to them, cryptonyms, telegrams that were taken from them, an ambassador who was recruited, one of their ambassadors and all this, led in time to the Canadian Prime Minister desiring to set up a special counter-intelligence. And so they had this problem of how you take a law enforcement force and what do you do about it. And their ultimate decision was that you had to keep it within the RCMP. You created the separate office, and you created sort of a director general of it, but the cadre, your people came from the regular force, even though they are separated from the rest of the RCMP, and they are independent of the Commissioner of the RCMP. I mean, they are there for rations and quarters.

Mr. Lombard. I guess what I had in mind was more the British model of the Yard having --

Mr. Angleton. Well, the British model is the most overexaggerated model in the world. I think I can quite honestly state that since World War II the British have never caught an agent where the lead didn't come from us or somebody else. It was never self-generated.

7600011039

Now, in the last year or so maybe they caught an agent, but up until that time they have never caught an agent.

Mr. Lombard. So your answer, in effect, would be that the counterintelligence function should stay within the Bureau.

Mr. Angleton. That is correct. I mean, not that it's ideal, but in terms of the realities, in terms of the realities it should be kept within the Bureau. It should be greatly enlarged, and the head of that should be, in my view, a Deputy Director of the Bureau.

Mr. Lombard. All right.

Now, let me ask you this. In your experience were there problems where the law enforcement impded the running of counterintelligence or counterespionage operations domestically? In other words, were there times when you would have liked to have run an agent domestically for a longer period of time in order to get the rest of the guys, but they said no, we've got to take this fellow to court now?

Mr. Angleton. That used to be prevalent back in the '50s. Today I don't think they've got many cases. I mean, I don't think that the job is being done, not in the last ten years.

Mr. Johnson. Mr. Angleton, when I asked you earlier what your priorities were, you mentioned making sure that we were not penetrated in conducting investigations to see if in fact we were, which seems to give the impression that we are defensively oriented, and that was your main priority.

Mr. Angleton. Well, I think that how could you have it any other way?

If you've got a cryptonym of telegrams disappearing and are in possession of the opposition --

Mr. Johnson. But isn't the aggressive dimension even more important and trying to penetrate the hostile service?

Mr. Angleton. Those are all kind of theoretical arguments to my way of thinking.

Mr. Miler. You have to know what you're penetrating first.

Mr. Angleton. I mean, this idea of running operations is not really understood.

To run a double agent operation requires a tremendous amount of manpower. It is a commitment that very few people understand. If you are going to run a double, I mean, to start from the beginning, you've got to be able to keep a diary. Now, one is the real life is the real life of the agent and the other is his double life, because you can have a question from his headquarters that says, that agent you had three years ago, would you please go back to him. You've got to be able to read into a diary of the fictional life in order to answer that question.

Now, this takes manpower. You've got to have meetings.

You've got to be able to satisfy the questionnaires, and you can go all the way on down the line. This ties up thousands of man-hours.

Mr. Johnson. Could you explain that "satisfy the questionnaires?"

What does that phrase mean, "satisfy the questionnaires?"

Mr. Angleton. The opposition wants to know, find out from your sources the following questions.

Mr. Miler. In other words, the requirements they put on the agent.

Mr. Angleton. Now, that agent is allegedly in the CIA and there is a penetration, then you are just going through games, and they will play such an operation. They could have a very senior penetration into the Agency and play along on a double in order to lead you to believe that they do not have a penetration. And they can tie up your manpower and put doubles underneath him and another agent, and they can give him a radio set, and with the radio set they can give him crystals, and he needs other crystals, and it involves more and more of your own personnel and manpower. And you can tie up NSA monitoring all the links.

And so this idea that has all of a sudden been novel and newly discovered in the Agency that Counterintelligence must be aggressive is in my view a joke. It's a joke.

Mr. Miler. You have to know what you're dealing with.

You have to understand the enemy intelligence service before you're going to penetrate it, and you have to be secure from penetration yourself, and you then have to run that penetration very securely and on a very compartmented basis.

Mr. Angleton. And there is one added proviso, then, that you can only run a first rate double agent if you have a source superior to him that he is unaware of. In the war, when we broke the German code, it was no problem to run German double agents because we could read their messages back to their headquarters, re-enciphered, and the headquarters messages back to the control, back to our double. So questions of danger signals, questions of alerting him that he was under control and so on was taken care of because of communications intelligence.

When you don't have communications intelligence, then the only other source that is superior is penetration, that is, somebody who can read back from their headquarters how they are, in fact, absorbing the thrust of that double agent. And those conditions do not exist for the Bureau or for ourselves.

Mr. Miler. Or for the military services, to run a lot of double agents.

Mr. Angleton. I mean, they do not have the superior source of control over double agents.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Why is that?

Mr. Angleton. Because they are one, not breaking codes, or they don't have the penetrations in the opposition against whom you run the double.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Senator Hart of Colorado. But what is the prescription? Does that mean we can't do that or we aren't, or what?

Mr. Angleton. Well, we haven't succeeded. I mean, we have had Popov and Penkosky, and both of them are dead. They were shot.

Mr. Johnson. It must be easier to penetrate the so-called Third World than it is the so-called Soviet Bloc.

Mr. Angleton. Absolutely.

Mr. Miler. But that's not getting you exactly what you want or need either. And you can divert an awful lot of time, effort and manpower to running what in essence would eventually boil down in a year or two years to operations for operations' sake. It will look good in statistics. It will justify your budget request to the OMB. It will justify your counterintelligence effort in terms of management objectives, because you've increased from 22 double agent operations to 46 last year, but what is the net result, and how much time, effort and so forth are you actually using, and where are you losing focus on what the real problems are facing the country in terms of penetration and in terms of knowledge and in counterintelligence?

Mr. diGenova. The picture which both you and Mr. Angleton paint this new face of counterintelligence from your point of view is a rather gloomy one because your comments seem to indicate that you believe that this decentralization, lack of compartmentation and in general, spreading the counterintelligence function around is eventually going to lead to a breakdown in the end product. We're not going to be getting what we should be getting. You may be getting bigger statistics, and on the face it may look like we're getting more, but in fact we're not.

Mr. Miler. You're not going to get substance.

Mr. diGenova. Why was that decision made? That seems to be so fundamentally apparent by the way you explain it? Surely the Director must have made that decision for a reason?

Do you know why?

Mr. Angleton. Mr. Miler has known him more than -- longer than I have. Would you?

Mr. Miler. Yes, I'll offer my opinion on it.

Mr. diGenova. We would like to have it.

Mr. Miler. The basic reason is that neither the current director nor the incumbent DDO understand or perceive of what counterintelligence actually is and what function it has, and what the CIA's responsibility is for counterintelligence to the nation. That is my personal opinion. They do not -- they have not had experience in counterintelligence. They've never worked in counterintelligence. And quite frankly, they do not understand the problems involved in counterintelligence.

Counterintelligence, as articulated previously by the current DDO, was station security and liaison.

Mr. Kirbow. Can you see this getting any better with your new selectee who is coming from the outside world? Probably knows the term counterintelligence, but knows nothing about the intelligence community basically?

Mr. Miler. I don't -- quite frankly, I couldn't comment on Mr. Bush at all, but if Mr. Bush is going to have to rely on the current management and the current management of counterintelligence in the CIA, it is my view that he will get completely erroneous information and not have the advantage of understanding counterintelligence, and would be forced to make decisions which ultimately will be tragic to this country as far as counterintelligence is concerned, from ignorance.

Senator Hart of Colorado. What kind of erroneous information?

Mr. Miler. What counterintelligence is, how it should be organized, what the threat to the nation is that can be hopefully countered by an effective counterintelligence organization which is integrated between the CIA, the FBI, the military services, the Department of State, and all other agencies concerned.

You are going to have to have a perception of the real problems and what is involved in counterintelligence in order to organize or reorganize the CIA's counterintelligence efforts, to promote the best kind of a national program.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Assume something about, Mr. Angleton mentioned earlier, about the tendency to sweep penetrations under the rug in this country.

Has there been a pattern in the past that still prevails of reluctance on the part of professional intelligence officials as well as administration officials to admit that we are susceptible to that?

Mr. Angleton. Well, I think there is no question that there has been a tremendous dishonesty in facing up to hard facts an intelligence.

I'll take the Yom Kippur war as an example. As you know, it was a complete failure in terms of prediction. As I maintained in my testimony, if you cannot make a proper estimate in a primitive area, then God help you when you come into the Bloc area, and I still hold by that conviction.

But in that case, a few days prior to the Yom Kippur war, the FBI disseminated a report to the President, the Secretary of State, Defense and the Director of CIA which purported to be a discussion between Gromyko and a very senior source to the effect that they had given up on the Arabs, that they would no longer support the Arabs, they would no longer give them arms, that they were going to recognize Israel, and in fact they had the draft notes ready for the recognition of Israel.

Now, I have never seen the post mortem of the whole project on the estimation, but I would assume that any estimator who received information by letter or memorandum, hand-carried, quoting Gromyko, would tend to discount the fact that the Arabs were about to attack Israel where they would have to depend on Soviet arms, and therefore the question of the Yom Kippur war would be out of the question. In other words, that one report, I give it as an example.

Now, independently a study group of the Joint Chiefs came up with the whole question of Soviet disinformation, strategic disinformation to put us off balance on our estimating process.

Now, in our own Agency we were heavily frowned upon for raising these questions, that there was a strong element of Soviet deception and disinformation that had been injected into the intelligence collecting program.

Mr. Miler. Prior to the Yom Kippur war.

Mr. Angleton. Prior to that. But the important thing is that that source who provided the Bureau with that information has been providing information over a number of years, but no one has made a study of information in hindsight in order to evaluate that source.

And I could go into many more sensitive cases of where again intention has come through a highly questionable source, and yet there has been no re-examination. There has been no grouping or forum in which there can be any disputation. Each Senator Hart of Colorado. It seems to me that you're suggesting at the very least a naivete on the part of our government and at the worst, I don't know what.

Mr. Angleton. Well, I do suggest that there is a naivete. There is no counter-disinformation group. There's no one who ever studies -- most of the information today that goes into much of -- it's mainly scientific. The human part of it is small.

Now most of it is from overt sources.

Mr. Johnson. What about the Inner-agency Committee on Defectors? Doesn't that review?

Mr. Angleton. It has nothing to do with it.

Mr. Johnson. What does that do?

Mr. Angleton. That only allocates or handles the mechanics of who talks to the defector and what are the priorities and questionnaires and whatnot.

Mr. diGenova. The order of interrogation.

Mr. Miler. It is a clearing house to get the information disseminated.

Mr. diGenova. Mr. Angleton, I'm interested in going back to one part of your most recent response about the fact of your or the CI staff's concerns about the Israeli problem which you alluded to was frowned upon within the Agency.

What form did that take? I'd be interested to know that.

Mr. Angleton. Well, it took this form, that a person working with Scotty who takes his military duty over there, two weeks every year and whatnot, and who is very high on S&T intelligence, arranged for these Joint Chiefs and this group to come over and to address an audience of hand-picked people. So this covered both the overt side of the House --

Mr. Miler. The three directorates, intelligence, operations, and S&T.

Mr. Angleton. And they laid out their entire thesis, and we added to that to the FBI report to which I referred. Afterwards I was severely criticized for having wasted everybody's time on that matter and told that if they realized it was going to be that type of thing, we would never have permitted it to have taken place, et cetera, et cetera.

Mr. Kirbow. Was this by the three directorates?

Mr. Miler. No, that was from the directorate of operations. The directorate of S&T, Scientific and Technical was impressed by the presentation and subsequently said that there was very great need for thought in this. And I think also, Jim, that concurrently in the operations I had an officer who was working on discernible or apparent deception as reflected in CIA reporting from the field of Soviet disinformation concerning the situation in the Middle East.

And we did a tremendous study on this and which was completely discounted and thrown out and it wasn't even considered.

Mr. Miller. Well, in the Yom Kippur War, if I'm not mistaken, there was a SIGINT alert. The NSA collection systems were of such nature their analysts said it looks like there's going to be a war within 24 hours. They predicted the time. They sent it over. It was immediately said, go back to bed. Is that correct?

Mr. Angleton. All I know about it is the alleged part of that. I remember the Pike Report that caused a great deal of comment. I thought that the four magic words were that NSA was not able to make a contribution because the Egyptians had gone into a high SIGINT alert.

In other words, that through SIGINT they couldn't learn the intention. I don't know this fact that you are tabelling.

Mr. Miller. I think Mr. Miler is --

Mr. Miler. The point that we're trying to make in this connection is part and parcel of Soviet espionage, Soviet intelligence service activity and Soviet bloc intelligence service activity is in the political field. It involves deception and disinformation. A properly coordinated and run counter-intelligence effort will bring research and analytical work to bear which would give an analysis and an assessment of the situation, which should be of value to policy-makers in the government, to the intelligence directorate of the CIA, to the Director of the CIA, and that what has happened in the CIA since mid-1973 is that there has been erosion of this facility which cannot be divorced from counter-intelligence because as you focus and even as you focus on what the current popular term, aggressive counter-intelligence operations, you have to have some knowledge of this in order to be able to equate, assess and evaluate your so-called penetration of a Soviet or Soviet bloc intelligence service to see if it is real. You have to have a litmus paper to judge your penetration. And without that litmus, you are completely at the mercy of a system which is orchestrated and which is essentially directed and controlled.

Mr. Miller. So what you're saying is from mid-1973 on the country, or at least the CIA has lost a valuable asset.

What happened in '73? What was the decision?

Mr. Angleton. That's the decentralization, when all of these components were taken away from us, including the liaison and whatnot, including international communist parties.

So this completely viscerated the counter-intelligence as we have built it up since 1954.

We were, I would say without question in the Western world, we gave the leadership. We created all of the inter-governmental committees. We brought services from tiny fragmented units up into major components of their government, the five major countries, which meant we reoriented their services along priorities that met our requirements, and I don't think there was any question that we were the acknowledged leaders in the Western world.

By the same token, it induced people to bring their cases to us for analysis. They came to see us many times to see the defectors, the stable of defectors that we had for interrogation.

So that alone was a tremendous acquisition of counter-intelligence data which would not have otherwise have been available to this country.

Mr. Kirbow. And it's not available today because of this spreading of the --

Mr. Angleton. Well, that's what they say. I mean I've had one or more chief of intelligence who have surreptitiously seen me since my departure. And they will naturally work as far as they can with the agency.

Mr. Miller. When you say us, who do you mean?

Mr. Angleton. How did I use it?

Mr. Miller. You were referring to your capability prior to 1973.

Mr. Miler. The CI staff.

Mr. Angleton. The CI staff.

Mr. Miller. The CI staff. Well, what were the numbers, what was the capability that you had translated into people, into files?

Mr. Angleton. Well, at the highest point we had a little over 200 people. That was clerical and officers.

Mr. Miller. That seems a fairly small group.

Mr. Angleton. Well, they were a hardworking group. We were understaffed. There were many things we could have taken on and I'll give you one example because it is still pending, and it gets down to the question of penetration.

But when Philby was stationed in Washington, he was given communications intelligence clearance so if NSA broke into the Bulgarian traffic, he could go to his Soviet control and tell them that we were reading Bulgarian traffic. A secret of that sort permits them to make use of the Bulgarian traffic as a deception channel the moment they know you are reading it. That becomes a powerful instrument in their hands to deceive.

Now my point is this: No one has made an analysis from the day that he was briefed on that particular traffic of why the traffic continued for two more years and then gradually petered out of what was put into that traffic which, if you took that and identified an item of deception that came from the opposition, you then look at your own agent reports and find what agents at the same time were fortifying that lie or that piece of deception. And it would point a finger on agents who, in fact, were under control.

Now this is just one small exercise. NSA has preserved every single piece of paper. In other words, there's literally hundreds of thousands of pages of available material for such an analysis, and I worked very closely with Lou Tordella.

In fact, one of our effort or common efforts was I brought him into counter-intelligence. I brought him in with all these foreign chiefs and whatnot in order to enlarge the scope of NSA, since they can study and frame these patterns, they can get into illegal traffics and get into many facets.

It's one of the best outfits, as far as I know, in the U.S. government, but they had always been denied these facts that I just stated, such as Philby's access, the clearances, the various espionage cases that have happened in the west, the people that have had communications intelligence clearance.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Could we have a Philby level penetration of our intelligence community?

Mr. Angleton. I'm not stating that there is one, but I have probably done more recruitment of higher level people in my youth in the business and I have never been any respector of rank. I've dealt with prime ministers, and I've dealt with them at all levels.

And therefore, my point is it is conceivable, it's conceivable if you've got enough information, spotting information, and you can put a person into a certain kind of situation regardless of his rank, you will find that he is recruitable. It is a process of a fingernail, finger, hand, arm and body.

Senator Hart of Colorado. But all of the grills that new people of the Agency have to go through, lie detector and so on, you're saying that they can get through that.

gsh 8

Mr. Angleton. I don't think anyone regards the lie detector to be anything more than just another investigative instrument. It does help in the sense that there are certain people susceptible. They will in turn reveal something of their past which they should have revealed, which, if you had discovered independently, would have given you grounds to believe they were penetration, but once the machine begins to find that they're goggling on something, then they come out and say, well there's a story I haven't told you when I was in Turkey, et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, and wipes the slate clean.

So it serves a useful purpose. But it's not -- I wouldn't give it 20 percent credibility. Now the Office of Security probably gives it 70 or maybe higher.

Mr. diGenova. Mr. Angleton, the point you made of the lack of study of traffic which followed the deception in the cable traffic, as I understand it, you're saying that there's been no analysis that you're aware of since that time done of of everything since then.

Mr. Angleton. There's never been any analysis ever.

Mr. diGenova. Is the current research set-up which CI staff now has which is oriented toward instant studies, quote unquote, to provide data for ongoing operations inconsistent with wanting to achieve that sort of goal, like analyzing that data?

gsh

Mr. Angleton. Well, I don't know what that really means, instant analysis. I mean we've always done instant analysis.

Mr. diGenova. I know that but it's our understanding, we've learned from the Agency that there has been a movement away from in-depth historical research toward more current sort of analyses.

What you're suggesting to me by saying that there's been no analysis done of those cables is that we've lost a valuable CI tool since that study hasn't been done, and I'd like to know if your assessment of the current trend toward research is a bad one?

Mr. Angleton. I think it makes no sense whatsoever.

Mr. Miler. It's disastrous. It will lead to complete chaos within a very short time because you're trying to analyse an individual case without having the ability to relate 40 other cases to that case.

Mr. diGenova. There's no integration in other words.

Mr. Miler. That's right and you cannot operate in a vacuum.

Mr. Angleton. We have learned from one defector, the one of December '61 a complete new understanding of what happened from the days of Lenin.

That is not in the public record. A complete new picture of the growth of the OGPU and of the Cheka. And in the reorientation of KGB part of the deStalinization in May of 1959, it was a return to the modus operandi of the Cheka. And this is from an individual, fully, who had seen all of the documents, fully versed in it so that this plunged us back into it and we began then to find leads. And I give one example.

General Orlov, who died not long ago in the United States, was the most senior NKVD KGB officer ever to defect, and he died last year. The Bureau had interrogated him in 1953 after the death of Stalin with little or no success. He knew the code name of Philby. The Agency tried to contact him in '58 and had a very unhappy handling problem. We went back into it shortly thereafter and we were able to go through his book with him and he gave us the true identities of 34 agents in France.

His uncle had been one of the senior men under Lenin, head of NKVD in the Ukraine but with tremendous operations. He himself was a senior NKVD man in Spain during the civil war. So we spent up until his death, Mr. Rocc~~o~~a, who was my deputy, would travel to the Midwest and spend several weekends with him of dredging out and recreating the operations and penetrations in British intelligence and the British navy and whatnot, eventually getting down, by recreating and reconstructing, down to the identity. Now this is research, and these are cases where the Soviets had every reason to believe that those agents were safe and secure because nothing had happened.

And when you make that type of identification unbeknownst

to them, then it gives you tremendous leverage of how you want to play it, whether you move in to take him on as a double or whether you move in to arrest him.

Mr. diGenova. And that isn't being done today.

Mr. Angleton. Well, they can't do it because they don't have Mr. Rocca and they have fired most of the personnel. One of the best men we had was from the Library of Congress and knowing where to find every piece of information in the government has just been transferred to, or he's been released or hired back on contract, and when they are putting him in the Freedom of Information section as a contract agent.

And he has handled Ukrainians, he's run agents, he speaks Russian.

Mr. Johnson. We are going down with a representative of military intelligence later on this afternoon. Could you tell us about the coordination between military CI and CIA CI especially in the area of double agentry.

Mr. Angleton. Then I will just say one thing and then Scotty will speak authoritatively to it.

We all came out of the war and therefore we are very strongly in favor of a very strong military counter-intelligence. And therefore, we've always given them highest priority of our time. We've done the original training of the OSI people.

We trained teachers who went out, who in turn trained other people. That was a three months course, if I recall.

We rean a seminar using the highest talent that we had and revealing as much information as we could conceivably reveal.

And so our whole mental attitude was that counter-intelligence, one of its highest priorities is the defense of its own forces. And I'm not going to justify the mail program at this time, but some day I'll justify it in print or otherwise because it represents only .001 percent of Americans -- a small coterie of Americans who wrote to the Soviets when we had troops in the field on two occasions, and our primary duty was the support of those troops.

So that background Scotty can tell you but the relationships we've had with the military.

Mr. Miler. Well, the relationships with the counter-intelligence with the military have varied. I would say that for the most part it has been reasonably good, it has been perhaps better in Washington than it has been in the field. With few exceptions CIA field representatives have not been terribly concerned with conducting counter-intelligence. They have not cooperated to the extent that the military commanders in the field have wanted.

Some of this has to do with priorities that are imposed on the CIA representatives from Washington. Some of it has to do with lack of manpower. Some of it has to do with the fact that in the opinion of many of the CIA operatives, the Army in particular, to a lesser extent the other services, have not undertaken counter-intelligence activities which are of a high enough level to justify the time and attention, particularly of senior CIA representatives abroad.

It is, I think, also a bit of a problem because the priorities of military counter-intelligence in many instances do not parallel or support CIA's priorities. They have the responsibility for the protection of their installations and there have also been imposed on the military the requirement to build assets, what we term double agents which the military term controlled foreign assets, as a contingency for possible deception use.

Traditionally, also, the CIA, and in recent years this has been quite true, the CIA field operatives have wanted to exploit military counter-intelligence assets for what is termed aggressive positive intelligence or recruitment attempts of the enemy agent or officer who was controlling the double agent of the controlled foreign asset.

There has been traditionally a problem of coordination between the military services, the CIA, and the FBI on double agent operations.

I think overall this has worked reasonably well, given the fact that -- in particular, for example, the system of chain of command in the Army is a very confused one and is not easy to put your finger on. There are various echelons and reporting procedures and so forth.

gsh 14

From the counter-intelligence staff standpoint, in particular what I was concerned with was an attempt to make sure that there was a full integration. You see, under the operating procedures and the responsibilities, the military services are required to advise the CIA of its activities, counter-intelligence and so forth abroad. In turn, they advise the FBI of their counter-intelligence activities and so forth here in the United States.

So you have, when an activity here in the United States, the individual involved, the double agent, the controlled foreign asset transfers abroad, then there is a transfer of coordination and vice versa.

Mr. Angleton. I'd like to inject this. There is concurrent jurisdiction since the double is usually an American citizen. So regardless of where he is, we would always persuade the Army or whoever it is, to notify the Bureau through their own channel because you're dealing with Americans, so geography is not really the important element.

Mr. Miler. From a counter-intelligence standpoint, it has had, there have been some problems as a result of that in terms of the regular CIA representation abroad. There is a means of working together with the military services and so forth in terms of notifying each of the services, each of the agencies of the potential for deception feeding and so forth.

Mr. Johnson. Does the CIA have veto powers over military proposed double-agents?

Mr. Miler. No, not the veto power.

Mr. Angleton. Well, it never really comes up to a veto. But if we took a stand against it and supplied reasoning that made sense, they would go along the way that we wanted. We've never had a head-on collision.

Mr. Miler. There would oftentimes be differences in the field, that would be presented through the proper channels, say from the Army back to the ACSI from our field station to headquarters. And then there would be a discussion and a resolution at the Washington level.

Now obviously, in any kind of a situation like that, there have been instances where, you know, there was bad feelings and misunderstandings and so forth. But I think that overall, at least in my experience in the way we try to conduct the business was that it was mutually beneficial.

Now the military services have complained to me because I represented and a couple of my people represented the Agency on double agents to the military services and so forth, that we were not as forthcoming in providing them information about our possible assets and so forth as they were.

Their system was different. They had a clearinghouse system where this was available and so forth. Our position on it was that if we had a requirement, we would perhaps find a source or an asset in which to fulfill the requirement. But for security and compartmentation reasons, not exclusively due to the counter-intelligence concerns but also to the general security and operations procedures of the Agency as a whole, there was a reluctance to put this information forward except when and as needed.

Begin 4B

Mr. Angleton. And there's another point that has to be raised here. That is when you get into the field of deception you are bound by certain charters. Those charters have not been approved at the highest policy level. So there's been a great deal of tactical military cover and deception.

Our interest is more on the strategic deception, and that paper has been resting with Dr. Kissinger for some 2 1/2 years or more for approval.

Mr. Miler. Three.

Mr. Angleton. Three years.

So that is bogged down a great deal of the whole overall deception program.

Mr. Maxwell. The paper that is in front of Dr. Kissinger now makes what deceptions?

Mr. Angleton. It was a paper that was pulled together by the Joint Chiefs, ourselves, and the FBI.

Mr. Maxwell. And it proposes what?

Mr. Angleton. It outlines procedures for strategic deceptions, political deception and other deception.

Mr. Johnson. Could you give a brief example of the CIA role in strategic deception, a specific example?

Mr. Angleton. No, I can't. I mean I could get into cases but it's too vague. It's always been something that has been arrived at ad hoc and it served the purpose, but I wouldn't call it strategic.

Mr. Miler. No program, in other words.

Mr. Angleton. In other words, the proper strategic deception would be the President calls in the Director and says, no one knows that in three months I'm going on the following trip. I will have meetings with the following people. I'm not going to announce it until a week before I leave.

So it gives you a time span of two months to use all of your sources to put across disinformation or information, a letter in the mailbox to the proper addressee that, you know, favor his role or favor his mission and helps him out. And that's what we are trying to seek and have been trying to seek for a long time. But there has to be a way of knowing what are some of the intentions of the government in order to advance it through disinformation or deception.

Mr. Miler. With respect to the military, if I may return to that, I think that one of the -- probably the greatest difference and failure with respect to CIA counter-intelligence relationships with the military was with respect to the situation in Vietnam because CIA did not perform a counterintelligence function of any responsibility or significance in Vietnam. That was a tragic failure on the part of CIA and it goes back to the basic problem of the present management, to answer your earlier question, the present management because the present management of the CIA was involved in the decisions which prohibited a good counter-intelligence effort in Vietnam.

Mr. Shea. In that paper that is before Dr. Kissinger, are there any proposed control mechanisms that would act as a filter so that the misinformation in a sense could not flow back into the policy circles within the United States?

Mr. Angleton. Well, there wouldn't be. The kind of channels used, there wouldn't be any of that happening. This would be information given to an agent who was reporting, say to the KGB back, say it would never hit the light of day.

Mr. Shea. So the process of misinformation as it normally relates to the intelligence field is totally separate in terms of the active process of misinformation as it goes on in counter-intelligence?

Mr. Angleton. We are not dealing in overt. There may be some overt things put out that support a document that was given to a double who would pass it to KGB. But if the man is regarded to be an agent of the KGB, the KGB is not going to publicize that document without having blown the alleged agent.

Mr. Shea. But they could work on it in their process of disinformation to come back, and you would be caught.

Mr. Miler. No. To be successful you would have to have a means of monitoring. You would have to have your penetration of, you would have to have your own litmus to see where it is played back or what reflections or what requirements are put on other double agents on the basis of the information from this agent.

That requires a centralized screening and control of double agents.

Mr. Angleton. If you sent the information through Agent A to KGB headquarters in Moscow, part of your testing would be to see whether your other double agents received questionnaires which you knew related to that document.

Mr. Shea. But it seems like in order to make strategic misinformation functional, you would have to have the same requirements that you had when you were talking about having a double agent: namely, somebody in a superior point of information penetrated into that organization to make sure that they are getting that information you're sending out is misinformation.

Mr. Miler. Not necessarily.

Mr. Angleton. It's not quite the same.

Mr. Miler. It's not quite that simple because you could see reflections of it perhaps in other areas in political actions, in failure to act.

Mr. Angleton. There are other ways of doing it. You can go to a diplomat who has a weak cipher system and you yourself can tell that diplomat in great confidence a whole series of things. You know the Soviets are going to break the code and read that message.

That would be one way of doing it. There are other ways of having, telling a friendly foreign service whom you know is penetrated.

I mean it's all case by case. But once you are given the task, that's when you begin to look at all of your assets and you begin to do the creative side of running a double, or how are you going to put this across. And there are many ways of doing it without bringing many people in.

Mr. diGenova. I'd like to change the subject matter just briefly. Part of the responsibility of the CI research personnel is to produce reports on various subjects which include current analyses on proprietary companies used by foreign intelligence services.

I would like to know whether or not either of you could shed any light on the question of whether or not we have any evidence that foreign intelligence services have established and used proprietary companies in the United States?

Mr. Angleton. Well, there's one case that comes to mind. I can't remember the details but I think that as a result of it, one of our deputy directors had a big project with this company and they dropped it because the Foreign Intelligence Service had quite a penetration into it.

Mr. diGenova. Would that be the only instance of which you are familiar that there was in fact knowledge of an operating proprietary company run by a foreign intelligence service within the continental United States?

Mr. Angleton. Offhand I can't say because the Office of Security would be working with the Bureau, usually. I mean to say that S&T are the most likely people to have contracts with a number of contractors and companies. It would be Office of Security's job.

Mr. diGenova. Maybe I'm not making my point clear. I just thought that maybe in the course of your counter-intelligence function you may have discovered by whatever means that there was in fact such a company operating in the United States which was being used, not to contract with the Agency but to contract or just do anything, whether it was a bookkeeping firm or a law firm or anything, and was in fact engaged in espionage.

Mr. Miler. Well, we've had a number in the past. We've had a number of leads which were to the effect that Soviet intelligence money was in such and such a company, or something such as that. That was turned over to the FBI. And whether or not we ever heard anything back or did anything further on it, no.

In other words, unless there was an investigative angle

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

which we could pursue abroad or something, I'm a little bit confused by the question because it's outside -- the investigation of such a thing is outside the purview of the CIA unless it is abroad, unless it would be funded through Switzerland or Luxembourg or unless there was a Messagerie Maritime connection where Soviet money was being put in and they had representation here.

Mr. diGenova. Well, the staff has been given information that these analyses are done by CI research personnel or proprietary companies of foreign intelligence services, and either that information is wrong or we just do not understand each other.

Mr. Angleton. Well, I mean it's true that there have been analyses done. But the one that comes to mind is the one I mentioned, was the one where in this case it was French, had a heavy penetration of a company and that company was contracting with our STT people and therefore, our question was rather a project for large sums of money of using this company would proceed, and the decision based on our counter-intelligence analyses was to drop the project.

Mr. diGenova. I'd like to ask the question.

We've been told that one of the benefits which occurs to U.S. counter-intelligence when it focuses on bloc countries is the fact that these totalitarian regimes have a habit of acquiring great amounts of information about their citizenry and storing it, and that this is, on occasion, accessible to and makes them somewhat vulnerable as a result of that.

Turning the coin around a little bit and looking at ourselves, are the computerized systems which we now have in our country which put in a central location large amounts of information about individual citizens and large groups of citizens, making us vulnerable to penetration in terms of information, more vulnerable in terms of penetration by foreign counter-intelligence services?

Mr. Angleton. Vulnerable in what sense?

Mr. diGenova. Getting information about us, period, which I understand is one of the key goals of counter-intelligence, finding out what the other side is doing.

Mr. Angleton. You mean surreptitiously getting it from us or officially getting it from us?

Mr. diGenova. Both. The fact of the matter is the information exists and it's vulnerable for them to have it, is it vulnerable for us to have it?

Mr. Angleton. Well, I wouldn't put it down as vulnerable because when anyone makes a request on you for information, the first question is why. So the burden is on them to justify that they have a counter-espionage reason for asking for that information. And in the bulk of the cases you'll find that they are doing your work for you.

In other words, they've come across a telephone tap of some American who's arrived, he's made a call to the Bulgarian embassy and it looks as though there's a meeting being set up, so immediately you get a flash. And they ask that service for traces on the individual and you come back with the why, and they tell you about the entire Bulgarian business. And so we start an investigation as to Bulgarian antecedents or anything dealing with Bulgaria, et cetera. And if it's justified, we give them the information.

Mr. diGenova. Well, I don't think, Mr. Angleton, that's not what I'm getting at.

We as a country are amassing properly, quote, unquote, large amounts of information about ourselves through the use of computer systems.

Mr. Angleton. That's right.

Mr. diGenova. The CIA tells us that that is one of the things they like so much about foreign countries, because the totalitarian regimes have the tendency to amass large amounts of information about their citizenry and when we penetrate and get that information, that helps us.

My question is when we do that, when we centralize the information by using our own computer systems, no matter where it is, do we help them?

And in this regard I would note that in 1970 the Inspector General's report on the question of cover noted that the fact that credit bureaus in this country were amassing so much information about people, including CIA personnel, that it posed a major threat to maintain cover, both in the United States and abroad for CIA agents.

Now the question I raise is are we cutting off our nose to spite our face by using computers to really marshall together large amounts of evidence which can be made accessible to foreign powers either by surreptitiously or by simply openly getting it?

Mr. Miler. Yes, the answer is yes.

Mr. diGenova. Good.

Mr. Miler. Because it's very easy to get this information. And, for example, the Soviets have had, you can confirm this from the Bureau, have had a systematic system of purchasing from the State of Maryland, the District of Columbia, the State of Virginia, the business directories, residence directories, license directories for less than $350 apiece.

Mr. Johnson. If we're going to keep on our schedule, we've got a witness who's supposed to be here at 3:30, so is there a final question?

Mr. Kirbow. I have two questions. Because of the vast years of experience, Mr. Chairman, that we should ask them to comment on, and either one of you all should answer.

What do you all consider today to be the major threats to this country? And the second question is, what has been the major foreign covert action program directed against this country in your lifetime and experience in the Agency?

Mr. Angleton. Well, I think, no question, it's the Soviet bloc services that represent the major threat because they are really a small, they are directly subordinated to the central committee and to the basic objectives, as I've seen them all my life to the change and balance of military power.

Further, that practically all intelligence operations more and more have political objectives, and I think it is the fact that since '59 they have elevated the Cuban intelligence and all of the other bloc services to a very high degree of efficiency, that they are coordinated and they work as equals.

And I think that is the major threat, that is the inability of the FBI by lack of personnel and manpower to be able to cover these people. There isn't the minimal coverage. The people they cover are people who have been "identified," and I defy anyone to have a list of identified agents in this country.

Now that is the legal side of it. Now the larger part of it is the illegal, where there's been little or no success. The only one that has really come out is the Abel case, which we handled through Hayhanen Hahannan. And then there was one or two minor ones.

But that is a whole program of bloc activity, and according to one of the best sources we had, his view was that the illegals would be placed primarily in airports, docks, factories, and they give a whole listing. And these are the areas where you have sabotage, you have explosions you can't identify, et cetera.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Now the illegal directorate represents a very major part of Soviet intelligence and bloc intelligence and we just -- there are not successes. It's just happenstance.

Mr. Epstein. It's disruption of our defense effort? Is that what you're speaking of now? Their goal being disruption of this country's defense effort?

Mr. Angleton. Well, they have many assignments. But the point is they have also the sabotage-assassination part, which is totally apart from the body politic of the KGB, and it raises questions in everybody's mind when there is sabotage and all other kinds of activities and you cannot find the culprits.

One defector stated that he believed that the computer fire they had in the Pentagon several years ago was KGB. He was KGB. But he stated in effect that he thought that was one of their operations.

Scotty?

Mr. Miler. The major threat to the U.S., I think, is based on the fact, as we referred to earlier, as this should affect counter-intelligence, the national counter-intelligence effort, is to have your national counter-intelligence focused on the fact that the Soviets and the Soviet blocs, since May of 1959 have rededicated themselves to the principles of Leninism. They have rededicated themselves to the shift in the military balance of power. They have reinstituted, in effect, what was the policy of the NEP period, the New Economic Policy, the attraction of Western business, the attraction of Western capital into the Soviet Union to bolster the Soviet Union, the disruption of the economies of other nations, which would have an adverse effect on the economy of this nation -- all of this centrally controlled and directed, used through such countries as Romania, where we have for several years now deluded ourselves that Romania is independent, through Bulgaria, through Hungary, through Poland, all the rest of it.

This is the major threat to the United States. Counterintelligence is probably, in my view, at least, one of the major ways that you're going to be able to counter this and at least get the information brought to the attention of the people who are making the decisions and making the policy for this country.

Mr. Epstein. Has our penetration effort been good enough to establish whether or not the Soviet Union has been involved in direct covert action against the United States, such as to undermine our economy, not using other countries but directly?

Mr. Angleton. There's been a tremendous amount of information on this. I mean, for example today the second head of the Chamber of Commerce in Moscow is General Pitovranov.

Prior, he was Deputy Chief of the NKVD. He was the resident KGB resident in Peking. He's the one who with Mao set up the underground that took over China. He was the head of Karlshorst, the largest KGB in Germany. He operated people like George Blake. He organized the kidnapping of Otto John, the head of Security, West Germany.

He has now been placed as the Deputy Chief, or Deputy Chairman, of the Moscow Chamber of Commerce, the same role that Lenin had DZHERZHINSKY Derjensky in the NEP. That is the role to be able to deal with Western capitalists with the view of abroad recruitments and with the view of using them as agents of influence.

Now there's a tremendous amount of data. Now this is what I'm trying to say, that counter-intelligence has always been kept at a very low level as far as its ability to submit such studies or whatnot to the National Security Council or to a forum where they are debated. But they happen to be the only hard intelligence because they are coming from men who were 16 years in this one case, a part of that mechanism and who read all the files.

Mr. Epstein. What happens to all that?

Mr. Angleton. Well, that's been used by directors in briefings but there's never yet been a forum where you can actually have a confrontation with people who hold contrary views.

7600 011327

Mr. Miler. In other words, how significant is the fact then, how significant would it be if our Congress, our Executive and our business people knew that as of 1974 the last figures I have of 187 Soviets identified with the USSR all union chamber of commerce, the people that are doing all of the business with our businessmen who are coming here to the United States, work them and so forth, when 47 of those were appointed to that from the KGB.

I mean, what significance does this have to the United States?

Senator Schweiker. 47 out of how many?

Mr. Miler. About 182.

Mr. Angleton. Let's go to the scientific side on this. The scientific side, in May of 1969 the central committee ordered that there be added 2,000 staff officers to KGB from the Academy of Sciences in order to exploit the opening to the West and the scientific levels.

Mr. Epstein. And how would that exploitation be accomplished?

Mr. Angleton. For recruitment and exploitation of contacts in the West in the scientific exchanges.

Mr. Epstein. The goal being espionage or something else?

Mr. Angleton. Espionage.

Mr. Miler. Espionage and influence. How many KGB officers?

Mr. Angleton. In 1961, 1000 of those had been pulled together. There was a briefing given by the general staff to high KGB people regarding the field of military electronics, and during that briefing it was pointed out that they were 14 years behind us, but they would overcome and surpass us through three means: Number one was the Central Committee adding the 2,000 staff officers for espionage; Second would be disinformation leading our scientific efforts in the wrong directions; And third was to enter into those kind of treaties which would bind our own scientific progress in military fields.

When I left the Agency, I read a report by a man who knew nothing of this lecture, and this was a group of American electronic experts who had made a very sensitive, Top Secret study which stated that in this field the Soviets were four years behind us.

This was in 1974.

Mr. Epstein. A final question. In the last 10 or 15 years have you experienced any situations where any hostile powers were involved in covert action against the election process in this country?

Mr. Angleton. Well, I think there's no question that influence has been brought to bear.

Mr. Inderfurth. How?

Mr. Epstein. Meaning what?

Mr. Angleton. Propaganda, among other things.

For example, one of the most famous of the disinformation agents, I mean they had established contact at political levels in this country.

Mr. Epstein. How about campaign financing?

Mr. Angleton. I don't think it figures unless it would be the CP.

But just to add one last point to this question of the threat, it is my view, seeing Angola and seeing the unwillingness of this country to resist or to define its purpose, or to deal fairly with its allies, that within a period of four years there will be a form of confrontation on an unpopular issue between the Soviet bloc and the United States in which we will back down. We will then go into our supreme isolation, because in December of '61, when this Soviet defected and he had read the political action programs, he spelled out in detail that one of the primary purposes of the reorientations was that all intelligence operations or political objectives, and the main political objective was to reaffirm the United States as the main enemy, to achieve its isolation and to achieve political hegemony over most of Africa and Latin America.

He pointed out that the two largest and newest divisions created in KGB were Africa and Latin America.

Now this was not speculative. This was reading actual documents of a Top Secret nature in which you had to have a communications intelligence clearance to even have access to them, and I think what he has spelled out, and I might add that when I took him to many countries we talked on higher levels than we could talk in the United States. And I took him to some countries that we could talk to Prime Ministers. I have seen Prime Ministers and have been able to expose this. But the machinery here is not of such a nature that you can get into these matters.

Mr. Epstein. Are they disseminated?

Mr. Angleton. We're not going to disseminate. These are matters that should go to the Secretary of State. They shouldn't be going up through people because many of the secrets are within that.

Mr. Epstein. Do they go to the Secretary of State?

Mr. Angleton. No.

Mr. Epstein. Why not?

Mr. Angleton. I don't think the Secretary of State has ever been much interested in asking for opinions. On Romania we sent something to the President prior to our trip.

Mr. Epstein. But the documents you're talking about, the Top Secret documents --

Mr. Angleton. We don't have the document. I'm stating he read those documents in Moscow.

Mr. Epstein. But the report that he read, was that disseminated?

Mr. Angleton. I don't know. It went to the Director and it went to many other people. But whether it actually got to the Secretary of State, I do not know.

Mr. Miler. I think one important point here that I would like to make is that what has happened, in my opinion what has happened in counter-intelligence in the Agency and the so-called aggressive operations, the increase in double agent operations and so forth and the dispersal of the centralized counter-intelligence is not going to produce a counter-intelligence program within the CIA which is going to focus on attempting to provide the government, policy-makers and so forth, with the kind of information and analytical product that is necessary if we're going to have a successful counter-intelligence.

Mr. Johnson. I would like to thank the witnesses, and unless Senator Schweiker has any questions, we will adjourn for five minutes.

Is that acceptable?

Thank you very much.

Senator Schweiker. Thank you very much.

(Whereupon, at 4:10 o'clock p.m., the hearing in the above-mentioned matter was concluded.)

United States Senate,
Select Committee to Study Governmental
Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities,
Washington, D. C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:20 o'clock am., in Room 608, Carroll Arms Hotel, the Honorable Richard S. Schweiker presiding.

Present: Senator Schweiker (presiding).

Staff: Paul Wallach, Ed Greissing, Jim Johnston, Dan Dwyer and Frederick Baron, Professional Staff Members.

PROCEEDINGS

Senator Schweiker. Will you stand and raise your right hand.

Do you solemnly swear the testimony you are about to give is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

AMLASH Case Officer. I do.

Mr. Johnston. First of all, sir, we'll start with some procedural matters. I'm not going to ask you to state your name for the record because we have agreed before beginning here today that you would testify under an alias so as not to jeopardize your ongoing activities.

Is that the way you understand our agreement?

TESTIMONY OF AMLASH CASE OFFICER

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. Is that satisfactory to you?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. Now, you understand that at any time we refer to your participation or your authorship of a document or receipt of a document, we are prepared to substantiate the reference that we are making, and we are not trying to avoid proving the fact that it is indeed you that were involved in the incident. It is simply because we were not able to use your name.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. Now, you've previously testified before this Committee, and I assume you've had a copy of the Committee rules, and we have another copy available in case you want to refer to them.

And are you appearing here voluntarily today without a counsel?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, I am.

Mr. Johnston. Do you understand that at any point during this examination you are free to stop answering any questions and request the advice of Counsel?

AMLASH Case Officer. I do.

Mr. Johnston. And do you understand as well that all your constitutional rights are intact here before the Committee including the Fifth Amendment rights to remain silent, if you choose.

AMLASH Case Officer. I do.

Mr. Johnston. All right.

Let me state that the purpose of this interview is to refine and clarify certain questions about the AMLASH operation.

It is my understanding that you were the case officer on the AMLASH operation from the time period, say, of the first of September on through, for all relevant purposes, December '63, and November '64, is that correct?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. At this time you were a member of what was called the Special Affairs Staff, is that correct?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. And that's abbreviated SAS.

AMLASH Case Officer. Right.

Mr. Johnston. Would you describe your position in SAS and your relationship to Mr. Fitzgerald, who was Chief of SAS?

AMLASH Case Officer. I was a special assistant to Mr. Fitzgerald, charged with the responsibility of attempting to organize a military coup inside Cuba against Fidel Castro.

Mr. Johnston. Did you report directly to Mr. Fitzgerald on your work?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, I did.

Mr. Johnston. Was there anyone else knowledgeable in SAS of what you were doing?

AMLASH Case Officer. Only the other people who were involved working on the project.

Mr. Johnston. What was the relationship between SAS and the Western Hemisphere Division under, at that time, I believe, Mr. J. C. King?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall exactly what the organizational relationship was at that time. I do know that we operated on a somewhat -- I wouldn't say autonomous basis from the Division itself, but the chain of command was certainly from Mr. Fitzgerald, not necessarily through the Division Chief, but up to the DDP at that time.

Mr. Johnston. Who was Mr. Helms.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. In other words, there could be direct reporting from Mr. Fitzgerald to Mr. Helms.

AMLASH Case Officer. Oh, yes.

Mr. Johnston. Is it necessary that Mr. King was knowledgeable of all operations of SAS?

AMLASH Case Officer. Not necessarily. I don't know if he was kept fully advised of all the operations or not.

Mr. Johnston. Did he know generally what you were doing?

AMLASH Case Officer. I presume he did, yes.

Mr. Johnston. And how often did he and Mr. Fitzgerald meet to coordinate. They do coordination of their work?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't know. I wasn't involved in that part of it.

Mr. Johnston. Was SAS targeted directly at Cuba, or were there other countries under its jurisdiction?

AMLASH Case Officer. No. SAS was strictly a task force set up to deal with the Cuban problem.

Mr. Johnston. And finally on this general matter, who did -- who gave the counterintelligence support for SAS operations?

AMLASH Case Officer. We had a Counterintelligence Branch within SAS.

Mr. Johnston. Who headed that in the fall of '63?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall. There was a change. I don't recall the name.

Mr. Johnston. Let me -- as I stated earlier, you of course have testified before, and I have before me the transcript and I'm not proposing really to trap you in any nature with this transcript. However, there are some things that were not asked before that I would like to clarify.

First of all, how and why was AMLASH first contacted to set up the September meeting that you attended?

AMLASH Case Officer. He had been contacted the year before in Helsinki, and we found out at that time that he was coming out to a sporting event in the Western Hemisphere, so we went down and contacted him.

Mr. Johnston. In my review of the file -- and I don't think we have the document here today, but my notes indicate there was a cable from Langley to Rome on 19 June 1963, that is in the AMLASH file.

AMLASH Case Officer. Would you repeat the question?

Mr. Johnston. In my review of the AMLASH file, there is a cable from headquarters to Rome on 19 June 1963 which states that AMWHIP, who was your contact with AMLASH, had sent a letter as part of "an activation effort to reluctant dragon."

I ask , do you have any recollection or any knowledge that this was a sign to AMLASH that CIA was back in contact with him or wanted to go back in contact with him?

AMLASH Case Officer. I can't comment on that because I didn't get into the operation until September of '63, and this took place before I became involved in that part of the AMLASH operation.

Mr. Johnston. So in other words, you're saying you don't really know who made the contact with AMLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. We had contact with AMLASH from the year before. He had been contacted by a CIA case officer in Helsinki.

Mr. Johnston. In July and August, 1962.

AMLASH Case Officer. Right.

Mr. Johnston. Then he returned to Cuba.

AMLASH Case Officer. And this was the first time, to the best of my knowledge, that he had come out from Cuba since the Helsinki trip.

Mr. Johnston. In other words, you're not aware of any prior contact between CIA or an intermediary and AMLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. Not between that period of time.

Mr. Johnston. All right. You met with AMLASH in Brazil on September 5th through 9th. I don't mean you specifically, but the general meetings with AMLASH were in that time frame.

Is that your recollection?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall seeing a cable, or receiving instructions from headquarters to the effect -- and this is after your series of meetings -- instructions to the effect that headquarters felt that AMLASH appeared hopeless as an intelligence performer, and should be approached as a chief conspirator allowed to recruit his own cohorts. He should be urged to recruit a few trusted friends to assist him initially in FI and ops reporting and then progress to sabotage and more serious matters on a more orderly basis.

Do you recall seeing something to that effect after your Brazil meetings with him?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't specifically recall the cable itself, but certainly that would be in line with the thinking at that time.

If I may state, he was not considered a controlled asset, shall we say, and it was somebody with whom we felt that we could collaborate in organizing the internal group.

760001070

Mr.Johnston. But my summary of the cable would indicate that on September 9th, or after your meetings in Brazil, you really didn't think of him as a gatherer of information, but as someone who wanted to go on to other things, as a conspirator of some kind.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. The file also has a document in it, the AMLASH file, dated 16 September, marked OFPA 72775. I don't really know what an OFPA is.

AMLASH Case Officer. It's a dispatch.

Mr. Johnston. In any event, it reports a transcript of the conversation, and to the best of my ability to understand the document, it's a conversation of an intercept in the Cuban Embassy in Paris. The document says "Mary: I don't want to imagine things, but this thing of" AMLASH -- uses his real name. I have sanitized this -- "Moreno. It is either a tremendous secret or a top secret matter." And then there is an unreadable portion, and then a word either "treason" or "reason" I'm not sure what is referred to, and then a participant whose name is Betty says, "I believe it is a top secret matter."

My question to you is, did you, in September of '63, know about this intercept?

1/18R

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't specifically recall today that I would have known about it. I presume if we had it in file, that I was working with it, that I would have seen it.

Mr. Johnston. Do you have any information about any recollection about something on this order?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Johnston. And assume that at least the portion I quoted seems to reflect on the Cubans' view of AMLASH's activities in Paris.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, it may have. As I recall, I think that he was also at that time -- I may be wrong, and we would have to go back to the files to check, but he was rather outspoken to some of his closer friends in the fact that he was no longer happy with the revolution, with Castro.

Mr. Johnston. I don't want to dwell on this, if you don't have a recollection, but this conversation seems to indicate that the employees in the Cuban embassy think that AMLASH is there on a top secret mission.

1B (NSA)

AMLASH Case Officer. Probably so because of his independent way of comportment. He didn't answer to anybody.

Senator Schweiker. What was his role in government at that point?

AMLASH Case Officer. He was -- excuse me, this must have been '63. He was a personal representative of Castro to the games, first in Brazil, and I don't think he had a specific post in '63, as I recall. He had been Deputy Minister of Interior. He had been a military attache in Spain. I don't think he had a specific post at that time.

Excuse me, if I may add just one more point. Before that he had been President of the Student Federation at the University of Havana. He may still have been in that post, or about the time that he was getting out of it, and this is, I think, where really the trouble between this particular fellow and the Castro brothers more or less came to ahead.

Mr. Johnston. On the 19th of September, Jim Wave sent a message to headquarters basically warning, giving a warning, making the statement that there was an anti-Communist group in Cuba, and the name AMLASH is part of that group, and it concluded by saying that Fidel is allegedly aware of both the anti-Communist group and a Communist group, and that he acts as a moderator between them in order to maintain cohesion in the government of Cuba.

Do you recall receiving that information?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall specifically receiving that information, but I do recall that at that time Fidel Castro himself was talking about -- was concerned about a Communist takeover of the revolution, and he did meet with the subject and some other friends of his in order to prevent this.

Mr. Johnston. When was this?

AMLASH Case Officer. This was in the early '60s sometime.

Senator Schweiker. What year were you in?

Mr. Johnston. '63.

AMLASH Case Officer. This was before '63. This must have been in '62.

Mr. Wallach. This is before his trip to the Soviet Union?

Mr. Johnston. Before Castro's trip?

Mr. Wallach. Right.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

MR. Johnston. The question being put is after your meeting in Brazil with AMLASH, Jim Wave cabled headquarters that AMLASH was part of a group of anti-Communist Cuban government leaders and that Castro was aware of that fact.

AMLASH Case Officer. My answer to you is that he certainly was because he had been talking with these people, including AMLASH, a year before. Yes.

Senator Schweiker. Castro was aware that he was anti-Communist?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, that he was one of the anti-Communist group.

Senator Schweiker. Why would he be so trusted and be the special representative at that point in time if he was known as anti-Communist?

AMLASH Case Officer. Because of the relationship with Castro. Castro himself had not declared his Communist, more or less intentions, as of that time.

Senator Schweiker. Wait, this was after the Cuban missile crisis. This was '63, and the Cuban missile crisis was '62. I'm confused here.

AMLASH Case Officer. Let's go back to the dates here.

Senator Schweiker. The Jim Wave date is September 1963, and he knows at this point, allegedly now, that this AMLASH was a member of an anti-Communist group. I have trouble reconciling that with not pinpointing AMLASH and his possible subversive agent. I think that is what Jim is getting to.

AMLASH Case Officer. Again, my answer is I don't know specifically why or what the origin of the '63 J. M. Wave cable was.

My answer again to the question is that Castro, from his previous knowledge, going back to '62, did know and had consulted with this group of people of which AMLASH was one, who were the group of Anti-Communist officers in the revolution.

Mr. Johnston. So --

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't know why in '63 this report would have come out, but it would confirm Castro's knowledge of this group, yes.

Mr. Johnston. Let me move on into October. There was a meeting with AMLASH.

Senator Schweiker. How long did he tolerate anti-Communist officers in high positions in his government? I've got to believe there's some cutoff here. I realize the uniqueness and broadness of his support earlier, but it would just seem to me that at some point he really had to weed out, nottnecessarily weed out or be suspect of anti-Communist officers who had too high decision making in his government, would he not, or am I missing something?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, not really, because out of this group that was mentioned, and with whom he himself discussed the need in the early '60s to keep, say, the Communists out, some of those officers are still in his goverment today.

Now, they may have changed, or Castro may have changed, but he didn't purge all this group of officers. Maybe he won them over, and if they are still there, evidently he has some confidence in them.

Mr. Johnston. According to the file, there was a meeting on October 5th, apparently, in Paris, and I'm not sure that you were the case officer at that meeting, and the cable from Paris sets the tone of that meeting as AMLASH apparently was trying to get things off his chest in talking to you.

Were you the case officer at that meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. I was the case officer during that period of time.

Go into a little of the detail because we did talk about these problems.

Mr. Johnston. There appeared from the file two meetings in early October 1963, the first meeting on or about October 5th that AMLASH comes in and says I want to get things off my chest, and seems to express great dissatisfaction with the CIA's position.

Then there's a second meeting on October 13th or so where he specifically asks to meet with Robert Kennedy, and you previously testified about that second meeting.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. Now, the file indicates there was an earlier meeting on October 5th, and AMLASH was complaining apparently about the low level espionage matters that had been discussed in Brazil, and implying that he had a more valuable role to play, and the file says the case officer provided the necessary assurances that his feelings were not in fact true, and that his case was receiving the consideration at the highest levels.

With this problem which had undoubtedly been bothering AMLASH off his chest, a much more relaxed AMLASH departed, stating his desire to return to Cuba to undertake the big job.

Do you recall that meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. I think you are getting those two meetings mixed up. In other words, the later one, yes. I was there and talking to him in the second meeting. In the first meeting I don't recall precisely, but there could have been a meeting with a contact in Paris, in other words, not a case officer, but the contact we had in Paris. I don't remember who that was, one of the officers there.

Mr. Johnston. In addition to you he was in contact with -- AMLASH Case Officer. Only for purposes of contact. I mean, only to make contact with me, not to carry on the case. But he knew that the other officer was a friend of mine, and he was in touch with him, and when he came to Paris he would get in touch with him. So I would be notified.

Mr. Johnston. I think you have used his name in the prior transcript, [redacted], the case officer?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, because he was the one who furnished the quarters where we had the meetings.

Mr. Johnston. In furnishing the quarters, did you have a taping system going as to the discussions that would take place?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, I don't believe we taped any of those meetings?

Mr. Johnston. Is it procedure to tape meetings with Agents?

AMLASH Case Officer. Sometimes. It is not a standard procedure. Sometimes it is not physically possible.

Mr. Johnston. Let me go back into this meeting of October 5th, which you don't recall that you were at this meeting, is that correct?

AMLASH Case Officer. There probably could have been the end 1a

meeting when he first arrived in Paris, and the meeting that he had -- I don't recall specifically.

I do recall, if I may, I do recall that he said he was unhappy because of the requirements, the intelligence requirements that we had levied on him in Brazil, and it is true that his position was at that time, even in Brazil, and later in Paris, that he was not disposed to cooperate just to furnish intelligence. In other words, he felt that he wanted to do something about the removal of Castro but was not just prepared to keep us advised as to what was going on. He recognized that this was certainly part of a needed operation, but he did not consider himself just as a provider of information.

Mr. Johnston. Let me go off the record for a minute because I want to use a code name.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Johnston. Having mentioned the code name that is used in this cable, you now recall you were at the 5 October meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. And the cable, you can look at it, indicates that AMLASH was in a confessional mood.

My question to you is, after recalling that meeting, was it basically one where he was expressing his concern about the CIA role for him?

Mr. Johnston. He was expressing his concern for what?

Mr. Johnston. The CIA's plans for using him.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes. He was concerned as to how and in what way he was to cooperate with CIA. He was also -- and we must underline this, right from the beginning, dubious as to our resolve to really follow through on initiating a coup against Castro.

Mr. Johnston. Is the cable correct in stating that he was assured that his case was receiving consideration at the highest levels?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. Was the word "highest level" used, or was a name used?

AMLASH Case Officer. Highest levels, but at that stage of the game he knew he was talking to CIA, so highest levels in CIA is what was meant at that particular time.

Mr. Johnston. That's the word you used?

You didn't say Director McCone?

AMLASH Case Officer. I did not use names, no.

Mr. Johnston. On October 5th, you reassured him that his consideration, that his case was receiving consideration at least at the highest levels of CIA, and the cable reflects that when he left that meeting he seemed much more relaxed about the case.

Is that an accurate portrayal of the meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Johnston. As I mentioned, there was another meeting on or about October 13th, where, as I understand it, AMLASH made his demand or his request to meet with Robert Kennedy, and he made that request to meet with Kennedy by name.

Is that correct?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, he did.

Well, he said somebody such as, somebody high in the administration, again, to receive the assurances that we were prepared to -- that we were serious about developing and organizing a coup.

Mr. Johnston. After that meeting, you were recalled to Langley for discussions, is that correct?

AMLASH Case Officer. I was traveling back and forth between Paris and Langley, yes. I don't recall if I was recalled at that particular time, but I would go there -- I was TDY.

Mr. Johnston. I want to set the stage. There is a message from the Director, 75683, to London, directing you to return to headquarters for discussion of all facets of the case.

This is after you reported that AMLASH wants to meet with someone like Robert Kennedy.

Do you recall that flow of events?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. What discussions did you have at Langley, and I don't want to go through your previous testimony again, but basically are we correct in understanding that out of the discussions at Langley came a decision to go to Paris with Mr. Fitzgerald representing himself as a personal representative of Robert Kennedy?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. Then you met on October 29, according to the file, with AMLASH, Mr. Fitzgerald, in Paris.

Is that correct?

AMLASH Case Officer. Excuse me. Can I go off the record?

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Wallach. I think you stated that AMLASH said that he would like to meet with one of the U.S. leaders such as Robert Kennedy?

AMLASH Case Officer. A high representative in the U.S. Government.

Mr. Wallach. Did he mention any other names that you recall?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, not that I recall.

Mr. Wallach. Just Robert Kennedy?

AMLASH Case Officer. Such as Robert Kennedy.

Mr. Wallach. Did AMLASH, to the best of your knowledge, from what he told you, know about any prior assassination attempts that had been run by the U.S.?

7600010795

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Wallach. Did he have any reason to believe that Robert Kennedy had been involved with any of the sabotage operations as contrasted with any assassination attempts?

AMLASH Case Officer. If he knew, he never mentioned it to me. We never discussed that.

Mr. Wallach. In other words, you didn't say to him, how did you know that Robert Kennedy -- or why did you pick Robert Kennedy.

AMLASH Case Officer. No, not at all. I mean, it's a perfectly, I think, logical name to have been mentioned at that time, because by him, since he was the President's brother and since he was the Attorney General, he wanted somebody high in the Government; at one time he had mentioned the President, you know, I want to talk to the President.

Mr. Wallach. It seems strange to me he didn't pick the Secretary of State or someone like that.

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Wallach. What I'm trying to get at -- AMLASH Case Officer. He wanted somebody directly to the President. In other words, he wanted the assurances from the highest authority, again, from the President of the United States.

Mr. Wallach. What I'm trying to get at is we, from our examination of the alleged assassination attempts, have also gone into the sabotage attempts, MONGOOSE, etc, and found out that Bobby Kennedy did play a role in the sabotage attempts.

What I'm trying to get from you is your understanding of whether or not AMLASH, from his Cuban side, knew that the Kennedy's had played that role and would necessarily say I want to talk to Robert Kennedy for that reason.

AMLASH Case Officer. No. He never mentioned it, not at all in any way.

Mr. Johnston. Let me finally go to the October 29th meeting, and before we went on the record this morning, you were explaining to us how you characterized the AMLASH operation.

Would you repeat in summary form what you told us before we went on the record?

AMLASH Case Officer. The operation was never conceived, certainly, carried out during the period I was associated with it, but was never conceived as an assassination plot. It was conceived as a coup in order to organize a military group within Cuba to overthrow Castro.

Mr. Johnston. Did you have the understanding that if necessary AMLASH was proposing to assassinate the Castro brothers?

AMLASH Case Officer. Assassination was not a subject of discussion that came up at every meeting or contact that we had with AMLASH. It was so stated by him that he felt that the only way to initiate a coup in Cuba was to direct the first blow at the leadership.

Since we were not willing to discuss specifically eliminating Castro, this was never discussed in terms of the operation. We certainly had no doubt that in his mind this was the only way to go about it.

Mr. Johnston. And you dealt with him on that basis?

AMLASH Case Officer. Trying to temporize this, and if possible we were not looking for a bloody coup at that time, planning a bloody coup inside Cuba, but we were trying to certainly get him to think in terms of much more than just the elimination of the leadership.

Mr. Johnston. And to broaden it.

AMLASH Case Officer. To broaden it into a coup. Our interest was the coup, not the specifics of how he got it started.

Mr. Johnston. You were concerned about whether his plans were realistic, weren't you?

AMLASH Case Officer. Very definitely, yes.

Senator Schweiker. Did you personally evaluate AMLASH as fully capable of leading a coup and being able to implement it and carry it out if support were given?

How did you evaluate AMLASH?

As I understand from the dialogue here, and also from reading a summary of these, at first the operations talk was fairly low level sabotage, which he out of hand rejected, and

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

he pictured himself as a leader of a top level effort on the condition that it had assurances of government support and top level support here.

Now, I guess my question to you is, how, as case officer, did you evaluate his capability? Did you evaluate him as someone who could lead a coup and who would, that our government could put trust in, faith in in terms of his ability to carry it out or not?

AMLASH Case Officer. At that time we did not evaluate him as the leader of a coup. He was not our candidate to be the next ruler of Cuba. He was only evaluated in our dealings with him on the basis of what he and his group could contribute to a coup inside Cuba.

So I don't recall at any time that he was selected or that anybody ever talked of him as the next leader in Cuba.

Mr. Baron. Wasn't there some thought that he would be a good rallying point for strong leaders of a new government in Cuba, that he had an ability to attract good people to work with him?

AMLASH Case Officer. He had proven this because he had been one of the two leaders, or the two top leaders of the Directorado Revolutionario, which is the Revolutionary Directorate which is a group not part of the 26th of July Movement, but a separate group, which is -- he was one of the leaders, and became a military commander of that group, separate from the 26 of July movement.

So he had a group in the DR which we knew about, and he afforded himself very well in the fighting -- this was in the province of Lasvillas, during the time that Castro was -- he was in a separate area of the country.

Mr. Baron. I had a recollection which I haven't checked against our transcripts that when we discussed this before, you had said although AMLASH might not be considered the leader of a new government, that he was a potential candidate for that job. He might not be a good military leader, but he would have an ability to bring good people together in a new government.

AMLASH Case Officer. Of the people left in Cuba at that time, we didn't have much of a choice. I mean, you know, we weren't in contact. He was one of the few who could travel.

Senator Schweiker. You put him up near the top but not necessarily at the top.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right, as one being able to contribute.

Senator Schweiker. And you didn't have too many options at that point.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. One of the documents that CIA previously provided us in a sanitized version is a memorandum for the record dated 19 November 1963, and the subject is Plans for AMLASH Contact, and let me just show you that and ask you if you not necessarily prepared that document, because it is a sanitized document, but whether you prepared a document that that apparently came from, the memorandum for record of November 19th.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, I recall.

Mr. Johnston. You prepared that document?

AMLASH Case Officer. I believe I prepared the memorandum from which that extract was made, yes.

Mr. Johnston. When did you prepare that?

AMLASH Case Officer. It had to be late October sometime.

Mr. Johnston. November 19th is the date.

AMLASH Case Officer. Early November, certainly after my October meeting with him in Paris, and before going back, 19 November, that's probably it.

Mr. Johnston. Is that the date you prepared it?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's the date I prepared it. I don't remember when I returned from Paris after the October- meetings.

Mr. Johnston. You prepared a memorandum for the record on the contact before you went to the meeting in Paris on November 22nd?

AMLASH Case Officer. Oh, yes.

Mr. Johnston. Part of that document, Paragraph 3, states that you would show AMLASH a copy of the President's speech in Miami.

AMLASH Case Officer. No. I didn't show him a copy of the speech at all.

Mr. Johnston. Let me show you Paragraph 3 of that.

They were talking about leading up to the November 22nd meeting with AMLASH.

AMLASH Case Officer. It may have been planned to show him a copy of the speech, but as I recall it was not shown him. I talked to him about it, but I don't recall having shown him the speech. But it was probably clear that I could have taken a copy of that speech to him and shown it to him.

Mr. Johnston. Paragraph 4 of that document states --- would you just read it?

AMLASH Case Officer. "Chief SA has requested written reports on AMLASH operation be kept to a minimum."

Mr. Johnston. And that's Desmond Fitzgerald, is that correct?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's correct.

Mr. Johnston. Did Mr. Fitzgerald tell you that on November 19th?

AMLASH Case Officer. It might not have been the first time he mentioned this because -- in other words, on sensitive operations it was always a case of trying to limit the number of people aware of sensitive operations and this certainly is considered in that category.

He reiterated, I presume, since I put it in the memo at that time that the written communications would be minimized.

Mr. Johnston. And this is a memorandum for record.

AMLASH Case Officer. Remember also this is primarily the cables because I had to communicate with headquarters and the station in Paris. I didn't have my independent communications.

Mr. Johnston. Where were you on November 19th?

AMLASH Case Officer. At headquarters. He told me this personally.

Mr. Johnston. Okay. Is it normal to prepare a memorandum for the record about plans for contact of an agent?

AMLASH Case Officer. Normally, yes.

Mr. Johnston. So there's nothing unusual in your preparing this memorandum for record. Is that your testimony?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, there wasn't anything unusual about it. That's the usual thing unless advised to the contrary.

Mr. Johnston. The last time you testified before the Committee you mentioned on November 22nd you had a pen-like device with a hypodermic needle on it. This memorandum for record of November 19th does not mention that.

Is there some reason that it doesn't?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, I don't remember why it would not have been mentioned. I don't recall when I left for Paris. I may have left for Paris on the 21st and --

Mr. Johnston. I think that's correct.

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't know if the decision had been made that we would even show him something like this that time.

Mr. Johnston. You're talking about the 19th?

AMLASH Case Officer. About the 19th, when I wrote the memorandum.

Mr. Johnston. When you left for Paris my understanding is that you carried the device.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right, I carried it with me.

Mr. Johnston. And you had approval to show it to him?

AMLASH Case Officer. I had approval to show it to him.

Mr. Johnston. The file indicates that AMLASH was contacted on November 20th, I believe, in order to set up the November 22nd meeting and he was telephoned by, I assume, somebody in Paris.

Did you arrange that or were you knowledgeable of that fact?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes. I was going to go there to see him. We would have made arrangements to set the meeting up.

Mr. Johnston. The cable reporting the telephone call on November 20th states that somebody apparently was in the room with AMLASH when he was telephoned, and that therefore there had to be a telephone conversation by the CIA agent calling him and the CIA agent --

Pardon me. AMLASH asked if the meeting would be of interest to him, and the CIA agent said, I don't know if it's going to be of interest to you but it's the meeting you requested. And I ask you your understanding of what was meant by the meeting that you requested?

AMLASH Case Officer. Probably to give him an answer on the caches that he wanted inside Cuba, and I understand that was the primary point which had not been, he had not been informed of this at the previous meeting with Fitzgerald, so were we going to give him that material. In other words, it was given to him later in the caches, was that material going to be given to him?

Mr. Johnston. What about the pen device?

AMLASH Case Officer. The pen device was something again, it could have been part of that package. I don't think he was specifically asking about the pen device because we had been so reluctant to even discuss something like this with him and he knew it that he was primarily concerned with the caches.

Mr. Johnston. Is it correct to say that at the October 29th meeting AMLASH was happy with the U.S. policy but asking for equipment to do the job?

AMLASH Case Officer. To initiate the coup.

In other words, he didn't want a massive amount of equipment but he said we do need some equipment to get the thing started.

Mr. Johnston. And that that was in his mind on November 20th.

AMLASH Case Officer. When he made the call?

Mr. Johnston. When the call was made to him and he was told that the November 22nd meeting was the one that he had requested.

AMLASH Case Officer. Probably so.

Mr. Johnston. And that AMLASH would have understood that that was what you were going to give him, some or all of the things discussed at the October 29th meeting.

AMLASH Case Officer. To see what could be given to him, not if it was or anything like this because Paris didn't know what we were prepared to tell him at the 22 November meeting.

Mr. Johnston. As you said before, you were at Langley on the 20th. There's a cable indicating you left Washington arriving in Paris on the morning of November 22nd.

Is that your recollection?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. Did anyone go with you from Washington to Paris?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Johnston. Mr. Fitzgerald was where at the time?

AMLASH Case Officer. At Langley. He was present at the meeting, at the late October meeting, not at the 22 November meeting.

Mr. Johnston. Okay. Let's go then to the November 22nd meeting. You previously testified as you recall it was late afternoon or evening because it was dark when you came out.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. Where was it held? What kind of place was it held?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall that we used a safe gs 7 house or in the study of [redacted] home.

Mr. Johnston. Who was there at the meeting? You and AMLASH.

AMLASH Case Officer. The October meeting?

Mr. Johnston. I'm sorry, November 22nd meeting.

AMLASH Case Officer. AMLASH and myself.

Mr. Johnston. Nobody else was there?

03

AMLASH Case Officer. If it was [redacted] home, it may have been in another part of the house but he was not at the meeting.

Mr. Johnston. Did you have that meeting taped?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, not that I recall.

Mr. Johnston. If you did have it taped, where would the tape be today?

AMLASH Case Officer. In the file.

Mr. Johnston. In this file?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes. I don't recall that that meeting was taped. I don't think it was possible to tape it.

Mr. Johnston. Who was knowledgeable of that meeting outside yourself and AMLASH? Generally, were the people at the Paris station aware of it?

AMLASH Case Officer. Not generally, no. It could have been the Chief of Station, naturally, and [redacted].

Mr. Johnston. At a meeting like that did you have some kind of back-up support, counter-surveillance, any kind of back-up support so that you could be assured that you were not under surveillance at the meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, I took the necessary precautions in going to the meeting to assure myself. I didn't have somebody else following me to tell me if I had any surveillance on me.

Mr. Johnston. What about AMLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. We don't know. I don't know if he was counter-surveilled.

Senator Schweiker. Could AMLASH have been a double agent?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's a good question. I can only give you an opinion. I didn't think so then and even with everything that has happened today, I don't think so today.

Again, that is strictly my opinion.

Senator Schweiker. In a nutshell, and I realize this is a very difficult, complex area, why don't you think so?

AMLASH Case Officer. Because of the power play that was taking place in Cuba at that time between certainly the 26th of July people and Castro trying to consolidate his position, this was the early '60s now, around his people and his movement, the fact that we had information from several sources that he was disillusioned with the revolution.

Senator Schweiker. He, meaning AMLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. He, AMLASH, was disillusioned.

Senator Schweiker. And he wasn't in the 26th of July?

AMLASH Case Officer. He was not in the 26th of July.

He was DR. So he was not a member of Castro's July 26th movement. He was one of the other revolutionary groups which had student support primarily and urban support and compared to Castro's rural so-called support.

So there was a struggle going on there. In other words, this was not an imaginary type of thing. The background that we could check did not, to the best of my recollection at any time lead us to believe in our relation with him at that time that he was playing a double game.

The other reason that I felt that way at the time was that we had to persuade him to return to Cuba to stay. He was ready to defect, to leave. He didn't want to come to the United States with all the rest of the Cubans who were here because he had stayed on, he felt, too long with the revolution. But he was ready to leave Cuba and to defect. He was fed up with the way life was. A lot of the travel that he did was that he would take any opportunity to get off of the island. He had told us, me personally, that and this was also confirmed by other sources.

Senator Schweiker. Wouldn't one of your reasons also be that he is in jail now?

AMLASH Case Officer. That would be a very good reason. I think I mentioned that the last time, certainly when I was talking about this. If he was taken back --

Senator Schweiker. Are we absolutely certain he's in jail now??

AMLASH Case Officer. We checked that I believe the last time, I think the last report we had was what, a couple of years ago?

Mr. Baron. I was given the name of a CIA contact in Florida who had been on the Island of Pines at one point and said as far as he knew, although he hadn't been in Cuba for several years, AMLASH was a prisoner, but he wasn't in prison. He was doing some sort of hospital work which was considered part of his rehabilitation program.

AMLASH Case Officer. He was a doctor, wasn't he, for the prison?

Mr. Baron. Yes.

AMLASH Case Officer. He had more freedom because he was being used as a doctor for the prisoner but he still was still on the Isle of Pines.

Mr. Baron. It is my understanding that he was working as a doctor even outside the prison and again, this is just hearsay of one contact that I called on the phone.

Mr. Wallach. Are you positive that someone just not using his name is there, that he switched over using an alias? You wouldn't have intelligence of that type?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Wallach. I want to quickly follow-up on somethin that Jim and the Senator were getting at.

gsh 11

Why were you not willing to discuss with AMLASH the assassination of Castro?

AMLASH Case Officer. We?

Mr. Wallach. You have told us --

AMLASH Case Officer. We were very reluctant to discuss the subject.

Mr. Wallach. Why?

AMLASH Case Office. I guess we didn't want to get involved in assassinations.

Mr. Wallach. But you had them before this.

AMLASH Case Officer. I didn't know this, and certainly in this operation the objective of this operation was not to go in and assassinate Castro but a much bigger type of program.

Mr. Wallach. But that was the first step, or at least the potential first step.

AMLASH Case Officer. He was convinced that was the only first step. AMLASH. We weren't convinced that it had to be, at that time that it had to be the first step, and that's why we didn't want to discuss and we didn't discuss and we were reluctant to discuss this subject with him.

Mr. Wallach. At the late October meeting I think you said before that -- what did you request that led to the giving him of the pen, the hypodermic needle?

AMLASH Case Officer. The pen he requested was something with which to protect himself now.

7600010813

Mr. Wallach. A pen with a hypodermic needle would protect himself?

AMLASH Case Officer. He put himself in a situation and asked us the question. He said I may be confronted by Castro or by Raoul or by one or the other of Castro's people in a meeting in which I am not armed, and I may be confronted with an accusation of plotting against the regime.

And at that time he said this would be before we are ready to move in formenting the coup, and he said, I would like to have something with which I can protect myself at that time. In fact, the words that I think I mentioned here before was, if I fall, I don't want to be the only one going down.

So he was seeing himself in a situation of going back into Cuba, of being in a meeting in which he could have been, because, again, of the relationships. Fidel Castro himself or Raoul Castro could confront him in their office, accuse him.

Mr. Wallach. Couldn't he use that pen offensively and not defensively?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, he could have. He was not at that time talking about using it offensively and we weren't discussing the offensive use of that pen.

Senator Schweiker. Following up the point that I switched away from as to whether Cuban intelligence might have been trailing him or following him or observing what you were doing with him, we have some knowledge, I gather, from a summary here that AMLASH's one-time Cuban mistress was believed to be working for Cuban intelligence and her brother was known to be Cuban intelligence.

If this is correct, wouldn't that pretty well mean that whatever he was doing over there might well be observed by Cuban intelligence even though he might have been a straight single agent in terms of working with us and not a double agent that they may well have known or monitored what in fact he was doing with us?

AMLASH Case Officer. This is possible, Senator. We had no indication at the time that they were monitoring his activities. Again, he was at such a level and the people certainly in Paris and the Cubans overseas knew that he was at such a level that we never heard that they were ever given this mission.

Senator Schweiker. Have you heard that his Cuban mistress was working with Cuban intelligence?

AMLASH Case Officer. Which one of his mistresses, because he's had several, including his sister who worked for the Presidency, his own sister.

Mr. Johnston. We extracted that from a file and I'm sorry but in the respect and the need to keep that information compartmented I did not take her name down and I don't think we have the file that indicates that.

My recollection is that he had a mistress for a considerable period of time who was, who was suspected of being the GI, anc certainly her brother was actually known to be an employee of the GI.

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall the specific case, but let me remind you that he was the Deputy Minister of the Interior, which did have the security services at that time under that ministry. So it wouldn't surprise me that there would be somebody he would know in that ministry.

Mr. Johnston. AMLASH was?

AMLASH Case Officer. AMLASH was at one time before he was President of the Student Federation.

Mr. Johnston. Not in '63?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Senator Schweiker. And Cuban intelligence would have come under him?

AMLASH Case Officer. Some of the security apparatus was under the Ministry of Interior, but he was in that job, I don't recall, a very short period of time.

Mr. Wallach. If Castro knew about the assassination attempts, you would assume that AMLASH would have known, wouldn't you, from being in that position?

AMLASH Case Officer. We don't know if at that time that he knew that -- well, he was saying, in other words, he was on the radio every day saying that the Yankees were making an attempt on his life but that he knew the specifics of operations, I don't think we have that information, or at least I never have seen it.

After the Bay of Pigs every occasion that he had he would accuse the imperialists of mounting another operation against him.

Mr. Baron. Just a couple more questions on this point. Did you take any special precautions aside from the standard precautions that you would take in dealing with any foreign contact?

Were special precautions taken in dealing with AMLASH to guard against the prospect that he was either a double agent or under surveillance by Cuban intelligence?

AMLASH Case Officer. What would you mean by special precautions?

Mr. Baron. You would have to tell me more about the techniques that you could use, than I could tell you.

AMLASH Case Officer. What I would do is to make sure that I wasn't under surveillance in going to the meeting or at the meeting, and we would certainly check the meeting places to make sure that the meeting places were not under surveillance by them, which would also hopefully would have picked up in the surveillance that he would have had on him coming to the meetings.

I don't recall that we ever put him under surveillance in Paris, which would have meant disclosing our interest in him either to our surveillance team or the French police, or whoever.

So we never did that because, again, of our interest in protecting and minimizing the number of people who knew we were in contact with him.

Again, I refer you, I think, to what the Senator raised before, that he was arrested and sentenced, and as I recall, I may be wrong but as I recall the contacts that we had with him in Paris never surfaced in that trial. He never, as far as the transcript that we have of the trial, he never reported, he never testified about the contacts that he had with us. It was only afterwards when he was in contact with the exile group.

Mr. Baron. So you never took any affirmative action against him or investigated him or treated him in any way that you would treat a person suspected of being a double agent or being closely watched by an intelligence service?

AMLASH Case Officer. Not in mounting an investigation against him because in doing that we would have to show our interest in him to other people, so we did not do that.

What we could do with myself and with the other knowledgeable people say in Paris, of him, we did do and did everything we possibly could do.

In other words, to check where he was and who he was seeing and through the telephone taps and to ensure that when he came to meet us that that meeting was secure, gsb 17 that we did.

Mr. Johnston. Let me go back to the November 22nd meeting.

As you recall, after you met AMLASH there, did you give him the newspaper article about the Kennedy speech?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall. I may have shown him the article. To the best of my recollection, we talked about the speech and he had, I think, at that time, the article had already appeared in the French newspaper and he had read it.

Mr. Johnston. What did you tell him about the article?

AMLASH Case Officer. Well, he liked the article. It was one in which I think the Administration, as I vaguely recall, was taking a rather positive stand.

Mr. Johnston. Was this Kennedy's speech before the Inter-American Press Association in Miami on November 18th?

AMLASH Case Officer. I believe so.

Mr. Johnston. I have an extract from that.

AMLASH Case Officer. I'm not 100 percent certain, but I think it was.

Mr. Johnston. There's an indication that you told him that Fitzgerald helped to write the speech.

Do you recall doing that?

AMLASH Case Officer. I could have.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall specifically?

AMLASH Case Officer. Specifically, no, but we did discuss sh 18

End 2A, b 2B

the speech.

Mr. Johnston. You have testified a great deal about the poisbn pen or the pen device and my only question is what is your best recollection about what happened to the pen? Did he take it with him? Did you take it with you when you left the meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. Again, as I mentioned to you the last time, I don't remember specifically if I kept the pen and threw it away or if he kept it.

What I do remember was his reaction when I showed him the pen. I can't today tell you for sure that he kept the pen.

Mr. Johnston. It seems to me that's rather compromising evidence, if he kept the pen and you recall that. It's also such compromising evidence -- I have difficulty believing you would have thrown it away.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, because it was compromising evidence. I had carried it one way. I mean I wasn't going to carry it back. It was nothing but a Papermate pen in which a hypodermic needle had been inserted.

In other words, it wasn't a $10,000 piece of equipment or anything like this.

Mr. Johnston. I agree, but it's a very compromising piece of evidence to have around.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right. But what I can't

gsh 19

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

recall specifically is whether it was broken, thrown away or --

Mr. Wallach. Why do you believe he wouldn't have taken it with him?

AMLASH Case Officer. He said he wouldn't. I specifically remember this. He says, and then later on he says, I'm not going to take any compromising material back with me.

This would have been a piece of compromising material. He did not like the pen. The only point probably that we made with him is that we were willing to consider, because he knew our opposition to something like this, that we were even willing to consider showing him something that -- whether he could again defend himself.

He did not think it was a good idea.

Senator Schweiker. What kind of weapon or substance could he get that would not compromise him? I'm a little confused. He wanted something to defend himself, but he doesn't want anything that will compromise him.

Unless you have a disappearing weapon, what could he possibly get that would not compromise him to take back?

AMLASH Case Officer. Well, we were talking also about caches inside Cuba at that time, so it could have been dropped to him inside Cuba. He didn't exactly have to take it back with him.

In other words, here again, the whole idea of this was not to give him something there that he would be able to take back with him.

gsh 20

Mr. Wallach. Were arrangements made for caches inside Cuba if he was worried about defending himself?

AMLASH Case Officer. He had asked for caches inside Cuba.

Mr. Johnston. Can you be positive that he did not leave the meeting with the pen in his possession?

AMLASH Case Officer. I cannot be positive that he didn't. I'm almost sure that he didn't.

Mr. Johnston. Did you ever ask him for the pen back? Do you recall asking him to give you the pen back before the meeting concluded or after the conclusion of the meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. Since I recollect his reaction to it that, you know, it's no good, I just can't logically believe that he would have kept the pen. This is the point. But I don't specifically recall what was done with it except that it was probably destroyed.

In other words, you know, broken, throw the needle out of it and break the pen.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall asking him to give you the pen back?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, but I don't recall that he took it in the first place, because what I recall is, gee, is that the best that you can come up with type of thing.

So he was not in any way enthused about what we had shown him.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Johnston. Let me ask you, is it correct you did promise him at this meeting that you would drop rifles with telescopic sights for him in Cuba?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. Was there any mention of paying him money to support his coup plans?

AMLASH Case Officer. He had never really asked for money. In promising him full support for the coup, if money was required I presume that could be conjecture that he could get that also, but he did not specifically ask for money.

Mr. Johnston. Was there discussion of his escape in the event he assassinated Castro or killed Castro but did not pull off the coup?

AMLASH Case Officer. At the last meeting I don't believe that was discussed.

Mr. Johnston. At your prior meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. If it was, it was touched upon, but as I recall, and this is from reading the file afterward. where this was discussed was a year later when he was in contact with the exile group. I think it was with the exile group that he was then concerned about, how do I get out if something goes wrong and we can't pull the coup.

But we did not at the 22 November meeting, I don't believe we discussed that. In fact, I'm sure we didn't discuss it.

Mr. Johnston. When did the meeting end? About what time?

What time did the meeting end?

AMLASH Case Officer. Approximately 10:00 in the evening.

Mr. Johnston. And we basically discussed while we were off the record the fact that the assassination occurred at 12:30 in Dallas, which we think would have been around 7:30 in Paris, and the meeting was then over at 10:00 o'clock.

When you walked out of the meeting you testified previously that you heard about the assassination.

Is that correct?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's correct.

Mr. Johnston. And that's the first word you heard about the assassination?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. You previously said that AMLASH made a comment about that. Was there any other discussion of the assassination by AMLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. That was it, because I left him at that time.

Mr. Johnston. I don't understand. If the meeting is either in a house or somewhere else how you would leave together and you would have access to a radio or something to hear the report.

AMLASH Case Officer. If it was in the house, it could have been the occupant of the house who told us. In fact, I am sure it was the occupant of the house, [redacted], who told us he had just heard on the radio about the assassination when we came out of the meeting. We didn't go or come together to the house. He left on his own and then I left after he left.

Mr. Johnston. So in other words, what you're saying is that you're not walking out of the building but you're in the house and the meeting is over and [redacted] knows that the meeting is over and that he tells you.

AMLASH Case Officer. We came out of the room, out of the study in which we were holding the meeting, and when we came out of that into his living room he told us what he had just heard on the radio.

Mr. Johnston. And then AMLASH made this comment and walked out of the door?

AMLASH Case Officer. AMLASH made this comment and shortly thereafter I don't recall, we finished our business. He was -- I don't remember the exact quote. You have it on the record there, like why does it have to happen to somebody like that.

Mr. Johnston. Did you know who committed the assassinatio at this time?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Johnston. And even with that you don't recall whether AMLASH walked out the door with the poison pen?

gsh 24

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't believe he did, I don't believe he did and it could very well be that what I would have done is pull the hypodermic needle out of it, that's very simple, and then it's just a pen, throw the pen away or keep the pen.

It's not a complicated object, in other words. It was very simple to just pull the hypodermic needle out of it, and that's probably what was done. But I don't recall specifically that I did it.

Mr. Johnston. Did you do that after the meeting was over?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, it was during the meeting, not after.

Mr. Johnston. Now there's an indication that you got instructions from Washington after the meeting to break off contact with AMLASH.

Do you recall receiving those instructions or instructions to that effect?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, there was a cable, I believe, as I recall. It wasn't necessarily to break off contact with AMLASH because everybody knew that that was the last meeting. He was preparing to, we knew this, he had been preparing and we had been talking to him since October since he was out about his return to Cuba.

Senator Schweiker. Did the arms drop cache ever occur?

AMLASH Case Officer. I had left, I wasn't involved in that part of it, Senator. Again, only from the record that I read afterwards, I think a couple of drops were made to him. In fact, the next year or something like that.

Mr. Johnston. I'm not sure exactly what was left or what he received or what was available.

AMLASH Case Officer. And I don't know if he ever picked them up. I don't think we know that.

Mr. Wallach. Why did he tell you he wanted the rifles with telescopic sights?

AMLASH Case Officer. Well, he wanted grenades and he wanted dynamite too to storm the headquarters later on. We said, well, look, could you expand this somewhat too, and he was talking about, well, yes, and we should probably attack the radio station at the same time. It was a matter of attacking a building, whether it was a radio station or whatever it was, in order to, in his mind, he was probably thinking of attacking the headquarters, Castro's headquarters.

Mr. Johnston. Let me refresh your recollection. In your previous testimony with the Select Committee on page 114 you stated:

"When we came out of that meeting we heard the news of President Kennedy's assassination and I received a cable after that which I thought that this was probably the reason the whole operation was being re-assessed.

AMLASH Case Officer. That was strictly my thought at that time.

Mr. Johnston. And on page 115 of your prior transcript you said, "well, the whole Cuban operation, the way I interpreted it, was being called on."

Did you receive a cable to that effect?

AMLASH Case Officer. It was a very cryptic cable saying, you know, return to Washington, which I was going to do anyway, so this is why --

Mr. Johnston. Did it say to break off contact with AMLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall that it did but it didn't make any difference because headquarters knew that that was the last meeting with him before he was returning to Cuba anyway.

So there was no reason to tell me to break off contact with him. This is what I'm trying to say.

Mr. Johnston. Supposedly the 1967 IG report, and I don't know where they got their information, said that was an OPIM cable.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's Operation Immediate. In other words, it's an immediate cable. That set precedence on the cable.

Mr. Johnston. And what does that mean for transmitting --

AMLASH Case Officer. It was transmitted before a routine cable or a priority cable. It's just the precedence --

gsh 7

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Johnston. It has the highest priority next to FLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's the one below FLASH.

Mr. Johnston. And that tells you to break off the meeting or to come back to Washington?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall receiving that?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. And you read that?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, or I was told about it because I didn't go into the embassy to read it, so I don't think they brought the cable out to me but I was told to go on back to Washington.

Mr. Johnston. Let me state that that cable is apparently not in the AMLASH file and the 1967 Inspector General could not find that cable.

Does that surprise you?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, it doesn't really because I don't think there was that much importance given to that kind of cable at that time.

What you say about the Operation Immediate, we handled all of our traffic, more or less, in this case on an immediate basis because of the short periods of time that we had with AMLASH.

So if you are implying that because of the OP AM cable that there was something else behind this, no, I don't think that there was in any way. It was just, you know, return to Washington, and as I assumed, and I assumed at that time that certainly the whole Cuban operation was going to be re-assessed after what happened to President Kennedy.

Mr. Johnston. Now there is in the file a cable reporting from Paris to Washington reporting that you planned to depart Paris that morning of November 23rd and arrive in Washington 8:10.

Did you in fact take that flight?

AMLASH Case Officer. Did you ever find that cable?

Mr. Johnston. I saw the cable of your return to Washington.

AMLASH Case Officer. If it referred to a cable, that was the one telling me to come back. This is a travel-type of exchange.

Mr. Johnston. Did you in fact arrive back in Washington I said 8:10. I'm sorry, it would be 18:10, which would be 6·00 Washington time.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. Where did you go when you arrived in Washington at 6:10 in the evening on November 23rd?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall specifically if I stopped by my home, which is en route to the office, whether I went right back to the office before going home

Mr. Johnston. But you did go to the office sometime that

AMLASH Case Officer. I may have.

Mr. Johnston. Did you go to the office on the 24th?

AMLASH Case Officer. Oh, yes.

Mr. Johnston. That was a Sunday?

AMLASH Case Officer. It could have been.

Mr. Wallach. One question about the cable that we can't find.

Did you have any other business in Paris besides AMLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. Not specifically at that time.

Mr. Wallach. Was there a date that you intended to return?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Wallach. When was that date officially?

AMLASH Case Officer. About the time that I returned.

Mr. Wallach. Why would they have sent you a cable telling you to return if you intended to return that day?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't know. This was probably a reaction to what had happened. But again, I want to point out to you that travel cables of this type, even if your plans are such, and the way I was travelling at that time I was not travelling on a 99 diplomatic passport or anything like that. You don't even need a regular passport to travel France. It was just to keep track and record of our personal travel.

In other words, it's our security to make sure that that headquarters knows that we are coming back and I sent a cable saying I'm arriving on such and such a date, the same way I sent a cable to Paris telling them I'm arriving on such and such a date.

Mr. Johnston. Would you have sent your cable without getting a cable first from them?

AMLASH Case Officer. I could have, sure.

Mr. Johnston. I'm not sure I understand the purpose of their cable. Were you saying it's a regular thing that they will send extra traffic?

AMLASH Case Officer. I can't tell you what the purpose of their cable was except what I'm trying to explain to you is that keeping headquarters informed or headquarters inquiring of you in such circumstances, it's not unusual to get a cable, you know, advise us when you're going to return or please return or us sending a cable.

If there was any other reason for sending that cable, I can only conjecture, I don't know, that it was because of what had happened.

Mr. Johnston. I'd like the record to show that Senator Schweiker has left and you are aware that without the Senator being here you have the prerogative to stop your testimony.

Do you understand that?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. And that if we proceed, that you can continue to stop at any time during the testimony and ask for it to continue when we have a Senator present.

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Do you understand that?

AMLASH Case Officer. Right.

Mr. Johnston. Are you willing to continue under the conditions of not having a Senator here?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, I am.

Mr. Johnston. We have you back in Washington at 6:10 on November 23rd, and you may or may not have gone to the office that day and you said you definitely did go to the office on November 24th, on Sunday.

AMLASH Case Officer. Probably so. Scratch definitely. I'm probably not that definite about it, but I'm sure I touched base with the office as soon as I returned, either telephonically or physically going there.

Mr. Johnston. Let me refresh your recollection then and remind you that Oswald was killed on November 24th, Sunday.

Does that aid you in recalling where you were at that time?

AMLASH Case Officer. No. I mean I was home, certainly.

Mr. Johnston. You mean home in Washington?

AMLASH Case Officer. In Washington.

Mr. Johnston. But you don't know whether you were at the office or at home on that day?

AMLASH Case Officer. It depends on the hour that we may have been working.

If you're going back to asking about normal hours that we kept during that period of time, Sunday was just another working day, so you know, it wasn't because it was Sunday that we would not have been in the office.

Mr. Johnston. But you can't recall being in the office?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall being in the office. When we heard the information that Oswald was involved, I could very well have been home.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall being in the office when you heard that Oswald was shot?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Johnston. Did you hold, when did you first talk to the chief of the section about your meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. Specifically, I don't recall when. What would have been ususual is for me to have called the office when I got in and whether I went there or not, I don't recall. And then I either talked to Fitzgerald who would have been, he would have been the only person I would have talked to. If he was in on that Sunday and I went in, I would have talked to him on Sunday, and if not, it would have been on Monday.

Mr. Johnston. Did you talk to Mr. Helms about the November 22nd meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, I did not talk to Helms.

Mr. Johnston. Did you talk to Mr. McCone about the November 22nd meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Johnston. Did you talk to anyone in technical services about the pen device or the meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. Not at the time, no.

Mr. Johnston. So it was your recollection that the only one you talked to in this time period of November 23rd and November 24th, November 25th about the meeting in Paris is Mr. Fitzgerald?

AMLASH Case Officer. To the best of my recollection, yes.

Mr. Johnston. And what is your recollection of that discussion?

AMLASH Case Officer. The report, as to what had taken place, reporting that he had not thought highly of the device that we had provided him with, that he did not intend to carry it back, that he was pleased with the fact that we had decided that we would put caches down for him inside Cuba, the reaffirmation of U.S. support for his movement inside of Cuba, the fact that he had decided definitely to return and had made his reservations to return, and his dismay and his reaction when he had heard that Kennedy had been assassinated when we got to the meeting.

Mr. Johnston. Was there a discussion about any link between AMLASH or your Cuban operations and the Kennedy assassination?

AMLASH Case Officer. None whatsoever that I can remember.

Mr. Johnston. No discussion between you and Fitzgerald at all about any connection?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, not that I can recall.

Mr. Johnston. When you say not that you can recall, are you saying that it's possible but you don't recall it, or are you certain, fairly certain to the best of your recollection?

AMLASH Case Officer. I'm fairly certain to the best of my knowledge that there was no connection between the AMLASH -- in other words, that we discussed it, we discussed the Kennedy assassination. I'm sure we did. I mean who wasn't discussing the Kennedy assassination at that time. That we tied the Kennedy assassination in with AMLASH, I don't recall any kind of conversation of that nature.

Mr. Johnston. On November 23rd and November 24th and November 25th?

AMLASH Case Officer. Right.

Mr. Johnston. All right. Let me point you to one of the documents we wanted to ask you about and it is a contact report dated 25 November, and let me just show that to you.

Is that a document -- let me state for the record what it is.

It's the original, apparently copy, of the November 25th contact report of the November 22nd meeting.

Did you prepare that contact report?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. And is that the document you prepared?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. I'm asking you directly is that the very document you prepared? That's a very specific question.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. When did you prepare that?

AMLASH Case Officer. The date is 25 November.

Mr. Johnston. Is it your recollection that that's the date you prepared that?

AMLASH Case Officer. Probably so.

Mr. Johnston. Do you have a recollection of doing it on that date?

AMLASH Case Officer. Not specifically on the 25th, but if the document is dated the 25th, I presume that's the day that I did the memorandum.

Mr. Johnston. Now how did you prepare it? Did you dictate it to somebody who then typed it up, or did you yourself personally prepare it? And in asking you that question, is there any way to tell from the document how it was prepared?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, the secretary probably typed it. I mean I didn't type it myself.

Mr. Johnston. You did not type it yourself.

Is there any way to tell from the document? There are no initials on it or anything that would indicate that it was dictated and typed?

AMLASH Case Officer. No. What are you asking me?

Mr. Johnston. I'm just asking you if you're the one that prepared that or how it got prepared?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, it's a contact report of my meeting with AMLASH.

Mr. Johnston. And you prepared that document?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. But you did not type it?

AMLASH Case Officer. I did not type it, so I could have dictated it to a secretary or wrote it out longhand and gave it to her and she typed it.

Mr. Johnston. What about the fact that on November 19th in your memorandum for record you indicated that Fitzgerald wanted written reports to be kept to a mimimum?

With those instructions why did you prepare a contract report?

AMLASH Case Officer. Because I probably contacted Fitzgerald about it and he said prepare the one on this meeting.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall that?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall that but that would be a normal thing.

Mr. Johnston. That he would have in effect --

AMLASH Case Officer. I briefed him on this, and then said, let's have a memorandum, a contact report on that.

In other words, when he said, minimize the written communications on the operation, he didn't say we won't have any other communications on any other memos on it or any further memorandums on it.

So what would happen if you put things within the dates here, I had briefed him on this and then it was by agreement or maybe by his order that he told me to write up a contact report.

Mr. Johnston. Have you had an opportunity to examine that report either before you came here? I'm not sure we've given you enough opportunity to look at it closely while here. Maybe you could take that time right now to look at the document.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. Look at page 3 of the document. Compare page 2 and page 3. Page 3 is in a much different type than page 2.

Do you notice that? It's much fainter.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, it's fainter, and I don't know if the type looks like it's the same but it's fainter.

Mr. Johnston. Do you have any explanation for that?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Johnston. Was page 3 what you prepared on November [illegible]

AMLASH Officer. I didn't personally prepare it again, so I could have given the secretary my long hand report, something could have happened, and then I finished it and she put it on a second page. That is possible. I don't have any explanation why it's lighter than the other one. The type appears to be the same.

Mr. Johnston. Are you saying that the way you prepared it it's possible that the second page and third page were prepared on different days?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, it could have been at different times of the day. If I had writen out the first part of the contact report and I hadn't finished it, the secretary could very well have started to type it, and then when I finished it I would have given her the last page to type because it was all on the 25th.

Mr. Johnston. Are you saying --

AMLASH Case Officer. Because there's no date on the second page.

Mr. Johnston. You're stating that your recollection is that that document was typed on one day by one person.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, probably so. That's the usual case. I have no reason to doubt why it would have been done any differently.

Mr. Johnston. What about the information on page 3? Is that the substance, in fact? Is that exactly what you wrote on November 25th about the contact?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, and in fact I draw your attention to the part on the secret writing material because we were very concerned as to how we would continue to communicate with him inside Cuba and this was one of the subjects that were discussed at the last meeting, communications. So that is not a new subject matter. That is definitely part of the subject matter that was discussed at the last meeting, which was communications with him.

Mr. Johnston. And it's your testimony that this report as it exists in that file is exactly the report that you prepared on November 25th?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes..

Mr. Johnston. You'll note that the report does not mention the pen device or AMLASH's reaction to your giving it to him.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. You left that out of your original report. You did not make a written report on --

AMLASH Case Officer. I did not make a written report on that.

Mr. Johnston. Why was that?

AMLASH Case Officer. Probably because Fitzgerald said not to.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall Fitzgerald saying not to?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall it, but that's certainly what I'd have to assume.

In other words, don't include that part of it.

Mr. Johnston. Should it have gone in there in a normal

gsh 40

report?

AMLASH Case Officer. In a normal report, yes. But this certainly was a rather, again, sensitive subject that we were talking about. He did not accept it and I don't think that at that time it was felt that anything else should be said about it.

Mr. Johnston. Why is that?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't know why. Again, because of the sensitivity, I presume, of the subject.

Mr. Johnston. And again, is it your recollection that Fitzgerald, is it your testimony that Fitzgerald told you not to put a reference to the pen device in the report?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't recall if he specifically told me not to put it in or if when I gave him the report he was satisfied that it was not in.

Mr. Baron. Why would a reference to the pen device be any more sensitive than references to arms caches or suggestions of assassinations or all the other kinds of things that were already in the file?

AMLASH Case Officer. Because again, in conjunction with this particular operation it was not an assassination operation. It was a coup operation. This was one of the aberrations of the operation which we got involved in strictly to provide bona fides to the man that we were dealing with and we were concerned for his personal security.

In other words, it was not part of the operational plan to provide him with any such devices for the purposes of assassinating Castro. The rifles and the grenades and all of this was something that was necessary to start a coup.

In other words, it was not directed at one particular person.

I think this was probably the thinking at that time and why such points did not get into it because this was not part of the AMLASH plan of operation.

Mr. Baron. For the sake of the accuracy of the records and the protection of the people who were involved at the CIA, wouldn't even the tender of such a device to AMLASH for whatever purposes normally be put into the records?

AMLASH Case Officer. Not in a contact report because in a contact report this goes into the regular file. Whether Fitzgerald would have made a note of this some place else I don't know, but in the regular contact report which goes into the regular file -- in other words, say the secretary would know about it and this could have been the other part of it.

In other words, to reduce the number of people, to contain the number of people.

Mr. Baron. Do you recall anything in your discussions with Fitzgerald that led you to believe that one of the factors that was in his mind in assessing the sensitivity of this tender of a poison pen device was the day on which it happened as opposed to simply the fact that such a device was offered?

gsh 42

AMLASH Case Officer. If it was in his mind, he never stated it to me. I think it was just the overall sensitivity that the Agency had been, has now, and always has had on assassinations.

I mean it's not the specific of what had happened that time. Assassinations were not part of the routine business of the Agency.

Mr. Johnston. Let me ask you, you have mentioned the secretary who prepared it. Do you recall the name of the secretary who prepared this document?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, I don't.

Mr. Johnston. Did you have a regular secretary?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. What was her name?

AMLASH Case Officer. She could have prepared it or it could have been Fitzgerald's secretary because, again, of the days, the Sunday.

I don't recall the name.

Mr. Johnston. You don't recall your secretary's name?

AMLASH Case Officer. Well, I don't remember if a girl by the name of Bobbie Hernandez was still with me. She was my secretary during part of that time. She was probably my secretary then.

7600010813

I don't recall Fitzgerald's secretary's name, and she could have typed it, but it would have been one of the two girls

Mr. Johnston. Let me show you the report again and on page 1 of the report, I think it's paragraph 2 of that that discusses the newspaper article, the Kennedy speech. Paragraph two:

"AMLASH stated he was returning to Cuba." The second sentence of that is --"subject was pleased to read a copy of President Kennedy's 18 November speech in Miami and was even more pleased to hear that Fitzgerald had helped to prepare the President's speech. You the case officer reiterated the assurances given by Fitzgerald of full U.S. support if a real coup against the regime was successful."

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, that's right.

Mr. Johnston. Does that refresh your recollection about whether or not you gave him the speech?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, because at that time it could have already been printed in the Paris newspaper and he could very well have read it in one of the Parisian newspapers. But again, I could have had a copy of a newspaper clipping of the speech with me.

Mr. Johnston. But in the least does that refresh your recollection that you told AMLASH that Fitzgerald helped prepare the speech?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, Fitzgerald told me that we could tell him.

Mr. Johnston. Would you recall the portion of the speech you pointed out to AMLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. No portion was pointed out to him. It was just that Fitzgerald had helped in preparation of the speech.

Mr. Johnston. I could show you a copy. This is an extract I have prepared from the November 19th, 1963 Washington Post, page A15, which carries an AP story of November 18th saying:

"The following is the text of President Kennedy's address tonight before the Inter-American Press Association."

And I have extracted the only portions as are relevant to Cuba. Now I'll give you a chance to read it.

Incidentally, I'd like to have this marked as Exhibit 1 for the record.

Mr. Johnston. I point out that in that speech, do you have a recollection of this being the part of the speech or you discussed this aspect of the speech?

AMLASH Case Officer. We did not discuss the speech paragraph by paragraph. All we did was a very small passing remark about the speech.

He had probably to the best of my recollection already read it in one of the Parisian newspapers, or if I had a newspaper clipping of the speech, he glanced at it while we were there, but I don't recall that. But he was certainly satisfied with the tone of the speech.

Mr. Johnston. You must have read the speech before you mentioned it to him. Is this the portion that you had in mind that would satisfy him about the tone of the speech?

AMLASH Case Officer. Certainly this sets the tone for the whole speech. The extracts that you have made here sets the tone for the full speech and specifically the one in which once the barrier is removed, we will be ready and anxious to work with the Cuban people in pursuit of those progressive goals which in a few short years stirred the hopes and the sympathy of many people throughout the entire hemisphere.

Mr. Johnston. Was it your intent by making reference to the speech in your meeting with AMLASH to show that higher authority was behind what you were doing?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, precisely.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, that the U.S. Government was prepared, the assurances at first that Gerald had given him and I had been giving him that the U.S. Government was willing to support the Cuban people.

Mr. Baron. In the excerpt from the speech that we have just shown you it says:

"It is important to restate what now divides Cuba from my country and from all the American countries. It is the fact that a small band of conspirators has stripped the Cuban people of their freedom and handed over the independence and soverignty of the Cuban nation to forces beyond the hemisphere.

Then it continues: "This and this alone divides us. As long as this is true, nothing is possible. Without it, everything is possible. Once this barrier is removed, we will be ready and anxious to work with the Cuban people."

That's the end of the quote.

Is it your understanding that this reference to a small band of conspirators is a reference to the Castro government?

AMLASH Case Officer. Precisely.

Mr. Baron. And in your report of November 19th, or your memorandum for the record of November 19th, you had mentioned that -- well, I will simply quote from the report. It says:

"Show AMLASH One copy of President's Miami speech(remark

AMLASH Case Officer. Fitzgerald.

Mr. Baron. Blank is Fitzgerald.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes. This memorandum was written before I went to Paris, so, in effect, these were my marching orders that I could use showing that the U.S. Government, indeed --

Mr. Baron. Would support a move against the Castro government.

AMLASH Case Officer. Would support the move against Castro.

Mr. Baron. And did you know for a fact that Fitzgerald helped with the preparation of the speech?

AMLASH Case Officer. Only from what Fitzgerald told me.

Mr. Baron. What did Fitzgerald tell you?

AMLASH Case Officer. I can't give you a specific quote but I presume that he had had some input into the speech. This, again, wouldn't necessarily be Fitzgerald himself. It could be but it could also be the SAS, the CIA input into the speech, which is normal in Presidential speeches that there are inputs from different agencies.

AMLASH operation?

AMLASH Case Officer. No. Fitzgerald never told me specifically that the President had been apprised of this. The general objective, I never had any doubts in my mind that the general objective of organizing a coup against Castro did not have the highest governmental approval. I mean this was never a question, I don't think, in my mind. Again, not specifically assassination because what I mentioned before, I don't think Fitzgerald or Helms or anybody else would specifically have briefed anybody that the AMLASH operation was an assassination plot because it wasn't.

Mr. Baron. So you had no basis for believing that the President was informed that a component of the AMLASH operation was assassination?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, I have no reason. I don't know. Nobody told me that he had or he hadn't.

Mr. Baron. Did Fitzgerald make it clear to you that in providing input to this speech he had the specific purpose in mind of giving a public signal to AMLASH that he would receive support from the highest quarters of the U.S. Government if he would move for a coup?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, this was my understanding.

Mr. Baron. That the speech was to be a specific signal to opponents of Castro inside Cuba as opposed to a general statement of U.S. policy?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Baron. Can you recall anything about your conversation that produced that understanding?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, just the general conversation of the time and what we were trying to do.

In other words, we were trying to organize a coup and the problems that we had been through specifically with AMLASH in trying to persuade him that the U.S. government was serious about supporting Cubans who were opposed to Castro.

So this statement that appeared in the speech was certainly public notice that this was the case.

Mr. Baron. Did Fitzgerald or anyone else say anything to you that led you to believe that the President had been specifically informed that representations would be made such as the ones on October 29th that Robert Kennedy or other high American officials would stand behind AMLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, he didn't specifically tell me.

Mr. Baron. Did your conversations with Fitzgerald about this speech, his input to this speech, lead you to believe that the President had been specifically informed that a poison pen device was being prepared to be tendered on November 22nd?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Johnston. Let me ask you in a different context now, was there a decision after the assassination to break off further contacts with AMLASH?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, but that decision evolved, it wasn't an automatic decision right after the assassination. In fact, as you recall from my previous testimony we had contact with AMLASH again in late '64 when he came out. I think the only hesitancy at that time was what's the new policy? Does the new President want to continue to, in our attempts to organize a plot against Castro, a coup against Castro --

That probably was the hesitancy, not the fact that it was immediately decided to stop contact, which, as I said before, it wasn't, because we saw him again.

Mr. Johnston. Was there a discussion at all in November or December 1963 about the relationship between the AMLASH operation and the assassination of President Kennedy?

AMLASH Case Officer. Not that I recall.

Mr. Johnston. Let me show you, we have in several versions and the one that is most available is this document here, and I have got the document you're looking at is in Volume 12, I believe, of the AMLASH file.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. And it is a yellow legal size paper.

AMLASH Case Officer. Let me correct. It's not a document. It is evidently somebody's type-written notes of probably the recollection of what had happened.

Mr. Johnston. Okay, and it's on yellow legal-size paper typed. And I also have a document that I'm sure is in the file but we don't have it pointed out. It's the sanitized version of a memorandum for the record dated 29 March, 1965, subject AMLASH, and both of them convey the same subject, the same information. And on the paragraph that has the marking at the left and the language of those documents, those documents say "22 November, '63, Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Sanchez assured subject that this Agency would give him everything he needed."

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Is that the portion you're reading?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. "(Telescopic sight, silencer, all the money he wanted). Situation changed when Mr. Sanchez and Mr. Fitzgerald left the meeting to discover that President Kennedy had been assassination. Because of this fact, plans of subject changed and it was decided that this Agency could have no part in the assassination of a government leader (incl Castro), and it would not aid subject in his attempt.

"This included the following: ' We would not furnish the silencer, nor scope, nor any money for direct assassination; furthermore, we would not lift a finger to help subject escap from Cuba should he assassinate Castro.'"

Did you prepare this document?

AMLASH Case Officer. I did not prepare this document. I was not with the task force with SAS at the time this document was prepared on 29 March, '65. I had already left.

Again, the only thing I can state for you here on what

I knew of the operation, that this was somebody trying to put together, this was a memo from Chief FI probably in the task force trying to put together by this time, 29 March, what had happened. The other document since it's, it's probably a later date, the yellow document was somebody probably again trying to reconstruct what had happened. The facts are not as I knew them at the time.

Both paragraphs have condensed an evolution that took place over a period of a year and the decision probably was not made until '65 after I had left the operation, that we were pulling out.

But the facts as stated here in those two documents are incorrect, and certainly the timing that they insinuate is wrong.

Mr. Johnston. I think we should develop that on the record and if you want to point out what facts are incorrect, why don't you do so?

AMLASH Case Officer. "The situation changed when Mr. Sanchez and Mr. Fitzgerald left the meeting to discover that President Kennedy had been assassinated." That's incorrect.

Fitzgerald wasn't with me on the 22nd of November meeting.

Mr. Johnston. Okay. What about the sentence before that, that Mr. Fitzgerald and Mr. Sanchez assured subject that this Agency would give him everything he needed, with your qualifier that Fitzgerald was not at the meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. This was at the meeting in October and not at the November meeting because that is correct, provided you put it in the right context.

Mr. Johnston. What about the statement, all the money he wanted?

AMLASH Case Officer. Inferred. I mean I don't recall that money was ever discussed with this man at any time. In fact I was asked this question before and I couldn't really recollect when I had given him some money.

It turns out that the record shows that I did give him $350 for his expenses. But money, specifically, again, that is somebody else interpreting. I don't know of any other document or certainly any memorandum for the record that I prepared in which money specifically was mentioned.

Mr. Johnston. But would you disagree with the statement?

AMLASH Case Officer. Well, the statement as a whole, if you leave out the money, which again, anything that he needs.

Mr. Johnston. Well, that's what we want to leave in, the money.

AMLASH Case Officer. If he needs the money, I think it was not excluded in the offer. But what I'm saying --

Mr. Johnston. This makes a positive statement, him saying that you and Mr. Fitzgerald assured AMLASH that the Agency would give him everything he needed, all the money he wanted.

And I'm asking you directly either on October 29th, or November 22nd did you make that assurance to him?

AMLASH Case Officer. I can't recall that such an issue was made of money because he never asked for money and we specifically didn't have to respond to telling him that we would give him money. In telling him that the support necessary, all of the support necessary for a coup, I think it is implied that he would get whatever he needed, which would mean supplies, but not specifically money, and the reason I state this is that money was never a subject of contention between the Agency and AMLASH. He never asked for money, he never was offered specifically money.

Mr. Johnston. Was he assured that he would get all the money he wanted?

AMLASH Case Officer. All the support he needed, not the money that he wanted. He never asked for money.

Mr. Johnston. I'm not asking you what he asked for. I'm asking you what you told him. In this thing it says you assured him that you would give him all the money that he wanted.

Did you give that assurance to him?

AMLASH Case Officer. I did not because I did not write this document. And the person who wrote this document that I know of didn't write it from any factual report at any time.

This is not a document. This is somebody's notes in putting together. These are rough notes typed on yellow, legal sized paper of somebody trying to reconstruct what happened here probably two or three years afterwards.

Mr. Johnston. I guess what I'm asking is a yes or no answer. In October or November, 1963, did you or Mr. Fitzgerald, to your knowledge, assure AMLASH that he would receive all the money he wanted?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, and I must qualify that. Unless you want to infer that in giving him the support that he needed he would also receive money. But money specifically, all he wanted, was never a part of the conversations, to the best of my knowledge.

Mr. Johnston. We have talked about the next sentence and it continues.

"Because of this fact plans of subject changed and it was decided the Agency could have no part in the assassination of a government leader, including Castro."

Is that accurate? I'm giving you an opportunity to rebut the document.

AMLASH Case Officer. It's accurate from the point of view --

You have to put it in the right time frame, in the right context. When he was met in late '64, after having visited and lived in Cuba for a year or almost a year, he came back more convinced than before that the only way a coup could be launched in Cuba was the elimination of Castro and when he expressed this conviction, not in '63 but in late '64, is when the Agency, and I presume the U.S. Government at that time felt we can't continue that directly involved with AMLASH.

Mr. Johnston. And the last sentence of that:

"This included the following -- 'We would not furnish the silencer, nor scope, nor any money for direct assassination. Furthermore, we would not lift a finger to help the subject escape from Cuba should he assassinate Castro.'"

Was that the substance of the discussion immediately after the assassination of President Kennedy?

AMLASH Case Officer. No. A year later in November of '64.

Mr. Johnston. And you're saying that this does not describe the fall AMLASH meeting?

AMLASH Case Officer. It does not. It is a mixture of what happened over at least a two year period.

Mr. Johnston. It perplexes me somewhat that your failure to keep written records would so warp later thinkers as to what was going on. I mean take the March, 1965 document. As of March, 1965 CIA is going on the assumption that you and Fitzgerald met AMLASH in Paris, that you assured him that he would get all the money he wanted and that your plans changed after the meeting because of the Kennedy assassination.

AMLASH Case Officer. I can't sit here and presume to give you an explanation for that as to where the person who prepared that particular memorandum got that information. The file itself indicates, as you are well aware, that Fitzgerald did not travel to Paris in November. He travelled in October.

So the person who prepared the 29 March, 1965 memo came up with this particular type of information, I don't know.

Mr. Johnston. Who is that memo addressed to again?

AMLASH Case Officer. This is to Chief, FI from Chief, Reports.

Mr. Johnston. So your only explanation, your explanation for the memo is that it is inaccurate but even if it is inaccurate, it indicates that in March, 1965 these people had it all wrong as to what the AMLASH operation was all about.

AMLASH Case Officer. If you want to interpret exactly what they wrote here, yes, it was wrong. Now I'm not saying that it was wrong because it could have been. I don't know. I'm just saying it could have been that they didn't have access to all the restricted files because this operation until it received its recent publicity was kept on a very restricted basis.

So the Chief of Reports, I don't even know, well, probably the Chief of Reports in the division or maybe some place, probably did not have access to all of the operational files.

gsh 58

Mr. Greissing. You're saying that the information itself is inaccurate only in a chronological way that it is developed?

AMLASH Case Officer. Certainly wrong in its chronological context, definitely because it throws everything into one very small period of time in reporting or trying to report what took place over a much longer period of time.

Mr. Greissing. But the facts that are there over a period of a year would be true?

AMLASH Case Officer. But not in this context.

Mr. Greissing. But I'm saying over the period of a year from 1 November to the following November when you actually informed AMLASH of the feelings that the Agency had developed at that time, I believe it is the next sentence down.

AMLASH Case Officer. What is wrong here, what is wrong is that after we left that meeting, which I presume they left the meeting, I presume they're talking about, yes, the 22 November, '63 meeting -- this is absolutely wrong, that when we left that meeting to discover that President Kennedy had been assassinated, we had told him, you know, that this was all off.

That is wrong. It was not at that meeting that he was told that. He went back after that meeting with the idea of organizing a coup inside Cuba.

Mr. Greissing. I believe it clarifies that later in the next paragraph. It says that this information was given to AMLASH the following November in 1964.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes. So I don't know why we're taking that particular piece of information out of context because in that same memorandum it does state that.

Mr. Johnston. Let me move off these documents. The file on AMLASH contains a November 27th report from Paris which indicated a source in the Cuban embassy in Paris.

AMLASH Case Officer. Excuse me. November 27th of what year?

Mr. Johnston. 1963. A source in the Cuban embassy in Paris was complaining about AMLASH's denigrating the revolution.

Did you see that report on November 27th, 1963?

AMLASH Case Officer. I probably did. I can't specifically recall that I did.

Mr. Johnston. And as I read the report, or my statement to you of its substance, it would suggest to you that AMLASH was known by given diplomatic personnel in Paris to be putting down the Castro revolution.

AMLASH Case Officer. It depends on who. In other words, who did he say this to because he did have friends in the different embassies.

Mr. Johnston. The Cuban embassy?

AMLASH Case Officer. He stayed at the Cuban embassy. He was a Cuban official at that time. So he had friends who were of like mind that he was. They were not happy with the way the revolution was moving.

Mr. Johnston. So that fact would have been more broadly known say in the Cuban embassy?

AMLASH Case Officer. Oh, yes. This was fairly well known.

End 3B

Mr. Johnston. The cable seems to indicate that the source of the information was complaining about AMLASH's denigrating the revolution, and went on to say that she or he wished he or she had a tape recorder to record what AMLASH and another person were saying, suggesting it is not a friendly source to AMLASH.

AMLASH Case Officer. Well, that suggests -- and again, I can't give you any definitive explanation for it -- what that suggests is that she overheard AMLASH talking with somebody else of like mind, and she didn't like what she heard, I guess.

Mr. Johnston. Let's go now to again what you talked about, any link in your mind or in Fitzgerald's mind in November and December 1963 between what you had been doing with AMLASH and the assassination of President Kennedy?

AMLASH Case Officer. None whatsoever, none whatsoever, and no discussion, and again, again, I go back and take you back in time, if you can place yourself back in 1963 and not 1976, after all of this has taken place, after we have had all the public theories expressed of the connections, all built on circumstantial evidence of what and who were involved in the Kennedy Assassination. I take you back and try to place yourself back within the context of this operation in 1963 when this happened.

First of all, I have to preface what I have to say by saying that this was not an assassination plot, so there would be no reason why we would be connecting Kennedy's assassination with this assassination plot. This was not an assassination plot, it was not conceived as an assassination plot. As a coup against Fidel Castro, yes. The fact that the U.S. Government was not happy and was supporting people who were opposed to Castro, this was well known. This was in the aftermath, '63, of the Bay of Pigs. So there was really in the context of the time the fact that this was not an assassination plot conceived as an assassination plot, there was really no reason to connect this one particular operation with the tragedy of President Kennedy.

Mr. Johnston. Okay.

We do know that on the 29th of October Fitzgerald told AMLASH that Robert Kennedy was behind the plot or behind AMLASH's proposal, is that correct?

AMLASH Case Officer. What we told him was that the U.S. Government was prepared to support a coup against Fidel Castro.

Mr. Johnston. And AMLASH had previously told you that at least one of his plans for a coup would require the assassination of the Castro Brothers.

AMLASH Case Officer. He had not exactly put it in those terms, but he certainly felt that the first move would have to be against the leadership, yes. In other words, we never talked to him in terms of assassination, and I want this perfectly clear.

Mr. Johnston. And he told you before the 29th meeting that the first step would probably have to be the assassination of the Castros?

AMLASH Case Officer. He never told me assassination because he didn't even like to use the word "assassination."

Mr. Johnston. What word did he like to use?

AMLASH Case Officer. The neutralization, the elimination if you will, of the leadership.

The first move in any coup attempt, in order for the other officers to fall in line, would have to be the removal, the removal of Fidel Castro, because of the loyalties that he still had personally with some of the officers.

Mr. Johnston. And after he told you that on October 29th, you gave him an assurance that Robert Kennedy backed his proposal generally.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, the U.S. Government and Fitzgerald as the representative of Robert Kennedy, supported a coup against Castro.

Mr. Johnston. On the very day of the assassination, you referenced the speech of President Kennedy's talking about an ouster of the current regime in Cuba.

AMLASH Case Officer. That's right.

Mr. Johnston. Were you aware of the September 7th statement of Fidel Castro's, threatening the lives of U.S.

leaders, and let me -- I have a poor Xerox copy, but especially a portion of that statement by Fidel Castro on September 7th at a party at the Brazilian embassy in Havana, he talked to a reporter, Daniel Harker of AP and said, among other things, "we are prepared to fight them and answer in kind. The United States leaders should think that if they are aiding terrorist plans to eliminate Cuban leaders, they themselves will not be safe."

I would think from your description of the AMLASH operation that AMLASH had a plan to eliminate Cuban leaders, and that it is very possible --

AMLASH Case Officer. So did everybody else. So did every other Cuban exile who was plotting against Castro.

Mr. Johnston. But this is in the Brazilian Embassy on September 7th, and you started meeting with AMLASH on September 5th in Brazil, and it may be coincidence, but Castro does give a warning about United States leaders aiding terrorist plans to eliminate Cuban leaders, and you were doing that very thing.

AMLASH Case Officer. There is probably a coincidence there. I don't recall that I knew of this at that time. I've certainly heard of it since, but I don't see the point that you are trying to make, because if Castro is behind or was behind AMLASH to involve him in the assassination of an American leader, then are you proposing that he would also publicly in the Brazilian embassy state that this was going to take place?

In other words, was he telegraphing this plan that he had?

Mr. Johnston. I don't know. I assume not.

AMLASH Case Officer. I would find it highly unusual that if he was serious about being involved in something like this, that he would publicly announce his plan, but I may be wrong. That's just my opinion.

Mr. Johnston. So we have this Castro speech of September 7th, whatever that means, and we have the AMLASH operations we talked about in November and October, and then almost at the very moment of the Kennedy assassination we have your meeting with AMLASH and giving him the technical equipment or the assurances of technical equipment that he had requested at the October 29th meeting.

You knew on November 24th, certainly November 25th, that the alleged assassin of President Kennedy was pro-Castro, Lee Harvey Oswald was pro-Castro.

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't even know that at this time.

Mr. Johnston. You don't know that at this time?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, where did you get that?

Mr. Johnston. You don't know?

AMLASH Case Officer. That he was pro-Castro?

Mr. Baron. Wasn't that a logical deduction from the fact that he was part of the Fair Play for Cuba Committee?

AMLASH Case Officer. It could have been, but I haven't seen that.

Mr. Greissing. He had come out publicly in interviews stating that he was for Castro and would defend Castro if the U.S. took action.

AMLASH Case Officer. Well, probably so, but I never had --

Mr. Johnston. And in fact, Oswald had visited Mexico City, and on November 25th, the very day you wrote your contact report, the Mexico City chief of station cabled headquarters and reminded them about the Castro speech threat, and I assume that our information is that Mr. King was handling the activity in Mexico City.

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. So on November 25th he was aware of the threat, reminded of the threat.

I think it is fair to say that Mr. King knew that Oswald had visited the Cuban embassy in Mexico City. He knew that on November 25th.

Another CIA document indicates that Chief of Station Wynn Scott -- I don't know whether you knew him -- in Mexico City, on November 25th read a message to the President of Mexico in which he said, Mr. Scott's memo says there are still some important questions concerning Oswald and his visit to Mexico City. Was the assassination of President Kennedy planned by Fidel Castro, and were the final details worked out inside the Cuban embassy in Mexico?

That's again on November 25th.

There's no reason for you to have seen the document.

AMLASH Case Office. I don't know that, but again, I'll just question, this was just a question that was asked. I wouldn't report it as fact.

Mr. Johnston. No, on November 25th that is a question being raised.

Knowing now, looking back at Mr. King, we have the Western Hemisphere Division on November 25th is informed that Castro has made a threat against U.S. leaders, that the chief of station in Mexico City is telling 08 [redacted] that there is a possibility that Castro was behind it, Oswald was known to be pro-Castro, and on November 22nd, you in turn were meeting in Paris, giving a high level Cuban assurances that his coup plot that might include assassination of Castro was backed by the U.S. and that yet you made no connection between those, all those events, and there was no discussion of any connection.

AMLASH Case Officer. No, there was no discussion between the -- the connection between the assassination of President Kennedy and the AMLASH operation.

Mr. Johnston. Was there an investigation?

AMLASH Case Officer. Not to my knowledge. I left the operation right after that, so I wouldn't know if there was or wasn't. But the coincidence that you are talking about, if you are connecting or trying now to imply that there was a connection between AMLASH and the fact that it was on the 22nd of November, the same date as President Kennedy's assassination, they must have had a very terrific system of communication.

Mr. Johnston. Although you had set up the meeting on the 20th of November, is that right?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, but he didn't know specifically what we were going to say. In fact, the answer that we could have given him could have been reversed.

Mr. Johnston. Well, you said he requested it.

AMLASH Case Officer. Well, he requested it before he left, but the assurances, you can go back before that. You can go back to the October meeting when the assurances of support were given to him.

So I can't -- I find it very difficult to follow what you are trying to imply or to relate AMLASH directly to the assassination on 22 November. This is what I find difficult to understand.

Mr. Johnston. Let me show you a copy of a cable, no indication that the cable went to SAS. The cable is Mexico City, 7045, dated 24 November '63 and by way of background, tell you that immediately upon the assassination, the personnel in Mexico City then started putting the entire Soviet apparatus in Mexico City under surveillance and pulling the records, and I don't want to read this into the record because it uses a true name.

Let's go off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Johnston. Let me read it, except for the true name.

It says "Provided below sufficiently definitive summary of local contacts of Ivan Gavrilovich Alferiev." It gives his contacts, it says "23 December 1961 with the Third Secretary of Cuban Cultural Attache," naming her, and arranging a press conference for AMLASH. It's a very tangential relationship with the AMLASH operation, but again, on November 24th, 1963, Mexico City is reporting KGB or Alferiev's contacts, and it includes a contact in '61 with AMLASH.

So I have difficulty believing that they are, in hindsight, not related, and that on November 24th or November 25th no one at CIA related the two events.

AMLASH Case Officer. What I'm telling you is -- I'm not telling you that no one at CIA relates the two events. You asked me the specific question, did you and Fitzgerald discuss any relationship. My answer to you was that Fitzgerald and I did not specifically discuss that.

Mr. Johnston. Do you know of anyone who discussed it?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Johnston. Do you know of any investigation that was conducted?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

(A brief recess was taken.)

Mr. Johnston. Let me now talk -- and again the groundwork is that you were unaware of any investigation of a connection between the two, and you were unaware of any discussion about a connection between AMLASH and Kennedy's assassination.

Is that a correct summary?

AMLASH Case Officer. That's correct.

Mr. Johnston. I will show you a document. For the record, this is a document appearing in Volume IV of the AMLASH file, and the first page of it has AMLASH's name on it, but I call your attention to the red handwriting in the upper right hand corner of that, on that cover sheet, and it says, "not to leave this office, per" blank's "orders."

Is that correct?

This document has handwriting in the upper writing hand corner that it is not to leave this office, whatever that is.

AMLASH Case Officer. Without specific clearance, without orders.

Mr. Johnston. Do you have any recollection of such orders being given by any one, yourself, or Mr. Fitzgerald?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes, what we have talked about before, that Mr. Fitzgerald gave orders to minimize the knowledgeability of this particular operation because of its sensitivity.

WARD & PAUL

1500010087

Mr. Johnston. And that is the reason that this instruction was given about the file, this particular file or this particular document?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes. I can't see at this time that anything else would have been thought of at that time.

Mr. Johnston. What suddenly required that order to be given?

AMLASH Case Officer. Well, nothing specific except that by December of '63, the man with whom we were dealing, AMLASH I, was going back, or was probably back by that time already in Cuba. It was primarily probably I would say as much to protect his security as anything else.

Mr. Johnston. So that nobody else -- did this have the effect of blocking knowledge of the AMLASH operation from other people within the Agency?

AMLASH Case Officer. Probably from my office down. Certainly not Fitzgerald, not the Director or not anybody else who needed to know about the operation, absolutely not. This was just circulation within other components of SAS. That would not -- in other words, a note of this type would only mean that I would be, or whoever would clear the order would be asked before this file was allowed to circulate or was given to anybody.

Mr. Johnston. And I don't want to indicate -- my question does not imply intent or anyone's purpose, but would this notation have blocked anyone but Mr. Helms or Mr. Fitzgerald from getting access to this file?

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

AMLASH Case Officer. No. This is too informal. If you want to block a file like this, there is a much more formal procedure to go by, to block the file for, say, the Director's use only, or even at that time, the Chief of SAS. A note like this is strictly, can only be interpreted to restrict the circulation of this file for the other people in SAS below my office, not restricting it for anybody else.

Mr. Johnston. Upwards.

What about laterally? What about to the other divisions?

AMLASH Case Officer. Laterally also. In other words, they would have to be checked out. It would have to be. We would have to know who got the file. It is a matter of control. This is what it amounts to, really. It is to know who the file goes to. It is to control the file.

Mr. Johnston. But you do that anyway, right?

That's routine procedure. This seems to be something more than that, of saying don't let this leave without my approval.

AMLASH Case Officer. No, it isn't anything more than that, and I think that you're really much more into it than what it is.

I don't even recall giving -- telling the secretary this particular thing. It probably came about from the miminized circulation order that Fitzgerald had given way before in October, as I recall.

Mr. Johnston. Did you expect this instruction to be carried out, that the file would not leave the office until you had given your personal approval or Fitzgerald had approved it?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes. I would have thought that my secretary would not have permitted this file to leave unless cleared.

Mr. Johnston. We previously discussed whether Mr. King knew about the operation.

Did he specifically know, to your knowledge, about the AMLASH operation in the fall of 1963?

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't know. I never briefed him personally.

Mr. Johnston. Did you have any reason to know that he did know about AMLASH operation?

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Johnston. Our notes indicate that on February 4th, 1964, Mr. King sent a memo to you, requirements for AMLASH, and I'll show you our notes. They basically detail questions, intelligence information to be gathered from AMLASH.

AMLASH Case Officer. I don't specifically remember receiving this, but if we have -- certainly the fact that we have an asset who can surface any intelligence requirements from the community or anybody else in the Agency, it would be perfectly normal for anybody to send these requirements.

Mr. Johnston. Would you agree, at least-- from that summary of the document, that really he's asking you to get intelligence type information from AMLASH?

Is that correct?

AMLASH Case Officer. Yes.

Mr. Johnston. And given the October 5th, 1963 meeting when AMLASH sort of indicated he didn't want anything to do with that, this would be very inconsistent for someone who was knowledable about AMLASH.

AMLASH Case Officer. What are the dates?

Mr. Johnston. October 5th, 1963, is when AMLASH complained about the low level espionage requirements.

AMLASH Case Officer. He did not want -- he did not say that he would not surface intelligence requirements. He did not want to exclusively be that type of an asset.

So therefore it would be perfectly normal, regardless of what he thought himself to be, or what even we may have thought for him to be, that if he had access to information, we were going to levy the requirements on him.

Mr. Johnston. My direct question is, then, having read the summary apparently prepared by Mr. King, and sent on February 2nd, 1964, do you think that Mr. King knew about the AMLASH operation, the events of October and November?

AMLASH Case Officer. If he sent us a memo giving us requirements for AMLASH, at a minimum he had to know that we had an agent with this particular access. But he knew about the operation?" Not necessarily so.

Mr. Johnston. Do you find this consistent with the nature of the operation as of November 22nd, 1963?

AMLASH Case Officer. Explain that. I don't understand. What are you -- what is your question?

Mr. Johnston. As of November 22nd, 1963, you were now involved in coup plotting with AMLASH, and were delivering or planned to deliver the equipment, rifles, sights, explosives, to assist him in that coup. It seems inconsistent, suddenly in February, to go back to trying to get espionage information from him.

AMLASH Case Officer. First of all, I have to address that question from this point. Receiving a memo from King at that time doesn't necessarily mean that we are going to levy the requirements on AMLASH.

Mr. Johnston. Oh, I agree with that.

AMLASH Case Officer. So, to clarify the other part of your question, that if we needed intelligence after the October '63 meeting in which he said I'm not going to be strictly a source for intelligence, I want to do something more for my country, it would not be in any way out of the orderinary to ask him to send information that we felt was required on the outside.

Mr. Johnston. So you are saying you would not infer from this document a conclusion one way or the other about whether Mr. King knew the details of the AMLASH coup plotting.

AMLASH Case Officer. No.

Mr. Johnston. As a final matter from my point, as we did in your past meetings, could you briefly summarize, were you contacted prior to today's session at the Agency, and did you discuss your testimony or the ramifications of your testimony with anyone at the Agency?

AMLASH Case Officer. I was called yesterday morning, February 10th, by Mr. Walter Elder, and informed that I was to come here at 10:00 o'clock to discuss the AMLASH operation, and that you would be over yesterday afternoon to mark those portions of the file that you wished to discuss.

I picked up the files from the review staff last night and came here this morning.

Mr. Johnston. Did you discuss the substance or proposed substance of your testimony with anyone?

AMLASH Case Officer. No. I read the file and informed myself as to those points that you wanted to talk about.

Mr. Johnston. That's all the questions we have.

I want to thank you very much for spending the time with us today.

Is there any other comment you would like to make?

AMLASH Case Officer. No, not at all.

An Extract From Kennedy's Address to Press
Washington Post, Tuesday, November 19, 1963, p. A15

(AP) Nov. 18 -- The following is a text of President Kennedy's address tonight before the Inter-American Press Association:

* * *

"The genuine Cuban revolution -- because it was against the tyranny and corruption of the past -- had the support of many whose aims and concepts were noble.

"But that hope for freedom and progress was destroyed.

"The goals proclaimed in the Sierra Maestra were betrayed in Havana.

"It is important to restate what now divides Cuba from my country and from all the American countries: It is the fact that a small band of conspirators has stripped the Cuban people of their freedom and handed over the independence and sovereignty of the Cuban nation to forces beyond the hemisphere. They have made Cuba a victim of foreign imperialism, an instrument of the policy of others, a weapon in an effort dictated by external powers to subvert the other American republics. This, and this alone divides us. As long as this is true nothing is possible. Without it everything is possible.

Ready and Anxious

"Once this barrier is removed we will be ready and anxious to work with the Cuban people in pursuit of those progressive goals which, a few short years ago, stirred their hopes and the sympathy of many people throughout the entire hemisphere.

"No Cuban need feel trapped between dependence on the broken promises of foreign communism and the hostility of the rest of the hemisphere. For once Cuban sovereignty has been restored we will extend the hand of friendship and assistance to a Cuba whose political and economic institutions have been shaped by the will of the Cuban people."

The Chairman. The hearing will please come to order.

Mr. Bundy, would you please stand and take the oath.

Do you swear that the testimony you will give in this hearing will be the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Bundy. I do.

The Chairman. Mr. Schwarz.

TESTIMONY OF McGEORGE BUNDY

Mr. Schwarz. Would you state your full name and address for the record, please?

Mr. Bundy. My name is McGeorge Bundy. I live in New York. My home address is 1040 Fifth Avenue.

Mr. Schwarz. And you are currently the Chairman or the President of the Ford Foundation?

Mr. Bundy. The President of the Ford Foundation.

Mr. Schwarz. In the Kennedy Administration what position did you hold?

Mr. Bundy. I was Special Assistant for National Security Affairs.

Mr. Schwarz. And you held that all the way through the Kennedy Administration and for how many years in the Johnson Administration?

Mr. Bundy. I held that office from the beginning of the Kennedy Administration to the end of February 1966.

Mr. Schwarz. Prior to commencing work with the Kennedy

30445—

Administration, had you had anything to do with the Central Intelligence Agency?

Mr. Bundy. I had a brother who worked for many years in the Central Intelligence Agency. I occasionally talked with members of the Agency during the forties and the fifties, both about substantive questions of what one thought about the conditions in the Soviet Union, and occasionally also about efforts that they were then making to recruit talented graduates of colleges.

Mr. Schwarz. You mentioned your brother. To put something of a different kind in the record than we have gotten recently, would you recount the position taken by Allan Dulles in connection with the problem that your brother had in the 1950's.

Mr. Bundy. Well, my brother came under attack from Senator Joseph McCarthy. And the ground was, as I recall it, in general that he had been a friend and supporter of Alger Hiss and was therefore not to be trusted in a place as sensitive as the Central Intelligence Agency.

Allan Dulles -- and my impression is that this was quite characteristic of him -- took an extremely firm stand on this matter, and stood by his estimate that my brother was in fact in no sense a security risk, rather, to the contrary. And the defense was successful, and my brother continued in the Central Intelligence Agency until the Kennedy Administration came in, at which time he moved over to the Defense Department.

Mr. Schwarz. We have indicated to you that we are going to discuss the countries of Cuba, the Dominican Republic and Vietnam, although not much on Vietnam. And the majority and minority staff have shown you some documents of that period, some 15 years ago. Before I get to those three countries, I would like to ask you some questions about a subject called Executive Action. Have you ever heard of the subject called Executive Action?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, I have.

Mr. Schwarz. When did you first hear of it?

Mr. Bundy. Well, as I have told your staff, that is a real difficulty for me, because I cannot pinpoint the time at which I heard of it. My impression was that it was some time in the early months of 1961.

Mr. Schwarz. And do you have a recollection as to the context in which you heard about it, the person from whom you heard about it, and will you provide to the Committee your full recollection of the subject of Executive Action in the early 1961?

Mr. Bundy. Would it help if I try to describe in a general way what I now understand of this matter, the part which is recollection and the part which is clarified by discussions with the staff and what I now think about it?

Mr. Schwarz. Would you distinguish, though, the part that is recollection and the part that is based upon other matters?

Mr. Bundy. That is exactly what I would like to do.

The part that is recollection is very vague. And I would say that I have no recollection of more than one conversation on this subject. And the impression that sticks in my mind is that I was told about it in a general way. And it was described to me as an effort to study through the possibilities by which one might act against an individual in a context other than that of espionage and counter-espionage, a context more political.

Mr. Schwarz. When you say "act against an individual", act in what fashion?

Mr. Bundy. Act in a variety of fashions, as I recollect it, but up to and including killing the individual.

The two things that I think are clear in my recollection about that -- three -- one, that it was a concept presented or described to me -- I was in effect being briefed on it.

Two, that it was entirely an untargetted -- that it was in no sense a plan to do anything to anyone.

And third, and I think quite important, that it was not anoperation which had any specific target.

Mr. Schwarz. You said you were in effect briefed on it. By whom?

Mr. Bundy. That is what I don't know. I cannot recollect who it was. And I think it inappropate to guess when I have no recollection.

Mr. Schwarz. What time? I don't mean what time of day, but what time?

Mr. Bundy. As I say, sometime I think in the early months of 1961. And searching memory is an uncertain business, but it sticks in my mind that I heard about it in the rooms of the Executive Office Building. And that would place it in time, because I moved from the Executive Office Building to the West Basement of the White House sometime after the Bay of Pigs, perhaps in May.

Mr. Schwarz. So based on that fact you place it in time sometime prior to the Bay of Pigs and sometime after--

Mr. Bundy. After my arrival in Washington.

Mr. Schwarz. And when did you arrive in Washington?

Mr. Bundy. About the 10th of January. I would place it more closely, because I think it was after I was in the Office of the Special Assistant, which, of course, was occupied until the 20th of January by others.

Mr. Schwarz. So you place it after the 20th of January, but before the Bay of Pigs, which was April 14 or 17?

Mr. Bundy. That is right.

Mr. Schwarz. Did it come up in a context where you urged that such a capacity be created?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. What context did it come up in?

Mr. Bundy. It came up in a context in which it was being described to me by someone else. And that is really about as far as I can take it with precision.

Mr. Schwarz. WAs it described to you by someone else as a capacity in being?

Mr. Bundy. As a capacity -- and this is not something I want to be too certain about, Mr. Schwarz, but my recollection would be that it was a capacity coming into being.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, receiving that information, did you take any steps to discourage or dissuade the person, whoever it was, who was describing to you the capacity coming into being?

Mr. Bundy. What I recollect is that I was satisfied with the description I received on two points.

First, that this was not an operational activity, and would not become such without two conditions: first, that there be a desire or a request or a guidance that there should be planning against some specific individual; and second, that there should be a decision to move against an individual.

Being satisfied that these two things were not happening -- and I am now giving you a reconstruction rather than a precise recollection -- I am confident that what I did was

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000
WARD & PAUL

to place this notion in the category of hypotheticals, of things with no current urgency to them, and in that sense not a question that cried for attention in the sense that so many others did. If I may make a straightforward comparison, we were, I think, even before the inauguration, but certainly very quickly thereafter, very heavily engaged in a real question of choice, which was the question of choices around what would you do with the Cuban brigade which led eventually to the Bay of Pigs. And that occupied a very large amount of time and attention, as did the crisis in Berlin and the crisis in Laos.

In the same period there were briefings on contingency plans for the uses of nuclear weapons, other weapons, and a whole swarm of, sort of, and here were reports that came naturally to the Special Assistant's office, which was also being reorganized.

So, I think that what I did was simply to put this one aside. I cannot claim to have thought about it seriously, because it was in the flow of business that would come to the Special Assistant's office.

Mr. Schwarz. I want to see if we can be more precise on dates to check on what other evidence we have. We have other evidence that discussions of this matter were going on in the Central Intelligence Agency on the 25th and 26th of January 1961.

Now, are you able to testify with respect to the likelihood of the conversation you have recounted taking place prior to the 25th or the 26th of January 1961.

Mr. Bundy. I would rate it very, very unlikely. This is a matter I have thought about since you did mention those dates to me. And I would say that the chance that within the first four days after being sworn in I would have been drawn to consider this question is, from my side, as near zero as I can put it. I had been teaching international relations over a period of ten years. I was deeply interested in many of the immediate problems, most notably the problem of the crisis in Berlin and the concomitant question of relations with the Soviet Union. And I was preoccupied with all of the things that happened when you moved to Washington from helping the Secretary to buy a house, and working out a staff, and I was under instruction from the President to reorganize the White House National Security staff. This subject was far out of my mind, and I would not have brought it up. I doubt that anyone wouldhave brought it to me in those early days.

The Chairman. May I interrupt for a moment.

As I understand your testimony, Mr. Bundy, you were briefed on the concept of Executive capability sometime early in 1961, and you can't remember now who it was who briefed you.

Do you recall whether or not you instructed anyone at the CIA to develop such a capability?

Mr. Bundy. I am sure I gave no instruction. But it is only fair to add that I do not recall that I offered any impediment after I was briefed.

The Chairman. But your best recollection is that somebody toldyou that such a capability was being developed?

Mr. Bundy. I don't want to be too firm on that, but that would be my best recollection.

The Chairman. We received testimony from Mr. Bissell. Are you acquainted with Mr. Bissell?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, sir. I have known him a long time, and he has been a great friend of mine.

The Chairman. Mr. Schwarz, since you are very familiar with the record, are you going to take Mr. Bundy through the record of Mr. Bissell's testimony?

Mr. Schwarz. Mr. Bissell testified --

The Chairman. And we have the transcript. If it would be helpful for Mr. Bundy to look directly at the transcript. I think he should have it.

Mr. Schwarz. Mr. Bissell's testimony was, first, that in the first instance he said he did not recall any specific conversation. Then, however, he said, after having reviewed certain notes by Mr. Harvey, he concluded that if Mr. Harvey's note indicated, as they did, that he, Bissell, told Harvey in 1961 that he had been twice urged by the White House to set up an Executive Action capability, then he had no reason to doubt that testimony. And then he went on through a series of comments to end up saying that he would have been given that urging by either Rostow or Bundy, more likely Rostow.

First, let's focus on Rostow. Was Rostow involved in the briefing?

Mr. Bundy. No -- now, that I can't tell you out of my recollection, but only out of my knowledge of the way the office was organized. The first things we did, Walt Rostow and I, was to work out an informal but nevertheless reasonably clear-cut division of labor. And the whole business of what I thought of as special group business, namely, matters that related to covert action, and would, if they came for division, come through the special group, fell on my side of that division. I don't recall that Mr. Rostow was ever involved in any matter of this sort.

The Chairman. It is fair to say that this was Mr. Rostow's testimony.

Mr. Schwarz. Mr. Bissel is, as you say, a friend of yours of long standing, and still is a friend of yours?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, he is.

Mr. Schwarz. Wehave his testimony which, while it did have gradations within it, ended up saying that he believed either you or Mr. Rostow urged him to set up the Executive Action capability. And you have testified that the fact is that you were given a briefing, and you didn't urge it, but on the other hand you didn't say it should stop.

How can you explain, if you can, the testimony of your friend Mr. Bissell, and the contrast between that and your testimony?

Mr. Bundy. Well, as I understand Mr. Bissell's testimony -- and I should add, so that there will be no misunderstanding, that I have not only the advantage of discussions with you, but I have talked with him about it -- as I understand that testimony from that conversation, he was trying to explain a situation in which he had no reason to question an Agency history to the effect that he first gave instructions on this matter in February 1961. And in that context -- and he had no reason to question the report that he had received White House encouragement -- it is in that context that his speculations about Mr. Rostow and about me seem to fall.

I would be surprised, if his memory were refreshed with respect to the dates of January which you have described to me, if he were to believe that any initiative in this enterprise would come in the first instance from the Kennedy Administration.

The Chairman. Mr. Bundy, our transcript of the Bissell testimony makes it clear that Mr. Bissell himself does not dispute the documented record. He said in effect, if Harvey says that I told him that I had been twice instructed by the White House to develop an Executive capability, I have no basis on which to dispute that record.

Then when we asked him, very well, who in the White House told you, and when were you told, he replied, it must have been early in 1960, and I don't recall who told me, but it must have been either Rostow or Bundy.

He then recounts that he had numerous conversations with both of you during the period, and concludes that the instruction must have come either from you or from Mr. Rostow.

Now, Mr. Rostow tells us he never gave such an instruction, and in fact has no memory of every having discussed such an instruction.

Mr. Bundy. He would have in fact have had no authority to give such an instruction.

The Chairman. That is right.

And he pointed that out.

Mr. Bundy. And in fact I wouldn't have the authority to give any such instruction, and I would have been only the channel to give such instruction.

Senator Baker. Who would have had the authority?

Mr. Bundy. If the authority were required outside the AGency it would have to have been the President himself.

The Chairman. What I would like to ask you --

Mr. Bundy. Could I continue with Senator Baker's question for one second.

My own impression as to this matter -- and I have already testified to the fact that I am relying on a recollection of a meeting of which there is no record -- is that had I been briefed on this essentially hypothetical internal, undirected character, it did not appear to me to be a matter that required further authority outside the CIA. That may or may not have been right, but that is the quick judgment I appear to have reached. Because I certainly did not raise the question with others.

Senator Baker. Do you recall that, Mr. Bundy, or is that your surmise?

Mr. Bundy. That is my reconstruction more than my -- I know I did not raise it, I did not press the question, and I did not feel, therefore, that it was a question that needed further analysis, and it did not, so far as I know, get further consideration inthe White House. My own recollection is that I didn'thear the words again in any serious context that I can recall until this year.

The Chairman. And you cannot recall who it was who briefed you?

Mr. Bundy. I really cannot.

Mr. Schwarz. Can you narrow the field?

Mr. Bundy. I can narrow the field. It would have to have been a senior officer at the Agency, or someone with previous understanding in the White House. I have no reason to suppose that it was the latter, but I cannot exclude that.

The Chairman. Might it have been Bissell himself?

Mr. Bundy. It surely might have been.

The Chairman. Based upon your best recollection of that briefing, you have already testified that you interpose no objection?

Mr. Bundy. I am pretty sure I satisfied myself as to the character of the enterprise. But I did not interpose an objection.

The Chairman. Do you recall, then, having reported the briefing to the President?

Mr. Bundy. No, I don't.

The Chairman. Did it strike you -- before I ask that question, based upon your best recollection of the briefing, were you told that this was a new capability that was being developed, or were you told simply that the Agency possessed such a capability?

Mr. Bundy. I would put it that the Agency was working on such a capability, but without any great sense of precision.

The Chairman. Were you given the impression at that briefing that the Agency was seeking your authority or the authority of the White House?

Mr. Bundy. I think they were testing my reaction, as I now look back on it. But I do not recall that they were seeking authority. If it had come to me as a matter of White House authority, I know from the context -- my own concept of my job what I would have done.

The Chairman. What would you have done?

Mr. Bundy. I would have had to take the matter to the President, because I had no independent authority.

The Chairman. And you have testified that you did not take the matter to the President?

Mr. Bundy. As far as I can recall, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Well, this is a subject dealing, as it does, with the development of a capability to kill that would have been of the character that if you had been asked for authority you would have discussed with the President?

Mr. Bundy. That is right.

The Chairman. And furthermore, is it not a subject of a character that you would be very likely to recall?

Mr. Bundy. If I had been asked for authority I would recall it. If I were the initiating or deciding agent, I would recall that I had had that role.

You speak of the seriousness of it. It deals with a capability to kill. One of the sobering facts about coming into the government from outside into a sensitive position like that one is the number of things on which you are briefed which deal with the capability to kill. Contingency plans for protecting West Berlin, contingency plans for the use of nuclear weapons -- shelf plans, a shade more remote, perhaps, for the use of different kinds of gases -- an operational plan for the invasion of Cuba -- these were uncertainties as to whether there would have to be military landings in Laos. In the context of 1961 -- and I am not in any sense trying to understate the seriousness of the context of 1975-- this was a hypothetical kind of a thing with two strong locks between it and any decision. And I simply didn't pay it the attention then that we are paying to it now. We are right to pay that attention now.

The Chairman. I understand that very well. And this Committee is endeavoring in every way it can to place this whole issue within the context of the time. Nevertheless, we are faced with a very real dilemma. We know that at the very time you were being briefed the Agency was not only interested in developing a capability, but was in fact engaged in a series of attempts to assassinate Castro, and had been involved in other murder plots and murder attempts against the leaders of certain foreign governments.

The question we are endeavoring to answer is whether the Agency had been authorized by the policy makers of the government to engage in this activity, or whether it was operating fast and loose on a wild gambit of its own in an area of extreme sensitivity that could have the most serious repercussions upon the government of the U.S. and its reputation in the world.

We are told by Mr. Bissell, who apparently was not only a very good friend of yours, but also a very good friend of Mr. Rostow's --

Mr. Bundy. That is right.

The Chairman. -- a man whose credibility as a witness would seem to have to be respected -- that he was at least engaged in developing such a capability on direct instructions from the White House.

But when we pressed him for specifics, his testimony becomes very vague. He can't remember just who it was who told him, he can't dispute the record, which says that in effect he so advised Mr. Harvey when he engaged Mr. Harvey to develop the capability. And everyone else of high authority in the Administration that we have questioned so far testifies that it was not the policy of the Administration to engage in assassination, and no such attempts were ever authorized, and indeed, with the exception of one occasion in the Special Group, the subject never even surfaced for discussion.

And when it did, if it did, it was quickly shot down.

Nevertheless, the CIA was in fact embarked upon such attempts during the period under review.

Now, we are led to conclude either that we are not being told the truth concerning the policy of the Administration, which is very hard for me to accept, given the reputation of the witnesses that have come before us, for integrity and truthfulness, or that the CIA was running wild, and acting on its own initiative, engaging in murder plots, murder attempts, and not informing, let alone securing the authority from, those in government who held the responsibility, which in a way is even more frightening.

Now, you tell us that you remember being briefed. You don't remember advising the President. It didn't seem too important at the time.Did you ever follow up on whether such a capability had in fact been perfected by the agency?

Mr. Bundy. I don't recall pursuing the matter at all, Mr. Chairman, any more than I would have pursued any other shelf capability on which no question was being pushed to me, either from below or above.

If I may go back and comment on one aspect of your, I think, important and impressive description of the difficulty the Committee faces, I am sure that if in the early months of 1961 I had known what I now know, in part from the newspapers and in part from discussions with your staff, about what was really in train, I would have had a very different approach.

Senator Mondale. Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Senator Mondale.

Senator Mondale. Yesterday Secretary Rusk testified before us. And some of the minutes or notes made following one of themeetings of the Special Group Augmented at least suggest that the question of assassination occurred. And, Mr. Rusk said, did you think anyone would bring that up at a town meeting? And by that I gather he meant that these meetings had large attendance from all different groups and prinicples and staff assistants and so on, and as a result, if there were matters of exceeding delicacy, that was not the forum at which such matters would be discussed.

Would you comment on that?

Mr. Bundy. Yes. My impression would be that the Secretary was probably referring to the much discussed meeting of August 10, 1962.

Senator Mondale. Right.

Mr. Bundy. That was a large meeting, 16 or 18 people. And the comment seems to be pertinent to that meeting. The Special Group as such, the one which I would have had in mind, for example, in early 1961, was set up under a national security regulation of some sort whose number was 54/12.

Senator Mondale. That was the Special Group.

Mr. Bundy. That was the Special Group. And the Special Group in and of itself was quite a small group.

Senator Mondale. But people would volunteer to attend --

Mr. Bundy. No.

Senator Mondale. They would not?

Mr. Bundy. No. The meeting of August 10 is a very special meeting in a variety of respects. That included --

The Chairman. You were present at that meeting?

Mr. Bundy. I was present. My memory is entirely a refreshed memory on this, I had no recollection of the meeting until recent months. But I have found a scratch pad that I apparently doodled on on that date, and it shows who was there, and not much else.

Mr. Schwarz. There were some beautiful drawings.

Mr. Bundy. There were.

They were not very beautiful drawings.

The Special Group Augmented met in August -- and this does coincide with my general recollection of the matter -- in response to concerns wihch were first, I think, and most energetically pressed by Mr. McCone with respect to, what the hell are the Russians doing in Cuba. And that was the center of that meeting, and the center of later meetings, and the center of a national security action memorandum of considerable complexity which was put out toward the end of August, most of which dealt with this question, how do we know what they are going to do, what do we do if they do it, and so forth, with respect to missiles in Cuba.

It was therefore in a sense much more than an ordinary MONGOOSE meeting, let alone a Special Group meeting. And while I quite agree with the Secretary that that meeting as a planning session for anything as horrendous as assassination is implausible in the extreme. Quite serious covert actions were discussed in the Special Group. And as your Committee pursues its studies of covert action it will find that that group is the nodal point for policy decisions, good or bad, well or badly handled. And that was quite a small group.

Senator Mondale. The reason I ask that is that it seems to me that the Chairman's question pursues the two alternatives, either what we now know to have occurred was ordered at the highest level, or at a very high level, such as the Special Group Augmented, or they operated on their own, in which case they were out of control and irresponsible, or there was some extra communications system that went around the formal structure that we have been examining, and would account for the sou of authority that these operators testified to when they were with us.

Now, their testimony was not very specific. They said, we thought we had authority, and we think we heard from somebody, and so on.

What are the changes, based upon your experience, that there was such extra official communications and order passi

Senator Baker. Before Mr. Bundy answers, I might say to Senator Mondale that I am struck by the first paragraph of the Inspector General's report, which we don't have here now, I don't believe, but as I remember it, it says, it is difficult to reconstruct history of assassination plots, becau of the high sensitivity of the subject matter, no written records were kept, and it was not discussed at open meetings. That is generally what was said. And it seems to me that is implying, then, that as a matter of policy there was no formalization of this sort of communication.

I am sorry to interrupt.

Senator Mondale. Yes.

And in that August 10 meeting two or three principals testified that it did come up. And in fact it is not reflected in the notes.

Mr. Bundy. Perhaps the best way for me to begin at least with an answer to your question is to describe my own sense -- my own understanding of the way in which covert operations of all types were brought forward. And this was perhaps the most important and the most constantly reiterated fact of the process that I was exposed to when I began to consider this whole range of subjects on coming to Washington. And whether it was with Mr. Gordon Gray, my predecessor, or with Allen Dulles, or with incoming and outgoing friends in the Department of State, or with Mr. Bissell, or with anyone else concerned with these matters, what I learned then and what I applied throughout my time there to the best of my ability was that all covert operations, whether intelligence operations, clandestine political activity, and clandestine propaganda activity, and clandestine subversion, or sabotage, which did occur in the case of Cuba, all of them took their authority from and came for their authority to the 54/12 group.

And when there was a question in such a meeting as to whether the matter required further judgment, it was the responsibility of the Chairman of that group to make sure that that was checked out.

The papers will usually say, higher authority, et cetera, et cetera, and the President's name will often not appear -- any more than the precise character of the operation is likely to appear in the minutes for the reasons that Senator Baker has spoken of.

But I never knew of any operation of this kind of any sort, with one exception, which is quite different, which did not have that channel. The exception is the Bay of Pigs, which was so big, so complicated, and overflowed in so many directions, and in which the President himself was involved in so many ways, as he fully recognized and explained at the time, that it did not go through this Committee process, it went through a quite Presidential process, and everybody involved knew that.

But with that one exception, I would have told you up until the beginning of this current public discussion, that was the way it went, and that nothing went outside it, and that the Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agencies, with their more sensitive intelligence operations, were meticulous in that respect.

Now, I clearly am wrong. But that is what I would have told you.

Senator Mondale. Well, are you wrong?

In other words, what you testified to --

Mr. Bundy. Excuse me, I misstate myself. I beg your pardon for interrupting.

I am wrong in that things happened that didn't go through that group.

Senator Mondale. Yes.

In other words, that is the big question, either they we acting on authority, which apparently flowed around channels --

The Chairman. Covertly --

Senator Mondale. Covertly -- or they were acting on thei own, and our attempts to find direct authority in these officia meetings led us nowhere.

And your testimony is that you find it very unlikely that there was this covert way of communicating authority.

Mr. Bundy. My testimony was that I wouldn't have believed it existed. I have to consider the same alternative that the Chairman has so clearly pointed out. I don't find it agreeable to conclude that the Agency was a rogue elephant at a time when I strongly believe it was not.

Senator Mondale. We asked General Taylor that question, and he said he found it incredible to believe that they would have gone around the Special Group Augmented with such.

Mr. Bundy. General Taylor, of course -- and this is an important point -- was a-pointed to this responsibility after the Bay of Pigs, after a review of the failures that led to the Bay of Pigs, and after a conclusion had been reached that it would strengthen the White House to have a man with a particular responsibility for the oversight of intelligence operations. He was called military representative to the President, but in the announcement of his appointment -- I happened to look it up the other day -- President Kennedy made it clear that he would be his representative for intelligence matters. And he did in fact take over the chairmanship during the time that he was military representative of all of the Special Groups, 54/12, the Special Group Counterinsurgency, and the Special Group Augmented, MONGOOSE. And when he said -- if he has testified that his expectation would have been that nothing was going to go around him, he is saying exactly what I thought through the same period.

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman, in that respect --

The Chairman. Before I forget the question, let me ask, since you were at the August 10 meeting, and since we have received testimony buttressed by certain documentary evidence that the subject of assassination of Castro did come up at that meeting, do you have any recollection of subject coming up or being discussed?

Mr. Bundy. I don't recollect the meeting. And I don't recollect the subject ever coming up in a meeting of that size, or indeed in any -- I don't have any recollection of it coming up, although I do have a general recollection of there being times at which this possibility was heard of. I wouldn't want to testify that I never heard anyone say, there is somebody thinking about this, because that would be different from my vague recollection.

But I have no recollection of that meeting, and therefore none of any specific statement made by anyone in it.

The Chairman. Senator Baker?

Senator Baker. In that connection, before I go to the question I had in mind, is it fair to say, Mr. Bundy, that all, or virtually all, of your testimony this morning, about MONGOOSE, about the August 10 meeting, and about the general situation, is from reconstructed memory rather than first impression memory?

Mr. Bundy. I didn't want to go that far, Senator Baker. My knowledge, my sense of what 54/12 and Special Group Augmented were, and where they stood in the line of authority, is very clear, and is not reconstructed. I spent five years -- except for the time when General Taylor was there, I was the chairman of these things.

Senator Baker. Let's take a piece at a time, then.

On the question of the Executive Action capability, I believe referred to as the ZRRIFLE project --

Mr. Bundy. Imust say that if I had known that was its name I would have looked harder, Senator Baker.

Senator Baker. It is a fairly picturesque name -- as to Executive Action Capability, or ZRRIFLE, do you have a separate recollection?

Mr. Bundy. I have a recollection of what I think of is one, I don't want to say there wasn't more, but of one discussion of the matter. And I know I was informed of it in some fashion at the time.

Senator Baker. Do you remember by whom?

Mr. Bundy. That is my difficulty, as I said earlier, I don't know.

Senator Baker. The reason I ask is, from the other documentation I have, which consists primarily of the Inspector General of the CIA's report, and maybe other material that I can't think of at the moment, it is clear and unmistakeable that they think of RZRIFLE or Executive Action Capability as a White House initiative, or a White House request of considerable insistence from the White House that they get on with the job.

Mr. Bundy. That is totally inconsistent with my unreconstructed recollection.

Senator Baker. Let me track that carefully.

Do you recall that there was not?

Mr. Bundy. I can only speak for myself here, and for my colleague Rostow, and my knowledge of his assignments. I recall that his assignments would have made it wildly out of place, and totally out of character, for him to initiate a matter of this kind. And I recall that I did not. And I recall that quite independently of any reconstruction of recent months.

Senator Baker. I would like to limit this, then, just to your assignment.

Was it your general assignment to take care of so-called covert operations?

Mr. Bundy. It was my assignment -- may I take a minute on this?

Senator Baker. Yes, sir.

Mr. Bundy. There were two ways in which I could become involved in covert -- three ways. I might have thought up an idea myself. I will have to say that I have no recollection that I ever did. It was not a subject in which I had an independent personal motivating interest. So, there were two ways in which I could get involved in it. One was by a proposal upward from the Agency or the Defense Intelligence Services, which would come to the Special Group.

And the other was when the President had an interest-- and I did have an interest -- from time to time in these matters. He had a great interest at different points in 1961, 1962, in doing more about Cuba. And part of the more he wanted to do was covert. And he would say so to me. And I would say so to somebody else.

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Senator Baker. Can you give us examples of that?

Mr. Bundy. No, I can't. I can only say that the kind of things he was talking about was, why do all these raids not get us anywhere? They say they can do something about the oil refineries, why don't they? These are purely hypothetical, Senator Baker, but they would be in a category, subversion and sabotage.

Senator Baker. WAs it Harvey that was spoken of as our 007?

Mr. Schwarz. Once yesterday.

SEnator Baker. Do you remember when Mr. Harvey was brought to see the President at the Oval Office?

Mr. Bundy. I have been told about that, but I am afraid that is non-refreshed recollection. I don't know anything about it.

Senator Baker. Would that have been the character of the things that the President was interested in, 007?

Mr. Bundy. I am not going to try to repair the record at this late stage and say that the President never read Ian Fleming.

Senator Baker. Or ever seen Ian Fleming?

Mr. Bundy. I don't think the President ever acted Ian Fleming.

Senator Baker. I think that is right. But I think it is important for us, Mr. Bundy, to try to establish, as the Chairman said, the range of available information or evidence that sheds some light on the three alternative possibilities, and the type of things that the President interested himself in is terribly important in that respect.

I believe that you said you had no information or no recollection of what particular situation, or what other deals that were made he was interested in.

Mr. Bundy. I will put it more concretely than that.

The President said, can't we do something more about Cuba? Why don't you get ahold of these people who are dealing with this and see if they can't do better, and pass the word that I am interested, that kind of thing.

Senator Baker. Do I understand that to mean that he never spoke of a particular practice?

Mr. Bundy. I can't tell you that, because I know, the record indeed reminds me, that particular actions that are related to Cuba that came up through the group of ten went to him, and some were approved and some were not.

So, he clearly looked at them.

I would have to have the documents there in order to be precise, and I don't have them with me.

Senator Baker. Which documents?

Mr. Bundy. Documents which the Committee staff has provided.

Mr. Schwarz. We have them.

Senator Baker. Tell me what they are.

Mr. Schwarz. November 30, 1961, Tab -- is that Tab H or Tab 4 about the November 30, 1961, which authorizes MONGOOSE?

Mr. Kelley. Tab 4.

Mr. Schwarz. May 5, '62, Lansdale Tab 21.

Senator Baker. Let's stop there, if I may.

Do you have a copy of this memorandum, Mr. Bundy?

Mr. Kelley. He will have it in a moment.

Mr. Bundy. One place these documents did not go is into the memorabilia of former members.

Mr. Kelley. We are talking about Tab 4.

Senator Baker. Mine says, see Lansdale Tab 4.

Mr. Kelley. Yes. November 30, 1961.

Senator Baker. I would really prefer if someone gave Mr. Bundy a copy of the same material I am working on.

Mr. Kelley. All right, that is the chronology.

Mr. Bundy. November 30, 1961?

Senator Baker. Yes, sir. It is on page 3, the third item.

Mr. Bundy. I have it.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Senator Baker. President Kennedy's decision to begin MONGOOSE. Is it clear, Mr. Bundy, that President Kennedy made the decision to initiate the MONGOOSE program?

Mr. Bundy. No question.

Senator Baker. I notice in the staff interpretation under the column "Issues and Questions" that they alleged that you recall probably writing this memorandum.

Mr. Bundy. That is really a logical inference. The President would not himself have written a long memorandum of instructions of this kind. It is possible that General Taylor wrote it. But I think it is more likely that I did. But in any event, whichever of us did so was doing it as a staff officer for the Prsident's convenience in recording his decision.

Senator Baker. So at least to this extent there is no question about the chain of command, or the chance to control it, the President authorized it?

Mr. Bundy. Just to underline that point, as I recall the paper which was shown to me, it is one from Mrs. Lincoln to General Taylor saying, the President wants you to have this as a description of the decisions.

Senator Baker. Would you repeat that?

Mr. Bundy. I think the covering memorandum on that document is from Mrs. Lincoln to General Taylor, and it says, the President wants you to have this as a record of his decisions.

Senator Baker. Thank you, sir.

Do you have an independent recollection of the meeting or the encounter with President Kennedy in connection with MONGOOSE?

Mr. Bundy. Not a specific meeting, but of the process which led to this decision, yes.

Senator Baker. Describe for me, if you will, what MONGOOSE was intended to be?

Mr. Bundy. Well, MONGOOSE in a general way was the whole set of things to be concerned with mostly, but not only, covert activities against the Communist regime in Cuba.

Senator Baker. The chronology also quotes the memo as saying, one, we will use our available assets to go ahead with the discussed project in order to help Cuba overthrow the Communist regime.

Can you elaborate on that?

Mr. Bundy. Not without documentary assistance beyond what I have just said. It was to be a fairly wide ranging program. I believe that what that really sort of implies to me is that all departments are to cooperate, that the Committee is to review possibilities, proposals, to seek them out, and that the thing is to be coordinated by the Committee, whose chairman will be -- this summary doesn't say so, but my recollection is that the chairman was to be General Taylor, and it does say that General Lansdale was to be the Chief of Operations.

The Chairman. I have some questions at this point, please.

Item 4 of this memorandum reads: "The NSC 54/12 Group will be kept closely informed of activities, and will be available for advice and recommendation".

Does this suggest to you that the regular channel was supposed to operate with respect to MONGOOSE, that is to say, a central role was to be played by the Special Group in connection with its activities?

Mr. Bundy. It is a puzzling sentence to me as I read it now. And I can't give you a precise answer on that. I think the general answer has to be that the 54/12 Group continu through this period. General Taylor was the chairman of both. The overlapping of membership was extensive. And I think you would get a more precise answer as to the exact relation from General Taylor than I am in a position to give you.

The Chairman. I have a very clear memory of General Taylor's testimony. And his testimony was that the Special Group Augmented was the group that had charge of operation MONGOOSE. It was further his testimony that all plans, all operations, were to be brought to the Special Group Augmented for its approval. And the approval of that Group was necessary before any such plans were actually implemented.

Mr. Bundy. I would certainly be clear on that, Mr. Chairman. I thought you were asking whether there was a further requirement that it go from the Special Group Augmented to the Special Group. And I have no precise view on that.

The Chairman. I see.

Now, when you refer to the NSC 54/12 Group --

Mr. Bundy. That is what I think of as the Special Group.

The Chairman. That is what you think of as the Special Group.

I asked the question because the language is a little fuzzy.

Mr. Bundy. It is.

The Chairman. This language might suggest that there is an independent line of authority, and that the Special Group Augmented or the Special Group was simply to be kept informed, and its advice and recommendations would be taken under advisement.

Mr. Bundy. I think myself, Mr. Chairman, that we don't have a very serious problem here, because I would agree with General Taylor's recollection that the Special Group Augmented was the Cuba group.

Now, the Special Group is simply the same people less two or three. And the only real operational value of this paragraph is that perhaps the staff officer who serviced the 54/12 would be available in a decision to the staff officer servicing the Special Group Augmented. But the decision-making persons are simply a smaller number of the very people that both General Taylor and I recollect as having the main responsibility.

The Chairman. So according to your best remembrance, you would agree with the testimony we have received from General Taylor?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, I would.

The Chairman. Mr. Smothers?

Mr. Smothers. Mr. Bundy, perhaps we could get some help in how the recollections come together here. I might pursue for just a moment some of the background regarding other sources of information you may have had regarding the subject matter of his testimony.

You indicated earlier that you had talked with Mr. Bissell about his testimony.

Did you talk with persons other than Mr. Bissell?

Mr. Bundy. Oh, yes.

Mr. Smothers. Did you talk with Mr. McNamara?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, indeed.

Mr. Smothers. Regarding these events?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Smothers. Have you spoken with Mr. Gilpatric?

Mr. Bundy. NO, I don't think I have.

Mr. Smothers. Mr. Rusk?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Smothers. Mr. McCone?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Smothers. Are there others?

Mr. Bundy. I am sure there are. Mr. Rostow. Mr. Goodwin. There may well be others, Mr. Schlesinger and Mr. Dungam -- who has very little to do with it, but I talked to them because of my own absence of recollection about the Dominican Republic.

Mr. Smothers. Let me just raise a few questions regarding those discussions, and perhaps it will be somewhat helpful to us in trying to piece this together.

Has any documentary evidence passed between you and the persons previously mentioned regarding the subject matter of these hearings?

Mr. Bundy. Not that I know of.

Mr. Smothers. Did Mr. McCone provide you any documentary evidence?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Smother. Did you receive any documentary evidence from any source other than the staff?

Mr. Bundy. No -- I beg your pardon. When I testified before the Rockefeller Commission I asked through that Commission whether I could look at NCS files particularly in order to clarify my recollection of the 6th of August 1962. And I was allowed to look at the NSAM files. And my memory was refreshed by NSAM-1, which I believe the committee has.

Mr. Smothers. Have you made a similar request to persons now within the Agency or on the White House staff?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Smothers. Could we go back into your conversation with Mr. Bissell? Could you describe for the Committee, please, your reaction when Mr. Bissell indicated to you that he had in testimony before this Committee told the Committee that either you or Mr. Rostow had asked him to establish an Executive Action Capability?

Mr. Bundy. He didn't report it that way to me. He reported it to me that the testimony that had been given by others placed this event in February 1961. Testimony by others indicated that he had said to them that he had been encouraged to do this by the White House, and that in casting around as to who might have encouraged, he had given the names of Rostow and Bundy. I think this is roughly what he said to me.

The Chairman. That was the character of his testimony?

Mr. Bundy. I told him that I thought he must be wrong about Rostow, because that wasn't the way it worked, and that my own recollection was not that we had encouraged him, but that I had at some stage been informed about it.

We then went on to a discussion of what it was. And we agreed that whatever else it was, it was not an operation plan, and it was not targeted against anyone.

Mr. Smothers. What was his reaction to your comment that he had been informed as opposed to initiating?

Mr. Bundy. I don't recall that we had a very extended discussion on it. I don't recall his reaction, and I don't recall exactly how I put the point.

The Chairman. Let me just ask at that point, the way you have characterized Bissell's testimony correspnds with my memory of it. It is hard for me, however, to understand how Mr. Bissell -- why Mr. Bissell would have directed Mr. Harvey to develop such a capability, and apparently represented, if the documents are to be believed, to Mr. Harvey that he had been twice instructed to do this by the White House, if he had not in fact received such authority.

Do you think that Mr. Bissell would have undertaken on his own initiative to develop such a capability and simply represented to his subordinate that he was doing so on instructions from the White House?

Mr. Bundy. I think there is a prior question, Mr. Chairman, which is the credibility of the witness from whom he is taking this recollection.

The Chairman. That is fair.

Though Mr. Bissell himself did not seem disposed --

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Bundy. Mr. Bissell may not recollect that I did not give him this instruction, but I do, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Did Mr. Bissell at any time during the period under question, or at any later time, ever inform you of CIA activities or involvement in assassination attempts against any foreign leader?

Mr. Bundy. No.

The Chairman. Doesn't it strike you as strange, since Mr. Bissell was aware of such attempts, that he would not have told him?

Mr. Bundy. Well, I don't want, for reasons that I have already explained, to speculate as to why he did or did not. I was operating, working on the assumption that I would know that kind of anything if it existed.

The Chairman. Senator Mathias?

Senator Mathias. Mr. Chairman, I don't want to leave the record, or Mr. Bundy's mind, or in the alternative, my mind, in a state of confusion as to what exactly Mr. Bissell's recollection was.

Now, he was depending somewhat on Mr. Harvey's recollection and notes in the first instance. But as I recall, he was very clear as a matter of independent recollection that he had been horsed along a couple of times by the White House on proceeding with the development of the Executive Action Capability. And that was a matter of independent recollection, it didn't depend on anybody else's notes or anybody else's refreshing his recollection.

Mr. Bundy. That he didn't say to me, and I have no way of commenting on it.

The Chairman. I think we must carefully review the record on that score.

Senator Baker. It may be necessary to ask him to come back for that purpose.

May I ask a question there?

Mr. Bundy, do you have any recollection of any specific covert plans that would involve poisons, hypdermic syringes, or other potentially lethal devices in conjunction with activities against Cuba?

Mr. Bundy. I have no recollection of any specific plan. I do have a very vague, essentially refreshed recollection that I heard the word poison at some point in connection with a possibility of action in Cuba. But that is as far as I have been able to take it in my own memory.

Senator Baker. Can you remember who may have mentioned it to you and what the purposes of the poison may have been?

Mr. Bundy. Nothing at all about it in detail.

Senator Baker. A poison pen?

Mr. Bundy. No, some kind of poison about which -- one thing that does stick in my mind is that it seems totally impractical because it was going to kill a large group of people in a headquarters mess, or something of that sort.

Senator Baker. Do you remember whether the plan was declared non-feasible or infeasible by the Department of Defense?

Mr. Bundy. No, I have no such recollection.

Senator Baker. Do you remember anything about a hypodermic syringe to carry poisons in a ballpoint pen?

Mr. Bundy. That is the sort of thing that I was asked the other day, and I said I remember it, and then it seems to me about ten seconds later was that what I was remembering was murder mysteries and nothing related to Cuba. I have no recollection of connecting anything like that to Cuba.

Senator Baker. I have another question, but I will wait, if you have something else.

The Chairman. Go ahead, sir.

Senator Baker. Do you feel that you have a good insight into the relationship between the President and his brother Robert Kennedy in this respect, that is, having to do with Cuba operations, and Robert Kennedy and Richard Helms?

Mr. Bundy. I have a pretty good picture of the relationship between President Kennedy and Robert Kennedy on Cuba, and on many other things. It is a recollection which grows stronger as the administration goes on, because I got to know them better, and, of course, they got to know me better, and the relationship tends to become closer, my relation with both of them. I had known the President for many, many years, and the Attorney General much more briefly.

I do not have any clear picture of the relationship between the Attorney General and Mr. Helms. My curbstone judgment would have been that it was not close.

Senator Baker. Based on your insight, did the President delegate to Robert Kennedy substantial aspects of Cuba policy during the period we are speaking of?

Mr. Bundy. I wouldn't put it that way, Senator Baker. He certainly counted on the Attorney General to be a kind of gingerman on a great many subjects, of which Cuba and counterinsurgency were the two that came more closely within my area of interest.

Senator Baker. Counterinsurgency meaning what?

Mr. Bundy. Counterinsurgency meaning all those efforts like the Green Berets and organizing to be able to assist countries threatened by Communist subversion internally.

Senator Baker. Are you speaking of counterinsurgency as it led to Cuba, or as a general capability?

Mr. Bundy. There was a separate committee, the Special Committee on CI, counterinsurgency. And the Attorney General was an active member of that. And I used to see him playing this very important role of poking and prodding, and why can't you do more, and why can't you do better, and why aren't we making more progress.

Senator Baker. Who was on that committee?

Mr. Bundy. I am sorry, I can't decide from recollection. General Taylor was again the Chairman, but the membership was different.

Senator Baker. Do you have minutes or records of that group?

Mr. Schwarz. No.

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman, I would like to request that with Mr. Bundy's assistance after this hearing that we identify as much as we can what that group is, and make a fomral request for documentation.

Mr. Aaron. We have reviewed some of that material at the John F. Kennedy Library. It is essentially in fact the group that reviewed paramilitary operations and potential insurgency situations in a number of countries. There was an insurgency list. It did not seem to relate to the subject we are speaking of here. So we did not request the documents. But we could have gotten them.

Senator Baker. Will you do that, please?

Is that agreeable, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman. What is your request?

Senator Baker. I would like documentation or any records relating to the counterinsurgency group during the period in question.

The Chairman. Let me suggest that we designate a member of the committee staff to undertake that review, and report back to the committee.

Would that be satisfactory?

Senator Baker. That is fine. I just want to know if there is any worthwhile documentation.

The Chairman. Yes. Because it may be entirely ancillary to this issue.

Senator Baker. Let me ask Mr. Bundy this. Would that group have been important toward American policy during this period?

Mr. Bundy. The CI Group?

Senator Baker. Yes.

Mr. Bundy. I would think only most marginally, Senator Baker, simply because the existence of other groups, the Special Group Augmented or the MONGOOSE Group, was so clearly dominant and was the Central Committee for that subject.

Senator Baker. The gingerbread man concept?

Mr. Bundy. The gingerman concept.

Senator Baker. The gingerman concept. There is a difference.

Do I directly infer from that description that the President would authorize Robert Kennedy to urge and expedite action to move from assignment to assignment and to push people along to produce a result?

Mr. Bundy. In a general way that is right. But the form it took in the areas in which I was concerned was in one sense quite informal. I know of no instance where the Attorney General tried to replace the normal channel -- let's stay away for the moment from the covert question and the Cuban question, which I know you will want to talk about more precisely -- but if he felt, as he often did, that American policy in Africa, for example, was insufficiently sensitive to the aspirations of black people in Africa, he wouldn't fire off a kick, he would come in and say, why can't you people do something about the State Department on news and stuff.

Senator Baker. There is some evidence -- we had direct testimony that Mr. Helms, who was DDP at the time in question, rather than DCI, clearly thought that the authority of the Agency was to overthrow the Castro regime by any means, including assassination.

And when pressed on the source of that authority he designed to say that anyone specifically told him that, but that he talked to Robert Kennedy frequently about it. Would this be in the gingerman concept you are speaking of?

Mr. Bundy. Now we are right at the specific point I would like to make. But everything I knew about Bobby Kennedy when he was goading and spurring people on is that he never took away from the existing channel of authority its authority or responsibility.

Senator Baker. Would what I describe be consistent with whatyou describe?

Mr. Bundy. Not if it is interpreted as meaning that he was providing a separate channel of authority.

Senator Baker. What I meant was just what it was, and that is, Helms described for us meeting with Kennedy apparently to stimulate the Agency's activities to produce the overthrow of the Castro regime, and that he met regularly with Kennedy in this respect.

Mr. Bundy. I don't know how often they met or what was said, I know nothing about that. I would have said, just in passing, that the Attorney General's relationship to the Director of Central Intelligence was much closer and more important than his relationship to Mr. Helms.

Senator Baker. I am correct, am I, that Helms at the time was DDP and not DCI?

Mr. Schwarz. That is right.

Senator Baker. Do you have any idea why he would have met regularly with the DDP rather than the DCI?

Mr. Bundy. I have no idea that he did. I know that he met often and intimately and easily with the Director of Central Intelligence, who was a close personal friend of his.

Senator Baker. You are speaking of Mr. McCone?

Mr. Bundy. Mr. McCone.

The Chairman. I think that since the point is important, that when the Committee Staff complete its review of the evidence it ought to be reminded to look closely at that Helms testimony and identify exactly what words Helms might have used to describe his relationship with Robert Kennedy.

Senator Baker. And the time involved and what position Helms occupied at the time.

The Chairman. I have another question.

Mr. Bundy, we also have it from Mr. Bissell that at one time he called in an officer, a subordinate, O'Donnell, -- that at one time Mr. Bissell called in a subordinate whose name was Mr. O'Donnell, and asked Mr. O'Donnell if he would be willing to undertake the assassination of Mr. Lumumba.

Mr. O'Connell testifies that he said he would not be willing to undertake the assassination of Mr. Lumumba, because he had moral compunctions against killing.

Mr. O'Donnell further testifies that he was then or thereafter dispatched to the Congo, where he was informed that some poison had been made available -- had come to the CIA headquarters in the Congo.

Mr. Bundy. I am sorry, I missed that last.

The Chairman. He was informed that some poison had arrived at the CIA headquarters in the Congo.

When we asked Mr. Bissell on what authority he had asked O'Connell as to his willingness to undertake the assassination of Lumumba, he could not provide us with that authority, except to say that he may have done it on his own initiative.

Do you have any reaction to that?

Mr. Bundy. Where is it in time?

Senator Church. It was in the fall of 1960. It was not during the Kennedy Administration, it preceded the Kennedy Administration. But I asked you the question, because it strikes me as being a very disturbing piece of testimony, that any man so positioned, in the CIA could not identify higher authority for such an action, and would under oath say that it might have been on his own initiative.

Mr. Bundy. I can't add to your comment on that, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Very well.

Senator Morgan. Let me ask him a question or two, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Senator Morgan?

Senator Morgan. Mr. Bundy, you recall very vividly talking with the President on many occasions about Cuba, is that right?

Mr. Bundy. I recall vividly that I talked to him on many occasions, I am not very good on remembering specific discussions.

Senator Morgan. You told us a few minutes ago that he was constantly prodding, and why don't you do this, and why doesn't so and so work?

Mr. Bundy. If I may correct that, I said he prodded me from time to time, not all the time.

Senator Morgan. Quite frequently?

Mr. Bundy. I wouldn't put it that often. It might have been three or four times.

Senator MOrgan. Mr. Bundy, you were head of the Security Council, you were his assistant?

Mr. Bundy. I am trying to give an accurate picture of the number of times, Senator.

Senator Morgan. You are trying to give such an accurate picture that you are not giving much of a picture at all.

Are you telling this committee that throughout the time you assumed your duties, throughout the Cuban crisis, and all the MONGOOSE operations, that you might have talked to him two or three times about it?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Could I separate and try and clarify my answer?

Senator Morgan. Yes.

Mr. Bundy. I talked to the President, I suppose, many, many times in the context of the events that led up to and followed the Bay of Pigs. I talked to him dozens of times, maybe even hundreds of times, in the context of the events that led up to and followed the Cuban missile crisis. Those are the two great moments of Presidential concern over Cuba during the time I was in Washington. I talked to him much less -- I can't give you a number-- on these intervening matters. And that is the distinction I am trying to make.

Senator MOrgan. You were something between himself and the National Security Council, were you not?

Mr. Bundy. That isn't exactly the way it works.

Senator Morgan. Just tell me what did you do.

Mr. Bundy. I am trying to.

Senator Morgan. I have been listening all morning, Mr. Bundy, and I just don't get it.

Let me go to one other question. Was it true a while ago when you said that Robert Kennedy was constantly prodding people? Why can't we do more?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, that is certainly true.

Senator Morgan. I have no other questions.

Senator Mondale. Could I ask one, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman. Senator Mondale.

Senator Mondale. I don't like to ask this question, but I think it is important.

Have you talked to others involved during this period when you may have been testifying before us and before the Rockefeller Commission, say, in the last five months about this testimony?

Mr. Bundy. I answered that question. Yes, I have.

Senator Mondale. Would you repeat it briefly for us?

7500003424

Mr. Smothers. I was about to pursue that line, Senator Mondale.

Senator Mondale. Go ahead.

Mr. Smothers. I believe you indicated previously, Mr. Bundy, that you talked to Mr. Bissell, Mr. McNamara, Mr. McCone, Mr. Rostow, Mr. Goodwin, Mr. Schleinger, and others that may not be on that list. And you indicated that you had spoken to Mr. Bissell after his testimony regarding executive action.

Mr. Bundy. That is right.

Mr. Smothers. Had you spoken with him also before that testimony?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Smothers. Did he call you or did you call him?

Mr. Bundy. I don't honestly recall. I think I said the other day that he had called me, but I think actually what happened that he called me, and my first words were, I needed to call you.

Mr. Smothers. Can we go to your conversations with Mr. McNamara. When did you first talk with him about these matters being testified to?

Mr. Bundy. I think pretty much as soon as it hit the papers.

Mr. Smothers. Can you give the Committee the sense of your conversations with Mr. McNamara?

Mr. Bundy. There have been a number of them. Mr. McNamara and I not only have been close friends, but are very closely associated now. So, I see him and talk with him frequently, both about substance of matters of international development, and about the business of the Ford Foundation.

So, I have talked to him a number of times both on the telephone and face to face. The essence of the conversation is the exploration of questions raised or doubts raised babout the conviction we both share, which is that no one in the Kennedy Administration, in the White House, or in the Capitol, ever gave any authorization, approval, or instruction of any kind for any effort to assassinate anyone by the CIA.

Mr. Smothers. Did you discuss with him, or did he raise with you specifically, the fact that he had received from Mr. McCone a memorandum from Mr. McCone in 1967?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, he told me that.

Mr. Smothers. Did you discuss the substance of that memorandum?

Mr. Bundy. I discussed it initially with Mr. McCone.

Mr. Smothers. Did you discuss it with Mr. McNamara?

Mr. Bundy. He mentioned it to me. I don't recall much about it.

Mr. Smothers. Did you discuss the meeting of August 10 in Secretary Rusk's office?

Mr. Bundy. That was the first discussed because the newspapers said that there had been a meeting of three, four or five of us, and the question was whether there had been such a meeting limited to three, four, or five. And we were able to satisfy ourselves that that was wrong.

Mr. Smothers. That was wrong. What do you recall to have been Mr. McNamara's reaction of the August 10 meeting?

Mr. Bundy. He didn't seem to have any that I can recall, at least I don't recall that he told me of any reaction of it.

Mr. Smothers. Do you recall the substance of his comment regarding the 1967 McCone report?

Mr. Bundy. No. I don't think he commented on it. He told me what it said.

76000 30129

Mr. Smothers. With regard to your conversation with Mr. McCone, when did this occur, approximately?

Mr. Bundy. That occurred earlier on.

Mr. Smothers. Before the Rockefeller Commission inquiry?

Mr. Bundy. I don't know exactly when it was. But it was within the context of the Rockefeller Commission inquiry and not this inquiry.

Mr. Smothers. Are you talking about more than one conversation?

Mr. Bundy. No, I think I talked to him on the phone and then I had a meeting with him.

Mr. Smothers. In either the phone conversation or the meeting did you discuss Mr. McCone's 1967 report?

Mr. Bundy. He told me that he had heard of it. I don't think he had then seen it.

Mr. Smothers. You don't think he had then seen it?

Mr. Bundy. He had then seen it as of 1975. He obviously saw it in 1967.

Mr. Smothers. Can you give us a feeling for the approximate time when this conversation occurred?

Mr. Bundy. I could probably work it out from my own calendar, but I don't have it in my head.

Mr. Smothers. But at this time he had not seen the report?

Mr. Bundy. He had not seen the report in 1975. But since it is a report that -- as I understand it, it is a report that he made in 1967, and he had seen it then.

Mr. Smothers. Did he indicate to you that he was making an effort to get that report?

Mr. Bundy. I think he told me that he had been in touch with the Agency and would be seeing the report, but I don't really recall.

Mr. Smothers. To go into your conversation with Mr. Rostow, would you indicate to the Committee, please, the substance of that conversation?

Mr. Bundy. Yes. I called him after my conversation with Mr. Bissell, because it seemed to me that he ought to be informed, and the two of them ought to talke with each other about that testimony.

Mr. Smothers. At the time you called him it was your impression that Mr. Bissell had not talked with Mr. Rostow?

Mr. Bundy. But was planning to.

Mr. Smothers. And this was after Mr. Bissell's testimony?

Mr. Bundy. That if right.

Mr. Smothers. Did you and Mr. Rostow discuss the fact that both you and Mr. Rostow had been named as potential sources for the Exective Action authorization?

Mr. Bundy. My emphasis in talking about Mr. Rostow was the fact that he had been mentioned, because it seemed to me that in my recollection that must be wrong, and he would be interested in getting it straightened out.

Mr. Smothers. Can we go to your conversation with Mr. Goodwin. Did you call him or did he call you?

Mr. Bundy. I called him.

Mr. Smothers. And the nature of that conversation?

Mr. Bundy. That conversation was about the Dominican Republic, because of my complete failure of recollection as to who or what the White House line of action,responsibility and concern was with respect to the Dominican Republic in 1961. And I called him, and I called Dungan, and I called Schlesinger, because they were the the who had been very much involved in things like the Alliance for Progress, and new appointments to embassies in Latin America, and Latin American Policy generally, except for the Bay of Pigs. And I wanted to see if they had recollections about events in that spring that were more extensive than mine. I didn't learn very much, but that was the purpose of the call.

Mr. Smothers. And it it your testimony that your first exposure to the documentary evidence beyond these recollections was when either the Rockefeller Commission staff or this staff showed you documents pertaining to this inquiry.

Mr. Bundy. I want to be precise about the Rockefeller Commission staff. They did not show me the documents, the White House Staff showed me the documents.

7600030500

Mr. Smothers. The White House Staff showed you the documents?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Smothers. Under what circumstance did the White House Staff provide these documents to you? Was it at your request, or their request?

Mr. Bundy. My request.

Mr. Smothers. When did it occur?

Mr. Bundy. At the time of the Rockefeller hearings.

Mr. Smothers. At the time of the Rockefeller hearings?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Smothers. And prior to your testimony?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Smothers. Who provided these documents to you?

Mr. Bundy. I never have testified on -- this is not a serious matter, because there is no secret about it. But I have always taken the position that White House decisions are for the White House to discuss, and I perfer to hold to that position now.

Mr. Smothers. Are you saying that you do not feel at liberty --

Mr. Bundy. No, I am not saying, I am saying that I would request the committee to address that question with the White House.

The Chairman. What is the question?

Mr. Smothers. The question is who in the White House provided Mr. Bundy with documents relevant to this investigation. And I believe his position is that he would prefer not to disclose that matter, or that that is a matter for the Committee's determination.

Mr. Bundy. Let me explain, Mr. Chairman, because you were out of the room, that I have always taken the position that decisions of the White House are for the White House to discuss. I always asked permission to see documentation and permission was given. I looked at the document, but I would rather not discuss it, because I think it is for the White House to discuss it.

The Chairman. What is the document?

Mr. Bundy. I just described it, it is National Security Action Memorandum No. 1, we showed us the National Security Action file, which I believe your staff has.

Mr. Schwarz. We have it here.

Mr. Smothers. My question was, who had the request been made to, and showed him the document?

Mr. Bundy. My point is that I have tried historically not to discuss this kind of question when it is something that concerns the White House, but to leave it to the White House to discuss it, and I would prefer to hold to that position.

(Off the record.)

Mr. Smothers. This quite frankly, Mr. Bundy, this related to an ancillary matter that is of concern to the Committee.

You mentioned conversations with Mr. Schlesinger. Again, were those initiated by you?

Mr. Bundy. The most recent one, he called me. And I think there were earlier ones, but I don't know. I can't be precise. I must say I don't know that I understand the line of questioning. Those are very important matters, and people closely involved in them should be trying to get a clear sense of what each other remembers after this many years, it seems to me this would be entirely natural.

Mr. Smothers. I don't question the fact that it is natural, Mr. Bundy. I think one of the difficult things for this Committee to do is to separate out, if you will, the independent recollections from the documentary evidence we have shown you, and from conversations with others --

Mr. Bundy. You are quite right. And I have tried quite carefully to tell you my recollection.

Mr. Smothers. We are merely trying now to establish those relationships so that when we get the point in the record there is some question regarding the nature of the recollection that might be of some assistance to us. That is not an attack on your veracity, it is not an attempt to see if there has been any effort at collusion or whatever, but merely to give us some guidelines in looking at the record.

Do you recall, Mr. Bundy, from these conversations that we have just mentioned, any matters which have been raised by the participants that may be inconsistent with the documentary record as you have seen it? We know, of course, that Mr. McNamara's recollection appears to be inconsistent with the documentary evidence regarding the August 10 meeting.

Mr. Bundy. Well, so was mine. And I have no such recollection.

Mr. Smothers. I am speaking now of the recollection of others, if you will.

Mr. Bundy. I can't really recite on that, because I haven't made the kind of comparison document by document and conversation by conversation that would allow me to make a clearcut and comprehensive answer. But I don't have any recollection of sharp divergency of that sort.

The Chairman. Mr. Schwarz.

Mr. Schwarz. Mr. Bundy, I want to pick up on one thing that you testified to that was left hanging and then come back through your involvement with Cuba and starting from the beginning. You testified that to your knowledge no authorization for an assassination was given. I want to come at the subject from another direction. Were you ever told at any time by anybody that assassination efforts were actually under way with respect to Mr. Castro?

Mr. Bundy. Absolutely not.

Mr. Schwarz. Were you ever told by anybody that the Central Intelligence Agency had hired the Mafia to assassinate Castro?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Were you ever told by anybody that during the MONGOOSE program Mr. Harvey was engaged in assassination efforts upon Fidel Castro?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Were you ever told by anybody that in the fall of 1963 the Central Intelligence Agency was passing assassination devices to a Cuban military officer?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Were you ever told by anybody that in the fall of 1963 the Central Intelligence Agency was engaged in an assassination effort with respect to Fidel Castro?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, after the Bay of Pigs, was there a reevaluation or reconsideration of what the policy toward Cuba should be? And would you turn in that connection to Tab B, of the Bundy Book 1 of 2 --

Senator Tower. May I raise a purely technical point. I know it is not intentional, but I think we use the term, the Mafia was hired to assassinate Castro, I think that was inaccurate, because I don't think we have anything that indicates that we contacted the syndicate as such, and I think if we use, "individuals likely associated with the Mafia," or something like that -- it is a little technical.

Mr. Schwarz. Let me restate the question to make sure that there is not a problem with the scope of my question. And Senator Tower is correct.

Were you ever told that the Agency had contacted a man called John Roselli?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. A man called Sam Giancana?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. A man called Santos Traficante?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Any person who was a criminal or allegedly a criminal for the purpose of assassinating Mr. Castro?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Do you have any recollection whatsoever related to the subject we have been exploring in that group of questions?

Mr. Bundy. No -- you are familiar with the fact that -- refreshed my recollection of activities associated with the Mafia in a law enforcement context in Florida in 1964.

Mr. Schwarz. Since you raised it, let's just pin that down right now. What happened in 1964 with respect to the Mavia and Cuba, to the best or your recollection? And then we will just mark some documents.

Mr. Bundy. Let me be clear that my recollection here is entirely refreshed. Perhaps you would rather come back to it?

Mr. Schwarz. Let's put it in the record here, since we have raised the subject.

Let's mark as Bundy Exhibit 1 the Helms memo to DCA on the Cuban exile plan dated June 10, 1964.

WARD & PAUL

Mr. Schwarz. Mr. Bundy, based upon your having had an opportunity prior to the testimony, and now again if you seek to do so, to refresh your recollection, will you recount for the Committee what happened in the summer of 1964 in connection with this matter?

Mr. Bundy. Well, it is a relatively small matter in the context of what you are discussing, but what happened in the summer of 1964 was that it came to our attention that there were relations between Cuban refugees in Cuba and people apparently associated with the Mafia. And this did not seem to be a good idea. And this was in a period in which sentiment had been steadily growing for some time against activities by Cuban refugees that were wholly outside the control and not really in the interest of the U.S., and that they should be associated with a criminal group.

And so when the matter came to the Special Group, the decision was made to refer it to the Department of Justice as a matter of internal American law enforcement. That was done.

And the Department said that it was going after the matter, which it then did, and reported back.

The reports don't give any conclusive picture of what really was going on, but they do show that the Bureau went to a number of people asking around about these matters, and as far as I know, it then faded away.

Mr. Schwarz. In the context of that discussion did anybody from the Central Intelligence Agency or anybody else inform you that in earlier years there had been a relationship with -- to use Senator Tower's caution -- with persons alledgedly involved with the criminal syndicate -- in order to accomplish the assassination of Fidel Castor?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, going back to the post-Bay of Pigs period, would you put before the witness and mark as Exhibit 2 the National Security minutes of a meeting held May 5, 1961. It is at Tab B of the Senator's Book 1 of 2. This reflects, am I correct, Mr. Bundy, a discussion of Cuba, held with the President and high officials of the government who are all listed on the front page?

Mr. Bundy. Correct.

Mr. Schwarz. And Cuba was discussed, and it was agreed, following the discussion that U.S. policy toward Cuba should aim at the downfall of Castro, and that since the measures agreed below are not likely to achieve this end, the matter should be reviewed at intervals with a view to further action?

Mr. Bundy. Right.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, can you describe the measures agreed to at that point?

Mr. Bundy. My only way of doing that with any accuracy is to in effect to quote from or summarize this document, Mr. Schwarz.

Mr. Schwarz. The document speaks for itself, then. And you can add nothing to it?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. But can you say that the measures did or did not include assassination?

Mr. Bundy. There is nothing in my recollection and nothing in the document that seems to me to imply assassination.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, following this instruction, was Cuban policy reviewed again in the fall of 1961?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. And ultimately out of the fall review in 1961 came the so-called MONGOOSE program; is that correct?

Mr. Bundy. That is right.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, prior to discussing upon the MONGOOSE program, did you consider a lot of other options?

Mr. Bundy. I think we were -- and this is a hard question, but I think what we were doing was working toward an organization that would be able to take charge of the complicated, varied inter-departmental kinds of things involved in Cuba. We have been concentrating this morning on covert actions, but there were also propaganda problems, economic problems, and Cuban refugee problems in Miami, and a number of others that did not all fall within one jurisdiction. Anytime you get that kind of problem you have an organization problem. And the solution of 1961, which took sometime to work out, as the passage of time suggests, was the creation of a Special Committee under the Chairmanship of General Taylor and with General Lansdale as its operating officer.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, in the course of the review that did take place prior to the establishment of that Special Committee which then got called the MONGOOSE program, was one of the matters which was considered the assassination of Mr. Castro?

Mr. Bundy. As I have already said, I can not tell you that this question never came up. But I recall no sustained discussion of that matter in that period.

Mr. Schwarz. Whether you recall a sustained discussion or not --

Mr. Bundy. I don't recall a discussion that I can pinpoint anywhere, but over the period of 1961 to 1963 the subject was mentioned from time to time by different individuals, never to me that I can recall by the President. But it did come up.

Mr. Schwarz. And it may have come up in this period in the fall of 1961 as something to consider, is that correct?

Mr. Bundy. As something to talk about rather than to consider, would be my answer.

Mr. Schwarz. Would you put before the witness as Bundy

Mr.Schwarz. Mr. Bundy, to summarize -- before I ask you the question -- in NSAM No. 100 you sent to the Secretary of State the following note: "In conformation of oral instructions conveyed to Assistant Secretary of State Woodward, a plan is desired to the indicated contingency in Cuba". Do you have an independent recollection of what that indicated contingency was?

Mr. Bundy. Before seeing this document?

Mr. Schwarz. Before seeing the documents.

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Having looked at not only Exhibit 3, but Exhibit 3A and 3B, do you agree that the contingency referred to in 3A and the contingency referred to in 3B are related to NSAM No. 100?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, I do.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, the contingency referred to in 3B, which is the earlier of the two following documents, is said by Mr. Parrott to be a plan against the contingency that Castro would in some way or other be removed from the Cuban scent. And I am going to come to some of the other parts of that document with respect to the President's interest or not.

And the contingency in 3A, which is the minutes of the Special Group, as characterized as follows: "Mr. Parrott also told the Group that two other exercises are in progress in connection with Cuba, the preparation of a contingency plan in connection with the possible removal of Castro from the Cuban scene, and an updating of the overall plan for covert operations".

Now, after having reviewed those documents, and in the light of your testimony that it is possible that the consideration of the possibility of assassination which you say did occur at some point, occurred in the fall of 1961, do you agree that at that time the contingency under consideration here was the possibility of the assassination of Castro?

Mr. Bundy. No, I would put it another way. The contingency here is, what would we do if Castro were no longer there. So that the question of how Castro ceased to be there is left out of this set of papers. Clearly one of the possibilities would be assassination, but only one of them. What we are talking about here, as I read the documents, is a plan against the contingency that I am not reading from the Parrott memorandum, against the contingency that Castro would in some way or other be removed from the Cuban scene. NSAM 100, whose language is indirect, nonetheless indicates, to me at least, rereading it, that the President wanted to know what was likely to happen if Castro were no longer there. He was, in other words, trying to get a picture of whether that would really change things, and if so, in what way.

Mr. Schwarz. Just one detail that Mr. Smothers suggested to me. Is NSAM 100 what the White House showed you, or is it another document?

Mr. Bundy. No, 181. But let me be precise. I asked to see the documents relating to -- from the National Security files relating to August 1962. And they gave me the NSAM file identified as the significant memorandum, NSAM 181.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, the contingency to be examined, therefore, was what would happen -- would it help the U.S., that is the question, if Castro were to disappear?

Mr. Bundy. What would it be like if Castro were to disappear? The question is open ended.

Mr. Schwarz. What was the conclusion?

Mr. Bundy. I don't remember. My unaided sense of the matter is that intelligent political analysis would have suggested in 1961 or at any time later that the removal of a single individual in a revolution complex and general as this would have quite unpredictable and not necessarily helpful effects.

Mr. Schwarz. You said that while you were clear the assassination was not in fact authorized, you believe that at some point it was examined, is that a fair characterization.

Mr. Bundy. That isn't the word I used. Talk about.

Mr. Schwarz. Talk about. And this exercise constitutes an analysis of what Cuba/the U.S. would be like if Castro were removed.

Mr. Bundy. It constitutes a request for such an analysis.

Mr. Schwarz. Was the analysis made?

Mr. Bundy. I don't have any recollection.

Mr. Schwarz. If one were exploring the possibility of assassination, I take it this kind of analysis is the sort of analysis one would wish to make if one was not simply ruling assassination out as a matter of principle in the first instance.

Mr. Bundy. Let me put it another way. If people were suggesting this to you, and you were curious about whether it was worth exploring, one way of getting more light on it without going any further with that notion itself would be to ask political people, not intelligence people, what they thought would happen if Castro were not there any longer.

You will notice that this National Security Action Memorandum is not addressed to the Central Intelligence Agency, less still to the covert part of the Agency, but rather to the Secretary of State. And specifically clearly the action of certain is Assistant Secretary Woodward.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, document 3B indicates -- and you have had an opportunity to review this one before, I think --

Mr. Bundy. Which one are we now talking about?

Mr. Schwarz. 3B, Mr. Parrott's memo.

Mr. Bundy. Yes. I have a clearer copy now than I had yesterday, for which I am grateful.

Mr. Schwarz. It indicates that there was a Presidential interest in the matter. And then General Taylor told Mr. Parrott that he prefered that the State Department, or Mr. Woodward in the State Department, not be told about the Presidential interest in the matter. First, was there a Presidential interest in the matter? You have no reason to doubt that there was, I take it.

Mr. Bundy. I am sorry, I was reading a note, and I didn't hear the last part of the question.

Mr. Schwarz. I asked really two questions, the first of which is a direct question, was there a Presidential interest in the matter?

Mr. Bundy. There was a Presidential -- there was no doubt in my mind that when I write in a National Security Action Memorandum a plan as desired, that the desire is not mine.

Mr. Schwarz. And the desire is in fact the Presidents?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, have you any other recollection of calling your attention to the fall of 1969?

Mr. Bundy. Could I go back and comment on your earlier question.

You correctly pointed out that there was concern to keep the President's name out of this process of request, although you correctly point out that the President was the one who wanted to know. My impression here is that whatever concern we have, General Taylor or I, in the frame of this language, it was precisely to insulate the President from any false inference that what he was asking about was assassination. It is easy to confuse the question. What are things going to be like after Castro, with the other question, and we were trying to focus attention on the information he obviously wanted, which is, what would happen if we did do this sort of thing, and not get one into the frame of mind of thinking that he was considering doing it. That is the distinction, I think.

7 6 0 0 0 3 0 5 0 0

Mr. Schwarz. Do you have any further recollection of discussion of this matter in this fall of 1961? And by this matter I mean either the broader inquiry into what it would be like if Castro disappeared, or a scenario arising of the specific subject of assassination.

Mr. Bundy. No, I don't.

Mr. Schwarz. Had you ever heard before I asked you about the last night about a conversation, an alledged conversation, between the President and the Journalist Theodore Schwartz, and or Mr. Goodwin in this timeframe?

Mr. Bundy? I saw that in the newspapers.

Mr. Schwarz. Or in Esquire magazine?

Mr. Bundy. Wherever I saw it, I saw it in print.

Mr. Schwarz. But you have no independent recollection of that or of the fact that Mr. Schultz met with the President?

Mr. Bundy. No. But I will say this -- and it is a random observation -- if I were planning an action of great sensitivity I wouldn't discuss it with any journalist, I don't think.

Mr. Schwarz. The record from Mr. Schwartz is that the President said he was opposed to assassination, but that he brought it up in a conversation with Mr. Schwartz, saying that he was being encouraged to order assassination.

Now, you have said that you do recall that the subject was talked about, your words, at some point, and that it might have been in the fall of 1961.

Mr. Bundy. I wouldn't want to say that it was only in any given period.

Mr. Schwarz. But that one of the points in which it might have been discussed was the fall of 1961.

Mr. Bundy. Certainly.

Mr. Schwarz. We are going to come to another period which relates to you.

Mr. Bundy. May I interrupt one second.

Could we go off the record for a moment?

The Chairman. Yes.

(Discussion off the record.)

The Chairman. Let's put that on the record.

Would you restate what I have just stated?

Mr. Bundy. Going back to your earlier question, I have a message through the courtesy of the Committee from the White House that there is no objection to answering the question as to how the White House came to show me the NSC file. When I learned of some of the interests of the Rockefeller Commission, it seemed to me that it would be useful if I could refresh my recollection. I telephoned Dr. Kissinger, who it seemed to me would be the right person both in his capacity as Special Assistant and the capacity as Secretary of State, and he called me back to say that General Scocroft would show me the documents I needed, and he did not.

Mr. Smothers. Just one question.

This file contained what, now, other than the NSAM?

Mr. Bundy. The only file that I had time to go through that I can recollect was the NSAM file, which is a relatively short one.

Mr. Smothers. For which time period?

Mr. Bundy. For the period surrounding August 1962.

Mr. Smothers. It was given to us as an existing file, or matters that had been pulled, or organized --

Mr. Bundy. No, they gave me the whole file, they were all documents that I have been involved with, it was nothing new to me. But the ones I was looking for were the ones relating to this subject.

Mr. Smothers. Were these only your documents?

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000
WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Mr. Bundy. As far as I recollect.

Mr. Smothers. And by your documents, I mean documents signed by you?

Mr. Bundy. They wouldn't be all signed by me, not every NSMA was signed by me. But they would all be documents for which I had responsibility.

Mr. Smothers. And the timeframe was --

Mr. Bundy. Sufficiently before and after to give me a picture of the political context of August 1962 in relation to Cuba.

Mr. Smothers. And do you recall when you saw this file?

Mr. Bundy. Well, as I say, it was in the context of my appearance before the Rockeferrer Commission. And that would be early this year. I don't have the dates, and I don't want to make a mistake on it.

Mr. Smothers. I am not trying to pin the date down. It would be helpful if you remember. But we can ask.

Mr. Schwarz.

Mr. Schwarz. I want to make sure that we have what we have done so for accurately summarized, and that you agree with it.

Can I use discussion of an assassination, will you accept that?

Mr. Bundy. It implies more seriousness and more sustained argument than I recollect.

Mr. Schwarz. So your records are, with respect to persons asking about --

Mr. Bundy. Or talking about.

Mr. Schwarz. -- or talking about assassination, that did occur, that it probably occurred on more than one occasion?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. And that one of the occasions may have been in the fall of 1961?

Mr. Bundy. What I recollect about the fall of 1961 is this question, what would happen if he is not there?

Mr. Schwarz. Which would be a relevant question to ask if one was talking about assassination.

Mr. Bundy. Yes. But I have no independent recollection of talks about assassination, Mr. Schwarz, and I musn't lead you by saying that I did.

Mr. Schwarz. In any event, passing from talking about or discussions or contingencies, to authorizations for action, and specifically focusing on this concrete period, was assassination authorized in the fall of 1961?

Mr. Bundy. Absolutely not.

Mr. Schwarz. In fact what was authorized in the fall of 1961?

Mr. Bundy. Well, we have a long document on that, I think.

Mr. Schwarz. And that is the MONGOOSE program?

Mr. Bundy. And that is the MONGOOSE programs.

Mr. Schwarz. In connection with the MONGOOSE program, you had some dialogue about the Attorney General which was quite extensive. Let me ask you one additional question on that subject. What was the relationship personally and professionally between the Attorney General and General Maxwell Taylor?

Mr. Bundy. It was very close. I think that they first met in a hardworking sense when they were -- I think they were both members of the committee to look into what happened after the Bay of Pigs, or if the Attorney General was not a member he was certainly closely interested.

Mr. Schwarz. He was a member.

Mr. Bundy. And I am sure the Attorney General was one of the people strongly favoring the appointment of General Taylor as the President's military advisor. They were both active and ardent tennis players, they liked each other, and they visited back and forth. One of the Kennedy children is named for General Taylor, I think. There was a relation of real trust and confidence between them. And the measure of its strength is that I think it easily survived later very shart differences over Vietnam.

Mr. Schwarz. Now recognizing that, what I am asking for you is a matter of opinion and not a fact, given your understanding of that relationship, will you give us your opinion the likelihood that Robert Kennedy, in the face of Maxwell Taylor's Chairmanship of the Special Group Augmented -- was Maxwell Taylor understood to be the Chairman of the Special Group Augmented?

Mr. Bundy. It certainly is my understanding.

Mr. Schwarz. Would Robert Kennedy in your opinion, in the fact of Maxwell Taylor's Chairmanship of the Special Group Augmented, have developed a bach-channel relationship with someone else for the purpose of assassinating Fidel Castro?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, in connection with MONGOOSE, you were a member of the Special Group Augmented, were you?

Mr. Bundy. I was. I wasn't its most faithful attender, but I was a member.

Mr. Schwarz. To the extent that you did attend, would you describe the nature of the meetings, what kind of items were brought before you, what was the process for decision making?

Mr. Bundy. It is very difficult to do that without documentary reconstruction. But in the broadest sense, I think I can do it. The kinds of things would be Cuban exiles, training them, how united are they, whose the leader, and what kind of operations against the island are we able to mount, specific proposals, just because I have seen it in the last two or three days -- I saw a sabotage program which involved, I think, oil facilities, tranrportation facilities, and a couple of other categories -- exfiltration was a frequent problem. I don't recall that we worried so much about getting the agents in, but there seems always to be a great problem about getting them out. And that sort of thing that I mentioned, propaganda, there was the one island enterprise -- was Florida doing much good, and how much does it cost and things of that sort.

Mr. Schwarz. At any MONGOOSE meeting did Mr. Harvey state that he had taken steps to assassinate Fidel Castro?

Mr. Bundy. I never heard anything from Mr. Harvey in any context in any meeting at any time on that subject.

Mr. Schwarz. And it was clear that the President was the person basically in control, perhaps not of the details, but of the general program; is that right?

Mr. Bundy. The President had worked it. The day to day operations where in the hands of different departments for different categories of programs. The coordinator was General Lansdale, and the Chairman of the Committee was General Taylor.

Mr. Schwarz. Would you turn to Lansdale Tab 38, please? Where is the August 8 document that transmits the new guidelines for MONGOOSE?

Mr. Kelley. That is Lansdale Tab 20.

Mr. Schwarz. The new guidelines, I mean the August guidelines.

Mr. Kelley. 38.

Mr. Schwarz. 38A.

Was there a change in or about August between what was characterized as Phase I of Operation MONGOOSE and a step-up activities under the MONGOOSE?

Mr. Bundy. It appeared to be so from the documents I have been reviewing. I couldn't give you an independent recollection on that point.

Mr. Schwarz. You have got no reason to doubt that there was some step-up commencing in August?

Mr. Bundy. I think that sounds reasonable. I just don't have any expertise other than as a reader many years later.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, with respect to the August 10 meeting, you have previously testified - - I am not sure you have -- do you recall the subject of assassinations being brought up?

Mr. Bundy. In the August 10 meeting? No.

Mr. Schwarz. Specifically, do you recall Mr. McNamara ever bringing the subject of assassinations up?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. We have shown you notes of Mr. Harvey on August 14, and General Lansdale's memorandum of August 13 that refers to the liquidation of leaders and certain things whited out. Do you remember seeing those?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. Do they refresh your recollection?

Mr. Bundy. No. They give me no -- they do not persuade me. I simply don't from that suddenly have any flash, so and so said that, not at all.

Mr. Schwarz. But you don't have any reason to question them, you just don't have a recollection, is that fair?

Mr. Bundy. I simply tell you that I was in a large meeting in which a great many subjects were discussed, and I have no recollection of that.

Mr. Schwarz. I will pass around Mr. Bundy's notes from the meeting. If someone thinks they should be marked we can do that.

Mr. Bundy. If the Committee is feeling charitable I hope they may not go into them.

Mr. Schwarz. I don't think they will, but I thought we would pass them around in case they were.

The Chairman. Let the Senators see them.

Mr. Schwarz. We will make one observation, though. Both Mr. Rusk's calendar and Mr. Bundy's notes do not indicate Mr. Lansdale's being present at the meeting, although the minutes of the meeting do. And I take it you have no independent recollection of whether or not he was not there.

Mr. Bundy. I have no objection to entering anything in anything that memorandum that the Committee thinks is relevant. It simply illustrates what the hand will do while the mind is elsewhere.

The Chairman. Can you identify what you meant by the words, "Worms who were opposing".

Mr. Bundy. "Worms" was a Cuban word, gusanos, and it was their own word for themselves, Cubans in opposition to Castor.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Schwarz. Mr. Bundy, would you mark with a B your notes of the August 10 meeting.

And Mr. Reporter, will you mark that as Bundy Exhibit 4.

(Document referred to was marked as Bundy Exhibit No. 4 for identification.)

The Chairman. Going back to the doodle sheet, the last item in your handwritten underlined -- do you have this?

Mr. Bundy. The Lansdale concept?

The Chairman. Is that concept?

Mr. Bundy. Concept. I don't wonder you ask.

The Chairman. Do you recall what you meant by that?

Mr. Bundy. My guess -- and this is a reconstruction really -- is that that has to do with the Lansdale plan which we were referring to a minute ago, his long memorandum of August 8, outlining all the things that might now be done under the MONGOOSE.

Mr. Smothers. Would that have been planned plus?

Mr. Bundy. We argue about plans -- this is again reconstruction -- and I think I saw it in some discussion -- we argued about plans A and B and C, and settled on so-called B Plus, which I hope you have for the record, because that would show what the decision was.

Mr. Schwarz. We do have it.

The Chairman. This was the 10th day of August 1962. And that was about the time that some concern was given to be expressed as to the possibility that the Russians were moving into Cuba -- moving missiles into Cuba. You have on the memorandum, I think, "USSR will put missiles". Do you recall what you meant by that?

Mr. Bundy. I think what that is, a hand following somebody elses, and the somebody else would most likely to be Mr. McCone.

The Chairman. All right.

Where are we, Mr. Schwarz.

Mr. Schwarz. In NSAM 181 -- which will you please mark as Exhibit 5. You will find it at Lansdale Tab 41.

(Document referred to was marked as Lansdale Exhibit No. 5 for identification.)

Mr. Schwarz. Do you have that in front of you, Mr. Bundy?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, I have.

Mr. Schwarz. This reflects a number of options or study that the President called for in the light of the evidence of new block activities in Cuba. Was that evidence connected with the missiles?

Mr. Bundy. Well, there was quite a buildup reported in the press and in the intelligence initially of Soviet military personnel, of Soviet surface-to-air missiles. And the crucial question was, what for and what is coming. And the Director of Central Intelligence -- who was proved in the end to be right -- was almost alone in his belief that this was going to lead to a nuclear capability in Cuba that could hit the U.S. And he raised these questions in the month of August in a number of different ways. And the National Security meeting from which this memorandum emerged reviewed those problems, and as the memorandum itself shows, the heavy emphasis of the President's concern and of the Group's concern on the likelihood that developed and what should be done about it, or in preparation for it, in August.

Mr. Schwarz. The memorandum has quite a range of matters to be considered. And they range from, if I can use the characterization, on the soft side, Item 1, which was consideration of the U.S. pulling its missiles near the Soviet Union out of Turkey, two, on the hard side, Items 7 and 8 , which are military possibilities of invasion or some other military possibilities in connection with Cuba. Now, is that a typical exercise that that White House, the President and yourself would go through to look at a number of options ranging from the soft to the very tough?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Let me say in passing that there was nothing soft about the problem of getting the Jupiter missiles out of Cuba.

Mr. Schwarz. Conciliatory, would that be the word?

Mr. Bundy. It problem of actually getting them out which we came to in the following year was one which demanded great diplomatic energy and finesse on the part of the State and Defense Departments. But you are right. A wide range of issues charactically would be discussed. And the President had a habit of trying to look at problems from many angles.

Mr. Schwarz. Were you fully in touch with the President in connection with what became the missile crisis.

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. Was there any discussion of assassinating Fidel Castro during that period?

Mr. Bundy. None.

Mr. Schwarz. Was there agreement reached that as part of the solution to the missile crisis that related to U.S.

action vis-a-vis Cuba. There was a so-called no invasion pledge. There was an undertaking on our side that if the offensive capabilities -- and there was an argument on what those were -- were removed, we on our side would undertake -- I don't want to present this language as if it is deeply mathmatically precise -- but there was an undertaking on our side that there would not be an assassination of Cuba.

The Chairman. Was that ever published?

Mr. Bundy. Yes. If my language is inconsistent with what was published, then what was published should take precedence, because I am only trying to report that.

Mr. Schwarz. Did this agreement exclude the sabotage of Cuban facilities?

Mr. Bundy. Not in my view or in anyones' view in the U.S. Government. Just to give you an example of things it did not exclude, it did not exclude continued surveillance, which is not perfectly normal in relations between friendly states, that you overfly and check out what they are doing. But surveillance was an explicit and public part of the necessary concern for U.S. satisfaction with the resolution of the Cuban missile crisis.

Mr. Schwarz. Recognizing again that this is calling for an opinion, during the course of the missile crisis did anything happen with respect to the attitudes and actions of either the President or the Attorney General that in your end cb. fls fw.

opinion bears upon the likelihood that at other times one or the other of them ordered the assassination of Fidel Castro?

Mr. Bundy. Well, yes. There are a great many things that enter into my judgment about whether the President or the Attorney General would ever have done that, and I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that the most important point I want to make, just from where I stand personally is that I find the notion that they separately, privately encouraged, ordered, arranged efforts at assassination totally inconsistent with what I knew of both of them. And as an example, I would cite -- and only one among very many -- the role played by the Attorney General in the Missile Crisis, because it was he who, most emphatically, argued against a so-called surgical air strike or any other action that would bring death upon many, in favor of the more careful approach which was eventually adopted by the President in the form of a quarrantine or a blockade.

The Chairman. Well, Mr. Bundy, let me put what may be the same question a little different way.

You came to know both the President and the Attorney General rather intimately in the period of your long association with them, did you not?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman. Based upon that acquaintanceship, do you believe, under any of the circumstances that occurred during that whole period, either one of them would have authorized the assassination of Fidel Castro?

Mr. Bundy. I most emphatically do not.

7 6 0 0 0 3 0 5 1 1

Let me make a more general point that comes at it from another way.

If you have heard testimony that there was pressure to do something about Cuba, there was. There was an effort, both from the President in his style and from the Attorney General in his style to keep the government active in looking for ways to weaken the Cuban regime. There was. But if you, as I understand it, and not even those who pressed the matter most closely as having essentially been inspired by the White House can tell you that anyone ever said to them, go and kill anyone.

Let me say one other thing about these two men, and that is that there was something that they really wanted done, they did not leave people in doubt, so that on the one hand, I would say about their character, their purposes and their nature and the way they confronted international affairs that I find it incredible that they would have ordered or authorized explicitly or implicitly an assassination of Castro. I also feel that if, contrary to everything that I know about their character, they had had such a decision and such a purpose, people would not have been in any doubt about it.

The Chairman. Then have you any way to explain to the Committee, or any explanation to give to the Committee, as to why Mr. Helms would testify that he was under, or that he had no doubts, that the Agency was fully authorized to proceed to not only develop schemes, but to engage in active attempts to assassinate Castro?

Mr. Bundy. I have no explanation of that.

Senator Mondale. Part of our attempt to solve this riddle of what would appear to be a record at the highest level, which is at least not directly an order of an assassination plot or attempt, and square it with the fact that attempts were made, is to seek to understand the personalities and motivations and methods of operation of people further down the chain of command.

We have heard quite a few evaluations of Mr. Harvey as a free-wheeling, James Bond kind of operator, and it has been suggested through some disquiet and apprehension at higher levels about the nature of his conduct. And I would -- I don't know. I am beginning to have doubts about Mr. Helms whom I have always admired. There is, for example, a memorandum that is in the record to Mr. Rusk in response to a memo which the Secretary wrote Mr. Helms following an article appearing in some Cuban newspaper charging that the Mafia had been hired and used by the CIA to assassinate Castro, in which Helms specifically and categorically denies flat out that any such relationship existed when in fact it did and when in fact Mr. Helms was part of it.

Now, how do we sort this out? Is Mr. Helms someone who might have, on his own, gone beyond the authority conferred upon him by persons higher up?

Mr. Bundy. Well, if you had asked me that question a year ago, Senator, I would have said in my experience with him he was not such an officer, but I have no way of dealing with the kind of thing you have just described.

Senator Mondale. It shatters me because I have always respected him. Because we know that these assassination attempts occurred. We know that Mr. Helms was a part of it. We have testimony that Mr. Helms and Mr. Harvey met and agreed not to tell Mr. McCone what they were doing. And then we have a document here -- well, that was Cubella -- and then we have a memo from Helms to Rusk which, in Minnesota language looks like a lie. Now, I just don't know. Maybe there are other explanations.

The Chairman. The memo to Rusk had to do with Cubella rather than the Mafia.

Senator Mondale. Is that it? It was not the Mafia?

Mr. Schwarz. It was Cubella, except if you just substitute Cubella for the word Mafia.

The Chairman. What you said otherwise is correct.

Senator Mondale. But he was involved personally with Cubella, wasn't he? And he knew that, and this memo said no. Is there a plausible explanation?

Mr. Madigan. Helms has one.

Senator Baker. Helms' position is that he did not lie, that he did not have anything to do with the Cubella incident, is that right?

Mr. Madigan. I think Helms claimed that Cubella is in the strict context of the memos, operating on his own.

The Chairman. Well, I believe rather than speculate, we had better look back carefully, and that ought to be another subject for Mr. Helms when he returns.

Senator Mondale. Well, then I will stand corrected.

Senator Hart of Michigan. Would you yield?

I want to make the same record note that I suspend the comment I made about that document yesterday. I thought it was a flat-out lie.

Senator Mondale. I did too. I withdraw that, and I think it would be good if the staff would write us a little memo.

Senator Baker. Fritz might like to know that yesterday I asked Counsel if they, as a combined staff operation, would prepare for us, and I believe they agreed to do this, prepare for us two briefs, one citing the testimony and the exhibit evidence, that would support an inference that the authority was Presidential; and another brief, citing the record and the exhibit evidence citing the inference that it was not. There is an abundance of both, to be frank with you. So that we can lay them down side by side and make our own separate judgment.

Do I understand the staff is going to do it?

The Chairman. That is right.

Now, I have a couple of items of business, and you have been testifying for quite a long while. I think you ought to be given a break, Mr. Bundy.

Mr. Bundy. Do you want me to come back, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman. Yes, please, if you want to take a break for about five or ten minutes and then be available out in the anteroom, that will give us a chance to take care of this business.

(Pause)

(Whereupon at 11:17 a.m. the witness left the hearing room.)

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

The Chairman. We seem to have a developing problem for reasons unexplained with the Justice Department. I have already mentioned one aspect of that problem, in connection with the failure of the Department to supply most of the material that we have requested, though that request was put to the Department two months ago, and it has been decided already by the Committee that Mr. Levy and Mr. Kelley should be brought before the Committee in the hopes that these delays can be overcome.

The first question before the Committee is when that can be done. It is suggested that the Attorney General has Tuesday morning available. If it is all right with the Committee, I would like to schedule his appearance, together with that of Mr. Kelley, for Tuesday morning.

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman, I don't mean to intrude my personal convenience into this consideration unduly, but if the Attorney General could do it at Tuesday noon, say, it would help me. I have a commitment in Tennessee Monday night. If I catch the Tuesday morning plane I can't get here until 11:50.

If that's not possible, I will cancel Monday.

The Chairman. This is procedural in character, so it is not altogether important that every member be present. I think that from the standpoint of this Committee schedule, Tuesday morning, the Attorney General and Mr. Kelley would be good, would it not?

Mr. Miller. Yes.

Senator Baker. Well, why don't you leave it Tuesday morning.

The Chairman. We are only informed that he has Tuesday morning available.

Mr. Gitenstein. I spoke to Doug Marvin, one of his Executive Assistants, and he said Tuesday was a possibility, Wednesday is a problem because he has a Cabinet meeting and he wasn't sure about Tuesday and he was going to get back to us in the next hour or two.

The Chairman. Well, let's see if we can't set it up Tuesday.

Senator Baker. If you can set it up Tuesday afternoon and nobody objects, that would be better for me.

The Chairman. Well, if we can, we'll set it up Tuesday afternoon.

Senator Mathias. What is that for?

The Chairman. That is for Levy and Kelley to appear for the purpose of telling us why they can't, or why it has taken two months and we still are waiting for the documents, most of the documents we requested.

Senator Mathias. Well, I won't be here, but that's no reason.

Senator Baker. Are you going to be here Tuesday morning?

76 00 9 3 0 5 4 9

Senator Mathias. Don't worry about it.

The Chairman. All right.

The second thing I would like to bring up in this connection is that I was informed yesterday by the staff that the FBI has undoubtedly received instructions that none of its agents are to be interrogated or interviewed by the staff of this Committee. I would like someone who knows the details and can be very specific to tell the Committee the exact status of that situation, how we have been informed and if we can rely on that information as being authoritative.

Mr. Elliff. Yesterday morning at 9:00 o'clock or shortly thereafter, I received a phone call from the FBI's liaison with this Committee with respect to a series of interviews that had been arranged with the Bureau some relating to the Huston Plan, some relating to Martin Luther King matters. I was informed that I had to address this request to the Justice Department in order to secure approval for these staff interviews.

I then called our liaison in the Justice Department, Special Counsel William O'Conner, and he told me I might as well submit these requests in writing, because the Justice Department would take at least ten days to give us an answer on these requests and he didn't know what the answer was going to be.

I then explored with him what some of the reasons might be for this delay and what the problems seemed to be, and the explanation that he gave me verbally was that the fact that the Committee had notified the Department in its letter of June 27th that certain cases that we were investigating were abuse cases meant that any interviews that would be conducted in connection with those matters would be considered by the Department to be demand interviews, and therefore this brought into play the provisions of the Federal Regulations which require the Attorney General's approval.

Then the question as to whether the Attorney General would approve or not involved two issues. First was that since we had indicated the likelihood of an abuse in a particular area that the Department itself would have to consider whether it should institute a criminal investigation of that matter, and then, if so, whether our interview would interfere with that ongoing criminal investigation.

And second, that the Department considered that any interviews undertaken by the Committee in such cases might inadvertently immunize the subject of the interview, and he referred generally to some cases and we have attempted to do legal research on those cases and find this to be a very shaky position but they have good lawyers over there and if they want to come up with a sophisticated argument, we expect that they could be able to do that.

The Chairman. Lawyers can make an argument over anything.

Mr. Elliff. That's so. And so the final conclusion is that he did anticipate that subpoenas would be required in every instance and this position is very difficult for us to accept because interviews, the low-key interview in the non-pressure situation is an opportunity to elicit information that is not matched by the formal subpoena situation, and to be able to proceed initially by interview and then confirm, under oath, via subpoena, is just absolutely essential for an effective investitation. So this is where we stand on this issue.

We later received a letter pertaining to an earlier request for interviews relating to FBI COINTELPRO disruptive activities where we had asked for certain interviews, and this letter did not go into specifics, but merely stated that there were problems that would have to be resolved, that the characterization of an area of the Committee inquiry as abuse might significantly alter arrangements of access to witnesses who are present employees of the Department.

The Chairman. In other words, the thrust of all of this is that the more serious the nature of the inquiry, the more difficult it will be to obtain the information, that if we are concerned about a possible illegality or abuse, then the Department will make it as difficult as possible for us to secure the information.

Mr. Elliff. I might add that it seems to be in the nature of the documents also, the more serious the allegation, the more resistance there is to providing us --

They have given us a good many documents. They have not given us the documents on the controversial matters. They've given us plenty of documentation on less controversial matters.

The Chairman. I think it is ironic that the resistance we get from the Justice Department is so much more substantial than the resistance we have gotten from the CIA.

Senator Baker. That's not necessarily so. I agree with you the resistance is unfortunate and inappropriate, but I can think of a request for documentation from the CIA that is now more than a month old and they haven't had the good grace to tell us no. They have told us nothing.

The Chairman. But on the whole we've gotten a greater measure of cooperation from the CIA.

Senator Schweiker. I wonder, does either counsel know, Mr. Chairman, whether the Attorney General or the FBI Director initially confirmed whether they made any commitments to Congress about supplying documents or materials to the Committee?

Mr. Miller. Senator Mathias can tell you, and Senator Hart.

Senator Schweiker. Might there be a statement in their testimony in confirmation, in agreeing to furnish Congress with materials of this nature?

Senator Mathias. Yes, those statements were made, but let me say, since my opinion has been asked, that I had a most discouraging talk with the Attorney General a couple of weeks ago. I went down to talk to him about privacy legislation and the Department of Justice at the moment is taking about as hard a line as any kind that I know of in the last fifteen years. Its whole kind of attitude --

Senator Tower. I just wonder if we shouldn't take this up with them.

The Chairman. I think we should, but I think we should also, in advance of that, in view of the kinds of signals we are now getting from the Justice Department, indicate that we believe that these objections that they are raising, or questions that they are raising, are a serious impediment procedurally to our Committee and that we have every intention of interviewing such agents as may be necessary, and that if necessary, we will subpoena them.

Mr. Elliff. Our feeling is it is preferable not to proceed by subpoena, but we do have a subpoena for one FBI agent which we brought with us today which we would like to proceed with.

The Chairman. Can you give us the facts of that case?

Mr. Epstein. This is an agent who is presently in Atlanta, Georgia, and the information we've received from other witnesses was that in 1964, I believe, he visited a newspaper editor in Atlanta, closed the door, put his hat on the desk, and said he noted from reading The Constitution that we were picturing Dr. King as a moral leader and something of a hero and then this agent went on to talk in great detail about Dr. King's personal life which he claimed he had learned from a confidential source, and our interest in interviewing this agent obviously relates to the circumstances surrounding that visit to a newspaperman, who directed him to do that, what the purpose of that visit was, whether there was any documentation --

Senator Baker. Who was the newspaper man?

Mr. Epstein. His name was Eugene Patterson and he was with the Atlanta Constitution at that time. He's now with a newspaper in Florida.

The Chairman. Do you believe the subpoena now to be necessary because of what you have been told by the Justice Department?

Mr. Elliff. We have other agents which we would like to proceed with at the interview level, so we would like to proceed at both levels to get their reaction to both types of requests. What is their reaction to a subpoena going to be, what is their reaction to a renewed request to interview going to be?

So we crystallize each issue.

Senator Tower. I still think it might be good for us to hold that up until we talk about it, since they are coming in Tuesday morning or Tuesday sometime, it's not going to push things too far.

Senator Hart of Michigan. Would it be useful, at least, if it is the feeling of the Committee to authorize you people, or Bill, today, to say that the Committee barely suppressed its outrage and that it won't do, and we will see you Tuesday? Don't wait till Tuesday.

The Chairman. I think something should be said, actually.

Senator Hart of Michigan. Well, it prejudges the hell out of it, but unless we get an extension to 1980 for this Committee --

The Chairman. I think you're right. Something needs to be said publicly that the Committee is determined that we feel that not only has time -- we've already said, we've already made public the letter we have sent. I think a follow-up needs to be that we are concerned that impediments that are now being suggested which would interfere with the Committee's right to interrogate witnesses, we do not intend to allow the Committee's work to be obstructed and if necessary we will be prepared to subpoena witnesses though we would hope that that would not have to be the case.

Senator Baker. And we are going to try to work it out from Tueday.

The Chairman. We're going to try to work it out from Tuesday.

Senator Baker. I have a business matter.

The Chairman. So does Senator Mondale.

Senator Mondale. Just one point.

7600030555

There is this troublesome dictum in U.S. vs. Nixon about what might be nondiscoverable, all of which seems to bear on sort of foreign policy matters.

Am I correct -- I think we're going to hear a lot about that -- but am I correct in reading that decision that it really is almost stands wholly that they have the duty to produce all of the documentation and that case holds for that proposition, so that in our CIA matters, while they might raise some of this dictum, the FBI has no such defense, unless we're really trodding on those same grounds.

Mr. Epstein. Of course, there is another issue in the Bureau materials, because we're on the issue of investigative files, which has never been really litigated, and that is the propriety of Executive Privilege when it comes to that.

I might add that the importance of the issue of going to subpoena on these really raises that, because if we go to subpoena on documents, then that is going to be worthless unless we know in advance that we are going to win in court in a short period of time, including whether we have jurisdiction to be there.

Senator Mondale. In other words, you are saying they are going to raise the Executive Privilege defense, but that was the Nixon defense.

Mr. Epstein. I think that they would love for us to be in the position of having to issue a subpoena for documents, because then it would be a year.

Mr. Schwarz. The problem is the Ervin Committee was found not to have jurisdiction to issue the subpoena.

The Chairman. Well, we know we're going to do the next step on that.

Now, may I raise one other point --

Senator Baker. That's not quite true. The Ervin Committee wasn't found to have no jurisdiction or standing to seek the documents or to issue subpoenas, but they failed to carry the burden of proving that it was required under the mandate of their inquiry.

Now, I have another matter, Frank.

The Chairman. We have two or three matters. Can I recognize Senator Mondale first, because he had asked it.

Senator Mondale. A few days ago, when the White House people were here, they showed us a document which we have in our files which disclosed that President Nixon in 1970 had ordered the delivery of three machine guns to some people in Chile and had done so with instructions that that order should go directly to some subordinate officials in CIA and should be done without advising the official channels. And it is thought that they were directed against a General Schneider, who was a top official in the Chilean government opposed to a coup. He was a Constitutionalist.

Schneider was killed, and there was a machine gun in the possession of those who did so.

Now what I would like is, while we finish this cycle on assassinations, that we include among our studies of alleged assassinations this matter and we request the documentation, of all appropriate documents, under the category of assassination.

Mr. Schwarz. Senator, when that document came to our attention, we questioned a person who expands upon the allegations contained in the documents. I wrote a letter to the White House and the CIA. We wanted forthwith to receive copies of all such documents relating to the passage of weapons. We have had no response from the CIA.

Mr. Hills, we met with in the White House a week ago Tuesday or Wednesday, and I said we must have the documents and he said you cannot have them until you have the briefing on Chile, because we refuse to accept this as an assassination plan.

The Chairman. May I make this suggestion, Senator Mondale?

First of all, I believe that it is absolutely imperative that the Committee complete its investigation on the issue of the assassination of foreign government leaders before the recess and issue its report. That puts us under great pressure, but if we don't do it, I am going to ask the Committee to stay on the job. I would like very much to go to China, that is my first opportunity in forty years to go to China, and I have such a trip laid on, but I am going to set it aside and ask the Committee to continue its work right into the recess until this is done. Otherwise, we are in a hopeless situation.

Senator Schweiker. I think, Mr. Chairman, if we don't finish it by then, we never will.

tape 1b

The Chairman. We never will!

I think we should look into this assassination, it is an assassination. I think it's part of our responsibility to look into it. But it is not an assassination, whatever the CIA input may have been, it is not an assassination of a head of state, and so therefore I don't want it to further delay the completion of this phase of our inquiry.

Now with that in mind, I am in full accord with what Senator Mondale says.

Senator Schweiker. Could we put it to another phase and not in this phase?

The Chairman. Yes, we are going to have a phase on Chile, anyway. It would fit into the Chilean case.

Senator Mondale. It is significant because if we accept their interpretation that it is not assassination, then we avoid an understanding that we had that these documents, all supposed to be available, then we get into a discovery problem.

In other words, I know what we're getting at, and I would guess that we should proceed as rapidly as possible, but we shouldn't hold up the cycle of --

76 0 0 0 3 0 5 5 5

Senator Schweiker. Well Fritz, there is another question along the same lines, and that is why I don't want to see it cloud this issue, and that is the Glomar Explorer, stopped by the NLRB proceeding was shown to have stopped in Chile just about a week or so before Allende was killed, just by coincidence for mechanical repairs. I would like to find out that one, too.

But this is a whole new thing. This puts us into the Chile thing. Because I'm just as interested as you are. I don't see that it hurts anything to put it in a Phase II proposition with Chile.

The Chairman. And Fritz, we can say that the Committee regards it in the category of assassination, but we can differentiate it from the initial report, which does deal with foreign leaders.

Senator Hart of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, before you go to a new subject -- and I am uneasy raising this -- but your reply reminds me, you say that we are going to conclude assassinations and issue our report before we go on recess. I think that disposes too readily of the problem that is going to confront us in a very few weeks, and that is having heard all of this, now what do we do? I don't think we have decided yet how we are going to present, once we open the doors, we've got to know how we are going to handle it. I don't think we ought to lock ourselves in at the moment to a written report, as we leave town the first of August.

Senator Baker. I agree with you 100 percent.

The Chairman. This Committee has got to get its business done and I know the purpose of the delay downtown is to make it as difficult as possible for us to cope with our work. We will be engulfed completely if we cannot deal with this phase of our work in the time that we have given it and put it over until the fall. What I'm suggesting is not just simply the report of the Committee. We are going to complete our witnesses, that we have time to issue such a report.

I am also suggesting the recommendations the Committee will make with respect to this issue. We have to put this behind us. It is just folly not to do it, because we must get on with the other phases of the report and there is no reason we cannot do it. If we can't do it by the end of this month, then we're not going to be any more advantaged or any better advantaged to then go out on our recess and come back and take it up anew in the fall. It is a very clear-cut issue.

Senator Hart of Michigan. But what is not clear-cut to me is how we report to our peers.

The Chairman. We will take that up.

Senator Schweiker. We discussed that at one meeting. We had a little informal meeting. Maybe you missed that, Phil.

The Chairman. There is nothing that could be gained by putting it off or defering it or postponing it. It is very clear that we are working at a highly intensified pace in order to get the necessary evidence, and then there is no reason why we can't address ourselves to this question.

Senator Hart of Michigan. The only reason that I raise that is that I am as anxious to conclude this chapter, but this Committee, as a Committee, then must decide the ultimate question: do you have open hearings? Do you go to a closed Senate?

The Chairman. That will be a top item of consideration for the Committee. I have only deferred this discussion thinking that we had best get all of the evidence first. That is all. Then we will take it up at an appropriate time and discuss it.

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman, do I understand the situation to be then it is your hope that we will finish our Executive Session testimony before the August recess, but not a report to the Senate?

The Chairman. No, that is not my position. My position is that we should complete the testimony and make our report and recommendation on this issue.

Senator Baker. But without prejudice to a future determination of whether we have public hearings?

The Chairman. Oh, yes, that's always open to us. But I -- let me make it -- let's not have any misunderstanding there.

It is always open to this Committee to decide whether public hearings on this or any other issue should be arranged in the fall. Obviously, we cannot have them until fall.

My personal position is against public hearings on the issue of assassination. But what I am proposing is that the Committee make its report, and I think that is a question the Committee will have to take up and decide, and I think the appropriate way to disclose these facts, and I personally believe they must be disclosed, is through a report of the Committee that is made public, and I think that report should be made before the recess.

Senator Baker. I don't think we can do that.

Senator Tower. Mr. Chairman, physically we have got three weeks. Whether we can hear all of these witnesses and sit down and prepare the report and have the Committee agree on the report, report it to the Senate and have the Senate act on it in three weeks is questionable in my mind. I, like you, want to do it, but I wonder if we can do a workmanlike job and do it in that time.

The Chairman. Well, let me say this, that the very request that Senator Baker has made, and I hope we don't get into a too prolonged discussion on this issue because we cannot decide it right now, but the very report that Senator Baker has asked for is now in the process of preparation. That report gives, by necessity, as much of the meat, the briefs that Senator Baker has asked for, as much of the report, laying out the factual, the evidence that the Committee has seen. And I think this can be done. I know that we have to work very hard to do it, but I know that our position will be much worse in every way if we fail to do it.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000
WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Now without trying to decide that now, let us proceed.

Senator Schweiker. May I make one comment on that, Mr. Chairman?

I have had vacillating feelings on public hearings, and I think what I have come down on is this. I think we should go ahead and issue a preliminary report without public hearings. I think we should put the matter of public hearings in abeyance until we get into the Chile thing and some of the other areas of so-called assassinations that may not be Presidential assassinations per se and leave the Committee option that we may well want to elect to go into what happened in Chile publicly and bring up that assassination if that is what we determined.

I have trouble determining at this point in time whether we should have public hearings, and I think we ought to keep that option open as we go along.

The Chairman. I have no argument with the Senator on that score.

Senator Schweiker. I know. As I say, it reconciles with your views and it protects the rights of those who say they want public hearings.

The Chairman. I have no argument with that.

Senator Baker has another matter.

Senator Baker. It won't take but a brief moment.

I think I owe the Committee a report on the statement that I made to the Press a few moments ago. I did not intend to make a statement, but that it becomes impossible to avoid when you step outside in these circumstances.

The Chairman. It is a good thing for you that Senator Morgan is not present.

Senator Baker. As some of you may know, the news last night and again this morning carried a story to the effect that a Colonel, a retired Colonel in the Air Force by the name of Fletcher Prowdy, has alleged by Alexander Butterfield was an associate or an employee or a plant of something of the sort of the CIA when he was at the White House.

I was asked if I had any comment on that. I was asked if I was surprised by that, and my reply was I had heard that story before. I had never commented on it because I had no proof of it. And it's really so. As you know, in this town if you don't have confirmation of it you get into deep trouble.

Second, that I think it is worthy of looking into, and I said I thought the Prowdy statement added a new dimension to the rumors and I thought that it did warrant further investigation, that I would recommend that to this Committee at the appropriate time.

The Chairman. That is fine, and I have also said that I would ask the Committee for an investigation of this charge, and Bill Miller tells me we have already received from the Agency a preliminary report that is not satisfactory. We are pursuing it and getting further information.

Senator Schweiker?

Senator Schweiker. I have a brief matter I would like to seek the Committee's advice on.

Could we go off the record a minute?

The Chairman. Yes.

(Discussion off the record.)

Senator Hart of Colorado. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman, I have an item of business also.

When I was in Europe last week and pursuant to the direction of the Chairman and staff I tried to contact our friend QJWIN to try to wrap up that link of the chain with, I must say, the complete cooperation of the CIA and Mr. Colby, who in fact sent a person over there to help uncover this individual. We know who he is and where he is.

The CIA American contact talked to him, largely for the reason that he feels extreme loyalty still to the Agency and to one or two particular people that he worked with and through. He opted not to meet with me or anybody else. The feeling is, both on my part and Mr. Colby's, that if we got his contact in that chain to get in touch with him directly that he would talk to us, and I leave it to the Committee whether this is important enough for us to pursue and it would probably involve a couple of people going back over.

Senator Baker. What is your recommendation?

Senator Hart of Colorado. My own feeling, based almost purely on the principle that no stone should be left unturned is that we should do it.

There are some unanswered questions. He was here in the states in '63, he was not confined to one operation and we don't know what he was doing.

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman, I would recommend that we commission Senator Hart to do that for us.

Senator Hart of Colorado. It would take the cooperation of one of the witnesses we've had here before to do it.

The Chairman. What is your recommendation, Senator Hart, I'm sorry?

Senator Hart of Colorado. That we should do it, that we should get the cooperation of Mr. O'Donnell.

The Chairman. That we should do what?

Senator Baker. Interview QJWIN in Europe.

Senator Mathias. Which means somebody has to do it and take O'Donnell with him.

Senator Baker. Take Mathias and Hart.

The Chairman. It is a very sensitive matter, if his cover -- well, one thing this Committee must worry about --

Senator Schweiker. What would you hope to get out of it, Gary?

Senator Hart of Colorado. What his orders were, what his scope of authority was, what he was doing over and above -- well, what he was doing in the Congo, what he was doing over and above his Congo operations, why he was in Florida in 1963.

The Chairman. Well, Gary, when you told me this, you told me that this man had said to the CIA go between who was trying to arrange this interview that first of all he preferred not to be questioned, and secondly, if he were questioned, he would lie.

Senator Hart of Colorado. That was on the basis of the appointment we were trying to arrange then, and that was purely because of his loyalties to the Agency. The case was not presented well to him. What I am saying is if we took back his contact for whom he feels loyalty and the fellow should talk, I think the feeling of the person who had made the original contact is that he would talk.

It was not presented to him in the way that the Agency wanted him to do it.

The Chairman. How valuable do you think this information is to the Committee? I'll tell you my concern. My concern is the one thing I have feared more than anything else, in this investigation is that we take some action that allows them to say that we have blown the cover of some valuable agent abroad, and this is what they feared all along, and the whole intelligence apparatus would be gravely weakened and the men in the field would be jeopardized by investigation of this kind.

We take that chance with this kind of -- and what do we learn from it? Is it worth that chance?

Senator Hart of Colorado. Well, that question could be asked of any witness that we have in here. Number two, the CIA, Mr. Colby and the Chief of Station in 15-25 Amsterdam, have no doubts that this can be carried out without any security breach whatsoever. Now that's the CIA. He has not worked for them in ten years.

The Chairman. And the CIA would be the first to jump upon the breach and say, we told you so.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Well, I leave it to the Committee. I can't tell you what we're going to find out, it may be zero.

Senator Mathias. The Station Chief does not raise that as one of the dangers.

Senator Baker. Yes, they did.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Nor does Colby.

Mr. Wides. Mr. Chairman, excuse me. The paper that suggests the possibility that Mr. Win might have been in the United States in 1963 is a paper involving the activity records of William Harvey who will be here this afternoon and that may be that you can get more testimony under oath from him that will shed some light as to whether he was just using QJWIN as a cover which is what he told me, the designation for billing, or whether he's willing to give out some more testimony.

The Chairman. Well, let us get that additional information --

Senator Baker. One further point, Mr. Chairman, that might be of interest if my memory is correct, and I believe it is correct, is that the major commercial cover for the Agency in Amsterdam was run by the Mullin Company.

15-25 29

Senator Hart of Colorado. Frank, he's not worked for the Agency in ten years. He's not an active agent.

The Chairman. Suppose that he were to tell us something that is of importance, then how do we cross-examine him? Then we have to bring him here for cross-examination, then we have blown his cover.

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman, may I say one other thing? I meant to say it, and I frankly forgot, just so my colleagues know what I'm about and not that I'm doing it behind their back.

I got a call last night from one of the editors of Harper's magazine in Europe relaying to me that Bernard Barker wanted to talk to me, and he thinks about the Butterfield situation, and I intended to call him, but I wanted you to know that.

The Chairman. That's fine.

Let's defer decision right now, on that decision, Senator

Hart.

Let's get our witness back and complete his testimony this morning.

32

(Whereupon, at 12:00 noon the witness re-entered the hearing room.)

The Chairman. All right.

You understand that the oath still applies to this part of the testimony?

Mr. Schwarz will renew the questioning.

Mr. Schwarz. Mr. Bundy, I want to call your attention now to 1963, the Missile Crisis is over. Was there another reassessment of Cuban policy in the winter and spring of '63?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, there was.

Mr. Schwarz. Again, did that reassessment of Cuban policy involve a lot of reassessment of a lot of options?

Mr. Bundy. That is my refreshed recollection.

Mr. Schwarz. All right.

We've shown you a lot of documents, mostly by you in that period, but some to you as well, and was one of the options the consideration of the possibility that Mr. Castro might defect or might be communicated to in a way that would bring him around more closely to the United States?

Mr. Bundy. The question of opening communications with Fidel Castro arises in 1963, I think at more than one time, and without having my attention drawn to specific documents, I wouldn't be able to spell that out very much.

Mr. Schwarz. But you agree that it is in there, and it is in there?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. Now did you also consider, in the spring of 1963, as you had in the fall of 1961, what would happen if Castro died or were killed?

Mr. Bundy. What we did, we certainly posed the question, the precise form is not clear to me, but what I now know from the documents you have shown me, is we posed to the Director of the Office of National Estimates, a Dr. Sherman Kent --

Mr. Schwarz. And what did Dr. Sherman Kent say in response to that inquiry?

Mr. Bundy. Well, I would have to look at his response.

Mr. Schwarz. All right.

I would like to then mark a string of documents so you can have that in front of you.

All right, would you mark as item 6, Bundy item 6, the Bundy memorandum to the President dated January 4, 1963, which appears at Bundy Tab K.

(The document referred to was marked Bundy Exhibit No. 6 for identification.)

34

Mr. Schwarz. I'll mark a string, Mr. Bundy, and if Mr. Kelley could put it in front of you, we'll then talk about them.

As Bundy Exhibit 6-A, the memorandum for the record, Meeting on Cuba, 3 April '63, between the President, the Attorney General, yourself and five or six other people.

Mr. Bundy. Right.

(The document referred to was marked as Bundy Exhibit No. 6-A for identification.)

35

Mr. Schwarz. As Bundy 6-B, the Special Group minutes of April 11, 1963.

(The document referred to was marked Bundy Exhibit No. 6-B for identification.)

Mr. Schwarz. As Bundy Exhibit 6-C, the memorandum also dated April 11, 1963 from Mr. Gordon Chase to yourself, headed Cuban Policy.

(The document referred to was marked Bundy Exhibit 6-C for identification.)

37

Mr. Schwarz. As Bundy 6-D, the minutes of a meeting of the Special Group, 18 April 1963.

(The document referred to was marked Bundy Exhibit 6-D for identification.)

Mr. Schwarz. As Bundy 6-E the Summary Record of NSC Standing Group Meeting, April 23, 1963.

(The document referred to was marked Bundy Exhibit 6-E for identification.)

Mr. Schwarz. As Bundy 6-F, the memorandum for Mr. Bundy, Subject, Cuba Policy, dated April 23, 1963.

(The document referred to was marked Bundy Exhibit 6-F for identification.)

40

Mr. Schwarz. As Bundy 6-G, the Agenda for the meeting of the Standing Group, meeting Tuesday, April 30th, the document being dated April 29th and signed by you.

(The document referred to was marked Bundy Exhibit 6-G for identification.)

41

Mr. Schwarz. 6-H, the memorandum for members of the Standing Group dated May 2, 1963.

(The document referred to was marked Bundy Exhibit 6-H for identification.)

Mr. Schwarz. Finally, as Bundy 6-I, the Central Intelligence Agency, Office of National Estimates, May 13th, 1963, draft memorandum, Subject: Developments in Cuba and Possible U.S. Actions in the Event of Castro's Death.

(The document referred to was marked as Bundy Exhibit 6-I for identification.)

Mr. Schwarz. Now, have you had a chance to read them again, Mr. Bundy?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. In summary, Mr. Bundy, is it a fair characterization of these papers that you were, and the Standing Group was, examining the question of what the situation would be if Castro were to die?

Mr. Bundy. That is one of the things we were examining, certainly.

Mr. Schwarz. That was a gamut of matters I tried to pose at the beginning of this line of questioning?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. That was one of the things you were considering?

Mr. Bundy. Right.

Mr. Schwarz. This was a period of time, as the fall of 1961 may also have been, when people asked about or talked about assassinations as a means of causing Mr. Castro's death.

Mr. Bundy. I am not aware of much conversation on that subject in the spring of '63, so I would have to take your word on that.

Mr. Schwarz. I am asking you, I have no word on that.

Mr. Bundy. No, I don't think there was much discussion in the spring of '63 on that subject.

Mr. Schwarz. Well, let's see if we can agree on some things first.

Can we further agree that the ultimate conclusion was that Castro's death would not be desirable for the United States?

Mr. Bundy. The recommendation, or the assessment, which comes back from the Office of National Estimates, makes it clear that the odds would be that, upon Castro's death, his brother Raul or some other figure in the regime would, with Soviet backing and help take over control.

Then it goes on to say that there might be divisions and splits, but that it was unlikely that anti-Communist forces would be able to take over without extensive U.S. help and probably U.S. military intervention.

Mr. Schwarz. All right.

Now, I would like to avoid having to go through every single document.

Mr. Bundy. So would I.

Mr. Schwarz. And see if I could get you to agree with this statement. You do agree that you were looking at a situation that would exist as if Castro were killed?

Mr. Bundy. That is one of the things we were looking at.

Mr. Schwarz. And in connection with that, was his being killed by assassination one of the ways which you understood he might be killed?

Mr. Bundy. I don't have any recollection of that point, of it being on our minds.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Schwarz. All right.

Then why were you looking at the question of his being killed? Was there something known?

Mr. Bundy. I really don't have any independent of it. My sense of events in 1963 is that the internal pressure from within the Administration to "do something about Cuba" was very much lower. There was, however, external pressure. There was political pressure in the United States, critics of the Administration were making speeches about how not enough was being done and we must get rid of the Castro regime, and as I think I may have said earlier, and I would like to say now, I think that one reason for getting an estimate of this kind was to get it on record from the point of view of those who did not think we should be fussing with questions of assassination or anything like it, that it was not a sound policy, leaving aside its moral meaning and wider political meaning from the point of view of the narrow objectives we had in Cuba.

Mr. Schwarz. Who was taking the position that assassination could be --

Mr. Bundy. I have no recollection on that.

Mr. Schwarz. But someone was?

Mr. Bundy. I have no recollection on that.

Mr. Schwarz. You have no recollection of any position being taken pro or con?

Mr. Bundy. I have no recollection of any specific conversation or position that triggered this particular inquiry.

WARD & PAUL

The Chairman. Well, isn't it perfectly plausible that this inquiry sought to examine what the situation would be in the event of Castro's death by whatever means it might occur?

Does it necessarily follow that because the Administration was making such a plausible inquiry against such a contingency that might arise at any time that therefore it was within the mind of the Administration to kill Castro? I don't see the connection.

Mr. Bundy. Well, you make my point, Mr. Chairman. That's just my point.

Mr. Schwarz. Now in connection with that, would you look at your own Agenda for the April 19th meeting, 6-G?

Under item 1 -- you distinguish between item 1 and item 2. Item 1 is the possible use of contingencies for the achievement of wider political objectives; and item 2 is programs that might be initiated by the United States government.

I call your attention to the fact that the reference to the possible death of Castro is one of the items under item 1 and not under item 2.

Mr. Bundy. That is correct.

Mr. Schwarz. And do you regard that as relevant to the exchange you had with the Chairman just now?

Mr. Bundy. It seems to me it bears out the Chairman's

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

point, that you have a number of possible things that might happen, that you would then have something to do something about, or to act in the light of. The other are the things that you might do without waiting for some contingency to arise.

Mr. Schwarz. Now the only remaining question I have on this group of documents is, how was it that the subject of the death of Castro -- do you investigate the possibilities of the death of foreign leaders as a regular matter?

Mr. Bundy. Well, the question "After Stalin, What?" was the staple of discussions in the 1940's, everywhere, academies and I would assume inside the United States government; the question after DeGaulle was a question about Western European policy for a great many years. And one could pick smaller figures, more and less controversial, and have the same kind of question coming up, in a situation in which a particular individual is as dominant a figure in a set of events which it had the two, quite contrasting but heavy consequences of the Bay of Pigs and the Missile Crisis, it doesn't seem to me to be an irrational question to ask, without any relation as to whether the United States itself would have any active advisory role or any role whatever in having that event come to pass.

Mr. Schwarz. All right.

Would you mark as Exhibit 7 the September 20 document -- which is the page -- which states the assassination of Castro was excluded in order to avoid his martyrdom.

(The document referred to was marked Bundy Exhibit No. 7 for identification.)

Mr. Schwarz. Mr. Kelley, would you take over the questioning of Mr. Bundy, with the permission of the Chairman, on that particular series of documents, which is at the heading, September 20th '63 on the chronology.

Mr. Kelley. Yes.

Let me show Mr. Bundy the documents.

Mr. Schwarz. Well, first, will you tell us where the documents are, because I couldn't find them under the heading you gave us.

Mr. Kelley. Yes.

In Bundy Book 2, there is at Tab A the memorandum dated July 25th, 1963 from Mr. George Denney to Mr. Crimmins, entitled "Cuba, Possible Courses of Action.

At Tab B of Bundy Book 2 is a memorandum dated September 20th, 1963, from Gordon Chase to Mr. Bundy, and this memorandum summarizes the Denney memorandum of July 25th.

Mr. Bundy, did you review these documents with members of the staff earlier this week?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, I did.

Mr. Kelley. Do you have any independent recollection of these documents?

Mr. Bundy. Well, as I read a document of this kind, which comes to me from a member of my own staff, I am very often reminded and I am in this case, that this is a document which I did review and that it reflects his arguments as I then heard them.

Mr. Kelley. Who was Mr. Gordon Chase?

Mr. Bundy. Well, he was an assistant of mine at the time with special responsibilities for Cuban affairs, and perhaps more widely in Latin America. He was at that time a foreign service officer secunded to the White House.

Mr. Kelley. Did he have any responsibility for covert actions?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Kelley. Did he provide staff assistance to you with respect to the Special Group or the Special Group (Augmented)?

Mr. Bundy. Well, he may have done in some exceptional case when I needed his opinion on a matter, but in ordinary cases he would not have been party to Special Group work.

Mr. Kelley. What kind of things did he do with the special responsibility for Cuba? What did that involve?

Mr. Bundy. He would be keeping in touch with the Cuban Task Force, which by this time was in the Department of State, the MONGOOSE operation having been disbanded. He would have been responsible for keeping me alert to matters that were proceeding in that Task Force that might have an implication for the White House.

Mr. Kellay. Who was the head of the Cuban Task Force?

Mr. Bundy. Well I don't want to get this wrong, but I think by this time it was Mr. Crimmins.

Mr. Kelley. Mr. Crimmins was in the State Department and he was a foreign service officer?

Mr. Bundy. That is right.

Mr. Kelley. The Cuban Task Force, what was that?

Mr. Bundy. Well, it was the successor to the MONGOOSE group, but much less oriented toward secret operations than MONGOOSE, and the review of secret operations then came back under the complete control of the Special Group, by now, I think, called the 303 Committee, which was a lineal successor of 5412.

Mr. Kelley. I call your attention now to Mr. Denney's memorandum, which is at Tab A in Book 2, and it is true, is it not that the memorandum is to Mr. Crimmins?

Mr. Bundy. Right.

Senator Tower. Do you have any independent recollection of this memorandum?

Mr. Bundy. I have no knowledge that I ever saw it, and I did not find it familiar when I looked at it the other day.

Mr. Kelley. It is true, is it not, that Mr. Chase's memo to you summarizes this much longer memorandum by Mr. Denney?

Mr. Bundy. Is that what it is?

Mr. Schwarz. Does it do that, Mr. Kelley, because Chase memorandum starts by saying, here is a summary of Paul Sakwa's

Mr. Kelley. I think that is an error in Mr. Chase's memo, because it is clear that what is being summarized here is Mr.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Denney's memorandum.

Mr. Bundy. Let me suggest that you focus on Mr. Chase's memorandum with respect to my recollection and responsibility, that is clearly the operative document.

Mr. Kelley. With respect to Mr. Chase's memorandum, in his summary of the rationale of proposals, he states, as second, "the present importance of Castro as a nationalist symbol makes him the obvious operational target; assassination is excluded to avoid Castro's martyrdom."

Do you have any recollection of why he would exclude assassination? Does that imply to you, or do you recollect, whether Castro's assassination was being considered and here is a staff paper excluding it, because someone asked them to consider it?

Mr. Bundy. No, I think it's a simple statement of what I would regard as a rationale assessment of the situation by whoever the original author was, and certainly by the staff man with respect to a subject that emerges directly from the notion that he is an operational target, whatever that means and goes on to say, but we don't mean assassination, because it would make him a martyr, what other reasons against that there may be. It doesn't seem to me that you can read the statement that assassination is excluded as an inference that somebody else is including it.

Mr. Kelley. That's all.

Mr. Schwarz. In any event, Mr. Bundy, the document says it is excluded.

Mr. Kelley. That's right.

Mr. Schwarz. Now at that period of time in the fall of 1963, were you aware that through the offices of Ambassador Atwood, or Mr. Atwood, as he may have then been called, and through the offices of a French journalist called Jean Daniel, another effort was being made to establish contact with Mr. Castro?

Mr. Bundy. I remember the Atwood effort, as I recollect that he came to see me about it. I don't recollect specifically Jean Daniel, although it strikes a chord as you mention it.

Mr. Schwarz. What the purpose, very briefly, of Mr. Atwood's effort?

Mr. Bundy. Well, as I understood it, he had been approached by someone he knew from Cuba and had been given to understand that there was interest in, Castro had an interest in, opening communication, and he was exploring with us whether he could be encouraged to undertake such an explanation.

Mr. Schwarz. And did you encourage him?

Mr. Bundy. The exact form of our message to him, or our if you want to call it, the instruction to him, the President's decision, I can no longer recollect, but my impression is that we were interested, and that we did want him to explore it without engaging the President any more than he could help.

Mr. Schwarz. But was the President in fact informed and in fact approved the actions taken?

Mr. Bundy. That is my understanding.

Mr. Schwarz. Is it your understanding or your recollection?

Mr. Bundy. It is my recollection, but it is a recollection that is refreshed by what I have learned and hearing more about it in the last few days.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, were you told, in the fall of 1963, that assassination devices had been requested by a Cuban for the purpose of assassinating Mr. Castro, and that assassination devices were offered to the Cuban in the fall of 1963?

Mr. Bundy. No.

Mr. Schwarz. Now again, here, calling for a matter of opinion, as a matter of opinion, do you believe that at the same time, at a possible rapprochement with Mr. Castro was being pursued, the President would have authorized or permitted the passage of assassination devices intended for their use on Mr. Castro?

Mr. Bundy. Absolutely not.

Mr. Schwarz. I have nothing further on Castro.

The Chairman. Is there more?

Mr. Schwarz. Well, on Trujillo and Diem, with respect to Diem --

Mr. Smothers. Well, if you're going on to something else, there are a couple of things.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

Going back to an earlier memorandum which I don't believe is in the Bundy materials, but it has been talked about previously in a Committee hearing, a memorandum which will be identified as a Memorandum for the Record, dated 16 October 1962, a memorandum signed by Mr. Richard Helms.

(The document referred to was marked Bundy Exhibit No. 8 for identification.)

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Mr. Smothers. Mr. Bundy, I am going to read through this memorandum and ask you a couple of questions about that. It's a memorandum from Helms for the record on MONGOOSE.

Reading from this memorandum, Mr. Bundy, reading from Paragraph 2: "The Attorney General" -- well, let me read the entire paragraph.

"The Attorney General opened the meeting" -- we're talking about a MONGOOSE meeting -- by expressing the general dissatisfaction of the President," --"'dissatisfaction of the President'" in quotes -- "with Operation MONGOOSE."

Mr. Bundy. What date are we at? The date?

Mr. Smothers. The date of the memorandum is 16 October 1962.

"He pointed out that the Operation had been underway for a year, that the results were discouraging, that there had been no acts of sabotage, and that even the one which had been attempted had failed twice. He indicated that there had been noticeable improvement during the year in the collection of intelligence, but that other actions had failed to influence significantly the course of events in Cuba. He spoke of the weekly meetings of top officials on this problem, and again noted the small accomplishments, despite the fact that Secretaries Rusk and McNamara, General Taylor, McGeorge Bundy and he personally had all been charged by the President with finding a solution. He traced the history of General Lansdale's personal appointment by the President a year ago.

"The Attorney General then stated that in view of this lack of progress, he was going to give Operation MONGOOSE more personal attention. In order to do this, he would hold a meeting every morning at 0930 with the MONGOOSE operational representatives from the various agencies (Lansdale, Harvey, Hurwich, Ryan and General Johnson)."

Now, the best of our information, Mr. Bundy, is that these meetings were in fact held on a daily basis as indicated, and that they did involve Lansdale and these members of the working group noted.

Were you aware of such meetings?

Mr. Bundy. I have no independent recollection of them, but that does not sound implausible to me at all.

Mr. Smothers. It doesn't sound implausible to me that the Attorney General Lansdale and members of the working group to develop MONGOOSE activities with him?

Mr. Bundy. To report to him how they were getting on, and to see if he couldn't, by listening to those reports and keeping a lively -- keeping his lively concern in their consciousness move the thing more rapidly.

Mr. Smothers. This is your interpretation of giving more personal attention to it?

Mr. Bundy. Exactly.

Mr. Smothers. You say you had no knowledge of these in 1962?

Mr. Bundy. I didn't say that. I said I had no independent recollection of them.

Mr. Smothers. They did not come to your attention at that point?

Mr. Bundy. I didn't say say that. I don't know that they did, but I don't know that they didn't.

Mr. Smothers. But your recollection at this point is that they did not come to your attention?

Mr. Bundy. That is not my recollection. I don't recall that one way or the other.

Mr. Smothers. Okay.

Let me ask you then about your knowledge of the Lansdale situation.

Do you know General Lansdale?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Smothers. Do you know his reputation for truth and honesty?

Mr. Bundy. I don't think I have any -- his reputation for truth and honesty, if you ask me the question as one asks it about, you know, all kinds of people, I have no reason to question it. I have doubts about some of the things I have seen attributed to him in recent weeks.

Mr. Smothers. Well, let me put it this way. Would you believe General Lansdale under oath?

Mr. Bundy. It would depend on what he said.

Mr. Smothers. It would depend upon what he said.

Is your experience that General Lansdale is trustworthy only on a selective basis?

Mr. Bundy. You are asking me questions about matters essentially in which his testimony, as I have seen it reported.

Mr. Smothers. No, I am not asking you about his testimony. I am asking you if you would believe him under oath, based on your knowledge.

Mr. Bundy. It would depend upon what he said, and if it was a matter on which I had my own knowledge.

Mr. Smothers. Without regard to matters that General Lansdale has testified to before this Committee, based on your knowledge of him, your working relationship with him, your knowledge of what other people know of General Lansdale, his reputation in the community, if you will, would you believe him under oath?

Mr. Bundy. I would currently have to say that I could not give you a definite affirmative answer to that question.

Mr. Smothers. That's fine.

Now, let's go back to the period of General Lansdale's appointment.

General Lansdale was appointed as the coordinator of the Special Group, the Chief of Operations.

After General Taylor's efforts had been under effort for some time, six months, seven months, General Taylor comes in, I believe, in July after he completes his Bay of Pigs examination, General Lansdale is appointed by the President at the end of November.

76 0 0 0 3 0 0 0

Do you have any present recollection of the circumstances surrounding that appointment?

Mr. Bundy. None that goes beyond what I discussed earlier.

Mr. Smothers. To the best of your knowledge or recollection, did the appointment of this Chief of Staff or Chief of Operations reflect any lack of confidence in General Taylor on the part of either the Attorney General or the President?

Mr. Bundy. No, the opposite. General Taylor had heavy responsibilities in his general responsibility as military representative of the President. He was made Chairman of the Committee to keep oversight on this. It was inappropriate entirely in terms of his rank and his other duties that he should be the day to day action officer.

Mr. Smothers. Are you familiar with the degree of General Taylor's involvement with the development of the Special Group (Augmented) agendas? Was this done by General Taylor? Was it really General Lansdale's responsibility?

Mr. Bundy. I don't have any knowledge of the details of the operations of the staff. It was clear to me, and I think to everyone else, that the man in charge of that operation, of that Committee, was General Taylor.

Mr. Smothers. Okay.

Just one final series of questions.

If we might, Mr. Bundy, go back to our conversations regarding your request to see documents prior to your testimony before the Rockefeller Commission, when you talked to Mr. Kissinger, precisely what did you request of him?

Mr. Bundy. I said to him -- and again I cannot be precise -- and I thought that there were going to be questions with respect to which it would be much easier for me to give helpful and more accurate answers if I could have access to appropriate documents since I have taken no documents of that character, no official documents of that character, from the White House. And he said he entirely agreed and he made the appropriate arrangements.

Mr. Smothers. Did you ask for a timeframe for these documents?

Mr. Bundy. I don't recall that I did, but when I came to look more closely at what I needed to see, as I told you earlier, it related specifically to the period around August 1962.

Mr. Smothers. Did the White House make the selection of documents for you?

Mr. Bundy. No. The White House handed me a file of documents which covered the period.

Mr. Smothers. They handed you a file of documents covering roughly the August 1962 period?

Mr. Bundy. That's right.

Mr. Smothers. Had you made a request for documents covering this August '62 timeframe?

Mr. Bundy. I must have told him the rough period with which I am concerned. Again, I don't understand the drift of your question.

Mr. Smothers. Well, the drift of my question is, if indeed you selected the August 1962 documents, why did you select that?

Mr. Bundy. Because Counsel to the Rockefeller Commission had directed my attention to the period.

Mr. Smothers. To August 1962?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Smothers. In the file that centered roughly on this point in this timeframe, included NSA memo 181, was the file put together by the White House pursuant to this guidance?

Mr. Bundy. The file that came into my hands, whether they put it together or whether it was a file drawn off the shelf, I can't tell you. You'll have to ask them.

Mr. Smothers. Did it appear to you to be an off-the-shelf file?

Mr. Bundy. I don't know what it was.

The Chairman. What is the object of this series of questions, Curtis?

Mr. Smothers. Well, I am trying to determine, Mr. Chairman, what Mr. Kissinger was requested to do and what actually happened.

7600030661

The Chairman. Don't we have that now in the record? It just seems to me like we're going over the same series of questions.

Mr. Smothers. Well, since we don't know what was in the file --

Mr. Bundy. Well, I thought I said the file was a file of National Security Action memoranda, a file which you already have here.

Mr. Smothers. Relating to August, 1962?

Mr. Bundy. Uh-huh.

Mr. Smothers. That's all I have, Mr. Chairman.

tape 2b

Mr. Schwarz. On the Trujillo matter --

Mr. Bundy. Sure.

Mr. Schwarz. You know Mr. Trujillo was killed. Did you know or do you know that the persons who killed him had obtained some weapons from the United States?

Mr. Bundy. I did not know, and do not now know, of my own knowledge that that was the case.

I did know, or at least I believe I must have been on notice because of documents again that you have shown me, that weapons by a decision of the Special Group in early January had been or were being passed to Dominican dissidents.

Mr. Schwarz. Were you involved in the sending of a telegram to the Domincan Republic, either two or three days prior to the actual assassination of Mr. Trujillo?

Mr. Bundy. I have no recollection of it, and when I saw those telegrams in discussions with your staff, they stirred no recollection on my part.

Mr. Schwarz. Is it fair to state that Mr. Richard Goodwin is the best witness on those subjects from the White House for that period of time?

Mr. Bundy. It appears that way to me, although that appears more from the fact that important documents seem to have been addressed to him than because of my own recollection that he was interested in the matters and because of my phone conversation with him, he showed a considerable familiarity with events in the Domincan Republic, political events during that spring.

Mr. Schwarz. Well, you got a memo from Mr. Bissell in February, 17th February '61. It is Tab R of the Trujillo Book 1 of 2, in which you were informed that the dissidents had been told by the United States that it was prepared to provide them with a limited supply of arms and equipment.

When you got such information, did it trigger in your mind anything to the effect of, let's be concerned about how they're going to use those weapons, or did you just accept the information and do nothing about it?

Mr. Bundy. It is clear that the information was sent to me and it was clear, in that sense, that I had become responsible for knowing what was in the document, but I have to say that as I reread it I have no recollection that I ever, in fact, did read it at the time. Whether that was because of the flow, the very heavy flow of other documents or because I passed it to someone else or because I just simply didn't get to it, I cannot tell you, but I have no recollection that I saw it.

Mr. Schwarz. You did make a request for a briefing paper?

Mr. Bundy. It must have been done and it was either done in my name or I did it.

Mr. Schwarz. So you're not capable -- you don't remember it. Are you capable of making a comment on my question, which was having received information that arms had been supplied --

Mr. Bundy. Having that information on my desk, anyway.

Mr. Schwarz. Okay.

In the light of hindsight, should persons in your position when they receive such information inquire into the purpose for which the arms are to be used?

Mr. Bundy. Yes, I would -- and my own guess on this, and it's not much better than that, is that the decision which had been taken only a week before the new Administration came in, in the Special Group, was partly reviewed in some fashion, with the Special Group as reconstituted after the change in Administration. So I would have to say that I suppose I knew that weapons were being introduced into the Dominican Republic and I would have to add that I did not, or I have no recollection and I think I would recollect it, if I had engaged in a careful inquiry to find out just what, who, when where and so on did not do that, and I think -- you ask in hindsight, I think it would clearly be important to have that kind of understanding, because as I understand the evidence that has now been developed, there was a level of communication and connection with the plotters in the Dominican Republic which exceeded what political authority appears to have expected or believed was going on.

Mr. Schwarz. Would you agree with one further point, that it is very difficult for the United States to control events once it has made a decision to cooperate with dissident elements, and in particular once it's made a decision to cooperate with dissident elements by providing them with arms?

Mr. Bundy. I think that -- one thing, I don't want to generalize here, but I think -- I would agree with the generalization, let me put it that way, if I could add that in the case of the Dominican Republic, I think one has also to recognize retrospectively that there was no way to have any communication with dissidents that would not involve recognition that, if you propose to be an effective dissident in that country under that ruler, you would probably be contemplating fairly violent action.

Mr. Schwarz. I have nothing further on Trujillo.

One question of Vietnam.

You were involved in the question of the possible coup in Vietnam that actually took place?

Mr. Bundy. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. And you were substantially involved in that as a matter of personal --

Mr. Bundy. I was working closely with the President and was probably the draftsman under his instruction of some of the cables that went out.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, Diem was killed. It does not appear to me from the record that the United States wanted him killed. Is that fair?

Mr. Bundy. That is correct.

Mr. Schwarz. But the United States did want him deposed if a coup could be successful? Is that correct?

Mr. Bundy. The United States really had two views. Right up to the end, the United States hoped, hoped against hope, as it became more and more difficult to communicate with Diem, that he would see the, or come to share the kinds of argument, that were made to him, primarily by Ambassador Lodge, and that a change in his government and a lower, much lower, role for his brother and sister-in-law would assist him in recapturing public confidence. That was always the preferred solution.

As prospects for that became more and more dim, the United States did come to take the view that there might be no alternative to a coup, and it certainly had the view that if there was going to be a coup, I believe the language somewhere in one of the cables is that it was in the interests of the United States that it should succeed.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, on the day of the coup, Ambassador Lodge told Mr. Diem that he would provide help to get him out of the country and do so by airplane, but he couldn't have the plane for twenty-four hours. A, did you know of the twenty-four hour point?

Mr. Bundy. I don't remember that we did.

Mr. Schwarz. B, don't you find it incomprehensible that the United States was not able to supply an airplane for twenty-four hours?

Mr. Bundy. I don't really know because it depends on where the plane was going to go, what kind of plane. I don't think I'm competent to answer that question.

What occurs to me is, there were lots of other ways of offering asylum for a twenty-four hour period, and I don't think I really find that a very significant point.

The Chairman. Any further questions?

If there are no further questions, I want to thank you for your testimony, it has been long, a very long morning, and it has been very helpful testimony. We appreciate it very much.

Mr. Bundy. And I am thankful to you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, if it is not inappropriate and there is no objection, I have a brief statement that I intend to make to the Press which will simply re-emphasize to them what I think I have said a number of times this morning about my view of the role of President Kennedy and Attorney General Kennedy.

The Chairman. I leave that up to you. I certainly would not want to interpose any objection.

Thank you very much.

(Whereupon, at 12:42 o'clock p.m., the Committee recessed.)

PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Baron. Mr. Halley, is it true that you are here testifying today under alias, and that Halley is not actually your true identity?

Mr. Halley. That is correct.

Mr. Baron. Your true identity will be on file with the review staff of the CIA and available for verification by the Committee if that becomes necessary?

Mr. Halley. That is my understanding.

Mr. Baron. Let me show you a piece of paper marked "Statement Regarding Testimony and Alias" and let me ask you whether this is the statement you signed as we were beginning here today which indicates your true identity and which I have witnessed?

Mr. Halley. Yes, that is the correct statement that I signed today. There is a blank there where we have not filled in the Senator's name.

Mr. Baron. All right.

For the moment, let us leave that blank and enter it into the record as is, as Exhibit 1.

(The document referred to was marked Halley Exhibit No. 1 for identification.)

Mr. Baron. It is your understanding, is it not, that we have worked out an arrangement with the review staff whereby the statement will be attached to your transcript as an Exhibit and in a sanitized form, leaving out either of the two references to your true identity which will only be available at this Agency.

Mr. Halley. That is my understanding.

Mr. Baron. Are you aware that you have the right to counsel before the Committee?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I am.

Mr. Baron. Are you appearing here, voluntarily here today without counsel?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I am.

Mr. Baron. Are you also aware that at any point you are entitled to cease answering any questions and consult with counsel if you wish?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I am aware of that.

Mr. Baron. Finally, are you aware that all your Constitutional rights are intact before the Committee here today, including your Fifth Amendment rights to remain silent?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I am.

Mr. Baron. I think we should put into the record the arrangement that we made before we began, and correct me if this is not your understanding of the arrangement, that we are testifying here today without placing you under oath because there is no Senator available for that purpose, but both you and I are contemplating having a Senator swear you in and ask you if your transcript is true to the best of your knowledge at some point as soon as possible as it can be arranged after today's session.

Mr. Halley. Yes. The statement that you have just made is my understanding of the agreement that we entered into prior to this conversation going on the record.

Mr. Baron. Thank you.

Let us begin then with some very broad questions about your background in the Agency. Can you tell me what you were doing in the Agency prior to your involvement with the JMWAVE station?

Mr. Halley. I became involved with the Cuban affair in approximately February of 1962. At that time, I was in Headquarters. I was Chief of Foreign Intelligence Activities for the Eastern European Division. I was asked to be released from those duties to conduct a survey of the opportunities for running intelligence operations against Cuba. I was released from those duties; I did engage in a survey of the possibilities for running intelligence, counterintelligence, paramilitary operations against Cuba.

Mr. Baron. Your position as Chief of Foreign Intelligence for Eastern Europe did not involve Cuba in any way? That was your last position before you became involved in Cuban affairs, is that correct?

Mr. Halley. That is correct.

I want to qualify that. Undoubtedly, there were some actions that were being conducted in the Eastern European area that reflected on Cuba, but I was not involved in the Bay of Pigs operation. I was not fully focused on Cuban operations until approximately February of 1962.

Mr. Baron. At what point did you join the Agency?

Mr. Halley. I joined the Agency originally in 1951.

Mr. Baron. In a very general way, can you describe the nature of your activities at the Agency prior to February of '62?

Mr. Halley. When I was first assigned to the Agency, I was an Army officer on active duty. I went through the usual Agency training program. I was assigned to Eastern European activities where I originally was focused on Polish and German operations.

I subsequently served from 1952 to 1959 in Germany. In the course of that service, I spent most of my time working on the Eastern European satellites, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria. In addition, I was involved on occasion in Soviet operations and East German operations.

Mr. Baron. Did you have any involvement in Latin American affairs prior to February of '62?

Mr. Halley. Yes. In the period 1960-62, I was responsible for setting up operational activity in Latin America that was targetted more explicitly on the Eastern European satellites to some extent on the Soviet Union. This was in a period of time where the Eastern European satellites were expanding their presence in Latin America. In my duties in the Eastern European Division, I was responsible for getting this program going in Latin America, so I did have an extensive exposure to Latin America in the period '60 to '62, as I recall those dates.

The accuracy of those dates can be checked from my official travel records, and so on.

Mr. Baron. During that period of time you were actually in Latin America helping to set up this program?

Mr. Halley. No, I was stationed in Washington, but I travelled to Latin America during this particular period of time.

Mr. Baron. Did you travel to Cuba at any point during the course of that operation?

Mr. Halley. Not specifically. I think I transitted Cuba on air stops being routed to various countries. I think I was at one or two Cuban airfields, but simply in transit.

Mr. Baron. Not long enough even to talk to the people at the Station in Cuba?

Mr. Halley. No, I had no contact at any time with the Havana Station.

Mr. Baron. Did you pick up, during this period of time, a general sense of the attitude of Latin American governments toward the Castro government? Could you characterize that attitude, if you did?

Mr. Halley. I certainly was aware, I think, of the broad political trend in the Hemisphere at that time, my interest was much more narrowly focused at that time on the Eastern European targets, and on the Soviet target, and I was not certainly specializing in Cuban affairs at that juncture.

Mr. Baron. Cuba was not viewed at that juncture as part of the Soviet target, as a Soviet satellite?

Mr. Halley. No, it was not.

Mr. Baron. Coming then to February of '62, is that the point at which you joined the JMWAVE Station in Miami?

Mr. Halley. No. When I first entered into this survey, it was to do this on a TDY basis, temporary duty assignment, to complete a report on my findings, to report those at that particular juncture to Mr. Harvey who was the head of the Task Force that was attempting to expand intelligence coverage of Cuba and I was not assigned to the station at that particular point in time.

Mr. Baron. At what point did you join the JMWAVE Station?

Mr. Halley. Shortly after having completed this survey. These dates are blurred now because the survey soon turned into a permanent assignment. I would have to check the exact dates from my service records, but after having completed the survey report, shortly thereafter I was asked to go to Miami to become permanently assigned to the station in Miami. I do not recall the exact date at which that permanent change of station took place.

Mr. Baron. Would you assume that that was sometime before the end of May of '62?

Mr. Halley. Yes. It was probably before that, but as I say, there are a couple of weeks gap that we would have to look at my service record to get the exact dates, but certainly it could have been March, it could have been April: But I reserve, you know, the right to check my record if that is a critical point in terms of what you are trying to establish.

Mr. Baron. Certainly.

I should say generally at this point, if anything we cover today gives you that kind of problem it would be immensely helpful to us if you would check your answers against documents that might be available in the CIA.

Mr. Halley. Yes, all right.

Mr. Baron. In fact, let me ask you if you would check that one out, because it would be useful to know exactly when you joined the JMWAVE station.

During the period of time before you joined JMWAVE, while you were conducting the survey, did you report to anyone other than William Harvey?

Mr. Halley. In a formal sense, this TDY was conducted on behalf of the task force commander, who was Mr. Harvey. While I was in Miami conducting the survey, I obviously discussed matters pertaining to that survey to the team who was then in charge of the operational activity in Miami. That team was essentially headed by Mr. Al Cox, who has since died.

Mr. Baron. Was that team the equivalent of JMWAVE station?

Mr. Halley. Yes. Mr. Cox was the head, then, of what would be the equivalent of the JMWAVE Station.

Mr. Baron. Was he the head of JMWAVE until the point when you replaced him, or until the point you became Chief of the JMWAVE Station?

Mr. Halley. That is correct. He was the head of that unit until such time as I replaced him.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware during this survey that you were conducting of any link between Task Force W and the so-called Special Group in the White House which was part of the National Security Council structure and used the project named MONGOOSE for anti-Cuban operations?

Mr. Halley. My understanding at the time that I conducted this survey was that there was a three-man group in existence which was headed by Mr. Robert Kennedy that was conducting a survey to see what kind of activities could be conducted against Cuba. The other members of that particular group were General Lansdale and Mr. Helms.

This three-man group had subordinate to it for all practical purposes the task force unit which was managed by Mr. Harvey. I am not familiar, however, with the other terminology that you used, that is Project MONGOOSE, or whatever you said. I do not know the exact words you used. I am not familiar with that terminology.

Mr Baron. During the whole period of your involvement with JMWAVE, you were not made aware of Project MONGOOSE as such?

Mr. Halley. I am not aware of Project MONGOOSE. I do not recall it as an acronym, cryptonym or anything else that was in common usage in my conversations.

Also, you have to understand that during that particular time, Mr. Harvey was subordinate to the normal Agency chain of command. In other words, he had parallel lines, if you will. There was this three-man Task Force to whom he was reporting regularly. At the same time, as the Task Force Commander, he was reporting to the then-DDP who was Mr. Helms.

Mr Baron. You began your survey just about the time that Mr. Helms replaced Mr. Bissell as DDP?

Mr. Halley. That is right.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware of the command relationship between the three-man group that you have mentioned and William Harvey as head of Task Force W? Did that group task Harvey directly, or did Harvey's assignments have to come through Helms and through the DCI as opposed to this group that did not include the DCI?

Mr. Halley. My understanding of it at the time was we were really talking about parallel lines. In other words, this three-man group was meeting. Mr. Helms was both a member of that particular group and the DDP. Therefore, when he came back from one of these meetings and issued instructions to Mr. Harvey, it was, you know, tantamount to these things coming through two channels simultaneously, one coming from this three-man task force and the other instruction simultaneously coming from Mr. Helms who was the DDP.

Mr. Baron. As far as Mr. Harvey was concerned, an assignment or order from Richard Helms was an order to be taken at face value? Harvey did not have to question whether it had the stamp of approval from the DCI or not? Would that have been your operating understanding?

Mr. Halley. That would have been my understanding, yes. Certainly an instruction received from Mr. Helms was a valid Agency instruction.

Mr. Baron. The DCI at this point was John McCone.

Mr. Halley. That is correct.

Mr. Baron. Do you have any knowledge of the relationship between this three-man group and John McCone at that point?

Mr. Halley. Not on a day to day basis. Once I went to Miami, I came back on a regular basis to review operational plans and programs. On one occasion I accompanied Mr. McCone to the White House to give a presentation or sit in while the presentation was being made.

Mr. Baron. Where was this? What was the forum in which the presentation was made.

Mr. Halley. This was a meeting with President Kennedy and other members of the then-Cabinet were present at that particular meeting.

Mr. Baron. Was that a Cabinet meeting or was it a Special Group meeting as a sub-unit of the National Security Council?

Mr. Halley. You know, that happened in 1962. This is 1975. I do not recall then with precision as to whether it was a meeting of the Cabinet or whether it was a meeting of the National Security Council, or whether it was a meeting of the Special Group.

Mr. Baron. That is perfectly understandable. Do you recall which Cabinet members were present at that meeting?

Mr. Halley. Yes. My recollection of that was that Mr. McNamara was present, Mr. Rusk was present, Mr. Kennedy, the Attorney General, was present. You know, I am just vague now at this particular point. Those are the ones that stick out in my memory as being present.

Mr. Baron. Was the DCI present?

Mr. Halley. Yes, the DCI was present, and he gave a portion of the presentation. As I recall, Mr. FitzGerald gave the other portion of the presentation.

Mr. Baron. Who at that point replaced William Harvey as Chief of Task Force W?

Mr. Halley. Right. You know, the chronology of the Chiefs of our Task Force were that it was Harvey, then FitzGerald, then Screber, after that, Hart. I served with all four of those. This was a very active period, you know, with precision, I cannot outline for you today the dates when Harvey left and FitzGerald took over, you know, when FitzGerald left and Screber took over and so forth. This is something that I would have to research to give you the precise dates.

Mr. Baron. What was the substance of this meeting that they had in which the President was present?

Mr. Halley. This was a general review of activities that were being conducted against Cuba.

Mr. Baron. Was there any mention of any assassination effort at that meeting?

Mr. Halley. No, there was not.

Mr. Baron. You were attending at that point in connection with the survey you conducted?

Mr. Halley. No. I was attending at that point as the Station Chief from Miami in order to make a contribution to the issues that were being discussed, to the fact that detailed, substantive back-up for whatever questions might be put to the Agency spokesmen. I made reference to that because you asked me if I knew the relationship between Mr. McCone and this three-man group. I said no, on a day-to-day basis I did not know the relationship, but that there were meetings that were attended by me in which Mr. McCone was talking to individuals like Mr. Kennedy, the Attorney General, who was a member of that group.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware that that group might have gone by any particular name or designation?

Mr. Halley. No, I am not.

Mr. Baron. You are not familiar with the term Special Group?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I am aware of the term Special Group. I am aware that the chronology of the 303 Committee, Special Group, 40 Committees and so forth, but as I mentioned to you earlier, that particular time, I cannot distinguish between whether this was an ad hoc meeting or this was a Special Group meeting, or what it was.

Mr. Baron. Did you assume at that time that the three-man group that you referred to, including the Attorney General, General Lansdale and Richard Helms, had a formal relationship to this larger Special Group? In other words, was that three-man group a kind of decision-making sub-unit of the Special Group, or do you think it operated entirely independent from the National Security Council structure.

Mr. Halley. I do not think I can give you an authoritative answer to that. I would go back to what I previously told you. When I entered into this project in February of '62, the chain of command that I was familiar with was this three-man group in constant contact with Mr. Harvey. The second chain of command, paralleling that, was Mr. Harvey reporting to the DDP and the DDP subsequently reporting through his chain of command to the Director, and that would be the only way that I could characterize that with any accuracy.

Mr. Baron. Did those two chains of command continue as the channels of decision-making and tasking when you were -- or during your tenure as Chief of Station at JMWAVE?

Mr. Halley. That relationship changed, and again I do not have the date at my fingertips at what time that changed.

I know that shortly thereafter I was in Miami, General Lansdale came down to visit me, to talk with me, about the progress that was being made in the operational program. At some point after that, this three-man group for all intents and purposes disappeared. General Lansdale was reassigned; the group broke up; subsequent reviews of the program were made at the Special Group level. As an example, we would have to submit every month the number of operations that we were going to run, such as infiltrations into Cuba through what would be paramilitary means, and these were approved by the Special Group. There was an approval procedure for setting those up, so subsequently the three-man group disappeared and the regular mechanism of the Special Group came into play.

I am sorry, I cannot give you a precise date for that change, but I am sure it is in the record and I am sure you even have the date because the Agency has been researching all sorts of material for you. I feel that you would just have to get those dates for the record.

Mr. Baron. We can do that.

Would you say that every major operation that you undertook at JMWAVE would have been approved by the Special Group or at least they would have been put on notice of the nature of any major operation that you were planning?

Mr. Halley. Why do you not define for me what you consider to be a major operation so we do not get into, you know, a problem? If you feel that you cannot do that [illegible].

Mr. Baron. Perhaps we can turn it around and say, could you characterize the kinds of operations generally that you would refer to this three-man group initially, ~~in~~ to the Special Group later, for their approval, or at least to put them on notice, the kinds that you might not refer and instead proceed unilaterally?

Mr. Halley. Initially, the three-man group was seized with the problem of conducting the survey of what could be done against Cuba. As soon as that was more or less agreed upon, my understanding of this, as I told you, the three-man group was disbanded or atrophied or went on to other things and then the formal mechanism came in for approval, that is, the Special Group. As procedures became more formalized, we had to submit a monthly schedule of the kind of operations that would be conducted against Cuba in the paramilitary fields.

In other words, if we were going to run an operation that was going to be a cache replacement in the Cuban mainland, that had to be put in, say in our October schedule, that October schedule had to be submitted to the Washington Headquarters so they could make it available to the Special Group sometime in September. So I would regard a cache, say the lowest kind of operation in terms of sensitivity, and then you could move up from team infiltrations that had to be approved in advance, resupply missions, paramiltary operations against fixed installations would all be approved.

Mr. Baron. If there had been any operation with the assassination of Fidel Castro, or other high Cuban government leaders as its objective, would such an operation have been referred to either the three-man group or later the Special Group.

Mr. Halley. If such an operation had been proposed from Miami, it would have had to have gone through that particular process.

Mr. Baron. Your answer seems to indicate that only operations that originated at the JMWAVE Station would be referred up for approval. Is that correct?

Mr. Halley. That is the kind of activity that I have firsthand knowledge of. When I became the Station Chief, I told you my time at this was essentially February of 1962 through either June or July of '65. That was my stewardship. That was my involvement in the Cuban operation.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

During that particular period of time, my firsthand knowledge of these events would be, if that kind of operation were to go forward it would have had to go through this approval mechanism, it would have had to have been some formal action taken. If it were something that certainly would -- for some reason might not be committed to paper, somebody may have wanted to discuss it orally from Miami, the chain of command would have been from me to whomever was the head of the Task Force in Washington, or later, when the Task Force became reintegrated into the Western Hemisphere Division, I would have had to talk to the Chief of the Western Hemisphere Division, who at one time was FitzGerald.

Mr. Baron. But a plan that originated at the CIA above the level of the Chief of Station at JMWAVE would not necessarily have been referred to Special Group for approval, is that correct?

Mr. Halley. I have no firsthand knowledge of that, therefore I am trying to restrict myself to those things that I have personal knowledge of. In other words, that is the kind of thing that I think you should talk to, you know, those who were involved directly, because I think you can talk to Mr. Harvey or Mr. Screber or others who would be able to give you a better perception of that.

I want to make one point here, that once I went to Miami, I was a regular visitor to Washington, but always for one or two days at a time when there was always a full agenda of events to be discussed that related to the Station in Miami. I did not carry here, I did not engage, you know, in idle conversation with my associates. Therefore, I was not aware of the firsthand situation of how they conducted business on a sustained basis on items that did not immediately impact on Miami.

Mr. Baron. Do you have any personal knowledge of any operation run out of the JMWAVE Station that could be construed as an assassination effort?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not.

Mr. Baron. Do you have firsthand knowledge of any operation run out of Florida with CIA involvement that could be construed as an assassination effort?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not have any firsthand knowledge. You also have to put this in a historical perspective. In other words, from what I have read in the Press since then, obviously I could put certain things together. You are asking me in this timeframe, 1962 to 1965, did I have any firsthand knowledge at that particular time?

Mr. Baron. Exactly.

Mr. Halley. The answer to that is no, I did not.

You also have to put yourself in the historical context of that particular time. Thousands of refugees were coming out of Cuba, coming into Miami, Dade County up and down the Florida

Keys. There was a regular mechanism to screen these people. Any number of these people had plans or ideas for changing the situation in Cuba, among those ideas for changing the situation in Cuba were plans to assassinate any number of people in Cuba. This was something that was talked about, you could go down to any coffee house in downtown Miami and Cubans would be talking that kind of language.

So I do not want to leave you with the impression that the word assassination never came across my radar screen, but we are talking about, and my answer was geared to a planned operation by CIA.

Mr. Baron. Or with CIA involvement of any sort?

Mr. Halley. CIA involvement? I know of no operation that was a planned operational activity, you know, for the sole purpose of assassinating, you know, Mr. A, B or Mr. C. This was the ambiente allenteof the time. People were talking about these things in the refugee community, these kind of things were being discussed.

Mr. Baron. Mr. A, B or C could have been Fidel Castro, Raul Castro? [illegible]

Mr. Halley. It could have been anyone. This was the mood of the Latin American revolutionary where a coup, you know, is a way of life, where restaurants and coffee houses abound with conversation about how to run a coup. In the running of a coup, one of the things that people talk about is how do you control the leadership which then exists at that time.

Mr. Baron. Are you saying that you are not aware of any operation which could have had as one of its subsidiary objectives, whether the primary objective or not, the assassination of Fidel Castro, Raul Castro, or Che Guevara, which was run with CIA involvement?

Mr. Halley. I would like to phrase that question slightly differently, because I think, you know, you have several things tied together. I would like to answer your question this way.

During my tenure in Miami, I did not put forth any proposals to mount an assassination operation. In other words, there was no formal plan, I did not put forth any operational proposals along this line.

Secondly, I am not aware of any assassination plans being put forth, you know, by Mr. Harvey or by anyone else at that particular time. That is the way I would prefer to answer that.

Mr. Baron. What kind of problem did you have with the question as it was asked?

Mr. Halley. Well, you lumped a number of things together. I am trying to separate these out. In other words, you put in there a secondary or tertiary consideration.

Mr. Baron. Right, I am interested in that.

Mr. Halley. That is what bothers me, because I did not put forth any plans. On the other hand, I do not want to be held responsible for such things as CIA being in touch with a paramilitary group in Cuba whose primary mission was the collection of intelligence, whose secondary mission might be to organize a resistance and, unbeknownst to me, might have had their own ideas which were never consulted with us, you know, never discussed with us, through the communications channels that we had, who may have been thinking, may have planned, and may have attempted, to implement assassination operations.

I do not feel under the command and control mechanism that existed that I could exercise through the Station over such a situation that I could be held responsible for that. Therefore, I cannot accept your question on the secondary or tertiary situation because I have no knowledge of those. You may have some knowledge and you can confront me with some statement by some Cuban who said that this was part of his mission. I have to look at that at the time.

Mr. Baron. We will go over some statements, but in trying to recover this ground one more time, I think it is important to distinguish an attempt to pin the responsibility on you, which I am not trying to do by my questioning --

Mr. Halley. That is a complicated question.

Mr. Baron. The attempt to simply -- undoubtedly, the attempt to simply bring out your knowledge and any awareness that you may have had of any kind of operation that had assassination as one of its objectives, and also involved the CIA to any extent. That is what I am asking you for.

Mr. Halley. Right, and I will stand by my answer, that is, I put forth no plans, I know of no plans put forth, you know, during my tenure in Miami in which assassination was part of the operational rationale. You know, the only way we can clarify this perhaps to your satisfaction is to discuss some specifics. If you are prepared to talk about specifics, maybe I can deal with those within the framework of that general statement that I made, you know. I know how Cubans talk. I know the rumors that have existed over the years. I simply do not want to be identified with any action conducted by some group over which I had no knowledge or control. That is my key point.

Mr. Baron. I think that answers it for now, and we will cover some specifics later.

One more question on this dual chain of command: on the one hand, the Agency chain of command from the DDP to Harvey to you at JMWAVE, and on the other hand, the three-man decision making group consisting of the Attorney General, Lansdale and Helms. Would you say in the early days that this three-man group appeared to you to be in control of the decision making before the Special Group stepped in, that decisions were made in a less formal way than they were later under the Special Group?

Mr. Halley. I really could not address myself to that. In other words, I never sat in on a meeting of the three-man group. In other words --

Mr. Baron. What about the kind of reporting that was required of you by the three-man group as opposed to the Special Group?

Mr. Halley. My requirements for reporting really stemmed in the early days from Harvey. If there were any special requirements, he was taking them from the three-man group and translating them and, in fact, much of the system of reporting in those early days was generated by me and what I thought was required to keep Mr. Harvey as a Task Force Commander fully informed. I think that you undoubtedly know from the record that I worked for Mr. Harvey prior to 1962 and therefore I was familiar, you know, with his style of operation and though I had a clear understanding of what he needed in an informationa sense. So when I went to Miami, I organized much of the reporting flow upward, if you will, from the field unit to Headquarters.

Mr. Baron. Had you worked for Mr. Harvey in Germany?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I had.

Mr. Baron. In Berlin?

Mr. Halley. Yes, sir.

Mr. Baron. This was on the famous and successful tunnel operation?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not deserve any credit for the tunnel operation. That is Mr. Harvey's activity. He kept that very tightly compartmented and in the days when that was going on, I was involved primarily with Eastern European activities.

Mr. Baron. You were aware of Mr. Harvey's style of operating?

Mr. Halley. Yes. I worked with him -- I think the date is somewhere in June or July of '54 to somewhere in '59. I would have to look that up in the record, the exact date.

Mr. Baron. But you say you not only had a close working relationship with Mr. Harvey, but you came to be a personal friend of his?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I would like to say I am a personal friend of Mr. Harvey.

Mr. Baron. Returning to your statements about the chain of command, you seem to be saying that Mr. Harvey served as the funnel for both of these chains of command; as far as you were concerned, you received directives from him, whatever the source may have been originally, is that correct?

Mr. Halley. Correct.

I want to make a point. Insofar as the three-man group was concerned, I would see Helms in his role as the DDP in the three-man group. I would see Lansdale -- as I told you, Lansdale came down to visit me in Miami on one occasion. He came as part of that three-man group. But my chain of command, during my visit was still from me to Harvey. Lansdale was down there, I was to be, you know, straightforward, candid, discuss plans, programs, problems. But I received my orders and instructions the control of money and so forth was vested in the Task Force Commander, Mr. Harvey.

Therefore, I never dealt with this three-man group as a body. I dealt with the individuals, you know, and various mutations.

Mr. Baron. Would you say that the three-man group had a less formal, more free-wheeling style of decision making, and there was a real change in the rigor with which you were required to report after the Special Group took over?

Mr. Halley. I would have to say that the total reporting became more formalized the longer we stayed in business. I cannot ascribe this to the difference of style of the three-man group as opposed to the Agency chain of command or subsequent with the requirements of the Special Group. This evolved from a body of experience that was gained as the operation was established and got some experience.

So I would not want to characterize that as being a result of the groups.

Mr. Baron. You did not have any problem with the propriety of the three-man group in the early stages?

Mr. Halley. No, I had no reason to believe that it was not a duly constituted body. In other words, the officers that I reported to, in that particular case, Mr. Harvey, Mr. Helms, were my chain of command at that particular point, were the ones who briefed me on the existence of this three-man body and I felt that that was a perfectly legitimate function of that body.

Mr. Baron. Who briefed you on the existence of the body?

Mr. Halley. My recollection of the initial briefing was from Mr. Harvey.

Mr. Baron. Do you recall how he described that three-man group and the responsibilities?

Mr. Halley. No. This was 1962, and this is 1975. As you know from my records, these intervening years have been very active for me, therefore, I do not remember with precision that conversation in all of its details. I do recall my first briefing on the existence of this three-man group being from Harvey.

Mr. Baron. You mentioned that General Lansdale might occasionally meet with you personally. This is in Miami, at JMWAVE Station?

Mr. Halley. I can only recall at this point one specific meeting where he came down to Florida in Miami to visit.

Mr. Baron. What was the substance of that meeting?

Mr. Halley. He was given some briefings by my staff on their areas of specialization, whether it was foreign intelligence collection, whether it was maritime activities, or whether it was paramilitary activities. I spent a lot of time with him personally, talking about where we stood, where we were making progress in the collection of intelligence, where we were having problems, and so on. It was a substantive management operation, problem-oriented type of conversation.

Mr. Baronv. What period of time would you place this in?

Mr. Halley. Probably sometime in the summer of '62, because my family was already in Miami at that point, and when I first went to Miami my family was not with me. I think my wife joined me in Miami sometime in the summer of '62, you know, I would have to research that. It is obviously available from the records as to when my family moved and a permanent change of station.

Mr. Baron. Was there any discussion whether direct or indirect of assassination of Cuban leaders during your meetings with General Lansdale?

Mr. Halley. I do not recall any such conversations. You know, I think that from my point of view, we are off a little bit on this perspective. I would like to try to focus on the perspective for you in the historical setting.

Mr. Baron. Please do.

Mr. Halley. I think by your questions and your interest, you are narrowly focused on this assassination thing, but let me turn that around a bit, and let me put it in my context at the time which may help you understand my answers.

Mr. Baron. Before you do, can I stop you for one moment? I would like to get back on the track that we originally started on of asking you about the JMWAVE Station in general and the context at that time. Could I ask just a couple of specific questions before we do that, about the three-man group that you raised, and then give you a full opportunity to ~~pull~~ put ~~out of~~ what we have said so far and everything that will follow into context.

Did you have any individual meetings with Robert Kennedy, who was then-Attorney General?

Mr. Halley. You mean individual, one on one?

Are you saying did I have a meeting, a personal, private meeting with the Attorney General?

Mr. Baron. Yes.

Mr. Halley. The answer to that is no.

Mr. Baron. Did you have any meetings with the Attorney General of any sort during this period of time?

Mr. Halley. I mentioned to you earlier that at this meeting that I went to with Director McCone, the Attorney General, Mr. Robert Kennedy, was present at that White House briefing. He did ask some questions, which I do not remember what the questions were at this particular point in time. I answered some of those questions that were put during the course of that particular presentation. Throughout that whole period of time, that was the only, if you will, direct contact with him that I can remember. You know, unless you can show me something.

Mr. Baron. During the entire period that you were involved with JMWAVE?

Mr. Halley. That is right.

Mr. Baron. At that meeting -- again, I realize what we are doing is in isolation, out of context -- at that meeting that you attended, with the Cabinet members and the President, was there any discussion either directly or indirectly or by means of any circumlocutions of the subject of assassination?

Mr. Halley. Not that I can recall.

You know, my recollection of that meeting is, we went to it en masse, the first -- you know, Director McCone, myself, Bruce Cheever, several other people who went. We went in several cars. We went to the meeting, the Cuban issue was the first item on the agenda. As I recall the thing, the Cuban thing was over after this period of time. We, the technocrats left, the Director John McCone stayed on. You know, during my presence at the meeting there was nothing discussed about assassinations.

Mr. Baron. Was there any such discussion between yourself and John McCone or Richard Helms at any point?

Mr. Halley. I never recall discussing assassinations with John McCone. Now, in terms of discussions with Richard Helms, these were conversations in which atmospherics in Miami and problems like that would be discussed, and I am sure somewhere in some of these conversations the mood of the community, the subject of assassinations undoubtedly came up. This was part of the life of that particular period.

I cannot remember a specific date, you know, some time at which that was discussed, and you know I never received any instruction from Helms to mount an assassination operation.

Mr. Baron. Again, I am not trying to unfairly pull these kinds of conversations out of their historical context. Before we flesh out the historical context, do you have any recollection of the manner in which assassination might have come up between yourself and Helms?

Mr. Halley. Again, I put it in this overall context of the times. We were running foreign intelligence collection operations against Cuba with classical agent means. We were running collection against Cuba through paramilitary teams. We were involved in paramilitary operations that could be described as commando raids. Those were the kinds of activities.

We were dealing with exile groups, we were debriefing refugees and in all of this conversations of assassination, the Cuban penchant for it had to come up. I cannot pinpoint --

Mr. Baron. You do not recall any reference of means to be used or people to be involved?

Mr. Halley. No. Even such things as discussions of various kinds of weapons, you know, people, as you probably know from this experience, every individual who deals with weapons has a different view on what is the ideal weapon. If you took a squad of ten men and gave them the free choice, I am sure all ten of them would come up with a different weapon.

Therefore, when we were standardizing weapons to our paramilitary teams, things like that, weapons would be discussed in terms of, you know, muzzle velocity, rate of fire, weight of the weapon for the Cuban to carry, because many of them were quite small. In this context, people would discuss what is the range, can a guy use it to shoot somebody at a particular range? Is this an assassination weapon? Is this a good weapon for close combat?

Therefore the term assassination was just a part of the life, of the fabric at that time. That is what I am trying to get across. I just cannot articulate any more eloquently than that.

Mr. Baron. I think you are being quite eloquent and extremely informative. You mentioned that the phrase assassination would be used in the discussions about the kinds of weapons that would be used for commando raids or equipping your operatives.

Mr. Halley. Paramilitary teams, right.

Mr. Baron. Was the capacity of a weapon to be used as an assassination weapon among other uses a desirable capacity?

In other words, was that phrase used positively?

Mr. Halley. No, it was not. It is the kind of thing that weaves itself into, you know, a conversation.

For instance, if you are planning a commando raid against something like an oil refinery, you have to think about how are you going to get across the guard force that is around a refinery? One of the questions you have, of course, is if you bypass them, you are successful to get in without a trail or any kind of a struggle, that is great. But what happens if you are implanting your target and the guard stumbles on you, you know, the guard force then becomes an immediate risk to your operation and usually there is a fire fight. Therefore, this becomes a question of weapons. In other words, what weapon is going to give the highest muzzle velocity and make the largest amount of noise. Therefore, if you have two weapons of co-equal cyclic rate of fire and one made less rate of noise than the other for that job you would pick the weapon with the lowest noise. You might even silence it. You may make a silenced submachine gune out of it.

These are the kinds of things that go into these discussions of weapons.

Mr. Baron. The technology of assassination and targetted shooting, are you referring to -- when you say assassination weapon -- to a weapon generally capable of targetted shooting?

Mr. Halley. In this particular context, I think most people felt that the Cuban penchant for assassination, for discussing assassination, was the kind that would have to be done from a long range.

You know, I think that it is generally an accepted thesis that a group of dedicated men who are prepared to give their lives can in time assassinate almost anybody. Now, the Cuban was not that kind of a person. That was not his psychological make-up. He tends to want to live, to enjoy life, to talk about his accomplishment. Therefore, while they were brave and dedicated, they were the kind of people who would probably engage in something like this in the context of using the sniper weapon as a vehicle for assassination, long distance.

Therefore, in this context you are talking about range, you know, one of the key factors becomes what is the accurate range of a weapon if fired by an expert marksman. Therefore, that is the kind of thing that would go into, you know, discussions of weapons.

Mr. Baron. When you were discussing weapons with high range and low muzzle velocity, was this ever discussed in the context of shooting Fidel Castro or other key Cuban leaders as opposed to targetted shooting on a commando raid.

Mr. Halley. I can recall, you know, no conversation in which it was narrowly focused on the question of Fidel Castro.

Mr. Baron. Let us go back, then, to putting this all into historical context. I am going to ask you if you can explain more about the structure of the JMWAVE Station, both the channels upward from you to the Agency and the Special Group and the channels downward from you to your operatives, if in the course of explaining the structure, you would like to make some comments about the historical context, that would be appreciated.

Mr. Halley. I think what I would like to do is to try to put this into some perspective.

The perspective really starts with the failure of the Bay of Pigs Operation. After the failure of the Bay of Pigs, the Kennedy Administration wanted another look taken at the problem of Cuba. In order to get that other look started, the Kennedy Administration created this three-man task force or this three-man group and wanted to see what else could be done against Cuba, and that is when I came into this problem in February of '62.

Mr. Baron. Is it possible that the three-man group that you are referring to is actually the Robert Kennedy-Maxwell Taylor Board of Inquiry into the reasons for the failure of the Bay of Pigs operation?

Mr. Halley. This three-man group stemmed out of that inquiry. What its relationship was to the inquiry, I do not know, because I was not involved and I never had an opportunity once I plunged into this job, to go back and read those historical documents. You know, I am sure there is a Maxwell Taylor Report, and so forth, but I have never read it.

All right.

Therefore, my first task when I became involved in this was the task of coming up with an operational plan to see what kinds of intelligence could be collected in Cuba, so that by collecting this intelligence, an assessment could be made based on hard facts as to what could be done against Castro. In other words, the difference here was that people thought that the Bay of Pigs operation was not soundly grounded in intelligence. Therefore, this was an attempt to start the collection of intelligence to see what could be done.

In order to collect intelligence at that particular time, it was believed that all avenues of approach should be used, so that meant classical foreign intelligence operations, counterintelligence operations, the debriefing of refugees, and the use of paramilitary means to put teams into Cuba to collect intelligence on that part of the island that could not be covered by what you would call the more classical means of foreign intelligence collection.

As the program was started essentially by me or accelerated by me, we in fact got caught up with the Cuban Missile Crisis -- that is, the advent of the Soviet intervention into Cuba -- and our whole effort shifted to covering that Soviet build-up in Cuba, and this was an integral part to our having detected the Soviet build-up and the United States government taking the actions which they did, that is, to verify this.

There was a great problem for a while when we were all talking about hard intelligence, the President, John Kennedy, was telling us, give us hard intelligence. We thought we were giving him hard intelligence. What he meant, in his definition of hard intelligence, as it turned out to be, was a U-2 photograph. He never articulated that to us in those terms.

Then we got caught up into the eyeball to eyeball confrontation of the Cuban Missile Crisis. When that was over, we got caught up with the problem of monitoring the disengagement of the Soviet presence in Cuba. That took us up through sometime into early '63.

Then we took a look again, because we knew an awful lot more about them than we had when we started in February of '62, to see what could be done against Cuba, and it was clear at that point that no external invasion was going to be possible, because that was something that was excluded by the Khruschev-Kennedy agreement and then it was not feasible. In any event, therefore it was a question of what could be done. So we were collecting intelligence to continue to stay on top of the situation. We were attempting to establish contacts with the military establishment in Cuba to see if there was any force that was opposed to Castro within the military establishment that would be used to alter the situation and continue to see whether there were any economic pressures that could be brought on Cuba that would accelerate the whole problem of creating an environment in which a resistance could be created on an island.

Mr. Baron. Were those the two primary tactics used at that point when Castro had consolidated his strength and when the United States and Russia reached an agreement that no external invasion of Cuba would take place, did you turn primarily to the ways and means of finding a dissident group within Cuba that might be capable of overthrowing Castro, number one, and number two, of finding means of undermining the economic strength of the Castro government.

tape 3

Mr. Halley. In addition, we were continuing to support certain elements of resistance, you know, that were still there that were not in the Army.

Mr. Baron. What kinds of elements were those?

Mr. Halley. These were paramilitary forces that were in Cuba, that we had put in or established contact with, or people who were already in the bush who we had already established contact with or they had established contact with us, and we were providing them with food, weapons and so forth so that they could survive. So that it was a multifaceted approach at that particular time.

That went on from the middle of '63 until the middle of '65, and these are two distinct phases of this operation. In effect, one, a survey, and two, the Missile Crisis and its post-mortem, and then the next phase was the continuation of intelligence collection, the working or taking the sounding with military dissidents, economic pressure, and working with natural dissident elements that were still on the island.

I think you know that all of your questions have to be put into these various timeframes. When you talk about, was there ever a discussion of assassination, you know, when people were coming out and being interviewed, yes, some Cuban refugee would say, by God, I would like to go back and shoot, you know, X, Y or Z. It might have been some commandante in his particular area; it could have been Fidel Castro. This was just part of the fabric of the times.

Mr. Baron. Can we turn now to the structure of the JMWAVE Station and explain that a bit? How large was the Station? What was the command structure within the Station?

Mr. Halley. The Station started expanding in whatever timeframe it was, somewhere after the survey was completed. It must have started expanding sometime in March of 1962. You know, by the time that it was at its peak, which was probably somewhere just before the Cuban Missile Crisis, July, August of 1962, it was either the largest or the second largest -- my recollection was that it was the second largest station in existence at that time. I would not want to be pinned down on a particular number of people on any particular day.

Mr. Baron. Could you give some idea as to the number of employees at the Station during its peak?

Mr. Halley. I would say somewhere in the neighbordhood of, you know, three hundred. You know, again, this means staff and contract employees.

21

Mr. Baron. What do you cover with the term contract employees?

Mr. Halley. These would be, for instance, maritime case officers. We hired people who had specialized skills, that is, that they could manage a series of vessels for us, but they were not longterm staff employees. These would be people who would be used, if you will, in a management organization, basic implementation of the program.

Mr. Baron. Did you have other agents or operatives among the Cuban community or outside the Cuban community that were affiliated with the Station although not employed by it directly?

Mr. Halley. I think we are going to have to define some terms.

Mr. Baron. What I am trying to do now is simply get a picture of the scope of the Station's strength and ~~in~~ its activities, how many people the Station had to call upon for its activities.

Mr. Halley. Well, let me try to give you an answer, because I think we are going to get into a semantic problem here.

When I talk about the Station, as such, I would say that is roughly in the neighborhood of [three hundred] people, and that was those people who would be involved in the management effort, the direction effort, the financial logistics, cover procedures, security, that kind of thing. All right? Flowing out from that were people whom we would call agents, that is, 21 people who were not knowledgeable necessarily of whom they worked for or where the cover offices were located and so forth. Let us say, in the maritime part of the operation we might have had at any one point in time, you know, up to five hundred people involved in maritime activities, you know?

76000701119

WARD & PAUL

Again, if you pick a date, I am sure we can research it. The records are still available and you know how many people we had, but let us take these five hundred. What am I talking about? These would be essentially Cubans who were the captains of the vessles that were used in infiltration operations to put people on the shore of Cuba, and there were a variety of techniques. In other words, you might start on with the mother ship, which would be an LCI -- I am not sure how familiar you are with various kinds of vessels.

Mr. Baron. What is an LCI?

Mr. Halley. Landing craft kind of vessle, or a patrol craft, a PC, 110-foot vessle, that would be a mother ship. This is the kind of ship that would take fuel supplies and water, so that other smaller vessels could be serviced by it. So you might start with an operation of a mother ship towing a smaller boat, or having it on its decks and going down to fifteen or twenty miles from Cuba, putting the smaller boat over the side, which was a faster boat, lower silhouette, less likely to be picked up by Cuban coastal radar, and then that would take the team in close to the shore where we might finally put them into rubber rafts, where they would paddle in or use a silent outboard motor if the surf was high.

Mr. Baron. The people involved in manning those crafts would not necessarily be employees of the Station directly? They might be agents, even non-paid agents?

Mr. Halley. No, they were not paid. For instance, they might work for a particular cover company. In other words, I am only using this as an example. Let us say we had the ABC Shipping Company. That shipping company was a subsidiary of the Station, if you will, and the ABC Shipping Company ran maybe one LCI and maybe two or three smaller boats which it could deck load and that company might have fifty or seventy-five employees, as an example, all Cubans, maybe some of them was Nicaraguans or Costa Ricans as most of these vessels -- I would have to go and look at each vessel.

Does that give you a feel for the size of the problem?

Mr. Baron. How many such companies would have been in existence at that time, companies operating as CIA proprietaries or companies in cover and supplying the JMWAVE Station with personnel or with equipment?

Mr. Halley. We are talking about all of these companies, they probably went up into the hundreds. I distinguish between companies that were set up simply to provide cover as opposed to companies that were proprietaries. You know, these terms mean different things to me. The nature of the Agency's involvement in each is different. I am having a little trouble --

Mr. Baron. Could you explain what different categories of companies you were receiving help from at that point, and about how many of each there might have been?

Mr. Halley. I do not think I could do that. We are talking about hundreds of companies that we used during that period of time. Some of them might simply have been a company set up and registered and run out of some attorney's office. It simply provided back stopping for the ownership of the small boat.

Everything has to be owned by somebody, it has to have a Coast Guard registration, you know, things like that. Even if I had access to the files to answer your question, it would take me weeks to pull all that together to give you an answer. I don't think there is an overview statement.

Mr. Baron. Would it be fair to say that you had cooperation on a grand scale from all kinds of people in private enterprise in the Miami area, or in Southern Florida?

Mr. Halley. I think it would be fair to say that we had extensive cooperation -- I do not like your word "grand" -- that we had extensive cooperation from the civilian sector in Florida, in the state of Florida, to facilitate the conduct of this clandestine mission.

Mr. Baron. Did you also have extensive cooperation from civic officials and law enforcement agencies in being allowed to operate free or the law? For instance, were you allowed to put vessels onto the water which were not properly registered, or which could be held immune for inspection by the Coast Guard or other maritime authorities, and were you allowed to send people through the streets of Southern Florida who may have been armed or violating local law in some other way, who were held immune by arrangements that you had with law enforcement agencies?

Mr. Halley. You have asked me, in essence, three questions.

Mr. Baron. Right.

Mr. Halley. Let me try to divide that and deal with each question separately.

Let me first deal with the vessels. Every vessel that we had was appropriately registered. There were no short-cuts insofar as the U.S. Coast Guard was concerned. That is, any vessel that was registered in the United States met appropriate safety standards and so forth, so we were not putting any vessels into the water that any citizen could not have put into the water. That is we are talking about ten, fifteen, twenty foot boats, thirty foot boats, thirty-five foot boats, things like that. These boats were owned in either a corporate name or by a private individual who had to register them with the Coast Guard and pass normal Coast Guard regulations.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

7 6 0 0 0 7 0 1 0 :

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Baron. To continue with this, I understand that safety regulations would have been complied with, but was there some sort of immunity from inspection, say inspection for carrying armaments aboard a vessel that the CIA had arranged with maritime authorities, or local law enforcement authorities?

Mr. Halley. When we had operations going, these were coordinated with the Coast Guard in terms of their knowing that, you know, at a particular date, time group, that there would be a rendezvous between two vessels which were our vessels, and this was coordinated with the Coast Guard.

Mr. Baron. Would you return to the second part of that large question? Without reference to vessels, were CIA employees or agents on the streets of cities in Southern Florida immune from search or arrest by local law enforcement authorities?

Mr. Halley. They were not immune.

Let me ask to dispel one myth that I think has developed which is reflected in your question. We were meticulous to insure that no weapons were issued to anybody until the men were on the vessel outside of the immediate waters of south Florida, and we were meticulous to insure that when they came back from a mission that they were met at sea and all the weapons were taken away from them.

So, when you talk about a group moving around in Florida, we did work out through the entire state, and I did not want you to feel that I was being less than candid with you, and you keep saying south Florida, I want to say to you that we operated in the state of Florida, men moving around armed under our control in the state of Florida, is just not correct. This was all carefully controlled and they did not have their weapons when they came back, we took them before they landed, so they were not immune.

Mr. Baron. You did have general arrangements or agreements with law enforcement agencies throughout Florida for the treatment of CIA operatives who were affiliated with the JMWAVE Station?

Mr. Halley. We did have, through our Office of Security, a continuing dialogue with a number of law enforcement agencies in Florida. If a problem developed, we would then contact them and look at the issue within the context of what had transpired. Certainly there was no immunity. In other words, this has to be looked at on a case by case basis.

For instance, you know, we had a training site in north Florida, as an example. If somebody came off of that site that was drunk and disorderly in town and could not speak English, the local authorities did have a number to call to raise this with us to see whether this was somebody that was of interest to us, and then we would have to go and settle that particular case.

Mr. Baron. Back to the structure of the relationships between yourself as Chief of Station at JMWAVE and any operatives or employees who worked underneath you at that Station, would it be fair to say that any activities run out of the Station ultimately were channeled out through you?

Mr. Halley. They should have been, and they were -- you know this Station went through several mutations in organization during its existence. I guess the organizational structure that existed for the longest period of time was something like I am going to describe to you.

There was a Chief of Station, which was myself. I had a Deputy Chief of Station for operations. That is the gentleman who is now retired, I think he is still alive, by the name of Moore, Robert Moore. I had a second Deputy Chief of Station and he was for Support Patterns. That is a gentleman who is also retired, a Mr. Corris.

Then the rest of the Station was organized into a number of branches. Each branch was organized along functional lines. Let me give you an example. There was a Foreign Intelligence Branch. These were people in, what in my terminology would be classical foreign intelligence operations. That is, trying to recruit a Cuban diplomat abroad, as an example, dealing with, you know, a Uruguayan diplomat in the Uruguayan Embassy in Havana. They are working with resident agents in Cuba who might live in some city like Havana and have a legal job as a baker or butcher or something but had a radio set in which they could communicate with us, through which they could communicate to us.

Then there was the Paramilitary Branch. This was the group that ran the commando operations. This was the group that ran, and put people back into Cuba, into resistance groups, or established contact with resistance groups. This was a group that also worked in putting in caches that would supply people, either paramilitary forces in Cuba or agents that were being run by the Foreign Intelligence Group.

All right. Then there was a Covert Action, people who dealt with exiled refugee groups that were involved in radio activities, publications, that kind of thing. Then there is a whole panoply of -- then there was Maritime, in terms of finance, and so on. Security was a branch. Obviously, under that kind of system, no executive, whether he is president of a corporation or a Station Chief, can see every single piece of paper that comes in or out, but clearly there was a review procedure whereby program reviews were conducted, individual operational reviews were conducted.

Mr. Baron. By yourself?

Mr. Halley. By myself. I do not want to leave you with the impression that I knew every single thing that was going on every minute and could account for the activities of three hundred employees on a daily basis.

Mr. Baron. In talking about the personnel affiliated with the Station a moment ago, I think we may have created a misimpression that the only people involved in CIA operations were people who were paid by the Agency. Isn't it also true that there were many members of Cuban exile groups in Florida who participated voluntarily from time to time in CIA sponsored operations?

Mr. Halley. I think that you may have to sharpen that up for me. I am not sure what you really mean.

If you are talking about foreign intelligence collections, you know, the people who were producing --

Mr. Baron. I am talking now about the paramilitary operations.

Mr. Halley. No. I do not know of any people that were involved in paramilitary operations that were not in some way paid.

Mr. Baron. By the Agency?

Mr. Halley. By the Agency.

Let me make sure that we understand each other, because during this period of time there were a lot of independent Cuban groups who claimed that they had sponsorship from the Agency but did not, and were operating, and there was a period in time when these groups could not run their operations from Florida without running the risk of being picked up by Customs, Immigration, Coast Guard, the FBI, or if we had information on it, you know, we might pass the information to the Coast Guard so that they could keep them from going.

If that is what you are referring to, somebody like Alpha 6 or Commando L or somebody like that, they were not a part of the CIA apparatus.

Mr. Baron. Although you might be aware of their activities?

Mr. Halley. We would be aware of their activities, certainly.

Mr. Baron. Can you explain if there is anything to add to what we have already said? The chain of command, apart from yourself as Chief of Station, to Task Force W and to the Directorate of Plans within the Agency?

You would report directly to William Harvey?

Mr. Halley. William Harvey was Chief of Task Force W, later FitzGerald. My chain of command was from me to them. You know, they had a subordinate staff who helped them monitor the Station's activity, so that it just was not the fact, you know, that Mr. Harvey and Mr. FitzGerald were totally dependent on what I told them. To have an appreciation of what was going on in Miami they had their own staff that was following individual operations.

For instance, they had a paramilitary staff that would review our proposals for a paramilitary operation and might say we think that the Station has overextended itself this month, they want to run twenty-five operations given the weather during this particular month of October. We do not think they could do it. We think they should be guided to run only twenty, fifteen, something like that. So they were not totally dependent on me.

Mr. Baron. What was the nature of the split of responsibility between Task Force W and JMWAVE Station?

In other words, were there certain operations that were run directly out of Task Force W?

Mr. Halley. Also, you have to put this into a historical time. What period are you talking about?

Mr. Baron. During the period of your tenure. If there were changes during your tenure at JMWAVE, why do you not explain those?

Mr. Halley. There were. Each one is different. Let me give you a couple of examples.

Washington, Task Force W, essentially did not run any paramilitary operations where they took command and control for sending people to Cuba. For instance, if Task Force W in Washington wanted to plant a radio in Cuba which was to be picked up by foreign intelligence agents who could report, they would task us to implant that radio in a cache in a particular area in Cuba, for instance, Oriente province. We would know simply that it was a radio perhaps. We would then put it into Oriente province, write up the site, give them the rip cord. They would communicate to the agents in Cuba who would go recover the cache.

So they had agents in Cuba that were reporting foreign intelligence to them so they had collection assets that were reporting to them along the same lines that we did. They did work at a downstream point when FitzGerald came in with a couple of groups -- in other words, they had contact with Artime. I had no contact with the Artime group as a general rule. They also had contact with Manolo Ray which I did not have contact with. So they were working with these kinds of larger exile groups.

The Task Force also specialized in much more economic activity than I did. That is a question of looking at such things as [redacted] bus exports from [redacted] to Cuba. 13,13

Mr. Baron. In terms of paramilitary operations, if an assassination operation had been run by Task Force W, would you have assumed as Chief of Station in Miami you would have been aware of such an operation?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not assume that.

Mr. Baron. Would it not have been sound managerial practice to let you know that there was an operation that might have been run through Florida into Cuba?

Mr. Halley. No.

You know, the Agency is a highly compartmented mechanism. You know, let us dispel one thing very promptly here. If you are asking me was I aware of all these contacts, you know, with the Mafia -- and I think I can tell you frankly at that time I was not -- Harvey would come, you know, to Miami, to visit me to review the activities of the station, and while there would go off on his own and make his contact with whomever he was meeting. I knew he was meeting somebody, but it was not up to me to find out with whom he was meeting or why he was meeting them or what he was doing with them.

Mr. Baron. My question really was, I think more innocent than that.

Was it strictly one of involving what correct management techniques would be, or what kind of knowledge the Chief of Station of JMWAVE would have to have in order to do an effective job in dealing with the Cuban community and running operations into Cuba? You seem to be saying that it would not be necessary to run an effective job to have knowledge of every other operation that the CIA is running against Castro?

Mr. Halley. I think what I am saying during that particular time -- I do not want you to come to the conclusion that I was knowledgeable of everything that ran in from or through the state of Florida, because during that period of time, for instance, Mr. Harvey in particular was a very compartmented gentleman, and it would be keeping with his style to run an operation in which the locus of the operation might be Florida and I would not know about it.

Now, that would be an unusual thing, but it is not precluded.

Mr. Baron. Let us turn for a moment to following up on the nature of your contacts with William Harvey in reference to any operations he may have in running unilaterally against Castro. Do you recall aiding Harvey in an operation that he was in charge of and that was not affiliated with JMWAVE?

Mr. Halley. I do not recall anything, I do not recall anything specific. In other words, the pattern was in terms of command and control, I would come to Washington on a regular basis to review activity with Harvey after we submitted our paperwork. Harvey was also a frequent visitor to Florida.

We would have operational discussions. He would talk to the Branch Chiefs, he talked to people. He also went out on his own, and he was meeting somebody, it was clear to me that he was meeting people. But it was frankly in the way that the Agency is run and managed, it was not a concern to me whom he was meeting.

Mr. Baron. Would it have been proper of you to inquire of him whom he was meeting?

Mr. Halley. No, it would not have been.

Mr. Baron. Did you have suspicions or speculation about whom he might have been meeting or for what purpose that he was having these meetings?

Mr. Halley. No, not for what purpose. There is a whole, you know, panoply of things going on at that time. You know, frankly I was a very busy guy; when Harvey was there, it occupied one hunk of a lot of my time. If he wanted to go off, you know, do something else and was going to meet someone else, that was fine with me. It enabled me to get back to my immediate and more pressing problems.

In this business you just do not ask your superior, what are you doing? That is just not cricket; that is not the way the game is played.

tape 4

Mr. Baron. Do you recall a time when Harvey asked you to procure arms and equipment to be passed to a Cuban exile?

Mr. Halley. To a Cuban exile?

Mr. Baron. Let me strike the reference to a Cuban exile.

Do you recall a time when Harvey asked your aid in procuring arms and equipment to be given to a man named Tony Varona who was a contact of Harvey's?

Mr. Halley. I know Tony Varona. He was in the period -- prior to the Bay of Pigs, he was part of the consejo.

Frankly, if you've got something that you can sharpen that up, I think you need some basis, that I think that can trigger my memory here. I do not remember frankly Tony Varona being in Harvey's --

Mr. Baron. In contact with Harvey?

Mr. Halley. You know, I may have procured something for Harvey, some kind of equipment or done some kind of operational support task.

Mr. Baron. Let us make it more specific.

Do you recall helping Harvey load a U-Haul trailer full of about $5,000 worth of arms and equipment to be left in a parking lot and picked up there by a contact of Harvey's? And this would be in approximately April of 1962.

Mr. Halley. I do vaguely remember something about a rented truck. Quite frankly, I do not really recall all the details of this at this particular time. I do not remember, you know, personally procuring any material, but it is conceivable that I did get a request from Harvey, that I did go to the logistics apparatus, and whatever he had requested from official stocks he was provided.

Mr. Baron. During that same period of time --

Mr. Halley. I do recall something about a truck. I do not recall anything about a trailer. My recollection of this truck incident seems to be -- I do not remember what it was. We did do something for him logistically, I do remember a truck being involved with some logistic material in terms of a parking lot. But frankly that is about all I can recall of it at this particular time.

Mr. Baron. Do you have any recollection of hearing of poison pills in any connection during your tenure at JMWAVE?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not recall -- poison pills? Poison pills, the only kind of thing I can recall occasionally when people were talking about being on mother ships, you know, what would happen if they were captured. This was a discussion occasionally of whether any kind of drugs should be issued to the people who were manning these vessels so they could do themselves in if they were to be captured, things like that, but we never issued any such pills but there were discussions of that kind of a problem. I do recall specific agents who were sent back to Cuba to run a collection or to go back into the bush and so forth who asked for some sort of pills which they could kill themselves with if they were captured.

But other than that -- if that is what you were referring to, I think they are called L pills, or something, as they were referred to in those days.

Mr. Baron. Why were they called L pills?

Mr. Hallev. Everything has a number or nomenclature, I do not know.

Mr. Baron. Did you ever hear of poison pills to be used in assassination operations against Fidel Castro or other Cuban leaders?

Mr. Halley. No.

Is that referencing to this material that I might have provided for Harvey? Because if that is the case, I can dispel that quickly, because I would not have had access to them.

Mr. Baron. You would not have access to poison pills?

Mr. Halley. No, I would not have access to them.

Mr. Baron. Why not?

Mr. Halley. I did not have them in my inventory. That is not anything that I have, you know, command and control of. That is why --

Mr. Baron. They would have had to come directly from Technical Services Division at CIA?

Mr. Halley. That is what I'm trying to clarify what it is that you are trying to establish from me.

In other words, if you are saying --

Mr. Baron. Let us move further, I think we can be more specific now.

We have a document that I am about to show you. I just wanted to clear up the background of it before we discussed the document.

Mr. Halley. Let me just make this point. If you are talking about drug pills, I had no source of such things, so if that is the nature of your question, I can say I had nothing to do with that. If you are talking about, you know --

Mr. Baron. Arms and equipment --

Mr. Halley. -- weapons or something, yes, that was in my inventory. I could have issued that to Harvey, you know, guns, ammunition, plastics, that kind of thing I could have had access to, yes. That is why I am trying to sort out really where the thrust of your questioning is.

Mr. Baron. There were two prongs to the question, you have picked both of them up. One is whether you had ever heard of poison pills in connection with an assassination operation against Fidel Castro, and your testimony would be that you had not, is that correct?

Mr. Halley. That is right. I would not have had access to those pills myself, nor did the Station. In other words, if I had wanted something like that, I would have had to corresponded with Washington in order to have had access to it, if in fact it existed.

Mr. Baron. You never had any such correspondence?

Mr. Halley. I never had any correspondence that I can recall.

Mr. Baron. The other problem was the supply of arms and equipment to which you already replied.

Have you ever read that Inspector General's Report of 1967, prepared at the request of the DCI to fill him in on any assassination efforts to which the CIA may have been connected?

Mr. Halley. No, I have not read the report.

Mr. Baron. Before you came here today you were not shown any excerpts from this report to refresh your recollection at the CIA?

Mr. Halley. The IG Report?

Mr. Baron. Yes.

Mr. Halley. No, I have not.

Mr. Baron. Were you shown any other documents at the CIA today to refresh -- or in preparation for today's session --

Mr. Halley. No.

In preparation for today's session I have had several conversations with Seymour Boultin --

Mr. Baron. Walt Elder?

Mr. Halley. I talked to Walt Elder on the phone. You know the people who are involved in this thing. I have asked for that, I talked to our attorney, Clarke --

Mr. Baron. George Clarke?

Mr. Halley. Yes.

-- I talked to a number of people, I asked to see the newspaper clipping from the Miami Herald on the McGovern activity. Yes, I have looked at that kind of thing. But I have not looked at the specific IG Report. I have not read it, I have not seen an extract of the IG Report.

Mr. Baron. Were you given any specific instructions as to the kinds of things that you could say or not say here today?

Mr. Halley. You know, nothing beyond what you and I touched on which you have already put on the record.

Mr. Baron. Which is not to mention the names of CIA officers who are still operating under cover?

Mr. Halley. Right, or agents who would still be viable that I know of.

Mr. Baron. Right.

Then let me show you a document which we will mark as Halley Exhibit No. 2.

(The document referred to was marked Halley Exhibit No. 2 for identification.)

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Baron. Which is an excerpt from the Inspector General's Report of 1967 at pages 49 and 50, and I will ask you to read the portions that I will bracket which deal with a report of a meeting between yourself and William Harvey involving the supply of arms and equipment.

(Pause)

Mr. Halley. I have no reason to doubt this. I may have provided this support. I do not recall sitting in a parking lot observing --

Mr. Baron. For the record, we are discussing the passage that begins, "When the pills were given to Varona through Roselli, Varona requested arms and equipment needed for the support of his end of the operation. Roselli passed the request to Harvey. Harvey, with the help of [Mr. Halley], the chief of the JMWAVE Station, procured" --

Continuing.--And then it continues to say a large shopping list of arms and equipment, which cost about $5,000 and were supplied in a parking lot of a drive-in restaurant in a rented U-Haul truck.

Would the cost of $5,000 have been an unusual expenditure at that time at JMWAVE Station for arms and equipment?

Mr. Halley. No, $5,000 would not have been an unusual expenditure.

Mr. Baron. Not unusual enough, in fact, for you to have a particular memory of the event?

Mr. Halley. No.

Now that I read over this thing, I do recall, as I told you earlier before you showed me this document something about a rented truck and being involved with Harvey in providing him some logistical support for an activity. I do not recall this specific list of equipment being involved, you know, somewhere you got this and if I could check it against the files, if there are any files available, I could verify whether this is correct or not.

Mr. Baron. Whether or not the particular list is correct, you would say that these couple of passages from the IG Report generally characterize your involvement with Harvey in this one incident correctly?

Mr. Halley. I would want to sharpen this up, because you have one, two, two paragraphs here. In the first paragraph there is a reference to some pills. I had nothing to do with any pills. I have no recollection of any pills.

Mr. Baron. Let us jump then to the very last statement and let me ask you if this confirms your own sense of your knowledge.

The report says: "Harvey says that [Halley]" -- here I am using your alias -- "never knew to whom delivery was made nor for what purpose. [Halley] was merely called upon to furnish support for a headquarters operation from which he was otherwise excluded."

Does that generally characterize correctly your point of involvement with this activity?

Mr. Halley. I would say that is correct.

I want to go back to these other points, though, because I want to be meticulously correct here. I do not recall the specifics of this inventory of equipment. I do not recall, you know, sitting in a parking lot, surveilling any kind of a vehicle. On the other hand, I do recall having been involved with Harvey in some sort of an effort with a U-Haul truck. Now therefore that last sentence you have read is correct, I knew nothing about any of this delivery and I was called upon to furnish support for a headquarters operation from which I was otherwise excluded.

Mr. Baron. You are not denying, are you, that you may have sat near the parking lot and surveilled the truck until it was picked up?

Mr. Halley. I have no recollection --

Mr. Baron. One way or the other?

Mr. Halley. No, I would say that my sitting in a parked car with Harvey surveilling a parking lot is the kind of thing that would have stuck in my mind. I do not recall ever doing that and that is the thing that has me a little perplexed here and I am having trouble matching this thing up with my own memory. It would have been damned unusual for Harvey and I to have sat in a parking lot, and I just do not recall that.

I do have a vague recollection of being involved with him in some sort of caper involving a U-Haul truck.

Mr. Baron. At that time, if Harvey had made a request of you to supply $5,000 worth of equipment like explosives, detonators, .30 caliber rifles, .45 caliber handguns, radios and boat radar, would you have supplied that equipment to Harvey or to anyone he designated without asking him what the purpose of the operation was?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I would have supplied it to Harvey or to his designated representative, depending on how that person identified himself to me with the equipment that he requested. That was my chain of command and, if he had told me that he had wanted this material for any operational activity, I would have seen to it that it was issued to him. That is the way the Agency functions.

Mr. Baron. Would it have been standard procedure in a paramilitary operation to procure equipment that would not have been traceable to the United States as the IG Report indicates was done in this case?

Mr. Halley. It depends. It depends on what was the sponsorship that was trying to be conveyed to the paramilitary group.

In other words, let us say there was a Venezuelan businessman who may have been giving some assistance to a Cuban exile group. If somebody had gotten in touch with that Venezuelan businessman and he was saying I brought weapons into Florida or equipment which I will give you, then maybe under that kind of a circumstance we wouldn't want anything that would clearly identify it with the U.S. government and then that would be the normal thing to do. I would have to know the sponsorship.

Mr. Baron. This request would not have been extraordinary either, to provide "sterile" equipment to a contact of Harvey's?

Mr. Halley. It would not have attracted my attention to make it seem out of the ordinary.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware of the presence of a CIA officer named Jim O'Connell in Florida at that time?

Mr. Halley. No.

Mr. Baron. Had you been aware of any operational involvement that Jim O'Connell had with anyone in Florida at any time?

Mr. Halley. I do not know Jim O'Connell. I have seen references to Jim O'Connell in Jack Anderson's columns and things like that since I have been reading the Press, but I do not know Jim O'Connell. If he walked into this room, I would not recognize him because I do not think I ever met the man. I do not know who he is. I asked several of my colleagues when I first saw his name appear in the Press who it was, and nobody could describe him in a way that would enable me to remember ever having seen or met the man.

Mr. Baron. Had you heard of the man in connection with operations against Cuba --

Mr. Halley. I had not.

Mr. Baron. -- before reading it in the newspapers recently?

Mr. Halley. Before reading in the newspapers and I do not know what year I first read this, because somewhere in the back of my mind is a Jack Anderson column --

Mr. Baron. And a Drew Pearson column before that.

Mr. Halley. -- a couple of years ago in which it was obvious that this was obtained from a military assignee to the Agency named Brad something -- I cannot think of his name right now -- and that he was the source of that information. I think somewhere in one of those articles, his name had appeared several years ago. I frankly do not know who the guy is.

Mr. Baron. At any point in your operational relationship with William Harvey in connection with Cuban affairs, did you suspect that an assassination operation was being run out of Task Force W against Fidel Castro?

Mr. Halley. No.

Mr. Baron. I would like to run down a list of the names of some people who were involved in one way or the other with an assassination operation that was being run out of Task Force W, and I will represent to you that there was indeed an assassination effort or a series of efforts run out of Task Force W beginning -- and out of the CIA -- beginning in October of 1960 involving connections between CIA officials and people who have been characterized as members of the Mafia, of the gambling Syndicate who had interests in Havana and which involved the passage of poison pills to people inside Cuba purportedly for use against Castro in the restaurant that he frequented. And this plot by William Harvey's own admission was directed by Harvey during Harvey's tenure as the Chief of Task Force W.

Mr. Halley. I take due note of what you are saying. I have no knowledge of that. I will be glad to comment on any of the names. My commenting on names is in no way to reflect any knowledge on my part of this particular activity, because I have no knowledge of it.

Mr. Baron. You have already stated that you have no knowledge of any assassination effort involving poison pills?

Mr. Halley. Yes.

Mr. Baron. Did you ever hear of any assassination schemes which may or may not have been put into effect involving exploding sea shells that Castro might pick up by scuba diving?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not recall any exploding sea shells while Castro was scuba diving, but the problem of Castro being an avid scuba diver is well-known to me. As I recall, somewhere in this thing there was a refugee group or Cuban exile group or somebody at one time in this whole activity who had focused on the question of whether Fidel Castro was vulnerable at the time that he was scuba diving. I have heard that discussed but frankly I do not remember in what forum, and your reference to the scuba diving has triggered that response. Nothing about exploding sea shells.

Mr. Baron. You do not recall ever hearing Desmond FitzGerald mention that subject or hearing that Desmond FitzGerald was involved in exploring that possibility, planting an exploding sea shell?

Mr. Halley. The exploding sea shell is enough of an off-beat kind of thing that I think I would have recalled it. I don't recall it.

I do recall Castro's scuba diving, and that representing a vulnerability and somewhere in the recesses of my memory, that does strike a bell with me that some exile group, somebody was talking about Fidel Castro being vulnerable while he was scuba diving.

Mr. Baron. Did you ever hear of a plan to present Castro with a skin-diving suit in which bacteria injurious to his health would have been cultured, bacteria that would have produced tuberculosis and would have produced a dreadful disease?

Mr. Halley. I have never heard of any bacteria approach to the problem of dealing with Fidel Castro.

I do want to come back to this that I do recall something about scuba diving, you know, on the range of Fidel being vulnerable at the time he was scuba diving, but I do not recall exploding sea shells or bacteria.

Mr. Baron. Let us turn then to the list of name --

Mr. Halley. Wait a minute. Just let me make a note to myself.

(Pause)

Mr. Baron. Do you have any knowledge, acquired directly or indirectly, of any involvement of John Roselli in Cuban operations?

Mr. Halley. Other than reading the papers --

Mr. Baron. Other than what you read recently in the papers did you acquire any knowledge during your period as Chief of Station at JMWAVE of John Roselli's involvement in Cuban operations?

Mr. Halley. No. I had the impression from Harvey going off that he was meeting with somebody, and at one point in time I came to the impression that he was meeting a guy by the name of John. Who John was, I had no idea. We were involved in an attempt to try to find two Soviets at one point who were of interest. The fellow who provided the lead to that had been a member of one of the casinos in Cuba at some time.

Mr. Baron. Do you remember who that was?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not. I do not remember the man's name. It may come to me. You are asking me things that happened, you know, in 1962. As I have told you, I have been in a lot of places.

Anyway, when we put in a request for a trace on the source of this lead, I was surprised with the speed with which we got a response back on this man and the details run down that we got on him in terms of who he was and where he worked and so forth, and I think I concluded at that time that somebody knew this fellow very well and somewhere in the whole labrynth, either Justice or we or somebody had access to somebody who could give us a great deal of insight into people who had been involved with the gambling establishment in Cuba.

Those are the only two things that I can say to you that I knew at the time. Obviously I have since read the papers and I have put together in my own mind by deduction that the John that I was aware of that Harvey was in touch with must be John Roselli, but I cannot provide to you --

Mr. Baron. Would this person with contacts with gambling interests in Havana have been Santos Trafficante?

Mr. Halley. I would have no way of knowing. I know who Santos Trafficante is.

Mr. Baron. How do you know this?

Mr. Halley. This is like asking me whether I knew where 7th Street is in downtown Miami. Santos Trafficante is a name that constantly was discussed among Cuban exiles and he was a well-known figure. You could not possibly be involved--

Mr. Baron. Did you know of any involvement that he had in Cuban operations that were connected in any way to the CIA?

Mr. Halley. None that I know of. To the best of my recollection when I was in Miami, Santos Trafficante was in the Tampa area and that is my recollection of it at the time.

I also think that there was some large scandal, when I was in Miami, that was played up in the Press. I forget, some Federal agent who was somehow involved with the Mafia and with the Syndicate and there was some linkage in the Press between Santos Trafficante, Cubans and the Federal agent, but I do not remember the details of it.

Mr. Baron. The Federal agent was not a CIA employee?

Mr. Halley. No, he was not. My recollection is he was Narcotics or something.

Mr. Baron. You would make the same statement about John Roselli that you had no knowledge of his connection with any CIA sponsored operation against the Cuban government or against Castro personally?

Mr. Halley. At the time that I was there -- you know, I want to caution you that I have read the Press. If I have trouble sorting this out, I want you to understand that --

Mr. Baron. I understand that clearly.

Mr. Halley. -- that this is a dilemma for me. Obviously I told you I made my own deduction that John, the one that Harvey was in touch with, must have turned out in the context of 20/15 hindsight to be John Roselli. At the time, I did not know that.

Mr. Baron. What about Robert Maheu? Did you have any knowledge that he was involved with Cuban operations affiliated with the CIA?

Mr. Halley. No.

Again, at the time I had no knowledge of Robert Maheu. I have since read about Robert Maheu in the Press, allegations and so forth. The name is familiar to me now.

Mr. Baron. The same question for Sam Giancana.

Mr. Halley. Again, I say in answer that at the time that I was involved in '62 and '65 I did not know anything about Sam Giancana. I have since read in the Press about him. Therefore, the name is familiar to me today.

Mr. Baron. Did you know at that time that Sheffield Edwards, who was then Director of the Office of Security, was connected in any way with those efforts against Castro personally or against the Castro government?

Mr. Halley. At that time, Shef Edwards was known to me as Director of Security. That is all. I had no knowledge of his involvement in any activity against Fidel Castro in a personal sense.

Shef Edwards did help Security Officers assigned to my staff in Miami. Therefore I would periodically go to him about the performance of his officers who were on my staff. So during the time that I was involved in Cuban affairs, yes, I did see him, yes, I did talk to him about Cuban affairs in Miami, the performance of his officers on my staff, but nothing about anything that he might be doing, you know, against Fidel Castro.

Mr. Baron. I will represent to you that we have testimony from Edwards and from Jim O'Connell who was an officer working in the Office of Security under Edwards that they were involved in the early stages of an assassination plot against Castro which was run out of the Office of Security and later transferred to the DDP. But you are saying that you had no knowledge of any such operation at that time?

Mr. Halley. I had no knowledge. As I told you before, I did not even know Jim O'Connell.

Mr. Baron. Do you know a man by the name of Juan Orta?

Mr. Halley. That name is familiar to me. It is a name that has appeared, you know, across my scope. I cannot tell you why I am familiar with it. I would have to have a trace run, you know, and look at the results of the trace. But the name Juan Orta is known to me. That does ring a passive bell in my memory.

Mr. Baron. Do you remember William Harvey having any direct contact with Juan Orta?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not.

Mr. Baron. You do not have any specific recollection of Juan Orta's point of involvement in operations against Castro?

Mr. Halley. Juan Orta, no. It is a name I am familiar with. I think you will find, you know, that there are a number of names -- you asked me to look at that other thing -- a number of names that do ring bells with me. I really would have to have back-up material to clarify why they ring a bell. This is one that happens to ring a bell with me, but I have no way of linking it to anything, and certainly I do not link it in any way in my memory to Mr. Harvey.

Mr. Baron. Do you remember ever hearing of a Cuban contact of William Harvey's who went by the name of Maceo?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not.

Mr. Baron. He also used the name of Garcia Gomez and the name Godoy.

Mr. Halley. The only name that rings any bell with me in Cuban contacts is Arturo Godoy. Is this the same man?

Mr. Baron. We do not have the first name of that alias. In what connection had you heard of Arturo Godoy?

Mr. Halley. My recollection is I've known Arturo Godoy is that he was the fellow who was active in the Cuban immigre community in Miami. That is all I can tell you at this point. I would have to go back.

Mr. Baron. You do not remember what group he was connected with?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not. But it was a name that obviously, you know, frequently referred to in reports. You know at one time we did monitor the Cuban community as to what was going on in terms of these various groups and what they had been doing. For some reason, Arturo Godoy rings a bell with me. As I recall, he was some sort of an activist in some Cuban exile group. To give you a definitive answer, you know, I would have to get the name, trace him, have a run on this fellow and try to put it together in some kind of context, but that is the only Godoy that rings any bells with me.

Certainly in my relationship with Harvey, this has no meaning to me. Godoy and Harvey just do not ring any bells.

Mr. Baron. One more name that we already discussed, that is Tony Varona.

Mr. Halley. Yes.

Mr. Baron. You said that you did know Tony Varona?

tape 5

Mr. Halley. I know of Tony Varona, that he was leader of the consejo, the revolutionary counsel that had been set up to sort of administer the Bay of Pigs operation. In the post Bay of Pigs era, Nua Cardona and Tony Varona were people who still appeared on the exile scene and were prominent. We had some dealings with Nua Cardona , officers in the Station had dealings with Nua Cardona and Tony Varona to pay off, you know, injuries to peopoe who had been suffered during the Bay of Pigs, things like that, widows and so on. I know who he is and so forth, the name is very familiar to me. I never personally met with Tony Varona.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware that William Harvey had an independent line of communication with Tony Varona?

Mr. Halley. No, I am not.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000
WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Mr. Baron. Would it surprise you if that were the case?

Mr. Halley. The Tony Varona thing would surprise me, frankly. I think I would not -- I would be surprised, yes.

Mr. Baron. Why is that?

Mr. Halley. Well, because here is a case where the guy was a prominent exile figure, essentially residing in Miami, and I knew of no contacts or had no reasons to suspect any contacts with this kind of an exile figure, though once it specifically appeared, I was aware of and it was discussed. This was done under FitzGerald's stewardship with the Task Force. I was aware of that. I would be surprised if someone was in touch with Tony Varona and I did not know about it. If you told me that is what happened, that is what Harvey has testified to, I accept that. I am surprised by it.

Mr. Baron. What was the nature of the CIA relationship to Artime?

Mr. Halley. Well, the Miami Station had no direct relationship with him. As to the nature of the project, you know Artime ran from the Agency, from other people who actually worked with him on a first time basis.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware of a project called AMLASH?

Mr. Halley. Let me make sure we are talking about the same thing.

Mr. Baron. Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Baron. We have just gone off the record to straighten out the fact that we are both talking about the same Cuban high military officer who was known to the CIA by the cryptonym of AMLASH.

Correct me if I am wrong, Mr. Halley, that you and I agree that we are referring to the same person that we have identified off the record?

Mr. Halley. Yes, we have.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware of contacts between AMLASH-1, as he was known, and Artime?

Mr. Halley. I think at the time that this was going on, I do not know whether I was or I was not -- I was aware that the CIA was in touch with AMLASH.

Mr. Baron. Did you deal directly with the case officers who ran AMLASH?

Mr. Halley. I did not. My recollection of this AMLASH case is as follows. At some point in time, I had a conversation with Desmond FitzGerald in Washington during one of my periodic visits to Washington from Miami. We discussed at that meeting the nature of our approach to the military establishment in Cuba. In the context of that conversation, Mr. FitzGerald asked me if I thought whether it would be a good idea for him to meet one of these Cuban military personalities, and he subsequently identified to me the personality he was talking about was AMLASH-1.

My advice to him was that it would probably not be a good idea for him to meet him, and the only thing that I could see coming out of that kind of a contact would be that he, Mr. FitzGerald, would get a personal feel for what makes some of these people tick, in human terms, and that that probably was too high a price to pay for the prospect if anything went wrong, an individual as prominent in Washington as, both within the Agency and the social world in Washington, would be exposed in the Press. That would create a flap that I thought was not worth what would be gained from that meeting.

Mr. Baron. Would this have been in the fall of 1963?

Mr. Halley. I have no recollection of the time.

Subsequent to that, Mr. FitzGerald told me that he had indeed met him and that he had had an interesting conversation with him. I subsequently recall that this gentleman was met in Spain at some point in time --

Mr. Baron. This gentleman being AMLASH-1?

Mr. Halley. This gentleman, being AMLASH-1, was met in Spain. I also recall after having left the Cuban activity that I read a Press article showing that he had been apprehended and I remember reading the publicity of that particular activity. It is also my recollection that we put in a cache for him.

That is about the sum and substance of it.

Mr. Baron. Do you recall what the purpose of that cache was? Was it a cache of arms?

Mr. Halley. It was a cache. I think that you could go to the record to establish what was in the cache. I do not recall specifically what the material was that was in the cache.

Mr. Baron. At the point that you were having these conversations with Desmond FitzGerald, though, in the first instance the prospect of his contact directly with AMLASH-1, in the second instance his reaction to his contact with AMLASH-1 do you recall FitzGerald mentioning to you the fact that AMLASH had requested assurances that high officials of the U.S. government would stand behind him if he undertook operations on behalf of the CIA?

Mr. Halley. I do not recall this at the time.

You know, I also want to say, as you probably know from the record, I was later Chief of the WH Division from 1972 to 1973, and I did read some of the files. I am familiar with the case. But at the time -- I am trying to be schizophrenic, you know, to put this in the time sequence in which we are talking about. My recollection of that is that I did not know that.

Mr. Baron. It would then be your testimony that Mr. FitzGerald never broached with you the subject of making a representation to AMLASH-1 that Robert Kennedy or other high officials of the U.S. government would stand behind him?

Mr. Halley. I do not recall that kind of a conversation taking place with FitzGerald in this timeframe that we are talking about.

Mr. Baron. Do you recall any such conversation at any point?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not, in the timeframe that we are talking about.

Mr. Baron. When I say at any point, I mean at any point since 1962.

Mr. Halley. Well, you know, in the period 1972-73, I did look at some of the files, I did read some of the files. I am familiar that such conversations took place and that there were a series of meetings. You know, I know who the case officer was and so forth.

Mr. Baron. You never discussed the subject directly with FitzGerald?

Mr. Halley. With FitzGerald, no. I can only say that my knowledge of that is secondhand from having subsequently read the files.

Mr. Baron. Was it your impression at that time that one of the objectives of the contact with AMLASH-1 was the assassination of Fidel Castro or other high Cuban leaders?

Mr. Halley. No. I never had the impression that assassination was a thrust of the activity. In other words, we were working across-the-board, both in the context that Desmond

FitzGerald and his staff were working on what I was doing in Miami to try to establish contacts with the Cuban military. In other words, we saw this as a multi-faceted approach. First, we wanted penetrations of the Cuban military so that we could collect intelligence. What were their strengths, weaknesses, what was their mood, where were things going? Secondly, we wanted from these sources operational intelligence. Who -- in other words, who in these groups were dissatisfied as Fidel consolidated. Who could provide leadership for a counter-movement against Fidel?

We were looking for people, once we had identified them, to see if we could establish contacts with any of these leaders so we could see whether there was a basis for working toward an overthrow of the Castro government. You know, those were the basic steps.

Now as you got down to talking about how you overthrow Castro, obviously the question comes in of how does a group who wants to run a coup or take power take power, and obviously one of the things that has to be looked at is where does the existing leadership going to be during this event, who has control of the various units. So our discussions were all in that context.

Mr. Baron. Would it have surprised you or would it surprise you now to learn that at least part of the contact with AMLASH would have involved planning for an assassination attempt against Castro.

Mr. Halley. I certainly was not aware of that at the time, as I recall from, you know, looking at the files in the '72-'73 period, seeing any evidence of that in the file at the time.

Mr. Baron. There are fourteen folders in the AMLASH file. Did you read all of those files?

Mr. Halley. No, I did not.

Mr. Baron. How did you gather your impression that that was in the AMLASH files?

Mr. Halley. I think I may have read one or two volumes of whatever my question was at the time, because these cases keep coming up. You know, there must have been some inquiry at the time that necessitated my looking at the folder or discussing it with my staff and so on.

Mr. Baron. As far as you knew, what was the objective of the contact with Artime?

Mr. Halley. You mean the CIA contact with Artime?

Mr. Baron. Yes.

Mr. Halley. As a concept, the Artime thing was looked at as another track, an approach to the overall Cuban problem to see if they could sort of do it on their own. If they could simply be given, you know, X number of dollars, some equipment, some guidance, and give them an opportunity to find a Cuban solution to what was a Cuban problem. That was also, you know, and if you have not, you should talk to the people who ran the Artime operation, when this was set up, I think I participated in giving Artime some tutorial training for a couple of weeks when this operation was first established in order to familiarize him with some of the problems of trying to manage a large operation against Cuba because he had been out of things for a couple of years.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware that he had been supplied a weapon which we already agreed could be characterized as an assassination weapon?

Mr. Halley. You say "we." You and I?

Mr. Baron. Yes.

Mr. Halley. Which weapon was that?

Mr. Baron. A high-powered rifle with long-range and low muzzle velocity.

Mr. Halley. I am aware of the fact of this project that Artime was involved in that he got a number of weapons, any number of which could have been used for sniper type activities. I am aware of the fact that he had a base in Nicaragua to have activities, so I would find it hard to single out a weapon. My recollection of that that he was given a large number of weapons.

Mr. Baron. Was one of Artime's objectives to have been to assassinate Fidel Castro?

Mr. Halley. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. Baron. Did you ever hear any discussion to the effect that the Agency was attempting to achieve through Artime indirectly what they did not want to achieve directly in a fashion that would be attributed to the CIA, namely the assassination of Castro?

Mr. Halley. I think that you have tied two issues together there and I do not think I can answer the question that way. I would like to separate the question into two parts.

Mr. Baron. Go ahead.

Mr. Halley. The first part, as I mentioned to you earlier the CIA did establish a relationship with Artime and he was given funds and other support to run his approach to solving the Cuban problem. He was one of two such activities that were run at the time. And therefore I think that your statement is correct that perhaps he was set up so that there could be no direct attribution in his activities to the United States, because he set up a base in Nicaragua, and the story as I recall it was put out that he was receiving assistance from the Nicaraguan government, and therefore there was a part of the whole cover story, if you will, for him.

So, yes, there was an attempt to set him up as a parallel track or a separate track. That does not follow from that, in my perspective, that was geared towards an assassination operation, because that was a fantastically large operation involving lots of people, you know, with substantial amounts of money. I was opposed to it at the time. And once it was set up, and I did what I was supposed to do, which was to train Artime and contribute to his training, I then did not pay an awful lot of attention to the thing except what I picked up, you know, over the years, and again in the '72-'73 period, and talked to officers who had, you know, more intimate knowledge of it and got an appraisal of it as to what they thought had occurred.

Mr. Baron. Had you heard at any point that Artime was supplied weapons for the specific purpose of assassinating Castro?

Mr. Halley. No, not for the specific purpose of assassinating Castro.

Mr. Baron. Was it your general impression that AMLASH-1 was a reliable agent?

Mr. Halley. I really do not know that much about him, you know. This was an operation that was run at that time out of Washington and, you know, my knowledge was as I described it to you, the conversations with FitzGerald, Madrid, newspaper articles, so forth, in that particular timeframe.

Mr. Baron. Did the CIA to your knowledge use any gambling Syndicate contacts inside Cuba or people outside Cuba who were connected to gambling interests inside Cuba for any operational purpose including the intelligence gathering?

Mr. Halley. The only case that I recall is this case that I mentioned to you earlier when we were in touch with an individual whose name I cannot remember who had been involved with one of the gambling houses in Cuba who came to us with leads to Soviets from a missile site who wanted to defect. That is the only case that I know of. I cannot think of the man's name. I can give you a physical description of him, and so forth. I honestly cannot think of his name.

Mr. Baron. You are not aware of any other use of people with gambling interests in Cuba for intelligence gathering?

Mr. Halley. Not that I am aware of. If you have something specific that you want to pursue, if you can give me some other clue than that, I just do not, out of my past memory, I simply do not recall any other case but that one.

Mr. Baron. Are you aware of any contact between the CIA and Meyer Lansky?

Mr. Halley. No, I am not aware of any contact between the CIA and Meyer Lansky.

Mr. Baron. Was Howard Hunt connected with any Cuban operations during the period of your tenure at JMWAVE Station?

Mr. Halley. Howard Hunt was involved in the Bay of Pigs Operation. After the Bay of Pigs Operation wss over, he did not participate in the Cuban activities that I was aware of. You may know something that I do not know, because, you know, you have asked me a couple of questions here of things that I am not aware of. You may know something that I do not, but certainly he did not come across my horizon at the time that I was in Miami.

Mr. Baron. Have you ever heard the phrase Executive Action?

Mr. Halley. Yes.

Mr. Baron. What does that signify to you?

Mr. Halley. Well, Executive Action is some sort of a euphemism -- to eliminate somebody, I guess is how it appears in the popular jargon.

Mr. Baron. Did you hear it in the Agency?

Mr. Halley. No, I think that this is a term that has been bandied about in the Press that has come about in the Press to be synonymous with killing somebody or something like that.

Mr. Baron. It is not, as far as you know, a euphemism in common usage within the Agency?

Mr. Halley. No.

Mr. Baron. Had you ever heard of the ZRRIFLE Project run by William Harvey?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not know what it is.

Mr. Baron. Have you ever heard of --

Mr. Halley. I want to make sure here that I am accurate, you know. You are asking me ZRFIFLE. That is a cryptonym for something.

Mr. Baron. Let me explain further.

Mr. Halley. I want to sort of say, in the last thirteen years I have seen literally --

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Halley. Let me go back. You asked me about ZRRIFLE. This is one of a thousand or hundreds of cryptonyms. Every day I read, you know, hundreds of pages of traffic, so when you ask me do I know what ZRRIFLE is, I must answer you off the top of my head no. I have tried to be helpful. I have asked you several times if you could give me a steering tip or show me what direction you are going, I might be able to try to comment on it, but ZRRIFLE as such means nothing to me. You really could not expect that it would, given the thousands of these things that come across my desk.

Mr. Baron. That is absolutely understandable. I want to try to see what happens in the way of getting an unrefreshed recollection from you, then I will go back over these two, especially the next one, QJWIN. Do you recall a CIA asset who went by the cryptonym QJWIN?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not. Knowing the system, and so forth, normally it would have something to do with Spain. It does not ring any bells with me. That is all I can give you, a sort of Pavlovian response. You flash QJWIN on the screen, I am telling you now I do not know, but it probably has something to do with Spain.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware that a project involving the development of a capability of carrying on assassination was run by William Harvey?

Mr. Halley. To develop the capability to carry on the assassination?

Mr. Baron. Yes.

Mr. Halley. No. I have no knowledge of Harvey being focused on a project or given the capability of carrying one out.

Mr. Baron. Harvey has testified, as has Richard Bissell, I will represent to you, that instruction was given by Bissell to Harvey to set up, to develop such a capability in early 1961 and that Harvey took steps to develop such a capability in coordination with an asset in New York named QJWIN and I think that period of greatest activity was in 1962 and WIN was involved in spotting potential assets among the criminal underworld in Europe and might be used for any number of dirty deeds.

Mr. diGenova. It should be emphasized that the Executive Action Plan that you are referring to has had as its goal the incapacitation of foreign leaders, one possibility of incapacitation being the ultimate weapon, assassination. It was just not assassination. It was a spectrum of activities that could be used to incapacitate a foreign leader anywhere from illness, chemical warfare, and then including death. Correct me if I am wrong, but it was not just assassination.

Mr. Baron. Does that ring any bells?

Mr. Halley. No, it does not.

Mr. Baron. Do you have any recollection that the ZRRIFLE Project involving the development of an "Executive Action" capability would have been tied in in any way to an operation against Cuba?

Mr. Halley. No, that does not ring any bells, none whatsoever.

Mr. Baron. I would like to introduce as Halley Exhibit 3 an article from Harper's Magazine entitled "The Kennedy Vendetta," subtitled "How the CIA Waged a Silent War Against Cuba," written by Taylor Branch and George Crile III.

Let me show you this article and let me ask you whether you have read it?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I have read the article.

(The document referred to was marked Halley Exhibit No. 3 for identification.)

Mr. Baron. Let us pick out some specifics and discuss them briefly here.

Near the beginning of this article, it mentions that JMWAVE Station operated within an annual budget of well in excess of $50 million.

Would that be accurate to you?

Mr. Halley. I do not recall whether that is an accurate figure. We would have to go back to the records. You know, as I explained to you earlier, the start of the operation taking place in March and escalated up to a high point and then dropped off. In the budgetary cycle, we are dealing with a mass of figures, and I would not want to give you an inaccurate answer. That is something that could be researched -- we have the files -- rather than speculate for you on the buildup and reduction in the operation. I do not feel that is useful.

Mr. Baron. As a ballpark figure, would you be able to place the annual budget of the Station in the neighborhood of tens of millions of dollars?

Mr. Halley. No, I would not, because of this transition, you know, period, the costs were very high in the beginning to get a start-up operation, brought to a certain peak, and then tapered off and starting to be peeled back. I would not want to draw a figure of --

Mr. diGenova. What would the start-up cost?

Mr. Halley. In terms of what they involved or dollars?

Mr. diGenova. Dollars.

Mr. Halley. I have no recollection of the dollars.

Mr. Baron. Would you say that $50 million would be in the right ballpark for your activities at the peak?

Mr. Halley. I just have no recollection of the dollar figure. You might want to get that figure when you can retrieve it in the files. It is available.

Mr. Baron. Were the operations of JMWAVE coordinated with other Latin American CIA Station's, as the article indicates here?

Mr. Halley. I think my recollection of that phase is that Cuban activities with other Latin American stations were coordinated with JMWAVE.

Mr. Baron. Coordinated with JMWAVE?

Mr. Halley. With JMWAVE.

Mr. Baron. Who had the central coordinating responsibility?

Mr. Halley. Washington.

Mr. Baron. Was that delegated by Washington to you?

Mr. Halley. No. Essentially Washington had the overall coordinating responsibility, but that needs some elaboration. Let me say that we would become aware in our activities in Miami that a number of interesting people had come in on a flight to Mexico City. We would send a cable down to Mexico City with an information copy to Washington outlining who we were interested in, and I would probably send somebody down to Mexico to look at the particular Cuban or the operational opportunity in conjunction with the Station Chief in Mexico City. So we were in some cases a clearinghouse.

The final coordination authority rested in Washington. I will say that if Miami wanted to do something and for local political reasons in Mexico the Mexican Station Chief did not want to do it, that would be adjudicated, not by Miami, but by Washington.

Mr. Baron. Let me quote you a passage here and see if it comports with our discussions earlier of special arrangements you may have, the JMWAVE Station may have had, with law enforcement authorities in Florida.

The article says: "All the boat missions to Cuba were technically illegal under the Neutrality Act, the Maritime Laws, and Immigtation statutes, so that the Station had to work out special arrangements with Customs, Immigration and the Coast Guard."

Is that generally accurate?

Mr. Halley. I think, as I described to you before, there was coordination with the Coast Guard in terms of vessel departures. The other is Immigration?

Mr. Baron. Customs, Immigration and Coast Guard.

Mr. Halley. Immigration, there would not have been coordination on a particular, you know, boat dispatch. On the other hand, let's say if a mission aborted for some reason and a small boat could not recover its position and get back to the mother ship to be picked up and it was adrift or came in to one of the islands or came in to the Florida coast anywhere and was picked up and picked up by Immigration inspectors, then they would ask to have their case referred to a particular individual. It may have been a code number, a color code, it may have been phrase. But then Immigration would get in touch with us and say we have this group, here is what they say, what is your interest in this particular group, and then that would be adjudicated at that point.

Now the third group was Customs. Customs did have a number of patrols and at times when boat loadings were conducted off the Florida Keys in particular, those were coordinated with the Coast Guard so they would not be expending their manpower to run down groups that were extricating with us, in fact the Agency was doing.

Mr. Baron. The article continues to say: "It was illegal for agents to travel around with machine guns and plastic explosives in the cars, as they often did. The Station had to establish liaison with seventeen police jurisdictions along the Florida coast and into the Keys. The result was that any agent who was arrested for anything from drunken driving to illegal possession of firearms would be quickly released."

Is that accurate?

Mr. Halley. I commented on that before, and we are on the record on that as saying that we did not drive around, there were no vehicles moving, manned by these Cubans with arms and weapons on them.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

In other words, you are coming back to the same point, because as I explained to you, the weapons were only given to them on the vessel and taken back from them when they came back from a mission, so that the statement is not actually correct.

Mr. Baron. What about the end of that passage where they say that the result, and I understand that you would disagree as to whether it was a result of this kind of a practice which you say was not carried on at all.--

Mr. Halley. It was not.

Mr. Baron. Did a situation exist where any agent who was arrested for anything from drunken driving to illegal possession of firearms would be quickly released.

tape 6

Mr. Halley. I have to go back and divide your question into two parts. There were no firearms --

Mr. Baron. I am not saying firearms supplied to them by the CIA for a CIA mission or any agent travelling down the street in Miami who happened to have a Saturday Night Special in his car or who happened to be drunk while driving. Would such a person be released right away or once the CIA connection surfaced?

Mr. Halley. My answer to that is no. In other words, if he had a Saturday Night Special and was picked up by the police and detained, and if he then asked to be in contact with us, the case would be looked at at that particular point and if he had a Saturday Night Special, you know, there would not be any intervention on his behalf because it had nothing to do with his task on the behalf of CIA.

WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

I did mention to you earlier we had training camps in various parts of the State. If somebody came out of the training camp and did get drunk and was picked up and did not speak English or something and the police jurisdictions did have a way of getting in touch with us and we might intervene on a case of disorderly conduct.

Mr. diGenova. How was that established, the relationship of liaison with these jurisdictions. Had it been set up with JMWAVE directly through Washington and down through the FBI? How had that been done?

Mr. Halley. It varied. When we started expanding the operation, you know, there had already been a Station there and there also were two security units in the greater Miami area. In some cases the existing contacts at the Station were expanded, the same with Dade County. In other cases, the security of personnel who had established contact with other jurisdictions were used to effect the introduction. In some cases, we had our security people who were on my staff go out to these jurisdictions and identify themselves simply with a badge and a name and discuss the kinds of things that they were interested in so that there would not be a cross of problems with these jurisdictions and therefore a liaison was opened on that basis, a multiplicity of approaches.

Mr. Baron. The article discusses the fact that regular commando raids were run out of JMWAVE Station to the shore of Cuba, and that those commandos were equipped with all kinds of explosives and armaments.

Is that generally a fair statement, that we were running on a regular basis commando raids to Cuba?

Mr. Halley. Yes. There were a series of commando raids run from the Miami Station against targets in Cuba.

Mr. Baron. Were assassination weapons, that is, high-powered rifles with low muzzle velocity and telescopic sights, supplied to those commando teams as a matter of course?

Mr. Halley. No, they were not. For most of those commando teams, you were looking for a different kind of a weapon. You are looking for a weapon with a high range of fire power over a short distance to deal with an emergency situation rather than the kind of, you know, weapon that we are talking about.

In other words, you would find that type of a group armed with a submachine gun, as for example.

Mr. Baron. If an assassination weapon as we have described it was supplied to a commando team, they would have to have a specific purpose in mind for its use?

Mr. Halley. Yes.

Also, again, all of these weapons were controlled, the weapons that were issued at the time of the mission on the mother ship and picked up on the team's return to the mother ship, so there was accountability for the weapons.

Mr. Baron. Would it have been unusual to supply what we have called an assassination weapon to a commando team?

Mr. Halley. Well, that depends on the mission. For instance, let me use an example.

Most of the missions that were run were run against targets that were in fairly close proximity to the shore. If you are going to put a party to attack your objectives, let us say the objective was a petroleum storage tank, if you were going to do this by putting charges up against the petroleum storage tank that meant that you had to have a group infiltrate close enough to put the charges on the tank. Some distance away from them you would give them a second element of the commando team which would be providing covering fire for this group in case they got into trouble and cannot handle it on the ground. This covering fire group might have had a light machine gun, a Belgian weapon. They could have these kinds of weapons and they did have these kinds of weapons which in the definition you are using could be used as a sniper weapon or whatever, but the basic reason for having that weapon was to provide fire support for the other members of the commando team. And therefore when this mission was over and they returned, those weapons were taken back from them and accounted for. They were shaken down so that we did not have weapons disappearing out of our control.

Mr. Baron. Such weapons, high-powered rifles with telescopic scopes, conceivably with silencers, were supplied with some regularity, but they were kept under tight control?

Mr. Halley. We had high-powered rifles. I cannot think now of a case where there was a sniper scope attached to the rifle. I can think of no case where there was a silencer attached to a rifle in any of these commando raids. There were a number of raids conducted, some of them involved teams of fifteen or twenty men. I am not prepared to say that no man ever had one, but I do not recall one. You know, if you gave me an inventory which are in the files, for each of the operations and say here is the operation plan, does this list of equipment fifteen years later look reasonable to you, I would be able to tell you yes or no. But off the top of my head, I do not recall a sniper scope or a silenced rifle.

Mr. Baron. Do you know a man by the name of Rolando Martinez?

Mr. Halley. Of Watergate involvement?

Mr. Baron. Yes.

Mr. Halley. Yes, I know of him. I have never met him personally. I know of him. He was a member of our boat infiltration team. He was a UDT man.

Mr. Baron. In the Harper's article, it says that Martinez indicated that "More than once he was given personal charge of weapons drops in which special rifles with silencers and telescopic sights were left in designated inland spots."

Do you know of a factual basis for that statement?

Mr. Halley. Martinez is undoubtedly factually correct when he says he put caches on the coast of Cuba that contained weapons. I do not know how he would be able to tell what kind of weapons were in the cache. The reason I say that is that when one of these missions were planned, the cache was put together and packed by our logistics group and once the cache was put together it was brought on board the vessel and the cache was then turned over to the team for infiltration so he would never have seen the contents of the cache, he would not have opened it up because it was always in a sealed container.

It is conceivable that in the pre-mission briefing that he got before he went down that he was told that we are putting in a cache containing a radio or putting in a cache containing weapons because that would influence what he selected as a cache type. In other words, if it were a radio, we would want it higher and drier than we would a can containing weapons that were wraped in cosmolene and so forth. He might know that they were weapons, but he wouldn't know that they were silenced and they had a scope. I must honestly say to you I doubt that.

Mr. Baron. Did you know of any weapons drops that were made for the purpose of supplying someone inside Cuba with a weapon for the assassination of Fidel Castro?

Mr. Halley. No, not for that clearly stated purpose. As I told you, we put a lot of weapons caches in. The weapons were multi-purpose weapons, could be used. I know of no cache that went in specifically for the task of playing a contributory role to assassinating Fidel Castro.

Mr. Baron. It would not have been contrary to the policy directives under which you were operating at the time to supply such a weapon to someone inside Cuba who might have access to Castro?

Mr. Halley. No, it would not have been. For instance, I can remember several resistance groups that we had that had two or three hundred men that we were supplying on a regular basis.

Mr. diGenova. Inside Cuba?

Mr. Halley. Inside Cuba, that were essentially living in the bush to a large extent, whom we did supply weapons to and got ammunition to them and so forth. And that was why I was very careful when you mentioned this linkage before to saying that I could not be a guarantor as to what these men would do with these weapons once they got their hands on them. They were free agents.

Mr. diGenova. This is an interesting point. This has come up before. We are aware of our reading of the record that what you have said is a concern of not only yourself in terms of realizing that it was a possibility but of people like Dean Rusk and Mr. McCone, who also said, you have to realize then once these agents are in another country and are supplied that there is little if anything we can do to control those weapons after they receive them. It would be safe to say that that, of course, was understood that there was a lack of control, and to the extent that it was a problem, it existed and had to be tolerated because of the nature of the operation, would that be correct?

Mr. Halley. I do not know whether I want to phrase it exactly as you have in terms of this lack of control. Our mission in dealing with these groups was to first, to put them in areas where we did not have other intelligence covers. Their first task was to collect intelligence.

The second task was to organize a resistance which would take armed action if we ever got a total package put together that gave us an opportunity -- that was the first and secondary missions. Once we issued the weapons to the team leader, if you will, he had freedom to recruit from among the peasants anybody he wanted to. If he gave the peasant a weapon, there was no guarantee either by the team leader or by us that that peasant would not do something that we did not want him to do. To even shoot a militiaman, you could have an argument, you know, over a woman. Any number of things.

Mr. diGenova. Were there any restrictions, once, for example, those weapons caches were delivered either by land or air -- and we have spoken to Mr. Murray who was in the Havana Station, for example, for awhile and Arthur Avignon who was head of the Havana Station for awhile who indicated that they were aware of the weapons drops and were intimately familiar with where they would be.

Mr. Halley. That was all before my time. I have no knowledge of that. During my time, we made no drops by air.

Mr. diGenova. Were there any limitations that were placed of how the weapons would be used that were delivered into Cuba to these internal resistance groups?

Mr. Halley. I cannot speak to this period that you are addressing.

Mr. diGenova. During your period.

Mr. Halley. During my period, the weapons were issued essentially as self-protection for the people who were living in the bush. Secondly, to be used in a military operation at such time as we got the whole package together. Thirdly, they were to be used for self-protection if they conducted raids, ambushes, sabotage operations.

Mr. Baron. There is one further quote from Martinez in this article that I would like to ask you to comment on. He is quoted as saying: "I took a lot of weapons to Cuba, some of them were very special weapons for special purposes. They were powerful rifles with sophisticated scopes, Springfields with bolt action, rifles only used by snipers. They were not sent to shoot pigeons or to kill rabbits. Everyone in the Underground was plotting to kill Castro and the CIA was helping the Underground. I was with the Underground as well as the CIA, so you can see I was involved in the plots too, but that is also obvious."

You commented before that there was a lot of talk in the air about assassinating Castro. Martinez seems to be taking that a few steps further, saying that there were actual plots underway in the Cuban Underground to assassinate Castro and that people who worked with the CIA were aware of those plots and were aiding them in effect by the weapons they were supplying.

Is that an accurate statement?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not think I can go along with that statement. Martinez' role as I described it to you, he is accurate when he says that weapons were put in and that he participated in putting them in. I again question how he would know what was in each cache. I just do not see that, and I would have to accept that as a sort of secondhand statement by him because of the way that the caches were put together. I just do not see his knowing that.

Now I don't want to exclude, however, that any particular kind of weapon did not go to Cuba. Maybe bolt-action

WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Springfields did go in.

Mr. diGenova. Could he have found out about this after the fact from people that he knew in Cuba, members of the resistance in Cuba that he knew of who would have told him the nature of the items that they would have received in a cache delivery? Would that be one way that he could have found out? Was he that intimately involved, to your knowledge?

Mr. Halley. He was not at the time. This is the period that I am familiar with, '62-'65. I do not know. Maybe some of these people have come out since then, and maybe he has talked to people who have come out in '68, '69, things like that I cannot exclude that.

At the time, I do not think, however, he would have had that kind of firsthand knowledge, and therefore I have trouble with that statement and I cannot identify with it.

Mr. Baron. The Harper's article says: "By the end of 1961, several men affiliated with the CIA had already been foiled in attempts to kill him" -- meaning Castro -- "among them, Luis Toroella, executed; Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo, still in prison; William Morgan, executed; and Antonio Veciana, escaped to the United States. Had these men succeeded, their efforts would have been tied to the U.S. only indirectly, if at all."

Let me show you the passage I am reading from and ask you whether you have any knowledge of the connection of any of those men named to the CIA.

(Pause)

Mr. Halley. No, there is no connection that I know of between these names and CIA. This guy Luis Toroella does not ring any bells with me. Eloy Gutierrez Menoyo was a leader of Alpha 66. He may have been in Cuba in '61. During the time that I was involved in Cuban affairs he was in exile for -- he was in Miami for a long period of time.

Mr. Baron. Can you explain what Alpha 66 is for the record?

Mr. Halley. Alpha 66 was a Cuban exile organization that was engaged in a number of raids against the Cuban government. They claimed to have attacked Cuban shipping, fishing boats, and claimed to have an organization in Cuba that was a resistance organization. Gutierrez Menoyo was therefore a well-known name to me. We had no direct contact with him.

William Morgan is also a well-known name. His activities and exploits in Cuba are well-known to anybody that has dealt with Cuban affairs.

Mr. Baron. Do you have any knowledge of a connection between any of these people and assassination attempts against Fidel Castro?

Mr. Halley. I have none, no connection between these names and CIA and attempts to assassinate Fidel Castro.

Mr. Baron. The fact that they are listed here as having been involved in assassination attempts whether or not they were connected with CIA is news to you?

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Halley. Well, no, I would not say that. If you had Gutierrez Menoyo sitting here and if he were to say in 1962 I attempted to shoot Fidel Castro, that is Gutierrez Menoyo did this, I would have no reason to doubt. I would have no basis for proving it, either.

Mr. Baron. You have never heard of these alleged assassination attempts before?

Mr. Halley. No.

Morgan's name I would have to do a file trace to get myself back up to date. Morgan did get himself in trouble with Fidel over some issue;, as I recall was in prison. I do not recall, remember if he was executed, although this says he was executed.

Mr. Baron. What about the last name on the list, Antonio Veciana?

Mr. Halley. That is a name that rings a bell with me, but I do not attach anything to it. In other words, it is a name I have probably read in various and sundry kinds of reports. I remember no operational relationship with him between the Miami Station and this man during my tenure in Miami.

Mr. Baron. During your tenure, would you have been in a position to know that these people had led assassination attempts against Castro, if that were indeed the fact?

Mr. Halley. Not necessarily. I would say that the odds would have been high that we would have, particularly, say Gutierrez Menoyo. We did have a steady stream of reporting on the activities of all exile groups and Alpha 66 was high on the list of groups that had a capability of doing this kind of thing. Therefore, they received quite a bit of coverage from us, from the FBI, from Customs, and others.

They were on everybody's sort of watch list.

Mr. Baron. Let us turn now to a document that we will introduce as Exhibit 4, which is a report by Fidel Castro on alleged attempts to assassinate him that he connects to the United States government and especially to the CIA.

(The document referred to was marked Halley Exhibit No. 4 for identification.)

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Baron. Which was released recently by George McGovern, to whom Castro had sent this report.

Mr. Halley, is it true that I had asked you to review this report before we began our session today?

Mr. Halley. Yes, you did, you did ask me to look at the report.

Mr. Baron. Can you point to any names or incidents in this report that are connected in any way in your mind to actual assassination attempts against Cuba -- Castro?

Mr. Halley. No, I cannot point to any names that in my mind are attached to an assassination attempt against Castro. You asked me to look at this originally to see if any of the names were familiar to me in any way. I made a list of some of the names that rang a bell with me, for various reasons.

One name is Humberto Sori Marin. I recall that he was active, he was active with the DRE.

Mr. Baron. At what page is that?

Mr. Halley. There is no page number.

For instance, here's a name, Humberto Sori Marin. That is familiar to me. I do not know whether that was from the reporting showing that he was in prison, you know, we constantly got reporting on, or why, it is a name that I recognize in the counterrevolutionary sense, that it is something that crossed my desk, to see the name.

All right. The other name that is familiar is Tony Varona.

WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

That was a Cuban exile leader. We talked about Tony Varona. I told you I did not know that Tony Varona had any connection with Mr. Harvey.

There is another name in here, Manolo Ray. I mentioned Manolo Ray to you. He was one of two exile leaders who had a relationship with the Agency. You know, I told you Artime was one; Manolo Ray is another. He is familiar to me as a result of that.

Mr. Baron. You did not know of any involvement of Manolo Ray in an assassination effort against Castro?

Mr. Halley. I do not.

Here is another name mentioned in the same paragraph, Aureliano Sanchez Arango. That is a name that is familiar to me as a prominent Cuban exile.

Mr. Baron. You have no more specific recollection?

Mr. Halley. I am trying to be responsive to your question, telling you which names ring a bell with me as I run through this.

Mr. Baron. All I am trying to do is clarify for the record the exact nature of your recollection of each of these names.

Do you have any recollection of a plot alluded to in this report to shoot Castro with a bazooka at the Havana Stadium?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not have any recollection of that. According to this, if this is correct, it took place in October of '61 which I would not have had any knowledge of because I was not involved in Cuban affairs until, as I told, you, early February 1962.

Mr. Baron. The same would go for the shooting of a bazooka towards the Presidential Palace?

Mr. Halley. I have no knowledge.

Mr. Baron. Do you have any knowledge of any efforts to assassinate Fidel Castro run out of Guantanamo Bay Naval Base?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not. As you know, Guantanamo had a number of Cuban exiles in it, people who had taken refuge in the base at one time or another. During the time that I was the Station Chief in Miami we did have contacts with people at Guantanamo. We did use them for intelligence collection purposes, but I do not have any linkage between that intelligence project and assassination.

Mr. Baron. Were paramilitary operations run out of Guantanamo Bay?

Mr. Halley. They were not during my time as Station Chief in Miami by CIA. There was an office of ONI, Office of Naval Intelligence representative on Guantanamo. I have no knowledge of what they may have been doing during various periods of time. I am talking about CIA.

Mr. Baron. Any other names that struck a chord with you in this report?

Mr. Halley. Well, you have a name here, Mario Salabarria

Aquiar; that name rings a bell with me, for what reason, I do not know. You know, we would have to run a name trace to get a rundown of what is in the files and what is in the central index for me to be able to comment on it. As I told you earlier I know that the Agency is doing all these traces after they are completed and you get them and you want me to take a look at it, I will be glad to do so. It may trigger some response.

This name, Ramon Grau Scerio, it rings a bell with me. It is quite possible that he may have been a collection agent, just as is written here. I am making a deduction, but again, I would have to look at the name traces, but it is a name that rings a bell with me.

Mr. Baron. You do not remember him in connection with an attempt to poison the Prime Minister in June of 1965 as it says there?

Mr. Halley. No, I do not.

Then the next name that is on here, that is familiar. Here is one that we discussed, that is AMLASH-1. We already went over that one.

The other name was Manuel Artime, whom we have talked about.

Mr. Baron. Right.

Mr. Baron. The last name on here -- I cannot find it -- the other name is Antonio Cuesta Valle. I cannot find it now, but that is the last name that rang a bell.

Mr. Baron. Do you have any recollection of Cuesta Valle's specific activities with the CIA?

Mr. Halley. No. I would have to run traces on him and take a look at what the information is.

Mr. Baron. Was Frank Sturgis connected with the JMWAVE Station?

Mr. Halley. He was not.

Mr. Baron. Not under the name of Frank Fiorino either?

Mr. Halley. No, he was not. This is again one of these great myths. At this whole Cuba thing, Frank Sturgis was a soldier of fortune, was constantly involved on the periphery of the Cuban exile community. He was involved in free lance operations against Cuba. He was somebody that the FBI, Customs, CIA, everybody, reported on. He was a household name, but he was not on the CIA payroll during the period that I was involved in Cuban affairs, that is the payroll of the Miami Station. I remember name traces being run on this guy and so forth, and the Agency had no contact with him during that period of time.

Mr. Baron. Are you aware of his ever having been on the payroll of the CIA?

Mr. Halley. I personally am not aware of it, and I think, you know, if you had gone to the Agency that they must have given you all sorts of traces on this fellow and told you the same thing.

Mr. Baron. Are you aware of the AMOT program?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I am.

Mr. Baron. How was that spelled?

Mr. Halley. AMOT.

Mr. Baron. What was that program?

Mr. Halley. That was a program involving a Cuban emigre group that was used as an operational support mechanism to support the Miami Station.

Mr. Baron. What kind of support did they provide?

Mr. Halley. They were interviewers of refugees who came out of Cuba. They provided translator personnel to translate the Spanish language publications that were of interest to us. They provided information on the various mainstream activities that were going on in the Cuban exile community.

Mr. Baron. Did they provide support for paramilitary operations against Cuba?

Mr. Halley. They might have identified people whom they thought we should interview or look to or see if they would fit into other paramilitary programs. In other words, they had the contacts in the Cuban community. Say we had a requirement for a diesel engineer. We would say to the AMOT organization, we would say we are looking for a Cuban who is a diesel engineer who has a first engine's license, and they would go through all of their contacts until they would come up with one, a week or ten days or whatever, having identified the fellow, where he was, what he was doing. We would then send somebody around to talk to him independant of them and pick him up to work for us in our maritime activities.

It was that kind of operational support.

Mr. Baron. People who were part of this program were not used as paramilitary operatives, at least insofar as they operated under the aegis of this program. There were some of them who may have been in the paramilitary program and then left it and were subsequently picked up in the AMOT organization.

Could we go off the record for a moment?

(Discussion off the record.)

tape 7

Mr. Halley. We are now back on the record.

The AMOTs also worked with us on a common project, which was monitoring Cuban naval traffic, things like that, so they were used across the board for operational support tasks.

Mr. Baron. One more general question.

Did the JMWAVE Station have an operational relationship with the FBI?

Mr. Halley. I would not --

Mr. Baron. Was the FBI involved in supporting your activities in any way?

Mr. Halley. I would rather phrase that in my language, because I think --

Mr. Baron. Go right ahead.

Mr. Halley. I do not know if your question means the same thing to me. I would prefer to say we had a liaison relationship with the FBI, that is, on matters dealing with counterintelligence matters. There was a regular exchange of data with the FBI. There was an exchange of name traces on people that they were conducting investigations on, for counterintelligence purposes.We would trace certain individuals and with the FBI there were a couple of counterintelligence cases that we discovered that were turned over to the FBI.

So this is in the context of the normal CIA-FBI liaison that existed between the two agencies.

Mr. Baron. But the FBI was not involved in supporting paramilitary commando raids to the shore of Cuba, is that correct?

Mr. Halley. I do not know what you are driving at there. I am having a little trouble with that. Are you saying that the FBI dispatched paramilitary teams to Cuba as an organization?

Mr. Baron. Were they involved in paramilitary training of any of the CIA operatives?

Mr. Halley. No. The FBI did not train any CIA personnel during my tenure in the Miami Station.

Mr. Baron. Did the FBI at any point provide with you links to people who had gambling interests inside Cuba?

Mr. Halley. No. We covered the gambling thing previously.

7 6 0 0 0 7 0 1 0 4

The one case that I mentioned is this man who gave us the lead of the two Soviets from the missile site, and that did not come to the Miami Station through the FBI.

Mr. Baron. Were you ever made aware of a CIA attempt to secure the aid of a pilot, a Cuban pilot, to arrange for an "accident," to occur to Raul Castro when he flew on a Cuban plane?

Mr. Halley. I read this somewhere in the record in post years, but I was not aware of this at the time, at the time I was in Miami.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware that serious consideration had been given to the tactic of assassination at CIA Headquarters during your period of involvement with Cuban affairs?

Mr. Halley. No, that is in the period 1962 to '65 when I was the Station Chief in Miami, I was not aware of any serious you know, program operational effort towards assassinating Castro.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware that serious consideration had been given to the tactic or to the use of the tool of assassination at CIA Headquarters prior to your coming on as JMWAVE Station Chief?

Mr. Halley. No, I was not aware of any, you know, planned program effort at assassination.

Mr. Baron. If we limit it --

Mr. diGenova. What do you mean when you say that?

7 6 0 0 0 7 0 1 7 6

Mr. Halley. I went through this before before you came in and explained to Mr. Baron that the subject of assassination was constantly being discussed in the Cuban community and was a part of the fabric of the times.

Mr. diGenova. That I am aware of. You are not the only one who has expressed that knowledge that they were all saying let's kill him, let's get together.

Mr. Halley. There was a lot of discussion of this kind of subject of assassination and that is why I keep trying to be precise that there was no programmatic operational program that I was aware of to assassinate Castro.

Mr. Baron. Although the context in which we discussed the talk that was in the air of assassinating Castro was coffee shops in Miami and conversation among Cubans as opposed to conversations among high CIA officials back in Headquarters, were you aware that there were at least serious discussions of the use of assassination against Castro at CIA Headquarters?

Mr. Halley. No, I was not. We are plowing the same ground that we covered before in this.

As I indicated to you, people would come out of Cuba and discuss these kinds of things. Some of these were reported in, you know, traffic back to Washington. People would discuss what are the prospects of somebody assigned to assassinate Castro. In that particular context, yes, discussions on the assassination of Castro took place. That is why I keep coming back, if you are saying that if anybody outlined an operational plan to me, did I help construct the plan, did I make a contribution to a plan, my answer is again no. We talked earlier, you asked me about those exploding sea shells of which I said I had never heard of but I had heard discussions of Castro's vulnerability because he was a scuba diver. And you asked me about bacteria, I said I had never heard of an introduction of bacteria, but I had heard again about Castro's vulnerability in this context. Where I heard it, as I told you before, I do not remember.

Mr. Baron. I realize we are plowing some of the same furroughs again. I am trying to be meticulous in the way you were before. You just now said that the subject of assassination probably came up in the context of discussing the contingencies of Castro's death. Did it come up in terms of discussing whether or not a plan should be put together to assassinate Castro, whether or not an operation should be mounted --

Mr. Halley. I cannot recall any such discussion, but in any state where there is a leadership dominated by one man, it is always a discussion of succession. That question has come up, you know, if something happened to Fidel Castro, if he is thrown over, if he does something foolish himself or if somebody is successful in assassinating him, somebody who decides suddenly to take his machetti and just get out in the sugar cane field, again, the question was, who replaces Castro, and we generally focused on Raul. There was talk of a collective leadership.

These are all kinds of things that are always done against that kind of a one-man state, whether it is, you know, a Communist state or whatever you want to talk, call it a military dictatorship or a dictatorship of the Right or the Left.

Mr. Baron. Again, discussion of what to do upon the contingency that Castro dies, by whatever means --

Mr. Halley. Non-Agency induced.

Mr. Baron. As opposed to this, which is my question: were you aware of any kind of a discussion at CIA Headquarters on whether or not the CIA should induce the death of Fidel Castro?

Mr. Halley. I do not recall any such discussion. That is why I have gone into all this background to try to explain the mood of the times and that is why I keep referring to, in my sense of the word, as a professional intelligence officer, of an operational plan, I was not a participant in any discussion in which an operational plan for the assassination of Castro was discussed. That is, I think, the heart of the matter.

Mr. Baron. I have no further questions.

Joe, do you have any?

Mr. diGenova. Mr. Halley, who was your immediate superior in terms of reporting from Miami?

Mr. Halley. Could we go off the record?

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. diGenova. Mr. Halley, we have just had a brief discussion here about some of the things that were covered before I arrived by Mr. Baron and you. I do not want to cover any more of that ground.

It is my understanding in discussing the structure of JMWAVE's relationship with Headquarters, General Lansdale's name came up, and that on one occasion, General Lansdale actually came down to Miami to visit the Station to get firsthand knowledge of what was transpiring. Is that correct?

Mr. Halley. That is correct.

Mr. diGenova. Do you have any idea when that was?

Mr. Halley. No. I stated earlier it was in 1962. It probably was in the summer of 1962 because it was after my family arrived in Miami. I do not remember the exact dates. It could be established probably from records of the Agency. I do not recall it specifically.

Mr. diGenova. To your knowledge, did he travel by himself or was he with compatriots or aides?

Mr. Halley. My recollection of that was that he came down on a special airplane. There may have been other people on the plane with him, I do not recall, but he landed at Homestead Air Force Base. As I recall, we picked him up from there.

Mr. diGenova. Did General Lansdale travel under his own name or under a cover name?

Mr. Halley. Throughout the time that he was in contact with me and the Station he was operating as General Lansdale.

Mr. diGenova. Did he have contact when he was there with some of the assets themselves?

Mr. Halley. He had no contact with any Cubans that I am aware of. He did spend the night that he came down with some friends at Homestead Air Force Base, but I do not recall, I would have no way of knowing what he did that evening.

Mr. diGenova. For the time that he was at JMWAVE he was with officials such as yourself who had a supervisory capacity at JMWAVE Station?

Mr. Halley. That is correct.

Mr. diGenova. I have no further questions.

Mr. Baron. On the record, I just want to thank you for your testimony here today. It has been a long day and we have gone over a lot of things quite carefully and it has been most informative.

I would also like to ask you, if you would, to pursue for us that one name of the man who was connected with gambling interests in Cuba and supplied some intelligence to JMWAVE Station.

(Discussion off the record.)

(Whereupon, at 5:00 o'clock the hearing was concluded.)

believed he was being supported by U.S. businessmen with financial stakes in Cuba. Roselli needed Giancana and Trafficante in the first phase as a means of establishing contacts inside Cuba. He did not need them in the second phase, because he had Varona. However, it would be naive to assume that Roselli did not take the precaution of informing higher-ups in the syndicate that he was working in a territory considered to be the private domain of someone else in the syndicate.)

When the pills were given to Varona through Roselli, Varona requested arms and equipment needed for the support of his end of the operation. Roselli passed the request to Harvey. Harvey, with the help of Ted Shackley, the chief of the JMWAVE Station, procured explosives, detonators, twenty .30 caliber rifles, twenty .45 caliber hand guns, two radios, and one boat radar. Harvey says that the "shopping list" included some items that could be obtained only from the U.S. Government. Harvey omitted those items, because Roselli, posing as a representative of private business interests, would not have had access to such equipment. The cost of the arms and equipment, about $5,000, was T/A'd to headquarters.

Harvey and Shackley rented a U-Haul truck under an assumed name, loaded it with the arms and equipment, and parked it in the parking lot of a drive-in restaurant. The keys were then given to Roselli for delivery either to Maceo, to Varona, or to Varona's son-in-law. Evidently Harvey and Roselli had not yet come to trust each other. Perhaps fearing a double-cross, each set about independently to assure himself that the equipment reached the proper hands. After parking the truck, Harvey and Shackley kept the parking lot under surveillance until the pass was completed. Roselli, accompanied by O'Connell, did the same. Neither pair knew that the other was watching. Eventually the truck was picked up and driven away. It was returned later, empty, and with the keys under the seat as prearranged. Harvey returned it to the rental agency. Harvey says that Shackley never knew to whom delivery was made nor for what purpose. Shackley was merely called upon to furnish support for a headquarters operation from which he was otherwise excluded.

May 1962

Harvey and Roselli arranged a system of telephone communication by which Harvey was kept posted on any developments. Harvey, using a pay phone, could call Roselli at the Friars Club in Los Angeles at 1600 hours, Los Angeles time. Roselli could phone Harvey at Harvey's home in the evening. Roselli reported that the pills were in Cuba and at the restaurant reportedly used regularly by Castro.

Es de destacar que en las innumerables infiltraciones organizadas por la CIA, utilizando miembros de organizaciones contrarrevolucionarias, uno de los objetivos constantes ha sido también la eliminación física del Comandante en Jefe Fidel Castro Ruz.

La CIA, para la ejecución de sus planes, ha utilizado elementos contrarrevolucionarios en el interior y exterior del país. No sólo ha tenido como colaboradores a los desplazados del poder, sino también a elementos de distinta procedencia social, incluyendo a exponentes de todo tipo de lacras.

Igualmente, no han tenido reparo en reclutar a destacados jefes y elementos de la maffia norteamericana, a quienes les han conmutado fechorías a cambio de su participación en los planes de atentado contra nuestros dirigentes.

No han vacilado tampoco en tratar de ejecutar sus acciones en lugares públicos, donde el número de víctimas inocentes hubiese sido incalculable, como fueron: los atentados planificados en el Stadium Latinoamericano, Plaza de la Re

It is worth noticing that, in the innumerable infiltrations organized by the CIA, using members of counterrevolutionary organizations, one of the permanent goals has also been the physical elimination of Commander in Chief, Fidel Castro Ruz.

The CIA, in orden to carry out its plans, has used counterrevolutionary individuals inside and outside the country. It has had as collaborators, not only those who had been shifted fron power, but also individuals of different social origins, including samples of all types of viciousness.

In the same way, they have had no objection to recruting well-known leaders and members from the American maffia, to whom they have barred their offences, in exchange for their participation in the plots against our leaders.

Nor have they hesitated in trying to carry out their actions in public places, where the number of innocent victims would have been incalculable, as were the crimes planned to take place at the Latin American Stadium, the Revolution Square and the University of Ha-

Durante los últimos meses, la prensa norteamericana ha publicado una creciente y amplia información sobre la realización de estas actividades, ofreciendo en detalles la participación de la Agencia Central de Inteligencia en la elaboración y ejecución de los planes de atentado.

En los informes rendidos por la llamada Comisión Rockefeller y la presidida por el senador Frank Church, para las investigaciones sobre las actividades ilegales de la CIA, ha quedado demostrado de forma categórica lo antes expuesto.

Un ex-agente hizo públicas declaraciones sobre la participación de dicha agencia en el criminal atentado perpetrado contra el vapor francés "La Coubre", donde más de un centenar de cubanos resultaron muertos y alrededor de 200, heridos graves.

Brinda detalles pormenorizados sobre su realización, tratando de "justificar" esta matanza por un desperfecto en el mecanismo del equipo explosivo utilizado.

During the last month, the American press has published an increasing and extensive information about the accomplishment of these activities, offering details about the participation of the Central Intelligence Agency in the elaboration and execution of the criminal plans.

In the reports of the so-called Rockefeller-Commission, as well as the one headed by Senator Frank Church, for the researches on the illegal activities of the Central Intelligence Agenci (CIA), all that we have stated above, has been undoubtedly demonstrated.

A former agent made public statements about the participation of this Agency in the criminal act carried out against the French steamship"La Coubre", where more than one hundred Cubans were killed and about 200, were seriously injured. He offers details about his accomplisments trying to"justify" this killing by blaming a slight damage in the mechanism of the blowing equipment which was used.

Resulta significativa la información --- aportada por el columnista Jack Anderson en el diario "The Washington Post" sobre la intervención del ganster John Rosselli en varios planes de atentados contra el- Primer Ministro Fidel Castro, algunos de ellos mediante envenenamiento con pastillas entregadas por la CIA. Posteriormente, según la propia prensa norteamericana, Rosselli admitió ante la Comisión de Inteligencia del Senado su participación con esta Agencia en varios complots para asesinar al Primer Ministro Cubano.

Paulatinamente, funcionarios, senadores, jefes, oficiales y ex-agentes de la CIA, así como conocidos columnistas de la --- prensa norteamericana, han hecho categóricas declaraciones, que coinciden con - las denuncias formuladas, oportunamente - por el gobierno de Cuba.

Sin pretender relacionar todos los planes de atentados fraguados, exponemos a continuación algunos casos, que en su -- casi totalidad no han sido de conocimiento público y prueban la diversidad y reiteración de la participación de la CIA y otras agencias subversivas en estos he--

Very significant is the information given by- the journalist Jack Anderson from"The Washington Post" about the gangster John Rosselli's- participation in varicus plots against Prime- Minister Fidel Castro, somo of them by means- of poisoning, with pills handed to him by the CIA. Afterwards, according to the American -- press itself, Rosselli, before the Senate --- Intelligence Commission, conceded having participated with this Agency in various plots for assassinating the Cuban Prime Minister.

Gradually, officials, Senators, chiefs, officers and former CIA agents, as well as well -known American press press journalists, have- made categorical statements, which coincide-- with the denounces expressed, apropos, by the- Cuban Government.

Without pretending to mention all the plots-- attempted, we expose some of them the majority of which have not been publicly known. They prove the diversity and recurrence of -- the CIA as well as other subversive agencies participation in these actions:

El traidor Humberto Sorí Marín, con cuatro contrarrevolucionarios más, se infiltraron en marzo de 1961, por la costa norte de La Habana con el objetivo de reagrupar a las organizaciones contrarrevolucionarias, realizar un atentado al Comandante en Jefe y desarrollar todo tipo de actividades subversivas para apoyar la invasión de Playa Girón.

Para tales fines fueron entrenados y armados por la CIA, ocupándoseles gran cantidad de material bélico y otros equipos al ser detenidos.

Entre los principales encartados figuraban: Rogelio González Corcho, Manuel Lorenzo Puig Millán, Nemesio Rodríguez Navarrete, Gaspar Domínguez Trueba Varona, Eufemio J. Fernandez Ortega y Rafael Díaz Hanscons, responsables de diversos grupos y organizaciones contrarrevolucionarias dirigidas por la CIA.

The traitor Humberto Sorí Marín with four other counterrevolutionaries, were infiltrated in March 1961, through the north coast of Havana, with the purpose of grouping the counterrevolutionary organizations, of carrying out the assassination of Commander in Chief and of developing all type of subversive activities in order tu support the Playa Girón invasion.

For this purpose, they were trained and armed by the Central Intelligence Agency. A great quantity of warlike material and other equipment were taken from them when arrested.

Among the participants were Rogelio González Corcho, Manuel Lorenzo Puig Millán, Nemesio Rodríguez Navarrete, Gaspar Domínguez Trueba Varona, Eufemio J. Fernández Ortega and Rafael Díaz Hanscons, heads of various counterrevolutionary groups and organization directed by the CIA.

En junio de 1961, se celebra una reunión con la asistencia de un elemento infil-- trado en Cuba por la organización contrarevolucionaria "Frente Revolucionario Democrático"(FRD), quien traía la orden de realizar un atentado al Comandante en Jefe Fidel Castro Ruz.

Después del descalabro de Playa Girón, la Agencia Central de Inteligencia continuó sus actividades subversivas contra nuestro país, iniciando el reagrupamiento de las dispersas organizaciones contrarrevolucionarias bajo la organización "Unidad Resistencia".

Esa labor fue llevada a cabo por los agentes de la CIA infiltrados: Emilio Adolfo Rivero Caro(Brand), Adolfo Mendoza (Raúl) y Jorge García Rubio(Tony) entre otros. Seguidamente se dieron a la tarea de desarrollar todo tipo de actividades subversivas, incluyendo un atentado contra el Comandante de División Raúl Castro Ruz durante el desarrollo del acto provincial del 26 de julio de 1961 en Oriente; la autoagresión a la Base Naval de Guantánamo, con el fin de justificar la agresión por parte de las Fuerzas Armadas norteamericanas; así como ataques a las repúblicas cercanas para provocar un conflicto internacional.

Los planes contemplan también un atentado contra el Comandante en Jefe en el acto central de la misma fecha en la Plaza-

After the Playa Girón defeat, the Central Intelligence Agency continued its subversive activities against our country, starting the prouping of the disperse counterrevolutionary organization, under the "Unidad Resistencia" organization.

This task was carried out by the infiltrated CIA agents Emilio Adolfo Rivero Caro ~~(Brand)~~, Adolfo Mendoza (Raúl) and Jorge García Rubio (Tony) among others. Afterwards, they tried to develop all types of subversive activities, including a plot against Division Commander(Lieutenant Colonel) Raúl Castro Ruz, during the provincial celebration of the 26 de July at Oriente Province in 1961; the selfaggression to Guantánamo Naval Base, with the purpose of justifying the aggression by the American Armed Forces, as well as attacks to neghbor republics, in order to provoke an international conflict.

The plans included also a plot against the Commander in Chief, during the central rally the same day, at the Revolution ----

Allí se entrevistó con los oficiales de la CIA, Jim Bender, conocido por Jim Boulding, Harold Bishop y Carl Hitch. En esta entrevista Mederos fue nombrado jefe de - los oficiales de la CIA que operaban en - Cuba, en sustitución de Alfredo Izaguirre conocido por Tito, que estaba detenido.

En la Base Naval de Guantánamo se llevaron a cabo las reuniones conspirativas, y- sus autoridades(Capitán Schenweias)proporcionaron gran cantidad de material bélico y equipos para la realización de estos -- planes.

El mencionado Capitán Carl.E.Schenweias, ex jefe de la Base Naval, fue uno de los más activos organizadores de las agresiones.

Detenidos todos los encartados, se les ocupó gran cantidad de material y equipos bélicos.

Es de significar, que todos estos planes - subversivos fueron denunciados oportunamente por el Comandante Ernesto Guevara - en Punta del Este.

Square. For this purpose, the counterrevolutionary José Pujals Mederos made an undercover visit to the United States, in order- to coordinate this action. There, he met -- CIA officers Jim Bender, known as Jim Boulding, Harold Bischop and Carl Hitch. During this meeting, Mederos was appointed chief - of the CIA officers, who opperated in Cuba, substituting Aldredo Izaguirre, known as -- Tito, who was arrested.

The conspiratory meeting were carried out-- at the Guantánamo Naval Base, and its ----- authorities (Captain Schenweias) supplied a lot of warlike material and equipment for - the accomplishment of these plans.

The mentioned Captain Carl.E.Schenweias, - formes chief of the Naval Base, was one of the most active organizers of the aggressions.

When all the indicated were arrested, a -- great number of warlike material and equipment was taken from them.
It is worth noticing that all these subversive plans were denounced opportunely, by- Commander Ernesto Guevara, at Punta del -- Este.

En la segunda quincena de julio de 1961, un grupo de elementos contrarrevolucionarios de las organizaciones "30 de Noviembre", "Movimiento Revolucionario del Pueblo" y "Frente Revolucionario Democrático", planeaban atentar contra nuestro Comandante en Jefe y otros dirigentes.

Recibían orientaciones de la CIA a través de contactos con Tony Varona, Manuel Ray y Aureliano Sánchez Arango en el exterior del país, y con el Almirante Burke y agentes de la CIA en la Base Naval de Guantánamo. El atentado se efectuaría en las cercanías del domicilio de la compañera Celia Sánchez Manduley, en el Vedado. Resultaron detenidos Mario Chanez de Armas, Francisco Chanez de Armas, Roberto Coscuyuela Valcárcel, Orlando Ulacia Valdés, Francisco Gil Cruz, Segundo González González y otros, a quienes se les ocuparon armas y explosivos.

During the second fortnight of July, 1961, a group of counterrevolutionaries from "30 de Noviembre", "Movimiento Revolucionario del Pueblo" and "Frente Revolucionario Democrático" organizations, were plotting against our Commander in Chief and other leaders.

They received CIA instructions through contacts abroad with Tony Varona, Manuel Ray and Aureliano Sánchez Arango, and with Admiral Burke and CIA agents in Guantánamo Naval Base. The plot would be carried out in the proximity of Celia Sánchez Manduley's house, in Vedado. Mario Chanez de Armas, Francisco Chanez de Armas, Roberto Coscuyuela Valcárcel, Orlando Ulacia Valdés, Francisco Gil Cruz, Segundo González González and others were arrested and weapons and explosives were taken from them.

Entre sus planes figuraba también el fracasado atentado al Dr.Carlos Rafael Rodríguez llevado a efecto el 13 de setiembre de 1961 cuando dicho dirigente regresaba de Matanzas hacia La Habana. Con ese fin, un grupo de contrarrevolucionarios pertenecientes a las organizaciones antes mencionadas, establecieron contactos con representantes del "Movimiento de Recuperación Revolucionaria" (MRR). Al frente de los mismo se hallaba -- Juan José Martore Silva.

Estos elementos mantenían estrechos vínculos con un agente de la CIA, así como con un jefe de bandidos en la provincia de Matanzas. Al resultar detenidos se les ocupó el material bélico que poseían.

Among their plans was also the failed plot against Dr. Carlos Rafael Rodríguez, which was attempted on September 13th,1961, when he was coming back from Matanzas to Havana. With thar purpose, a group of counterrevolutionary individuals, belonging to the --- organizations mentioned above, contacted -- representatives of the "Movimiento de Recuperación Revolucionaria"(MRR). The group's leader was Juan José Martore Silva.

These individuals kept close relation with a CIA agent as well as with the chief of a band in Matanzas Province. When arrested, warlike material was taken from them.

En octubre de 1961, las organizaciones contrarrevolucionarias "II Frente del Escambray" y "Movimiento de Recuperación Revolucionaria" (MRR) dirigidas por la Agencia Central de Inteligencia (CIA), aprobaron un plan conjunto de sabotajes en la capital, a fin de provocar la indignación popular e influir sobre la concurrencia masiva al acto de recibimiento al Presidente de la República, Dr. Osvaldo Dorticós Torrado, a su llegada de Punta del Este.

Esta táctica estaba encaminada a viabilizar el plan de atentado que ejecutarían el día 4 del propio mes, disparando con una bazooka hacia la tribuna situada en la terraza del antiguo Palacio Presidencial desde un apartamento situado en un edificio contiguo. La retirada sería cubierta con el criminal lanzamiento de granadas contra el público, para crear la confusión y el pánico.

Sus propósitos fueron frustrados al ser detenidos todos los encartados, ocupándose gran cantidad de material bélico.

On Octuber 1961, "II Frente del Escambray" and "Movimiento de Recuperación Revolucionaria"(MRR) counterrevolutionary organizations, directed by the Central Intelligence Agency (CIA), approved a joint plan for a sabotage in the capital, in order to cause people's indignation and to influence on the mass gathering to welcome the President of the Republic Osvaldo Dorticós Torrado, on his arrival from Punta del Este.

This tactic was aimed to facilitate the plot, which would be carried out on the 4th of the same month, shooting with a bazooka in direction to the tribune located on the terrace of the former Presidential Palace, from an apartament located in a nearby building. The withdrawal would be covered by the criminal launching of grenades against the public, in order to cause confusion and panic.

Their purposes were frustrated when all of the indicted were arrested and a great number of warlike material was taken from them.

En el mes de marzo de 1964, se gestó otro plan de atentado contra el Comandante en Jefe. El principal encartado, Mario Salabarría Aguiar, elemento gansteril, mantenía contactos con la CIA a través del agente Dr. Bernardo Milanés López, Jefe de una red, quien pasó la información del plan al Centro CIA y gestionó desde España la ayuda de los apátridas Tony Varona y Juan Bosch, amigos de Salabarría.

El plan consistía en instalar una ametralladora calibre 30 ó 50 en un vehículo y aguardar la posibilidad del paso del Comandante en Jefe, para atentar contra su vida. La CIA entregó a Salabarría las armas y medios necesarios, incluyendo grandes sumas de dinero.

In March 1964, another plot against Commander-in Chief was elaborated. The principal indicted Mario Salabarría Aguiar, a gangster, had contacts with the CIA through the agent Dr. Bernardo Milanés López head of a net, who informed the CIA center of the plan and sought, from Spain, the support of Salabarría's friends, Tony Varona and Juan Bosch.

The plan consisted in installing a machine gun caliber 30 or 50 in a vehicle and waiting for the occasion when the Commander in Chief would pass by, in order to attempt against his life. The CIA gave Salabarría the necessary weapons and means, including great sums of money.

A mediados del año 1954, los contrarrevolucionarios Osvaldo Valentín Figueroa Gálvez, conocido por "Mankeca", Reynaldo Figueroa-Gálvez, Felipe Alonso Herrera y José Ma--- nuel Rodríguez Cruz, conocido por "Lolo",- miembros de la organización "Movimiento de Liberación Nacional", que formaba parte -- del bloque de organizaciones, RCA, dirigi-- das por la CIA, comienzan a preparar un -- plan de atentado contra el Primer Ministro.

Estos individuos estaban vinculados a los - agentes de la CIA, Alberto y Ramón Grau --- Sierra, quienes formaban parte de la red -- dirigida por Ramón y María Leopoldina Grau-Alsina, que posteriormente-en junio de 1965 intentaron envenenar al Primer Ministro.

El plan consistía en el lanzamiento de granadas contra nuestro Primer Ministro en el-Stadium Latinoamericano, por un grupo de -- nueve hombres, quienes fueron detenidos, y-ocupados los equipos bélicos.

In mid-1964, the counterrevolutionaries Osvaldo Valentín Figueroa Gálvez, known as --- "Mankeca", Reinaldo Figueroa Gálvez, Felipe-Alonso Herrera and José Manuel Rodríguez - Cruz, known as "Lolo" members of the "Movimiento de Liberación Nacional", which be--- longed to the RCA block of organizations,-- directed by the CIA, began to prepare a --- plot against the Prime Minister.

These persons were related to the CIA agents Alberto and Ramón Grau Sierra, who belonged to the net headed by Ramón and María Leopoldina Grau Alsina, who latter in June 1965.- attempted to poison the Prime Minister.

The plan consisted on throwing grenades --- against our Prime Minister at the Latin -- American Stadium, by a group of nine men -- who were arrested and whose warlike equip-- ment was taken from them.

En setiembre de ese mismo año(1964), un grupo de contrarrevolucionarios de las organizaciones "Ejército de Liberación Nacional"(ELN) y "Frente Interno de Liberación"(FIL), que cumplían misiones de obtención de información para la CIA, comenzaron a gestionar la unificación, cumpliendo también órdenes de dicha Agencia.

Enfrascados en estas labores de unidad,el contrarrevolucionario Nemesio Cubillas Pérez, pone en conocimiento de Angel Miguel Arencibia Virán, Rolando Galdós Ranzola y otros el plan de atentado que venían fraguando contra nuestro Primer Ministro en la Calle 11, en el Vedado, orientados por la CIA.

A principios de 1965, los contrarrevolucionarios Julio Omar Cruz Cecilia,Fermín González Carballo y Giraldo Reynaldo Diego Solano, miembros del "Ejército de Liberación Nacional(integrado al bloque de la RCA,dirigida por la CIA) comienzan a ultimar detalles de un plan de atentados contra el Comandante en Jefe en Santiago de las Vegas.

In september of this same year (1964),a group of counterrevolutionaries from the"Ejército de Liberación Nacional(ELN), and"Frente Interno de Liberación"(FIL) organizations, who were accomplishing instructions of obtaining information for the CIA, began to seek unification, according, to the CIA's orders.

While accomplishing these tasks for archieving unity, the counterrevolutionary Nemesio Cubillas Pérez, informed Angel Miguel Arencibia Virán, Rolando Galdós Ranzola and others about the plot they were elaborating against our Primer Minister at 11 St.,Vedado, according to the CIA instructions.

At the beginning of 1965, the counterrevolutionaries Julio Omar Cruz Cecilia, Fermín González Carballo and Giraldo Reynaldo Diego Solano, members of the "Ejército de Liberación Nacional(integrated into the RCA block, directed by the CIA) began to complete details of a plot against the Commander in Chief in Santiago de las Vegas.

Desisten de esta primera variante y proyectan otro plan que sería perpetrado en el stadium Latincamericano con hombres armados de granadas de fragmentación, y otro grupo, apostado en un edificio cercano, abriría fuego de ametralladoras contra el público para crear el pánico y la confusión y garantizando así la retirada.

They gave up this first plan and devised another plot, which would be committed by armed men with fragmentation grenades at the Latin American Stadium, and in a near building, there was another group which would open fire with machine guns against the people producing panic and confusion and, thus, guaranteeing the withdrawal.

En junio de este mismo año- según se ha mencionado anteriormente- una red de agentes de la CIA, dirigidos por Ramón y María Leopoldina Grau Alsina(conocida por "Polita") se dedicaba a todo tipo de actividades enemigas y otras de carácter antisocial para lo cual se valían de contactos con sedes capitalistas en el país, que servían de enlace con la Agencia Central de Inteligencia.

Estos elementos formaban parte de las organizaciones "Rescate", "Movimiento Anticomunista Revolucionario"(MAR) y otras dirigidas y subversionadas por esa Agencia.

María Leopoldina Grau Alsina recibió instrucciones de la CIA de fraguar un plan para envenenar al Primer Ministro Fidel Castro, para lo cual le enviaron un frasco de pastillas venenosas, que fueron entregadas a Alberto Cruz Caso, quien a su vez las entregó a los miembros de la organización(MAR) Jesús Campanioni Souza y Santos de la Caridad Pérez Núñez, para que efectuaran el atentado en el hotel Habana Libre.

As it has been said before, in June of this same year, a net of CIA agents, headed by Ramón and María Leopoldina Grau Alsina (known as Polita) were devoted to all type of enemy activities, as well as others of antisocial nature. For this purpose, they made use of contacts with capitalist representations in the country, which were used as liaisons with the Central Intelligence Agency.

These individuals were part of the organizations"Rescate","Movimiento Anticomunista Revolucionario" (MAR) and other organizations directed and sponsored by that Agency.

María Leopoldina Grau was given instructions by the CIA to plot for poisoning Primer Minister Fidel Castro,thereby,she was sent a poisonous pill bottle,which was given to Alberto Cruz Caso,who,in turn,gave it to Jesús Campanioni Souza y Santos de la Caridad Pérez Núñez,members of the Organization(MAR), so that they would commit the attempted crime at the Havana Libre Hotel.

En 1971, con motivo del viaje del Comandante en Jefe a Chile, se fragua un atentado - en ese país, para el cual se unen la CIA, - fascista chilenos y contrarrevolucionarios- cubanos de la organización "Alpha-66".

El principal encartado en este plan era Jesús Domínguez Benítez, conocido por " El -- Isleño", para quien(a través de contrarrevolucionarios cubanos radicados en Venezuela) se obtuvo documentación falsa que lo acreditaba como periodista venezolano, lo que le permitió cubrir la visita de nuestro Primer Ministro en dicho país.

El plan se ejecutaría mediante una pistola- adaptada a una cámara de televisión, pero - desistieron efectuarlo por considerar que - no existían garantías para la conservación- de sus vidas.

Domínguez Benítez, perteneció a la organización terrorista "Poder Cubano", fue acusado por las autoridades norteamericanas de promover acciones terroristas en Estados Unidos y otros países como miembro de dicha organización, y arrestado por el FBI en 1968.

On 1971, due to Commander in Chief's trip to Chile, a plot was elaborated in that country for which the CIA, the Chilean fascists and- Cubans counterrevolutionaries from "Alpha-66" organization came together.

The major indicted in this plan was Jesús Domínguez Benítez, known as"The Islander". Through Cuban counterrevolutionaries settled down at Venezuela, he obtained false documents which identified him as a Venezuelan newspaperman, which permitted him to report our Prime-Minister's visit in that country.

The plan would be carried out using a gun --- camouflaged into a television camera, but --- they gave this up on considering there were - no guarantees for the preservation of their - lives.

Domínguez Benítez, belonged to the "Poder Cubano" terrorist organization. He was accused by the American authorities of promoting --- terrorist actions inside the United States - and other countries, as a member of that organization, and was arrested by the FBI in - 1968!

Sin embargo, en 1970 participa en el frustrado intento de infiltración del "Alpha-66" por Oriente, refugiándose en la Base Naval,donde-nuevamente se le arrestó, esta vez, por in---fringir las condiciones de una fianza sobre - una condena de 18 meses por la causa anteriormente mencionada.

No obstante, queda en libertad y sale sin dificultades de Estados Unidos a Sudamérica para-participar en el atentado. Posteriormente regresa a Estados Unidos.

However, in 1970 he participated in the --- "Alpha-66" unsuccessful attempt of infiltration through Oriente Province, and sought - refuge at the Naval Base, where he was --- arrested again, this time because he violated the conditions of a bond over an 18 months-condemn due to the trial just mentioned --- before.

Nevertheless, he is set free and leaves --- United States without any difficulty, and - moves to South America in order to participate in the plot. Afterwards, he returns to the United States.

Consideramos que el análisis de las informaciones que aportamos, las públicamente conocidas y las que las autoridades norteamericanas poseen y no han sido publicadas, permiten afirmar que la eliminación física de dirigentes de la Revolución Cubana, principalmente del Primer Ministro Fidel Castro Ruz, ha constituído una política reiterada de los Estados Unidos a través de sus agencias subversivas, utilizando para ello a contrarrevolucionarios cubanos, ciudadanos norteamericanos y todo tipo de elemento corrompido, tanto interna como externamente, sin tomar en consideración las víctimas que ocasionarían estas acciones.

Con este objetivo han sido facilitadas en grandes cantidades, armas, explosivos, medios técnicos, de transporte y comunicación a los participantes, para la realización de sus planes.

Estos son algunos hechos connotados y comprobados de las numerosas actividades subversivas que ha realizado la CIA destinadas a la eliminación física de los dirigentes del Gobierno Revolucionario de Cuba.

We consider that the analysis of the informations we offer, the publicly known, and the ones that the American authorities possess and have not been published, allow us to affirm that the physical elimination of Cuban Revolutionary leaders, specially the Prime Minister Fidel Castro Ruz, has been a reiterated policy of the United States through its subversive agencies, making use of Cuban counterrevolutionaries, U.S. citizen and all kind of corrupted individuals, inside the country as well as abroad, without taking into consideration the victims that would result from these actions.

With this purpose, they have provided the participants with a great number of weapons, explosives, technical means of transportation and communication for the accomplishment of their plans.

These are some of the coonoted and proved facts of the numerous subversive activities that the CIA has carried out aimed to the assassination of the leaders of the Revolutionary Government of Cuba.

Senator Schweiker. I guess we will swear you in, so if you will stand up and raise your right hand, do you solemnly swear the testimony you are about to give is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I do.

Senator Schweiker. Be seated.

Mr. Johnston. Would you state for the record your full name?

TESTIMONY OF ROBERT G. HALLEY

ACCOMPANIED BY JOHN RIGALL AND SEYMOUR R. BOLTEN

Mr. Halley. My name is Robert G. Halley.

Mr. Johnston. And I understand that is an alias and your true identity will be preserved by the Agency.

Mr. Halley. That is correct.

Mr. Johnston. Mr. Bolten, would you state your full name?

Mr. Bolten. Seymour Bolten, Seymour R. Bolten.

Mr. Johnston. And John, the alias you are testifying under?

Mr. Rigall. John Rigall, R-i-g-a-l-l.

Mr. Johnston. And Mr. Bolten and Mr. Rigal, would you state your capacity in this session today?

Mr. Bolten. I am chief of the Review Staff of the CIA, and responsible for dealings with the Senate Select Committee.

Mr. Rigall. I am Special Assistant to the DDO, sitting in here as an alternate monitor.

Mr. Johnston. And the discussion that has taken place prior to going on the record today basically has resulted i decision to have Mr. Bolten and Mr. Rigall attend as monitor to this session, and do you understand that, Mr. Halley?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I do.

Mr. Johnston. Mr. Halley, what was your capacity with Agency in November, 1963?

Mr. Halley. In November, 1963, I was the Chief of Sta of the CIA operation that was based in Miami, Florida, targeted as its primarily responsibility for the Cuban operation.

Mr. Johnston. Mr. Wallach has reminded me to remind you of a procedural matter which, you understand you have the right to counsel.

Mr. Halley. Yes, I do.

Mr. Johnston. And you understand you have a right not to answer questions if you don't wish to, or not to answer questions until you consult with Counsel, is that correct?

Mr. Halley. That is correct.

Mr. Johnston. And you are appearing here voluntarily without counsel.

Mr. Halley. That is correct.

Mr. Johnston. And going back to substantive questions, how long did you remain as Chief of Station?

What were the dates of your service?

Mr. Halley. Well, I arrived, or became involved in the Cuban operations in the early 1962, and I stayed there until approximately June of 1965.

Senator Schweiker. What month again in '62?

Mr. Halley. Early '62. I didn't give you the month, Senator, because I originally came down to Florida to conduct a survey of this operation to see what possibilities could be carried out in terms of the collection of intelligence. I later filed a report on it, and I was later assigned down to Senator Schweiker. And this was called JMWAVE, was it?

Mr. Halley. That is the cryptonym that the Agency used for the Miami station.

Senator SChweiker. And to whom in that chain of command at the CIA did you report when you were the operating head?

Mr. Halley. There were different people at different times. When I first went to Miami, the task force commander wa Mr. William Harvey. He reported then to the DDP, who reported to the Director of Central Intelligence. At a later point in the operation, Mr. Harvey moved on to other tasks, and Mr. Fitzgerald became the chief of that particular unit, and then after Mr. Fitzgerald, Mr. Hart was the head of that particular unit.

And between Harvey and Fitzgerald, I think there was a short period of time when a fellow by the name of Bruce Cheev was the acting chief of that particular unit, or the chief. I have forgotten the exact arrangement there.

Senator Schweiker. Sometime during this period did it change its title from Task Force W to SAS, is that correct or not correct, or do I have it mixed up?

Mr. Halley. My recollection of that chronology was th it was first called SAS and then became Task Force W, and th became integrated back into WH Division, which was the Weste Hemisphere Division.

Senator Schweiker. SAS preceded Task Force W?

Mr. Halley. Yes. That's off the top of my head. That's my recollection of it.

Mr. Johnston. Just for the record, I think it was the other way around. Task Force W was first and SAS was second.

Senator Schweiker. But in sum and substance your duties were basically the same, whether it was Task Force W or SAS under Harvey and Fitzgerald, was that not true?

Mr. Halley. Well, I think you have to break this period up into two phases, Senator. The early phase, 1962, was focused on coming up with an appraisal of what kind of an operation could be run against Cuba in the context which existed at that time, in other words, after the Bay of Pigs, after the post mortems had been conducted. The Administration at the time decided that they wanted to take another look at Cuba as an intelligence and national security problem. Therefore, an assessment was to be made in the early period of time as to what kind of an operation could be run in pursuit of U.S. policy objectives, which was to see if Fidel Castro's government could be removed. And when that assessment was conducted as to what kind of intelligence operations could be conducted, what kind of paramilitary or other operations could be run, that was an initial phase, and that phase was approved and put into effect, but as that operation was being put into effect the missile crisis came upon us, so that that was not really carried to its logical conclusion because the operation then shifted.

WARD & PAUL

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Senator Schweiker. After October of '62?

Mr. Halley. No, prior to October of '62, because the Cuban crisis was in October of '62, but the buildup preceded it, and our operations which were collecting intelligence in Cuba detected this buildup as it was unfolding. Therefore, the national priority became now how do you take action against Fidel Castro, but what is the nature of this Soviet buildup. And therefore the operation changed.

Then after the Cuban missile crisis of October of 1962, the problem became one of monitoring the Soviet disengagement from Cuba, and then there was another phase after that when the Soviets were out, Castro was clearly recognized as the established power in Cuba, and the problem became one of looking at Cuba in the context of was there some other way to get a political change in Cuba other than by military action or by paramilitary action. In other words, the emphasis shifted to looking at the Castro military establishment to see if a coup could be pulled from within, to see if economic pressures could be put on the Castro regime.

So the tasking of this particular unit did change, and change of nuances and degrees during this period, but in our professional sense it was focused on the Cuban targets. So in that sense you are correct, but it did go through various changes as events changed.

Senator Schweiker. What was the relationship of your station and your assignment to General Lansdale? What role did he play?

Mr. Halley. Well, in the early days, in the early period of 1962, General Lansdale was a member of a group that was looking at the basic problem of what could be done against the Cuban activity. This came up in one of my previous conversations with Mr. Baron.

Senator Schweiker. Are you talking about something we call Operation MONGOOSE, are we talking about Special Group Augmented, or what are we talking about?

Mr. Halley. Well, when I first came into this activity in 1962, the principal people that seemed to be involved with it at that time were Robert Kennedy, General Lansdale, Dick Helms, and William Harvey, and the group of Kennedy, Lansdale and Helms were providing, if you will, the guidance and the direction as to where this thing should go in the early days.

Shortly after the operation was established and I was in Miami, Lansdale seems to have faded out of this particular picture, and I was not involved in the Washington nuances of this, so I am not clear as to exactly what was the reason for his departure from this particular scene.

Senator Schweiker. And was that -- do you remember the cryptonym, Operation MONGOOSE?

Mr. Halley. I've heard the cryptonym Operation MONGOOSE, but that didn't impact on my life at that particular time.

Senator Schweiker. All right.

Mr. Johnston. Moving to the time of the Kennedy assassination, were you Chief of Station and in Miami when the President was assassinated?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I was the Chief of Station and I was in Miami.

Mr. Johnston. You were physically in Miami on November 22nd.

Mr. Halley. Yes, I was.

Mr. Johnston. Did you receive any orders through CIA channels to conduct an investigation in any fashion into the assassination of the President?

Mr. Halley. Well, my recollection of that was that we had requests for name traces at the time that Oswald was arrested, and that was our contribution to the investigation.

Mr. Johnston. Did you receive any order in the form of a cable or any other fashion to conduct an investigation?

Mr. Halley. I don't recall receiving one, but if you showed me a cable, I would have to comment on it. In other words this was in 1963. This is 1976, and as you know from record, I've been in an awful lot of high volume projects sin that time, and I don't think it is likely that I would reca a specific cable, you know, on a particular day. I mean, I have been in Berlin, Laos, Vietnam. My life has been active, therefore I do not recall a specific cable. If you've got a cable, I'd be glad to comment on it.

Mr. Johnston. Well, I don't have one, and I'm asking you whether one would exist.

Mr. Halley. I don't recall one.

Mr. Johnston. And your judgment would be that there was not a cable ordering an investigation.

Mr. Halley. I can't say that. I can only say that I don't recall one, but I do recall that at a later point, once Oswald was detained by the police and there was some investigative material emanating from that, we participated in name trace activity of whatever was sent to us at that time from Washington, because I do recall that at the time that the name traces were conducted, that one of the Cuban groups that we were in touch with at DRE, they did come up with a tape of a debate which had taken place between Oswald and some member of the DRE in New Orleans, and you know, that sort of sticks in my mind as an event of that particular time. And we commented on it, and as I recall, forwarded the tapes to Washington.

Senator Schweiker. That was Bringuier's group, was it not?

Mr. Halley. That was the DRE, the Direccion Revolucionario

Senators Schweiker. Wasn't Carlos Bringuier -- maybe I'm pronouncing it wrong, involved in that, and wasn't he associated with you folks at that time?

Mr. Halley. Well, I don't recall that specific name, Senator, at this time.

We did have a relationship with the DRE. We did deal with a number of their top leaders.

Mr. Johnston. Let me come back to that later.

Did you receive any orders not to investigate an area, or not to conduct an investigation of any kind?

Mr. Halley. No, I don't recall receiving any such orders.

Mr. Johnston. At this time period, November 22nd, November 23rd, 1963, what was your capability in regard to conducting an investigation among Cuban exiles, and with Cuban sources?

Mr. Halley. Well, in relationship to Cubans living in the United States, I would say that our capability was quite good.

Now, if you are referring to our capability to conduct an investigation in Cuba, I would have to say it was limited. have to know where specifically you are referring to. In other words, if you're talking in the area --

Mr. Johnston. First I'm talking domestically of Cuban exiles in the United States, and your answer is --

Mr. Halley. That it would have been quite good.

Mr. Johnston. Secondly, with regard to collecting intelligence as to possible Cuban involvement -

WARD & PAUL

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Halley. From Cuba or in Cuba?

Mr. Johnston. Any other source.

Mr. Halley. Well, if you're talking about collecting information in Cuba --

Mr. Johnston. I see.

Mr. Halley. It would then have to be focused specifically on different geographic areas. In other words, as an example, if you told me I want some information on a specific town in the province of Pinar del Rio, that probably was within our capability at that time because we had a rather extensive network in Pinar del Rio. If you had said to me, you know, in that same timeframe on this day, I want you to conduct a kind of an investigation in the province of Camaguey, I probably would have had to say, you know, we're not as well equipped, because our coverage varied from province to provin

Mr. Johnston. Did you have sources -- and I mean specifica JMWAVE station, did JMWAVE station control sources in Cuban intelligence?

Mr. Halley. I don't recall that we had any staff offic in the Cuban intelligence service under our control. We may have been involved in some double agent operations at that ti, but certainly we did not have a staff officer penetration of the Cuban services.

Mr. Johnston. Did you ever receive any orders to conta whatever your contacts were in the Cuban intelligence, to inquire about the assassination of President Kennedy?

Mr. Halley. I don't recall receiving any such instruction.

Mr. Johnston. Did that ever occur to you on your own?

Mr. Halley. Well, I think as you probably see from some of the traffic, we did come up on our own with samplings of opinion, what was happening in the Cuban community. We were reporting what was coming out of Cuba in terms of information brought by, you know, refugees, material that was being made available through people corresponding and so forth, yes, we were sensitive to that particular problem.

Mr. Johnston. But did you affirmatively go out and seek the information from sources in Cuba?

Mr. Halley. Well, to the extent that this was available to us, you know, we had lots of agents. If you're asking me did we send an SW message and task a specific agent to conduct an investigation, or did we send them a radio message or something like that, I don't recall one.

Mr. Johnston. Why didn't you do that?

Mr. Halley. My recollection of this is that we felt that the nature of our capability was to simply respond to what we were able to obtain in the Miami area, and from our sources in a passive way, because this was an investigation that was being conducted in the United States with the primary responsibility with agencies other than CIA.

Mr. Johnston. I guess I don't quite understand the answer because the CIA did have responsibility and certainly the capability to collect information from foreign countries.

Mr. Halley. Well, we had no reason at the particular time to feel that there was any kind of a case, hard information, that the Cubans were behind the assassination.

In other words, you know, at that particular period in time there were a large number of rumors, gossip, in the Cuban Community. Those that came to our attention were reported, and we tried to put them in some perspective, that is, who was the individual, what access did he have to this data and so forth.

But we had no persuasion that this was being mounted by the Cubans at that particular time.

Mr. Wallach. I would like to ask a couple of questions by way of background and let Jim go right back to his line of questioning.

Taking the period as exemplary, October of 1963 --

Mr. Halley. October of '63, okay.

Mr. Wallach. Which I take it would be fairly indicati of what was going on in May, June, July and August of the same year, I want to pick a fairly standard month for that period.

Mr. Halley. Uh-huh.

Mr. Wallach. Before the assassination.

It's my understanding that in addition to getting po intelligence from refugees, etc., coming to this country, that your station did operate agents and did have sources, whatever terms you want to use, inside Cuba, is that correct?

Mr. Hailey. Yes, we did have sources inside Cuba.

Mr. Wallach. Could you briefly for the record --

(Pause)

Mr. Wallach. What I'd like to do very briefly for the record, as you know, I think you had an interview with Mr. Baron and went into it with you, but very briefly describe generally the type of operations that your station was conducting vis-a-vis Cuba.

Mr. Hailey. Well, in the first instance we were engaged in foreign intelligence collection activities, that is, trying to establish information which related to the plans, intentions and capabilities of the Cuban government. We were also involved in counterintelligence operations, that is, trying to figure out what the Cubans were doing in terms of their intelligence operations in the United States, or through the United States into Central and Latin America. We were also involved in propaganda operations against Cuba, and covert action in the sense of trying to establish contact with dissident military personalities in Cuba.

Mr. Wallach. Without naming names, did you in the time period I've been talking about, October of 1963, have either sources or agents fairly highly placed within the Cuban government?

WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003
Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Halley. I don't think -- there I'd have to get a better definition from you of what is highly placed. If you are talking about Fidel Castro and his immediate entourage --

Mr. Wallach. People who could possibly have been in meetings or dinner with Castro, or meetings with Castro. I don't know enough about how Castro operated.

Mr. Halley. I would say if you are talking about somebody who was a member of his immediate entourage and who was dealing with him in a governmental sense, then the answer is no, but we did have people who were on the periphery of this. That is, they wouldn't have been major participants, but they would have been in social contact with Castro or members of his entourage.

Mr. Wallach. How about persons within the DGI, whatever the correct name for Cuban intelligence is.

Mr. Halley. Well, again as I mentioned earlier, we had no staff officer penetration of the Cuban intelligence servi We had some reporting on people who were in touch with various leaders in the Cuban intelligence, and it was all social or family or other context that these people were reporting on.

Mr. Wallach. Do you recall at any time in 1962 or the fact being brought to your attention that certain Cuban agents out of New York City were actually beginning to run assassination plots against Cuban exile leaders down in Miami?

Mr. Halley. Out of New York? No, I don't recall that. One thing, just before we leave this, so we don't have an incomplete record, you asked me the other kinds of operations that we were running. We were running a full scope of para-military operations against Cuba. That is, we were putting people back into Cuba who may have come from a particular province, and who then went into the bush and lived in the bush, and we kept them supplied with food, arms, basic equipment. We did have radio contact with them. We were involved in raids against the Cuban coast, we were involved in putting caches into the Cuban coast.

Senator Schweiker. Does that finish your point?

Mr. Halley. Yes, sir, that's roughly it.

Senator Schweiker. Following up this other question, was any one part of your job plugging intelligence leaks at this given time?

Was there any concern during your timeframe that you were involved in Cuban operations of intelligence leaks from our country to theirs through the Cuban intelligence system?

Was this ever a consideration or priority of you as Station Chief?

Mr. Halley. Yes, in terms of -- well, yes, the answer to that is yes. Now, let me elaborate on it.

We had a jurisdictional problem. For instance, a Cuban agent detected in the United States or being suspected of being a Cuban agent would have been a case that we would have had to have coordinated with the FBI, and essentially the FBI took primary action on this.

I recall one case where we detected a Cuban agent in the United States, and the case was transferred to the Bureau, and it involved a fundamental jurisdictional issue, which was clearly the Bureau's right to take that particular case over. So in that sense, the primary responsibility in the Miami area in the counterintelligence sense that you are discussing, Senator, would have rested with the Bureau.

Senator Schweiker. Did you ever attempt to find a leak by placing one of our agents into the system to plug a leak? I mean, was it ever that magnitude of concern attached?

Mr. Hailey. No, I don't recall that kind of a case. In other words, I do recall cases where people came out of Cuba, gave us a story that we did not necessarily believe, where we would turn them back and send them back to Cuba, so that over a longer period of time we could determine what it is that they were really after, what they were trying to do. In other words, were they trying to come into the United States to penetrate and immigrate, were they trying to get in touch with American intelligence, and if so, why. But it was all done back into the Cuban context.

Senator Schweiker. This is a tough question to answer, but at that period of time, how successful in your opinion was the Cuban intelligence system in doing some of that penetration, and I realize that we had a lot of Cuban exiles here, and it is pretty hard to tell the players from the scorecard we are in. It is a tough relevant question, but I wonder how you would analyze it.

Mr. Halley. Well, I think it would be fair to say that given the Cuban propensity to talk -- in other words, you have to start off with a fundamental point of departure that if you get two Cubans that have got a secret, it is not going to be a secret, because they do talk, and therefore they all constantly talk.

Our biggest problem in maintaining security of our own operations, such as an infiltration operation into Cuba to put in a cache or run a commando raid or put a person back in was to maintain security. The only way we could do it would be to take all participants of that operation and take them out of the Cuban community and in fact isolate them for a week or ten days or more prior to the mounting of the operation so that they wouldn't talk, and we could know where they would be constantly, 24 hours a day. And within that milieu, I think it is safe to say that the Cuban intelligence service did have some agents and could be expected to have a general feel for the pulse of the community at that time.

Senator Schweiker. During that same time frame, or during the time frame that you were Station Chief, what are some other Cuban groups that you worked with that come to mind? I have mentioned DRE. I realize there were several different ones?

Any others particularly that were helpful and worked with you like the DRE?

Mr. Halley. Well, the DRE was the main group because what had happened is after the -- or prior to the Bay of Pigs there was a great collaboration between CIA and a number of these groups. After the Bay of Pigs, the dialogue with these groups sort of dried up, and during my tenure, the main group that we worked with in that sense as an organizational entity was the DRE because they had a lot of active, imaginative young student leaders who had contacts throughout the Western Hemisphere who were equally interested in using them in the propaganda and covert action sense in Central and Latin America as we were actually using them against Cuba itself.

Senator Schweiker. Where did Alpha 66 fit or not fit into that?

Mr. Halley. We did not have an organizational relationship with Alpha 66. Alpha 66 was in being. We monitored their activities so that we would know when they were going to run raids against Cuba. We may have had people who at one time or another were in our paramilitary teams who left us for one reason or another and may have ended up in Alpha 66.

Senator Schweiker. We realize that one of the other intelligence agencies might have had a liaison or working operation with Alpha 66, not the CIA, is that correct?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I think -- you know, in the back of my memory I believe that one of the military services --

Senator Schweiker. Might it have been the Army Intelligence?

Mr. Halley. My recollection, it was probably a military service, and it probably was the Army, but I would have to check the record.

Senator Schweiker. We also were informed, and I just wondered if this was your recollection, that at some point some of the operations got a little bit overlapping and duplicating, and that the boats would -- I'm simplifying it of course, but that the boats weren't coordinated too well, and at one point it got to be a problem with whoever else was involved, and that finally an agreement was worked out with Army intelligence that all the boats would be supplied by CIA instead of having them sort of fly-by-nighting and possibly mess up some things because of duplication or confli

Do you recall any of that at all?

Mr. Halley. Well, I think there were periods when the U.S. Government was putting a clamp-down on refugee group going out, and the whole apparatus of government, Coast Gu

Customs, Immigration and Naturalization, FBI, CIA, were working together to try to keep these operations from going to Cuba.

In that context, the military did have some problems, but my recollection of that, Senator, is that we put them into the coordination mechanism that we had for getting boats our. I don't recall our taking their people --

Senator Schweiker. I might have stated it wrong.

What do you mean by a coordination mechanism?

Mr. Halley. Well, for instance, we had, let's say, for the month of October 1963, we would draw up an operational plan in September. In the course of that operational plan and geared to the dark of the moon, we would have a number of infiltration missions scheduled to put in caches. We'd have a number of missions scheduled to put in teams or to take people out of Cuba. We'd have a number of missions scheduled to conduct commando raids against fixed installations.

So we would draw up the schedule and coordinate the schedule with the appropriate agencies like Coast Guard or Customs so that we could move our boats in and out and not cause the U.S. Government to expend manhours and money in pursuing our boats.

Senator Schweiker. I think that is what I had in mind.

Mr. Halley. And therefore, on this schedule, when we worked this out, we therefore would tack on the military operations and work this out so that there was a central clearinghouse, and the U. S. government had a grip on what it was doing in this clandestine field.

Senator Schweiker. To your recollection, besides Army intelligence, were there any other intelligence services that were involved to any extent with that general picture?

Mr. Halley. Well, with the mutation of that, as I recall, the Navy had some activities in and out of Guantanamo, and there were some discussions at various times on how their people in Guantanamo could be supported, and the people were going in and out of Guantanamo.

Senator Schweiker. Were the Army operations very extensive or not compared to yours?

Mr. Halley. No. Compared to ours, they were infinitesimal.

Senator Schweiker. And Navy?

Mr. Halley. Navy, as I think all of this was limited to the perimeter all around Guantanamo, and Guantanamo.

Senator Schweiker. All right.

Mr. Wallach. I just want to ask you a couple of more questions as I was going to before.

I realize this question is going to your expertise, and if you have any trouble with definitional terms, let's get them straight.

Mr. Halley. Right.

Mr. Wallach. Did JMWAVE itself as an entity have the capability to conduct an investigation to determine whether or not there had been Cuban involvement in the assassination of President Kennedy in 1963?

Mr. Halley. I don't think there would have been a real world capability. I mean, if you're talking in my terms of conducting an investigation of this type in Cuba, which would have been professionally sound, that people would have put confidence in, I think the answer to that is probably no. I'm giving you an opinion. That is my opinion.

Mr. Wallach. Let's go back to terms, then. I'm not talking about an investigation where you could obviously have the freedom to go up and interview anyone you wanted to interview.

Mr. Halley. No. We are talking about through clandestine resources. In other words, to conduct this kind of investigation, you know, in my view, you would have had to have had a penetration of one or more of the Cuban intelligence services. The penetration would have had to have been in the 26th of July Movement, and had enough rapport with the top leadership that it could have moved freely in and out of a specific circle. would probably had to have been at the level of a Comandante. We did not have that kind of resource in depth to conduct that kind of investigation.

Mr. Wallach. Were there ever any discussions at that time that you remember between yourself, Fitzgerald, Helms, anyone, as to whether or not the CIA did have the capability to conduct such an investigation?

Mr. Halley. I don't recall such a discussion, but again, the reason for it was, it was essentially felt at that time, as name traces were done, the whole mood and the whole atmosphere was that this was a case that was being investigated by the FBI. It was their jurisdictional problem.

Mr. Wallach. Did the FBI, to your knowledge, have the capacity to investigate or to conduct any sort of investigation inside Cuba?

Mr. Halley. Inside Cuba? No, I don't think they did.

Mr. Wallach. Did you have direct contact with anyone from the Bureau on a continuing basis from the FBI?

Mr. Johnston. Let's restructure that whole area.

What was the liaison relationship between JMWAVE, the Bureau and Florida?

Mr. Halley. There was a direct liaison on a daily working basis, if this was required, between JMWAVE and the Miami Field Office, I think it was called, as a separate field office.

Mr. Johnston. At what level was this liaison conducted, directly with you?

Mr. Halley. No. This was conducted at at least three levels that I can recall: periodically the Chief of the Field Office and I would meet to review problems, if we had any particular problems, or frankly, just to get together just to make sure that we did not have any problems. There was a direct liaison on a working level between the people in the Counterintelligence shop of the Station and what I think the Bureau used to call the Tamale Squad, which were former Bureau agents who had been down in Havana, who had left when Fidel came into power, and were still working in Miami. And the third liaison was essentially with people who were working specific cases, where the name trace mechanism between ourselves and the Bureau would show some mutuality of interest in a particular case.

For instance, as an example, the Bureau might call up and say, look, what do you know about Juan Jose Gonzalez of the Second Front of the Escambrai. We'll say, okay, we'll take the question, we'll do a trace, prepare the answer, and somebody would go down and talk to them. So it was close. I would say it was close.

Mr. Johnston. Did you ever do the reverse? Did you ever ask the Bureau for information?

Mr. Halley. Yes. We traced specific people with the Bureau.

Mr. Johnston. In November, after the assassination of President Kennedy, did you personally meet with anybody from the FBI regarding the investigation?

Mr. Halley. I don't recall meeting on that specific subject.

Mr. Johnston. Do you know whether anyone in JMWAVE met with the FBI in regard to the FBI investigation in Florida?

Mr. Halley. My recollection is that this name trace procedure was working, whatever they were working in relationshi to their investigation, was being run through us. In other words, how many traces, who was being traced, I couldn't answer that.

Mr. Johnston. Well, name traces are one thing. I guess I am talking one step above that. Did anyone in JMWAVE to your knowledge discuss with anyone in FBI in Florida the CIA's capability to assist the FBI investigation?

Mr. Halley. I have no way of answering that. I don't recall that. I don't recall that kind of thing. You know, this is -- you know, we're talking about 1963. This is 13 years ago, and I keep telling you, you know, I've had a busy, active life.

Senator Schweiker. You are doing so far very well.

Mr. Halley. I feel you are pressing me on something tha is almost unreasonable. I mean, I don't recall each and every conversation. I mean, I had a 300 man station.

Mr. Johnston. I agree with you on that, but you are describing name traces, which you do seem to recall, but I' saying was there anything beyond name traces that you recal Was there any assistance given beyond name traces?

Senator Schweiker. Was there any higher level investi that you can recall?

Mr. Halley. The reason this name trace thing sticks in my mind, frankly, is because of the name traces that were conducted on Oswald when we got the hit, and I recall, the hit was made on the fact that there was the discussion and debate between Oswald and the DRE fellow, and we were tracing a lot of names at that time, and in conjunction with this particular event, once people were arrested and detained and there was some reason to expect that there was what I called an investigative follow-up, you know, you've got to start from some fact. What was the fact? You had a name, an address, a telephone number, that kind of tracing was going on. That is what impacts on me, what is this, you know, 13 years later.

Senator Schweiker. In connection with that, the group, the DRE group, there was some allegation that Oswald, I guess part of it is reality for sure, that he tried to penetrate the group himself by coming in when he was in New Orleans and infiltrate it on his own, which I guess is known,and what is in doubt, there was an allegation that while he was doing that, that he possibly talked of assassinating Kennedy or be paid money to assassinate Kennedy.

Does any of that conversation strike any bells or recollection with regard to DRE?

Mr. Halley. No, it doesn't, Senator, and I think I've got to explain this to you as to what was the nature of our relationship with the DRE. In other words, we had a relationship with the DRE where we gave them a monthly subsidy. In other words, this would make them in our category like independent contractors. In return for this particular subsidy, they were to collect intelligence for us on the island of Cuba where they still had people. They were to be a symbol of a certain amount of resistance, therefore they had to engage in certain activities, propaganda, radio broadcasts, correspondence to their friends and associates on the inside to show that there was a spark on the outside, around which people coul rally.

They also wanted to have a boat to move people inside and out of Cuba, and the money, the subsidy that we gave them helped them do all of these things. And we got an accounting from them. But we did not control each and every action that they took, so that if they chose, you know, not to report something to us, we wouldn't necessarily know it, and not every little detail of their organization did we know. If they met somebody --

Senator Schweiker. Well, I can understand that because there were a lot of groups like that, I'm sure.

Mr. Halley. But that particular one was one with which we had a subsidy relationship.

Senator Schweiker. Do you recall who your control relationship was with that particular group? I assume there was a CIA control relationship.

Mr. Halley. Yes, there was a particular man that was in liaison with that group, and there were several during that period of time.

Senator Schweiker. Might it have been Carlos Bringuier, the name we mentioned before?

Mr. Halley. You mentioned the name, and to be honest, the name doesn't ring a bell. But is he also known as Fatty?

Senator Schweiker. Well, you've got me now.

Mr. Halley. Well, every Cuban has an alias, like, they call him El Gordo or something like that.

Senator Schweiker. Well, it might be. He fits it.

Mr. Halley. Well, you might be able to answer this. Was he the fellow that was on the DRE boat that raided Havana? I have trouble matching up some of these names, and frankly, that name doesn't ring a bell, but I might have known him as El Gordo, and he was on the boat, and we dealt with different people.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Johnston. Let me show you WAVE cable 8049, dated 22 November '63, which is your report on this DRE matter, and that cable basically indicates that you got information from DRE about Oswald.

Is that correct?

Mr. Halley. Yes. The wording of this particular cable shows that we did get from the DRE files this information.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000
WARD & PAUL

Mr. Johnston. My question to you is, of partial significance, and that is the fact that that cable says that Oswald "allegedly lives in home of Foreign Minister for two months."

My question is that this allegation that he lived in the home of the Soviet foreign minister has never been substantiated through any other source, and I wonder whether you have a recollection of going back to DRE to see where they got that information.

Mr. Halley. No, I don't have a recollection of going back on that specific cable.

Mr. Johnston. Do you have any recollection of headquarter ever coming back to you and saying what is the source of that?

Mr. Halley. Xyou know, I don't see how you can expect me to remember that, really. You know, in the course of a day, a normal day, I might read a thousand cables.

Senator Schweiker. Well, does the fact that he might have lived in a Soviet foreign minister's home for two months ring a bell?

Mr. Halley. Well, you know, showing me that cable, I have to accept the cable at face value. That is what it says. I acknowledge that is what it says. The cable says we got it from the DRE. I accept it on face value. That incident, the foreign minister's residence, does not ring a bell with me.

Senator Schweiker. So you wouldn't know offhand where that allegation came from.

Mr. Halley. No, I don't know. We would have to go back to them and their criteria for carding might not coincide with ours. In other words, many of these Cuban groups were prone to act on rumors. They were prone to publicize things that were not true. The DRE had a record of publicizing, embroidering, elaborating on things, and therefore we treated a lot of their material with caution.

Senator Schweiker. Right.

Go ahead, Paul.

Mr. Wallach. Generally, now, and I'm not asking for specific conversations at all. I think it is entirely true, it is a caveat throughout this entire thing, we are talking about 13 years ago, millions of matters ago. But generally, do you recall whether or not the FBI, the people you dealt with had any general knowledge of the CIA's capability inside Cuba to get information?

Mr. Halley. Well, I think it would be fair to say that the FBI knew the kinds of operations that we were running, and I think they could have drawn certain conclusions about, you know, what our capability might have been. That is, let me put this in perspective. I'm talking about the people in Miami. Occasionally when I would come to Washington for conferences, I would meet somebody like Papich. We happened to be, you know, friends, and I would talk to him and say how are you doing, how are things going, what kind of activit are you involved in?

Papich probably have a feel for the scope of our activity, but whether he would have an appreciation of the kinds of specific sources, I doubt it.

Mr. Wallach. In other words, you would doubt whether or not anyone in the Bureau would have known whether or not you had an extremely high level source in Castro's entourage.

Mr. Halley. I doubt that they would know that.

Mr. Wallach. At any time, do you recall after the assassi-nation anyone from the Bureau, even from the Miami field offic or from headquarters, through Papich, through your headquarte contacting you to determine whether or not you had the capabil to conduct investigations on Cuba?

Mr. Halley. No, I don't recall that.

Do you want me -- can we go off the record for a minute?

Senator Schweiker. Yes.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Wallach. Let's go back on the record.

Were you known to the FBI under your real name or unde an alias?

Mr. Halley. No, I was known to the FBI under my true name. If you are wondering about whether the name is going t show up in the FBI records, I think they always would, in t writing of reports, do not use the true names. In other wo they say, you know, source or confidential informant, or A-whatever it was called, and that is the way they write their reports.

Mr. Wallach. Let me ask you this. I realize this was a subject matter that was covered in your previous testimony. I deem it of relevance, and I would like to ask you here, were you aware on November 22nd, 1963, that the CIA had at some poin in time prior to that date itself engaged in attempts to assassinate or used others in attempts to assassinate Fidel Castro?

Mr. Halley. No. I think the basic answer to that questio is no, but if you looked at my previous testimony, I previousl said that in the case of this Cuban comandante over the years, I had acquired some knowledge of the fact that he existed and he was being run by my colleagues in Washington, but that cas was not known to me as a clearcut assassination operation. I other words, at one point in time I knew that Des Fitzgerald was going to meet this fellow. I knew at one point in time there was going to be a meeting in Spain. I knew at one poin in time that we were putting caches in to support this partic fellow. I never knew whether the caches were recovered. An things like that. But the fundamental answer is no.

I have also previously testified that on some of the activities that were being engaged in by Mr. Harvey, that I was not knowledgeable on, you know, the thrust of those activities.

Mr. Wallach. Did your own sources in the Cuban communi tell you that the, what we call the underworld, the Mafia, was engaging in attempts to assassinate Fidel Castro?

Mr. Halley. I don't recall any such reports, but I've explained this, and let me go again on this, that assassination, the word "assassination" was part of the ambience of that time. In other words, every Cuban that you talked to, nobody could be involved in Cuban operations without having had some sort of a discussion at some time with some Cuban who said, gee, we ought to knock this guy off, or I'd shoot him if I had the chance, or the way to create a revolution is to shoot Fidel and Raul, and then go down through the whole proposition. So the fact that somebody would talk about assassination just wasn't anything that was really out of th ordinary at the time. It was part of the climate. These were professional revolutionaries in some cases, men who had been in the 26th of July movement and left, and come in and become exiles, and had been exiles two or three times. Revolution and assassination was a way of life for them.

Mr. Wallach. Did you have any doubt in your mind that Castro was aware in November 1963 that the CIA was supporti these revolutionaries?

Mr. Halley. Supporting revolutionaries.

Mr. Wallach. Right.

Mr. Halley. Yes, I think Castro knew that the United States was in touch with groups like the DRE, that people were being infiltrated by CIA into Cuba, because they apprehended some of them.

Mr. Wallach. Groups that were trying to overthrow Castro.

Mr. Halley. But he had to assume that if they were coming in, they were setting up guerilla forces in places like Oriente Province, and Pinar del Rio, that yes, they were going to work to overthrow him, and he had to know that.

Mr. Wallach. Were you aware of any other country that the United States Government was at that time attempting to overthrow the government of, and we can get your answer off the record if it is positive.

Mr. Halley. Well, wait a minute. Would you rephrase that? I'm not sure I follow that particular one.

Mr. Wallach. You came back to me with the word assassination, said it was part of the ambience of the times, that that might have been discussed at one time or another. My belief, as a layman, has been I don't see that much of a distinction between sending someone in who is going to try to foment a revolution, the result of which would probably be the death of Castro as opposed to sending someone in to -- I don't want to get into this, but I think that may have been something that you were touching on.

In any event, are you aware of any other country that the U.S. at that time was directing attempts to overthrow the government of?

Mr. Halley. No. Off the top of my head, no, but I do want to come back to your point. I do think there is a difference in the Latin American revolutionary sense of plotting a revolution against somebody as opposed to plotting a specific assassination operation against a particular individual. You know, maybe we have an honest difference of opinion on that point, but my view differs from yours.

Mr. Wallach. All right, let me continue on.

You also mentioned before that some of the people, the people that you felt were making general policy, were Helms, Bobby Kennedy, at one point Ed Lansdale.

Mr. Halley. Uh-huh.

Mr. Wallach. Did the Cubans know that? Did the Cubans know that Bobby Kennedy was involved?

Mr. Halley. I don't know that they were at that point in time, but clearly at later points of time when the Brigade 2506 returned, yes, they knew that Bobby Kennedy was in the Cuban policy affairs. Leaders of the Brigade like Artime, Oliva, the San Juan brothers and others were brought to Washington for lunches, dinners with, I guess at that time it was the Attorney General, because there were various phases in this thing.

Yes, they knew he was involved in Cuban affairs.

Mr. Wallach. Are you familiar with an article that app in I think it was the September 7th issue of the New Orleans Times-Picayune, among other newspapers, which reflected an interview Castro had with Daniel Harker of the AP, within which he said in substance that U.S. leaders would be in danger if they continued in their attempts, I think he used the word "eliminate".

Mr. Halley. Yes, I'm familiar with the general article, yes, but I can't tell you with certainty that I was aware of that article at the time that it appeared. In other words, you're asking about 1961, did you say it appeared?

Mr. Wallach. September 7, 1963.

Mr. Halley. I cannot swear that I knew about it in 1963. I since know that that article has been referred to a number of times.

Mr. Johnston. Let me just state for the record that I did not bring the WAVE cable on it, but WAVE did pass to headquarters the gist of that article as it appeared in Miami articles, passed that information to headquarters either on the 23rd or 24th of November because the FBI was inquiring about exile groups claiming that Castro had threatened Kennedy anyway, so that at least WAVE had knowledge right after the assassination of that article.

Mr. Halley. All right. The reason I qualify my response that may have been a cable that would have been released by some member of my staff. It didn't necessarily follow that was a WAVE cable, that I personally released it. I don't happen to recall it, but I am familiar with the article and the thrust of it.

WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003
Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Wallach. I realize again you may not have been famili with it at that time, or even before the assassination, but what -- and I'm not asking specifically for what facts, but you have testified previously that -- I don't want to paraphras your testimony, it speaks for itself -- that you had no reason to believe that the Cubans were involved in the assassination of President Kennedy.

Mr. Halley. Yes, at the time that the incident occurred, and when Oswald was apprehended, I had no reason to believe that the Cubans were involved.

Mr. Wallach. Taking the other side of the coin, what evidence was there in your mind that they were not involved?

Mr. Halley. Well, because we didn't have any evidence that they were.

Mr. Wallach. Did you conduct any investigation at all t determine if there was any involvement?

Mr. Halley. I didn't have any charter for that. I mean, people were arrested. The FBI and the authorities in that particular, in Dallas, were pursuing the case. I had no charter to pursue that.

Mr. Wallach. Did you ever ask Mr. Helms whether or not you could conduct such an investigation, or did he ever tell you that you could or could not?

Mr. Halley. No, I answered that, that I don't recall any such conversation where Helms told me I could or could not. I mean, this was not a subject that was being discussed.

I think the frame of reference at the time was that this was not a jurisdictional case for the CIA to pursue.

Mr. Wallach. You mean, the President of the United States is murdered, and it is not within the jurisdiction of the CIA to determine if a foreign country is involved?

Mr. Halley. Not if the investigation is run by the FBI and a person is apprehended, and one is going to assume that he is going to be interrogated, investigative leads are going to be obtained from it, and a particular agency has got the action responsibility. Under those circumstances, my perception of the various rules is that CIA performs a support function. In other words, if you are asked for a name trace, or traces on telephone numbers, physical descriptions, you know, license plates, whatever it may be, you respond.

Mr. Wallach. Who gave you those instructions, that CIA was only going to have a support function?

Mr. Halley. That is my perception.

Mr. Wallach. Who told you that?

Mr. Halley. Nobody has to tell you that. You're an intelligence human being. You're allowed to think for yourse and you can come to logical conclusions.

Mr. Wallach. Did somebody tell youthat the FBI had primary jurisdiction?

Mr. Halley. No, but the FBI has primary jurisdiction, this is something we are taught in our training courses, in the United States, you know, for cases in the United States. For instance, my explanation of this -- I gave you an explanation of the counterintelligence case in the States where we found a Cuban agent in the United States,and the jurisdiction of the case reverted to the FBI.

Senator Schweiker. Do you want to make a comment here, Seymour?

Mr. Bolten. I'd like to go off the record.

Senator Schweiker. All right.

(Discussion off the record.)

Senator Schweiker. Let's go back on the record.

Mr. Wallach. I have one or two more questions on this.

Senator Schweiker. All right.

Mr. Wallach. Did at any time during the existence of the Warren Commission, do you recall -- and I'm not asking for a specific event, but do you recall having any type of indirect relationship with that Commission, in essence, responding to requests that were made of the Agency and they asking you for general information?

Mr. Halley. Would you give me the dates of the Warren Commission?

Mr. Wallach. December 1, '63 --

Mr. Halley. December 1, '63 to when?

Mr. Wallach. September of '64.

Mr. Halley. No. No.

Mr. Wallach. Do you have any reason today to believe that there was Cuban involvement in the assassination of President Kennedy?

Mr. Halley. I have no hard information on that.

Mr. Wallach. Do you have any hearsay information?

Mr. Halley. No. I mean, hearsay information, what constitutes hearsay? Criel wrote an article in the Washington Post, you know, suggesting that there is some -- is that hearsay evidence? I mean, I don't happen to believe his thesis.

Mr. Wallach. I am asking you if you have any belief as an expert?

Mr. Halley. As an expert I only deal in facts, in other words not -- what I consider hard intelligence, I don't have any hard intelligence.

Mr. Johnston. Other than the FBI, did you have a liaison with other investigative agencies?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I did.

Mr. Johnston. Did you have an investigative relationship with the U.S. Customs Department, specifically a Customs agent who was on detail to CIA?

Mr. Halley. Yes, we had a relationship with a Customs agent by the name of Caesar DeEstado. Caesar DeEstado was detailed on an arrangement between CIA which was in being when I came to the station. His primary function was to be stationed in Key West, Florida. He generally covered the area from Key West to either Marathon or it could have been -- either Marathon or El Marado, and his tasks were, one, to find Cubans who were coming into the United States in small boats, and to ensure that he took a quick look at them to see if any one of them could be turned around to be used as intelligence sources. If they couldn't be used as intelligence sources, he skimmed off the perishable information that was really critical, and then put it into our system. He also flagged the knowledgeable people for further exploitation by us when the went to the Opa Loca briefing center. He also picked up equipment, that is documents from these people, weapons, clothing, so that we could use authentic clothing to equip our own teams.

Mr. Johnston. Did he also stay in contact with certain Cuban exiles?

Mr. Halley. He did stay in contact with Cuban exile groups because it was part of his job to know when they were going out so that we didn't have these uncoordinated problems. In other words, at one point we tried to stop them. He also has to know who was in the area running a training camp or something like that, so that our operations would not be compromised by coming into a camp next to where some exiled Cubans were already working.

Mr. Johnston. And did he -- let me back up. First, have you participated in the Agency's response to the Committee's written inquiry about this?

Mr. Halley. Well, to this extent, somebody in the Agency called me and said the Committee had a request in for some data on a Customs officer. Nobody could remember his name. I happened to remember his name. I said Caesar DeEstado was the guy's name. I don't remember how to spell it. Phonetically I think it is as follows, and try to find a file on it. And so to that extent, yes, I am aware that there was some sort of a response being prepared. I did not see the response. I don't know what it says.

Mr. Johnston. Do you know whether he was asked either by you or by anybody in WAVE to contact Cuban exiles after the assassination to see what knowledge they might have?

Mr. Halley. Well, let me try to clarify that. I was not his contact point. In other words, I was a manager of a large operation.

Mr. Johnston. I understand that. So did anybody under your control contact him?

Mr. Halley. His point of contact was in Key West. Periodically he would either come to Miami or meet with one of our people, and once every three months or something like that I would have a meeting with him to review broad trends, either in Key West or in Miami. I never taked him with this type of thing. I don't recall anybody else in the station tasking him to conduct an investigation of Cuban groups relative to the President's assassination. But as we were putting together mood cables -- you showed me an example of one there -- it is conceivable that he is the kind of person that we would have talked to to find out what was going on in the Cuban community at that time.

Mr. Johnston. Do you know whether he did in fact contact Cuban exiles about it? Do you have any knowledge of his contacts with Cuban exiles?

Mr. Halley. I don't have any firsthand knowledge.

Mr. Johnston. Do you have any knowledge whatsoever?

Mr. Halley. I would have to say firsthand, I don't recall any information of any subordinate of mine reporting to me that he had done that.

Mr. Johnston. You testified earlier that you met with Mr. Fitzgerald at some point, and that he told you at that time that he made contact personally with a Cuban agent, one named AMLASH?

Mr. Halley. I think my testimony was something along that line, that I had a conversation with Fitzgerald, that he was going to meet a Cuban source. My recollection was that the name may have come up, that he was asking my opinion and advice as to whether this would be a useful thing to do. And as I have testified before, my recollection is I told him I thought I would find this conversation interesting, but I didn't think it was worth his doing because he had too high a profile, and it would not be a good thing to do from the point of view of attribution in relationship to a clandestine agent.

WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003
Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Johnston. And let me go through what you have just told me.

First of all, was this agent, when he used the true name, was it the agent whose cryptonym is AMLASH?

Mr. Halley. Yes. Subsequently I have concluded that th is who it is.

Mr. Johnston. Did he tell you or indicate that a meetin between him and AMLASH was proposed?

Mr. Halley. Well, he was considering a meeting with AMLASH, with this particular person.

Mr. Johnston. Do you have a recollection as to what timeframe your discussion with Mr. Fitzgerald was?

Mr. Halley. No, I don't.

Mr. Johnston. Knowing that Mr. Fitzgerald met with AMLASH on October 29th, 1963, does that refresh your recoll as to whether the conversation took place earlier in 1963?

Mr. Halley. I am sorry, I can't narrow that down for you.

Mr. Johnston. But you advised against the meeting.

Mr. Halley. Right.

Mr. Johnston. You were knowledgeable, I take it, of the Agency's dealing with AMLASH from time to time, as part of JMWAVE.

Mr. Halley. Yes. I mentioned to you earlier that we had put in caches which were scheduled to be retrieved by AMLASH or his people, so yes, I knew that we were providing support to an agent in Cuba, but that was not unusual because we were putting in a large number of caches for a wide variety of people who were being run out of Washington, over and out of other stations.

Mr. Johnston. And you may have testified about this before but was it common to drop caches of rifles or telescopic sights for agents?

Mr. Halley. I would not necessarily have known what was in each cache.

Mr. Johnston. Well, was it common to drop, to your knowledge, to drop rifles with telescopic sights?

Mr. Halley. Well, I think the thing that would be uncommon would be telescopic sights. Many of our caches were weapons caches. A large bulk of the caches were rifles of one kind or another. We put in the FAL, the Belgian FAL, we put in M-1s. We put in carbines, we put in Springfields, we put in Thompson submachine guns. I think if I were looking at a cache list and I saw a telescope on it matched up with a Springfield '03 rifle, that probably would have struck me as being unusual, but I did not see the inventories of all the caches.

Mr. Johnston. Would you commonly or routinely see cables from the Director, especially on the AMLASH operation?

Mr. Halley. No.

From the Director to whom?

Mr. Johnston. To JMWAVE.

Mr. Halley. My recollection is, other than specific requests to put in caches, that there wasn't any cable traffic between Washington and JMWAVE on that particular operation.

Mr. Johnston. I am searching through my notes --

Mr. Halley. Right.

Mr. Johnston. The Committee does not have copies of the file of AMLASH. That is at the Agency. Let me, if you'll accept it as a fact that there was a cable in early December 1963 from the Director to JMWAVE directing, using the crypt AMLASH and directing that a cache be supplied him, including in that, itemizing two rifles with telescopic sights.

Mr. Halley. That kind of a cable I may or may not have seen. In other words, that would have been a fairly standard logistics kind of thing to get a cache and it would have come up on my briefing chart for the month, the operation, X number of days before the operation was launched, I would have had a briefing with all of the paramilitary and maritime officers and our COMINT, ELINT and other specialists to look at the CV and make a decision as to whether the operation should go or not go. At that point I probably would have known that it was a cache, that it contained weapons, that it was in support of a headquarters run operation.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall on or about 7 or 8 December 1963 a stop being put on operations, certain operations that went into Cuba?

Mr. Halley. I don't recall that specific timeframe, but there were periodic ups and downs in the number of operations that could be run. We would get policy guidance to stand down for a period of time, that once one of those things came out, I think that we had a series of discussions, I think, with Washington, and appeals, that if there was a standdown, and we had to say something, who were dependent on us in Cuba for food and a continuing flow of weapons, that we couldn't have them preparing these caches and risking their lives to come to the reception points and not be able to meet the schedules.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall, though, in the period 6, 7 and 8 December, headquarters first authorizing certain operations and then calling off the operations, and specifical cables which said, and I quote -- pardon me, I don't quote, the operations being called off, "pending major top level Cuban-Caribbean policy review scheduled early next week which should provide basis for decision."

Mr. Halley. I don't recall your specific dates or your timeframe, but the point I would like to leave with you is that there were several periods like that where we had upsand downs, and yes, I do recall standdowns on operations.

Mr. Johnston. You don't recall a standdown within two weeks of the assassination of President Kennedy.

Mr. Halley. I am sorry, I don't. You know, I accept that it occurred, but you know, there were so many of those during the three and a half year period of time that I don't recall that specific one.

Mr. Johnston. What does the phrase "higher authority" generally mean in Agency cables?

Mr. Halley. Well, at that particular point in time, I think higher authority was a euphemism for the President and top level policy decisionmakers at the NSC 40 Committee level.

Mr. Johnston. And again, you don't recall knowing in the same time period, December 1963, that you were cabled that the headquarters procedure was to present the infiltration procedures to higher authority.

Mr. Halley. Well, I have forgotten the date when this transition took place. As of a fixed date, in the course of this operation, we had to supply all of our infiltration operations a month in advance. I'm sorry, I just don't recall when that went into effect. Prior to that time we were pretty well scheduling these ourselves, but then a request came in that we put these in a month in advance. So as I told you before, if I wanted to run a schedule for October, I had to have it in in Washington with all of the Ops plans by I think the 15th of September.

Senator Schweiker. Did a former ambassador William Pauley, a man called William Pauley, who at one time owned properties in Havana and now living in Miami, did he ever finance some of the operations that you are aware of out of Miami, William Pauley?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I know Bill Pauley. He was involved in, in my time, in one specific operational activity. I don't think it would be proper to say that he financed it, however.

Senator Schweiker. This is the one where people were killed in a boat raid?

Mr. Halley. Well, we don't know what happened to them. My recollection of the operation is that Bill Pauley was approached by Life Magazine, and this was involved with an individual by the name of John Martino, because this has come up recently. The Committee has asked me about this before I told them at first I couldn't remember the name, and I had to go back and conduct a file search, and I came up with John Martino's name, who had been involved in gambling casinos in Cuba.

Martino was in touch with a number of Cubans who claimed that they had access to two Soviet missile technicians. Pauley brought this operation to the Agency, and the Agency agreed that we would cooperate with them in pursuit of this operation.

Senator Schweiker. And Time-Life did some funding for it, too?

Mr. Halley. Well, they were involved, but they did not fund it. My recollection is Pauley made the boat available, the Flying Tiger, which was his yacht, we paid for the gas and oil for that particular boat, and we provided all of the other equipment that went into the operation. Pauley went on that vessel down to the launch point. The men were launched in a small infiltration boat. It took off, went off toward the Cuban mainland, and were never seen or heard from since then. We never had any reporting on them.

Senator Schweiker. Was Pauley involved with other operations with you folks, or is that the only one?

Mr. Halley. That is the only operation that he was involved with the Agency. He, however, was very helpful in terms of providing advice on various people that he had known from his long involvement in Cuba. He was useful in providing introductions to various people that we wanted to meet. I recall on one occasion he introduced me to a prominent Cuban that I wanted to meet. He brokered that.

Pauley, on his own, gave money to various Cuban groups, unrelated to what we were doing. He was also a participant in the raising of the initial ransom for the members of Brigade 2506.

Senator Schweiker. Here is an article -- rather than me read it, I'll give you a chance to read it. It is Claire Booth Luce. As you know, she is on the Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board, and has been for some time, and Bill Colby was her chief of station when she was ambassador to Italy. This story came to me not through the paper, frankly, but from Mrs. Luce personally, expressing her concern. It subsequently did appear in a paper and I did not release it. Mrs. Luce specifically released it to Betty Beale, and the reason it is relevant here is that from what I read here, the group she is referring to is probably the DRE group or some part of the DRE group in New Orleans, and while that is not too clear, she did associate Mr. William Pauley with it. But that is somewhat confused, because you said he wasn't involved in any other operation other than the one you mentioned.

Mr. Halley. Well, I'm -- Mr. Pauley, I know Mr. Pauley and Mrs. Luce are friends. They see each other, or they used to. I haven't seen them in a number of years, but they used to be in the same social circuit, so I am sure that Mr. Pauley recounted a war story in his contacts, so she is probably aware of the general operation to get the two Soviets out of Cuba. That is the only operation that he ran with us durin my stewardship of the station.

Senator Schweiker. There is a vast difference of recollection between the two on what happened. She very strongly recollects that in addition to the thing that you described, which is a matter of record, by the way, with the Senate Committee, it is a matter of Committee record, in addition to that, that this is in it also.

Rather than read the whole thing, you might read the paragraphs I have outlined. She feels very strongly about it. She has called me several times about it. She is absolutely certain of her information, and her Cuban source doesn't want to talk for fear of his life.

(The Witness reads the document.)

Mr. Halley. No, that doesn't ring any bells. I cannot put that in any context.

Let me go back to this Pauley business. I think at one time, one other thing that Pauley did for us, I think he provided an opportunity for us to pick up some cargo in the Dominican Republic to provide cover for one of our vessels that we were using at that time for infiltration operations in the area but those are the only things that I can remember off the top of my head.

Senator Schweiker. You see, where he says here that he [illegible] contact with a group, the story goes on to say that this group supplied a tape and pictures of that contact, and that [illegible]

FBI did not follow them up, which is a rather serious charge itself, and that is why I wonder if there is some DRE relationship here with Bringuier.

Maybe you can give us that case officer's name, Seymour.

Mr. Bolten. Which one?

Senator Schweiker. The case officer for the DRE group.

It would have to be the one at the time when Oswald was in New Orleans, which is -- when was that?

Mr. Johnston. The fall of '63.

(Discussion off the record.)

Senator Schweiker. Going on, I didn't follow the final question on DeEstada, your detail man to Customs.

Were you aware that he was doing some investigating after the Kennedy assassination?

Mr. Halley. No, I don't have any firsthand recollection of that.

Senator Schweiker. And the way you were structured, would he be the logical person to, if somebody asked for either a name check or some follow-up --

Mr. Halley. He would have been the logical person if we had something specific to pursue or he would have been the logical person to put a question to if we were looking for atmospheric, you know, what the Cuban community was thinking.

Senator Schweiker. How about Julio Lobo?

Mr. Halley. He's the sugar king.

Senator Schweiker. He's the sugar king there.

Did he assist with any of your operations, either financially or in terms of his people or in terms of his organizatio

Mr. Halley. My recollection of that, there was no direct contact between us and Julio Lobo. We did have various Cuban investigative and research groups that we were working with. My belief is that one of these groups must have been tapping Lobo for his knowledge of the sugar market, because we were constantly making projections of where the sugar crop was going in Cuba, because that impacted on the stability of th Cuban economy. In other words, when it was a good crop, you could figure that Castro's going to have X millions of dollar When he didn't have a good crop, this was going to impact on where he wanted to go with building the revolution.

Senator Schweiker. There is another name that I believe had some relationship with him, maybe businesswise, James Cogswell, or Caldwell.

Mr. Halley. Caldwell. I think that was the fellow that was employed by the Agency at one time.

Senator Schweiker. Right.

Mr. Halley. Who was --

Senator Schweiker. What was his project at that point?

Mr. Halley. He was working here in Washington. He was on the Cuban project in Washington. He was primarily concer with economic activities and how pressure could be put on th

Cuban economy.

Senator Schweiker. And how about an Antonio Veciana, a Cuban name?

Mr. Halley. Yeah, I think he's the owner, one of the part owners in the restaurant in Miami called Las Violinas.

Senator Schweiker. At one point he worked for --

Mr. Halley. Could you spell the name?

Senator Schweiker. Maybe I'm not pronouncing it right. V-e-c-i-a-n-a.

Mr. Halley. I think that's the fellow who used to run the restaurant called Las Violinas, and he was involved with a number of Cuban exile groups. I think he was connected with the second front of the Escambray, but that is off the top of my head. We'd have to do a trace.

Senator Schweiker. Did David Phillips, during your tenure there, have any assignment in Cuba?

What was his relationship at the time of this period? David Phillips? That's head of the Retired --

Mr. Halley. Yes, at that point in time he was stationed in Mexico City, and my recollection was that he was involved in covert operational actions against Cuba out of Mexico City, and he may have been involved in operations against the Cuban embassy in Mexico City. I am a little vaguer on that than I am on the first part.

I know we had some travelers going down to Mexico City and their point of contact frequently was Dave Phillips, but most of those fellows were dealing with propaganda distribution, but he could well also have worked against the installation.

WARD & PAUL
410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

At that time he was not the station chief. He was a secondary figure, I guess, at the station.

Senator Schweiker. Did Howard Hughes or his organization or Intertel, assist you in any operations, and I am going to exclude for the moment Mr. Maheu, who we know had a very specific role, excluding the Maheu situation with Giancana and Rosselli that I think you are familiar wity --

Mr. Halley. Yes.

Senator Schweiker. To your knowledge, did Howard Hughes, Intertel or any of his other groups or associations assist or work with you in the Cuban operation?

Mr. Halley. Not with the Miami station that I am aware of.

Senator Schweiker. Well, I'm not talking about --

Mr. Halley. Well, back here in Washington that could be, but I have no knowledge of it. I can only answer it out of the Miami context.

Senator Schweiker. At one point in time, probably when you first came aboard, there was a Lt. Colonel Samuel Kail, who was a military attache to the Havana embassy.

Does that name ring a bell?

Mr. Halley. Yes, it does.

Senator Schweiker. What role was he playing when you came aboard?

Mr. Halley. He either came about the same time that I did or shortly after I arrived in Miami, and he was in fact the number two fellow at the Opa Locka debriefing center. We ha inter-agency debriefing center set up at Opa Locka. The head of the center was a CIA officer. His principal deputy was Kale. He was the general administrator of the program and he supervised the military personnel who were on detail to the center, and there were debriefing people there for positive intelligence, and when they found someone who was particular knowledgeable or had some operational exploitation, they wo flag them to us.

Senator Schweiker. Was he ever detailed to CIA or was he strictly Army intelligence?

Mr. Halley. No, at that time he was an Army officer working on a joint project that wasn't a detail assignment. was just assigned to Opa Locka.

Senator Schweiker. Purely Army, but working with you cooperatively.

Mr. Halley. Well, I think what happened, unlike what would go on overseas, a table of organization was drawn up for the Opa Locka center, and it was agreed that the head of this center would be Jim, so we assigned that man to that. It was agreed that the deputy of the center would be a Mil officer. Therefore Kale was assigned to that. He continued to receive his pay, quarters, and other allowance through the military establishment.

Senator Schweiker. What about when he was at the Havana embassy?

You are talking about, I guess, after he left the Havana embassy.

Mr. Halley. Yes. I am talking about the period 1962 forward, and as I recall, he must have been there up to the end of my tenure there. I have forgotten when he left. I have no knowledge of his activities in Havana. That was before my time. I simply know that he served in Havana, that he was a social acquaintance of a number of the officers that I had in the station, but I had no firsthand knowledge.

Senator Schweiker. How about Robert Brown or Colonel Nichols, the same question, Robert Brown?

Mr. Halley. Senator, you'll have to give me something more than Robert Brown. That doesn't give me anything. I'm sorry. The other was what, Colonel Nichols?

Senator Schweiker. Colonel Nichols. He was also at the Havana embassy at some point in time.

Mr. Halley. I would have no knowledge of him.

Senator Schweiker. Now, there was a group called Celula Fantasma. Are you familiar with that group?

Mr. Halley. I have heard the name.

Senator Schweiker. And it was a project where two American pilots were killed. The group conducted some para-military operation.

Mr. Halley. That doesn't ring a bell, but the Celula Fantasma is a name that I've heard. I can't put it into any broader context for you. It certainly was not one of our operations.

Senator Schweiker. That was really my question.

Do you recall -- was there anyone using the name or cryptoname of Bishop for you at any point in time in terms of the Cuban operations, either Morris Bishop or some other Bishop?

Mr. Halley. That name doesn't mean anything to me.

Senator Schweiker. Here is a sketch of a person. Does this sketch look like anyone that might have been associated cuban operations, either pro-Castro or anti-Castro?

(The Witness looks at a sketch.)

Mr. Halley. No, it doesn't. I mean, there is somethi about the face that is familiar, but I can't put a name to it and it doesn't ring any bells with me in relationship to Cuban operation.

Senator Schweiker. We'll ask Seymour.

Seymour, how about you, any recollection?

Mr. Bolten. Is it supposed to be Cuban or an American Senator Schweiker. I think an American, but I'm not c on that, someone who did do some work in the Cuban activities, supposedly on the anti-Castro side.

Mr. Bolten. He has very regular features, so he could be almost anybody, you know.

And like John says, it is a sort of -- he could be familiar. No, I wouldn't place him with anyone I know.

Senator Schweiker. Go ahead.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall Director McCone visiting the station in early December or mid-December of 1963?

Mr. Hailey. Mr. McCone made a couple of visits to Florida. I'm not sure it would be fair to say that he visited the station. My recollection of that is he came to Florida. He was put in the property that we had, we had conversations with him out at that property, but he didn't come out to the physical plant, that is, our station premises, and in most cases he was usually en route to or coming back from somewhere.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall such a visit in December of 1963?

Mr. Hailey. I can't pin it down to that timeframe. In other words, my memory is McCone came to Miami several times.

Mr. Johnston. Well, let's put it in the timeframe of a short period after the assassination of President Kennedy.

Mr. Hailey. I cannot put it into the timeframe, I just can't. All I can tell you is McCone came down to Florida on a number of occasions. You know, if you asked me what your impression, I don't know, maybe three, four.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall anyone from headquarters coming down to visit with you in December 1963? Again, this is shortly after the assassination of President Kennedy.

Mr. Halley. Do you have the chronology? Was Harvey still --

Mr. Johnston. No, it was Fitzgerald.

Mr. Halley. Okay. No, I don't, because Harvey periodically when he was in used to come down at the time of the Orange Bowl game. I do remember going to an Orange Bowl game with Harvey. So I would have to say no, I don't.

But look again --

Mr. Johnston. Well, let me just back up.

Do you know -- did you have any discussions with anyone from the headquarters staff about the effect of the assassination of President Kennedy on Cuban operations?

Mr. Halley. Well, it seems to me logical that there may have been some sort of discussion at that time, but I don't recall it. You know, you have to put this in this kind of a context. It was a steady stream of people coming from Washington to Miami. I came to Washington on a regular basis. There would be times when I would come up once every two weeks. There would be times when I wouldn't be up here for six weeks, and this was a very active period. I was working 14, 15, 16 hours a day, seven days a week, and a lot of this is a blur to me.

So when you say do you remember McCone coming, yes, I do remember that. Can you put it in a time frame of 7 to 8 December, no, I can't.

Mr. Johnston. Can you put it in the timeframe of shortly after the assassination of the President?

Mr. Halley. I can. You know, you asked me, did anybody come down to visit you in the December timeframe. That's why I asked youabout who was the chief because I do recall going to an Orange Bowl game with Harvey one year. Des came down, Fitzgerald came down a couple of times, but I don't remember him ever coming in the Christmas timeframe, you know?

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall having discussions with -- and I take it your answer is yes -- do you recall discussions between you and someone from headquarters about the effect of President Kennedy's assassination on the Cuban operation?

Mr. Halley. I am sure that there were such discussions, you know, where is the program going to go, how are we going to be tasked.

But if you ask when, what date, where, Washington or Miami, I couldn't sharpen it up for you.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall such a discussion with Director McCone?

Mr. Halley. No, I don't.

Mr. Johnston. Do you recall such a discussion with Mr. Helms?

Mr. Halley. No, I have to come back to the basic point. I don't recall this kind of specific conversation with a particular individual, but I am sure that these kinds of conversations must have taken place with somebody from Washington or when I was up here in Washington.

Mr. Johnston. Let me show you the cable that you looked at previously before we went on the record, which is WAVE cable 8130 of 24 November 1963, and the copy we have is barely legible. The gist of that in the last numbered paragraph reports information WAVE obtained on an individual named Rodriguez in Dallas, and also, I think, reports, if you can read through the poor Xeroxing, that Rodriguez was thought to be anti-Kennedy.

My question being, where would you have gotten that kind of information?

(The Witness reads the document.)

Mr. Halley. Well, to be honest with you, I can't read the message. It says read Para 2, [illegible] 2. We'd have to go up and look up who the man is. This is one of literally thousands of cryptonyms across my desk.

It looks to me like [illegible] 2.

Mr. Johnston. Let's go off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Halley. WAVE traces, now, that indicates to me that whatever was done here was based on the material that was passively in the files.

Where did material that was in our files. We got material that was in these files from agent reporting, we got it from refugee debriefings, we got it from our, you know, from sources in the Cuban community who were reporting on Cuban groups. We got it on a monitoring of the Cuban press, and the Spanish press in Miami, we got it from monitoring radio broadcasts and so forth. So that it was this kind of a conglomerate of information.

Now, let's take a name, you know, like Rodriguez. A name like Rodriguez in the card file, there might be two inches of Rodriguezes. You know, if you were looking for a specific Rodriguez, Carlos Rafael Rodriguez, you know, somethin like that, then you'd have to pin it down, in other words, age, what his membership was in he party and things like that. So that indicates to me that we found this material in the file.

Who the source is, I don't know. We'd have to look up the crypt and find the true name, and maybe even then I couldn't tell you.

Mr. Johnston. But that source is liable to be a Cuban exile in Miami, is that correct?

Mr. Halley. Well, not being able to read the thing, don't even want to speculate on it.

Mr. Johnston. Did you have sources in Alpha 66?

Mr. Halley. Yes, at times there were sources in Alpha 66.

Mr. Johnston. Did you have sources in SNFE?

Mr. Halley. At times, yes.

Mr. Johnston. Did you have sources, in the time period we are talking about, November '63 through the spring of 1964?

Mr. Halley. Well, I would have to say the probability is high that we had some sort of a source in that group, but I'd have to go back, you know, and check the record, and it would have to be researched, but my recollection to that is we would have sources in that group one way or another.

Mr. Johnston. Are you aware of a Cuban exile organization of anti-Castro organization called the Christian Democratic Movement, or MDC?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I am.

Mr. Johnston. Did you have sources in MDC?

Mr. Halley. Yes, we did.

Mr. Johnston. And in November of 1963, do you recall who was the leadership of MDC?

Mr. Halley. Off the top of my head, no, but you know there is a book, we put out a book at that time which was a [illegible], of all of the anti-Castro groups that were located in Miami, and the figures are still with me, approximately. There were 250 some-odd exile groupings, and we didn't have all 250 penetrated, if you really want to know the answer to that. We'll have to get the book, look up the dates, and try to see who the leadership were.

Mr. Johnston. Does that book contain the names of the leadership?

Mr. Halley. Yes. In most of the cases it contains the names of the major leaders.

Mr. Johnston. Did you have that book at approximately the timeperiod of November '63 through December '63?

Mr. Halley. The book was put out and revised several times. I just have trouble coming into specific dates.

Mr. Johnston. I appreciate that fact. I understand it.

Mr. Halley. There is just a mass of information on these things now coming out, and the only way I know to answer you in a prudent manner is to say that there was such a group. steer you to the information. You know, we can look it up for you.

Mr. Johnston. Did you know who Dr. Portell-Villa was, Herminio Portell-Villa?

Mr. Halley. Portell-Villa or [illegible]?

Mr. Johnston. Portell-Villa.

Mr. Halley. Portell-Villa, no, I do not.

Mr. Johnston. [illegible] source crypt of [illegible] and I will show you to refresh your recollection WAVE cable 0455, 4/7/1963.

(The Witness reads the document.)

Mr. Halley. No, I don't. You know, the cryptonym AMKNOB rings a bell with me. I am familiar with the cryptonym. Wha specifically AMKNOB 1 is I can't tell you. REading the contents of this message, you know, this is a message dated 4 December '63, I would say that we got a message in secret writing via the mail from some source in Cuba, and he is givi this information.

Who he is, what reliability we placed on a particular source --

Mr. Johnston. That's what I'm asking you.

Mr. Halley. what access he had and so forth, I couldn't tell you. We'd have to, you know, get the file. I would li to read it and see what the file says.

Mr. Johnston. And in connection with the assassination President Kennedy, when you got information like that, you viewed your responsibility as what?

Mr. Halley. Essentially putting it to headquarters, wh was the focal point for pulling together all kinds of dat that were dealing with the Cubans and others.

Mr. Johnston. And again the substance of this is a source in Cuba reporting to you on possibly seeing Oswald, possible Cuban assassinations.

Mr. Halley. That is the deduction I come to by rea their message. I don't want you to hold me to this, and I' will get the file and it says that this was an SW message from a guy in Mexico or something. I'm just reading a message and deductive analysis of what I know the case to have been at the time.

Mr. Johnston. Well, that's a correct statement of the message, is that right?

Mr. Halley. Yes, I'd have to go on the basis that we recorded material accurately. Therefore, by the way this message is written, by analysis I am having to conclude that it was a source inside Cuba.

Mr. Johnston. Then I put to you the question in regard to your previous testimony about tapping sources in Cuba, although you were getting messages out of Cuba, you recall no action being taken through the WAVE station to tap sources in Cuba.

Mr. Halley. Now, with a message like this it is [illegible] You'd have to look back at the file, and where there are additional questions, you know, like who are these people, you try to clarify the reporting that you are receiving, but I can't clarify that off the top of my head. The only thing I could suggest is to go back to the file.

Mr. Johnston. Let me show you also Director Cable [illegible] which WAVE got, dated 30 November 1963. WAVE got an [illegible] of it.

Do you have any recollection of either receiving that . . .

or of receiving that information?

Mr. Halley. I would have to say because of the indicator on here, the communication system was very reliable, that this message was received, because that's what it shows, but I personally have no recollection of this message.

Mr. Johnston. Could WAVE have made a contribution to that report?

Mr. Halley. Well, again, I have to go back to the first. It says the above is from a KMULSER diplomat. I assume that that was from a Mexican diplomat. Italian?

Then that would determine whether we could have made a contribution. There was a time when we in WAVE had as recruited agents Mexican and Italian diplomats in Havana. That cryptonym doesn't ring any bells with me. Now you have to go back and look it up, look in the file, and that would tell you whether we were running the guy or not.

Mr. Johnston. Is that the only evaluation you could have made?

Mr. Halley. Yes. Looking at this, I'd say that's the only evaluation we could have made, but there is one other possibility. There is a Cuban aircraft. It might be that some of the monitoring of communications that we had in the exile groups going, that we [illegible] might have had some contribution to make to it.

Mr. Johnston. For verifying the flight?

Mr. Halley. Or what was the message, how was it sent, what was the text of the message.

Senator Schweiker. What was your relationship with a group called the Free Cuba Committee that I believe was organ[illegible] through the Mullen Company here in Washington?

Mr. Halley. Could you give me some additional information. Was this Bethel, Paul Bethel, the Free Cuba Committee?

Senator Schweiker. Well, again I believe Mrs. Luce was involved with this Committee as well, and there were some others.

Who is Paul Bethel?

Mr. Halley. Paul Bethel was an American who had been employed by I think USIA at one time, and later came to Miami and was very active in one of these Cuban --

Senator Schweiker. Well, I'm not sure. It might have been. I don't have all the names.

Mr. Halley. Well, the Free Cuba Committee, as such, with something to do with it, doesn't strike a response.

Senator Schweiker. Well, would you, in the operation, as you recall, would you have any association with them [illegible] [illegible]?

Mr. Halley. No, I have to say no, and the reason I [illegible] some of these other names, we were constantly getting [illegible] [illegible] or opposition from [illegible] people.

Senator Schweiker. And there were all kinds of Cuban Committees.

Mr. Halley. That's right, and therefore, unless there is a name that goes with it, I have trouble dredging it out.

Senator Schweiker. All right.

I meant, did your work involve any working relationship to the Mullen Company in Washington?

Did you use them in any relationship at all?

Mr. Halley. No, my knowledge of the Mullen Company doesn't start until about 1972.

Senator Schweiker. Okay, I'll let somebody else handle that.

Now about the Fair Play for Cuba Committee? What, under your program, what role or relationship forgetting Oswald [illegible] did you have with them since they obviously had some foreign intelligence relationship?

Mr. Halley. None. In other words, we felt that that was an organization that really of interest to the FBI.

Senator Schweiker. However, you did have a counterintelligence section.

Mr. Halley. Yes, we did have a counterintelligence section, but not operating against these kinds of groups, and counterintelligence section was primarily concerned with the [illegible] kinds of things, [illegible] the infiltration of Cuban agents on those boats and other forms, like the Pan

American flight coming into the United States, and the refugees coming to identify agents on that, identify agents who might be trying to penetrate our paramilitary teams or one of our collection of operations.

We also were looking at Cuban intelligence officers who were stationed overseas, in other words, could our debriefing of knowledgeable people result in our identifying, let's say, the DGI guy in Mexico City or in Madrid? We could then mount an operation on the basis of that to recruit him, to maintain him in place as a source within the Cuban intelligence service. So it was that kind of counterintelligence approach.

You know, as the head of the Cuban Service, [illegible] at the time, you know, people would come out and say I know him, we would look at that and see whether we could use it.

Senator Schweiker. I have just a few small ones, and then I'd like to ask you for some advice off the record, would you just give us some guidance.

On the record here, how about an organization called CUSA, Conservatives, U.S.A. I believe they were an anti-Castro group, and they did own some boats in paramilitary raids.

Mr. Halley. That doesn't ring a bell.

Senator Schweiker. One of the ships or one of the boats was called the CUSA.

Does that ring any bell at all?

Mr. Halley. I don't know that they were, you know, [illegible] tied in to say the CIA.

No, that doesn't ring any bells with me.

Senator Schweiker. Then there is a Paul Helowell.

Mr. Halley. He's a --

Senator Schweiker. Florida banker. He was involved in paramilitary or some kind of operations.

Mr. Halley. Well, there were two phases. Paul Helowell was involved in the Bay of Pigs operation, in cleaning up some claims that the families of one or two of the pilots had who crashed involved in the Bay of Pigs. And I would have known that through the file.

Helowell later was in touch with us at the time when I was in the Miami station, and he provided, as I recall, he had real estate interests, banks, and he helped us create some cover companies through which we bought or leased such things as dock space at marinas for boats and items like that.

Senator Schweiker. Okay.

Do you have anything else on the record?

Mr. Johnston. Just one more thing.

How major a role did you have with Paul Helowell? How many personal contacts did you have with him?

Mr. Halley. My recollection would be that I probably only met him once or twice personally, but you know, you [illegible] have to understand this, at that time, our major cover in Miami was a commercial company. I was a vice president of that company. As a result, I traveled extensively in the business social community. At that point we had one of the larger covert payrolls in South Miami, and I was a member of a number of clubs, and people like Helowell I would meet at cocktail parties or dinners, you know, or the yacht club that I belonged to or whatever, but officially, in terms of a business sense, I only recall talking with Helowell twice, I think.

Senator Schweiker. Would he look anything like that picture?

(The Witness looks at the sketch.)

Mr. Halley. No. At that time he would have been much heavier.

Mr. Johnston. Did you ever discuss the Kennedy assassination with him?

Mr. Halley. No, I wouldn't have. I wouldn't have talked about that. My recollection of the kind of things that I would have talked about with Helowell would have been the formation of such cover company, the purchase of a boat, the rental or term lease of you know large pieces of acreage for training sites and things like that. That's about what I recall of Helowell's relationship with us at the time.

Mr. Johnston. I guess I just have a little bit of trouble, and that is with your recollection of conversation with him, but you don't recall whether you talked to McCone or Helms about a connection between the Kennedy assassination and the Cuban operation.

Mr. Halley. Well, you know, some of these things make different kinds of impact on you. I mean, Holowell was in that part of the county where we were located was an important figure. He had a bank not too far from where we were located. Many of our people did their banking with him, and so forth, and he's a name that sticks out.

Mr. Johnston. I thought that Mr. Helms and Mr. McCone would also make an impression.

Mr. Halley. Well, McCone, yes, you know, I went to three meetings with McCone in Washington and other places, and I -- I don't mean this to sound blase, but a visit of the Director to a place you recall, but you don't necessarily recall the exact timeframe of it. I've had lots of visits at stations that I've been in from Directors, I've been involved in Presidential visits and Vice Presidential visits, and you know, I can tell you when the President came to Vietnam or something and you told me [illegible] exact date, and I don't remember it.

Mr. Johnston. I guess I wasn't asking you to pin down the exact date of a meeting with Mr. Helms or Director McCone, but just whether you had a discussion with them on the relationship between the assassination of President Kennedy and the covert operations against Cuba.

Mr. Halley. I don't recall it.

Mr. Johnston. Is it you don't recall such a discussion, having such a discussion, or you have a recollection and your recollection is there were no discussions.

Mr. Halley. No, I don't recall such a discussion. That's what I've said several times. I assume that such discussions took place, but frankly, I don't recall them.

Senator Schweiker. All right, that's all we have. We appreciate your cooperation and your testimony. I do want to ask for some guidance off the record.

(Whereupon, at 4:50 o'clock p.m., the interview in the above-entitled matter was concluded.)

Tuesday, September 9, 1975

- - -

United States Senate,
Select Committee to Study Governmental
Operations with respect to Intelligence Activities,
Washington, D. C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 1:15 p.m., in Room 443, Russell Office Building, Senator Walter F. Mondale presiding.

Present: Senator Mondale (presiding).

Also present: Rhett Dawson and Frederick Baron, Professional Staff Members.

- - -

Senator Mondale. Do you swear the testimony you are about to give will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Tweedy. I do.

Mr.Baron. Mr. Tweedy, are you aware that you have the right to counsel here today?

Mr. Tweedy. I am.

Mr. Baron. And are you appearing voluntarily here today without counsel?

Mr. Tweedy. I am.

(At this point, the hearing was removed to Room 608, Carroll Arms Hotel.)

Mr. Baron. Are you also aware that all of your Constitutional rights are intact before the Committee, including your Fifth Amendment rights?

Mr. Tweedy. I am.

Mr. Baron. Mr. Tweedy, are you aware that you have the right to cease answering questions at any time and consult with an attorney?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes. I gather that was implicit in what you said in the Senator's office.

Mr. Baron. It was.

Now, that we are no longer in the Senator's presence I would like to make it clear to you that you are under no obligation to continue testifying, although the Committee would obviously appreciate it if you would.

Are you willing to do so?

Mr. Tweedy. I have no intention of not cooperating.

Mr. Baron. And you are willing to continue to testify to the truth as best you can?

Mr. Tweedy. Indeed I will.

Mr. Baron. Perhaps we should begin by putting on the record a bit of your background in Agency activities leading to the point at which you assumed the position as Chief of the African Division.

TESTIMONY OF BRONSON TWEEDY

Mr. Tweedy. I came aborad the Agency in the first of May, 1947 and after training was sent to Switzerland. I returned in 1950 and did a series of desk jobs in what was known as the Central European Division, I guess, and went through a number of different assignments at that time, until May of 1953 when I went out as Chief of Station to 15-14 Vienna, Austria. I was there until the middle of 1956 and returned very briefly to the States, went to 15-1 London as Deputy Chief of Station there. I took over as Chief of Station there in the middle of 1958 and was then replaced by Frank Wisner, in 15-1 London, early in October 1959, and I took over the African Division I should think somewhere around between the 15th and 18th of November 1959.

That brings me up to date.

Mr. Baron. And how long did you serve as Chie f of the African Division?

Mr. Tweedy. Until September of '63.

Mr. Baron. In that position did you consult frequent with people in policy-making positions at the State Department?

Mr. Tweedy. Well, as I was explaining to you as we were strolling around, the simple answer to that is yes. These consultations would take many, many different forms.

On the Congo, for example, the State Department obviously was just as involved as practically the rest of the U.S. Government and they had a Congolese task force. I would attend their meetings or a representative of mine would attend their meetings. They took place almost daily, sometimes I guess even more than once daily.

Mr. Baron. During what period of time?

Mr. Tweedy. Oh, Lord, from the time the Congo thing really hotted up, and I am talking then particularly under the Kennedy Administration, when Mennen Williams organized the task force and Wayne Fredericks was his deputy; those meetings were State's meetings, they weren't CIA meetings, they weren't meetings primarily to discuss the CIA policy, but we had to be there to maintain, to keep abreast of what the policy was.

Mr. Baron. If we could focus our attention on the period between the independence of the Congo in June of '60 and the announcement of the death of Lumumba in February of '61.

Mr. Tweedy. WAs that the month of his death?

Mr. Baron. The month the death was announced.

As you know, there is a lot of mystery surrounding his death and the probable cause of his death. AS far as the U.N. investigation was concerned it was January 17 or perhaps January 18, 1961.

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. What was the nature of your contact with the State Department during that period of time?

Mr. Tweedy. My recollection of this is far less Congo and far more general, as I was mentioning to you as we strolled, and particularly my talks with Jim Penfield, to whom Joe Satterswate was dedicated.

Joe Satterswate, who was Assistant Secretary for African Affairs, and Penfield and I were colleagues in Vienna together. He had the minister. But we did a great deal of talking together about CIA deployment in Africa. I was forming a division both at home and abroad and I had a lot of things to negotiate with him 32 [redacted] and he naturally had his views on a lot of the things we wanted to do, and we spent a great deal of time arguing these things out, making arrangements and so on and so forth.

To be frank with you, I have far less recollection about intimate policy talks on places like the Congo with that particular group than I did after 19-what, the beginning of the Kennedy Administration.

Mr. Baron. It was during the Kennedy Administration that the large scale paramilitary operations in the Congo were geared up.

Mr. Tweedy. All that happened then, absolutely.

Mr. Baron. Do you remember discussions with Livingstone Merchant in the State Department before the turn of Administrations?

Mr. Tweedy. I knew Livingstone Merchant but specific discussions with him I really do not recall, no. Later on I remember having a couple of meetings along with Mr. Rusk.

Mr. Baron. Did any of those meetings concern Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. No, Mr. Rusk, I think they exclusively concerned Portuguese Africa.

Mr. Baron. Do you remember having any meetings alone with Herter, Secretary Herter, about Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. I am not sure I have had a meeting with Mr. Herter.

Mr. Baron. Did you have any meetings with Secretary Herter or Douglas Dillon or Livingstone Merchant?

Mr. Tweedy. Never met Mr. Dillon.

Mr. Baron. About Congolese affairs?

Mr. Tweedy. Never met Mr. Dillon and I do not recall having met with Livingstone Merchant on the Congo. I may have done so but I really don't recall, I had very little professional contact with Mr. Merchant. I knew him mostly slightly socially.

Mr. Baron. When you met regularly with Mr. Satterswatc or Mr. Penfield did you discuss Lumumba with them?

Mr. Tweedy. I am sure we discussed Lumumba in the sense of which would be all the time, assessing the situation, assessing where Lumumba was heading, where the Congo was heading. I did this with, you know, almost all of the African situations, individual African country situations.

We would spend a great deal of time, their points of view, our point of view, our perspective, their perspective, but never as an action matter that I can recall.

Mr. Baron. Was the assassination of Patrice Lumumba ever contemplated or raised in those meetings?

Mr. Tweedy. Never.

Mr. Baron. Did you meet regularly in this period between Congolese independence and the announced death of Lumumba with people at the NSC level or people in the White House?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't recall so at all. For example, if President Eisenhower had an African representative the same way President Kennedy later had, then I can't recall who he was. President Kennedy had two. The first name escapes me. He later went on down to South Africa as Ambassador and one that I saw most of for a considerable period of time was Carl Kazen, recently retired head of the School of Advanced Studies in Princeton.

Mr. Baron. During the Eisenhower Administration did you have direct contact with Gordon Gray or Andrew Goodpaster with reference to Congolese affairs.

You are shaking your head and we have to put it on the record.

Mr. Tweedy. I am alsmot convinced that the answer is no. I am just thinking. I know Gordon Gray quite well. I don't recall ever having policy discussions with him at all, nor General Goodpaster. I think the answer is certainly no.

Mr. Baron. You mentioned to me earlier that you had attended only two National Security Council meetings in your memory and that those two meetings were both long after the death of Lumumba, is that correct?

Mr. Tweedy. I can only imagine that they must have been because this was well into the Kennedy Administration. I wouldn't be able to put any dates on it now.

Mr. Baron. It was during the directorship of John McCone at CIA?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, that is without question. And McBundy was at the meetings. Yes, it must have been well after the death of Lumumba, maybe even the following year.

Mr. Baron. During the latter part of the Eisenhower

Administration when events in Congo were heatingup, after Congolese independence, what was the general atmosphere in the State Department and at the CIA in relation to Lumumba, the general attitude toward Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. Well, I think you would have to start by saying what was the general assessment of the situation in the Congo. Lumumba was really sort of the last thing you came down to.

The worry in WAshington about the situation in the Congo was that here was the largest geographical expression in Africa that thretened to go up in smoke, up because the Kremlin was about to march in and take it over, not because it was about to break up tribally and do all the things that those African countries in their early years were at least vulnerable to. The only trouble with the Congo was if it happened there the side effects would have been infinitely greater than, of course, if it had happened anywhere else.

Mr. Baron. What would those side effects have been?

Mr. Tweedy. All one culd do was assess those, but it would have set a precedent, for example, the neighboring country by which great store was set by the West was Nigeria and if the same infection crossed that border one was afraid that this would go up in smoke and that in effect there was a possibility of the continent disintegrating before it really had had a chance to get under way under its own aegis.

This was the concern.

Mr. Baron. Were these political side effects only that were being taken into account or were there also fears for American business interests in the Congo that were part of the side effects?

Mr. Tweedy. Insofar as my assessments were concerned, and those of the Agency and any conversations I can recall with the State Department, American business was just not a great factor.

If you want to talk about business, the big factor, of course, was Katanga and eventually when Tschombe threatened to succeed resulting in the great involvement of both the U.N. and the U.S. in the Congo affair, the fear there was that if you put together the Congo without Katanga it was like constructing a Cadillac and purposely omitting the gas station.

Mr. Baron. That is because Kutanga is the home of most of the natural resources that are in the Congo.

Mr. Tweedy. That is the only thing that keeps that country going.

Now, I don't say there weren't a lot of economic considerations in back of that but these were political economic concerns much more than anything parochial, but is what was going to happen to U.S. business was not a factor insofar as I recall.

Mr. Baron. So the primary concern was for political stability in Africa.

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, political stability in Africa. In a quick phrase you put your foot right on that.

Mr. Dawson. During the summer of 1960 you mentioned earlier that in the time frame you did not think the Kremlin was ready to march in there, as that was a fear with you but --

Mr. Tweedy. I don't mean to say this was nothing that anybody was worred about but it was not the primary concern.

Mr. Dawson. But there was significant Soviet interest in infiltrating and taking advantage of the situation in the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. I think it would be much more accurate to say it was our assumption, we were not privy to Soviet intentions with respect to Africa, which I suspect in those days like a great many other things about African culture round the globe were ill informed at that point, and undoubtedly seeking their own polcies in Africa just the way this country was. It was obviously a worry.

Mr. Baron. Was it also our assumption if the Soviets moved into the Congo they would move on the side of Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. Oh, yes, I think there would have been little doubt in our minds that that would have been the case.

Mr. Baron. And is it also true that the general perception at the Agency and in the State Department was that Lumumba posed the threat in the Congo beyond the mere threat of political instability because of his closeness to the Soviets or his willingness to accept aid from the Soviets?

Mr. Tweedy. It made the cheese more binding but I don't think we had any information indicating there was any close umbilicus between the Soviets and Lumumba but it was potentially there.

Mr. Baron. And that potential --

Mr. Tweedy. This increased one's nervousness about the situation.

Mr. Baron. In your capacity as Chief of the African Division to whom did you report and from whom did you receive orders?

Mr. Tweedy. Well, the normal chain of command was through DDD, Dick Bissell and --

Mr. Baron. Would you meet regularly with Richard Bissell during this period of time?

Mr. Tweedy. Regularly would be a big word. Not necessarily that often. We might talk on the phone. To say that I saw him all the time, how often I don't know. It would go in fits and starts, undoubtedly but --

Mr. Baron. In formulating actions to be taken in the Congo, would you consult with Bissell before you undertook any major operation.

Mr. Tweedy. Well, depending on what you mean by major operation. Major operation per se, if you are not talking about just intelligence operations, call for instructions and formalization either inside the Agency or outside.

Mr. Baron. So any major covert action would be formulated in consultation not only with Bissell but with the DCI, Allen Dulles at that time, and probably higher levels than that.

Mr. Tweedy. I suppose the DCI, if Bissell felt that was necessary, and, of course, he used to talk to the DCI without my being present, and undoubtedly certain instructions I would receive from time to time undoubtedly stem from conversations that Bissell would have had with the DCI and funnelled down to me.

I didn't always know who talked to whom before I received instructions.

Mr. Baron. So if you received an instruction from Richard Bissell as DDP you would proceed to implement that instruction on the assumption it was fully authorized above the level of DDP?

Mr. Tweedy. I think I would proceed with it on the basis that he was authorized to give me instructions and it was up to him to bloody well know what he was empowered to tell me to do.

I couldn't run his affairs for him to that extent, but by and large I reckon the Agency worked and that was the way it was set up to work and that is the way it worked, but to say every time Bissell talked to me he always talked to Allen Dulles first I would think is nonsense.

Mr. Baron. You didn't consider it your duty to question Bissell about the source of authority for some covert action he was asking you to undertake?

Mr. Tweedy. I would have never hesitated to do if I felt that it was necessary to do so.

I can't recall having done so. He and I used to have disagreements philosophically on operations. We were very good friends and I never had any hesitation about telling him when I thought he didn't make any sense but --

Mr. Dawson. Could you describe that philosophical difference, or is it describable?

Mr. Tweedy. Well it varied a lot. I think Dick was by and large inclined to feel that almost anything was possible, you know, in the clandestine service, if they put their minds to it, and my view was this wasn't the case.

Mr. Dawson. Thank you.

Mr. Baron. Did you ever discuss the question of assassinating Lumumba with Richard Bissell?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, this was the way the whole thing came up in the first instance. I can't remember how it came up except undoubtedly we had a conversation.

Mr. Baron. Do you recall when it came up?

Mr. Tweedy. No, I don't. It obviously must have come up, I assume, what, the fall of 1960. But I have no way of putting a date to it.

Mr. Baron. And what was said during that discussion or perhaps I should backtrack first and ask whether this was one discussion or a series of discussions?

Mr. Tweedy. Oh, we must have discussed it more than once. I think it came up in the sense that Dick would have said we probably better be thinking about whether it might ever be necessary or desirable to get rid of Lumumba, in which case we presumably should be in position to assess whether we could do it or not successfully.

Mr. Baron. Do it, meaning carry off an assassination?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, but it was never discussed with him in any other sense but a planning exercise, but a planning exercise which, in other words, never were we instructed to do anything of this kind. We were instructed to ask whether such a thing would be feasible and to have the Chief of Station be thinking along those lines as well.

Mr. Baron. So, in effect you were asked to move ahead at least as far as developing the capability to carry of an assassination if an order should be given?

Mr. Tweedy. Well, or to examine the potential for doing that.

Mr. Dawson. I know that you have indicated you won't be able to put a precise date to this conversation with Bissell or conversations with Bissell, but maybe we can narrow it down a little bit.

Would you assume that it would be after the proclamation of the Congolese independence on June 30, 1960?

Mr. Tweedy. Oh, yes.

Mr. Dawson. Would you assume it would be before Lumumba's being put into U.N. protective custody on September15, 1960?

Mr. Tweedy. I think it must have been, yes. I didn't realize he had gone into custody that early.

Mr. Baron. So then it would be sometime during the summer or early fall of '60?

Mr. Tweedy. What happened to Lumumba after that?

Mr. Baron. He was in protective custody at the United Nations force from mid-September until late November and it was in late November that he left to go traveling towards Stanleyville and he was captured by Mobutu's troops at that point in very early December and from early December until mid-January he was in the custody of the Congolese in prison and then it was in mid-January 1961 that he was flown from a prison in Tysville to Katanga where his death was announced shortly thereafter.

Mr. Tweedy. That I recall. I have got to assume it was sometime after September 15th. I don't know.

Mr. Baron. When you say "after" --

Mr. Tweedy. After you put September 15 the day he came under. The only thing is I have no recollection that it would have happened as early as, say, early August or early September.

Mr. Baron. It was in August or early September that Lumumba was Premier of the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. And there was obviously a struggle for power between Lumumba and Kasavubu going on.

Mr. Dawson. I guess the crucial question.

Mr. Tweedy. You have really got me at this point.

Mr. Dawson. It would be whether or not you would have considered the plan had he been in U.N. protective custody. If you assume that would be the case, then I don't think any more precision in the date would necessarily be productive.

Mr. Treedy. My whole recollection of the thing would be that only purpose of the exercise would have been to have a plan when he was in nobody's custody.

Mr. Baron. That would have been before --

Mr. Tweedy. That is the only thing that makes sense to me, September, because --

Mr. Baron. Well, I will go on.

In a moment I will show you some cable traffic that went back and forth between headquarters and the Congo after he was in U.N. custody to see if that refreshes your recollection about the general attitude with regard to Lumumba at that time.

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. But, you are saying now, that it would only make sense to you that --

Mr. Tweedy. In retrospect nothing makes sense to me but --

Mr. Baron. -- that this initial consideration of the feasibility of the assassination of Lumumba between Bissell and yourself?

Mr. Tweedy. I should have thought that would have been during the period when he was in effect in power. I should have thought, but the record may prove me wrong.

Mr. Baron. Did you have any discussion with Bissell where he indicated that his own consideration of the assassination of Lumumba had moved beyond the realm of possibility to an actual plan that he was prepared to carry out or taking steps to carry out.

Mr. Tweedy. I cannot recall a conversation with Bissell where in effect he said, let's move from A to B or C to D or something like this. I do not recall that. My recollection of the whole interval when this was under consideration was that it was a planning interval and at no point can I recall that I even felt it was imminent that somebody would say go, (a) we never came up with a plan that was go-able. or anything really very close to it. It was always my assumption that at the time anything like this should occur there would have been some kind of real focus on the problem at probably a very considerable policy level within the Agency at which somebody would have said something more about it and it never occurred to me I would get a call or Bissell would ask me to come down to his office and say go to it.

Nor were we ever in position where he said that I would merely implement plan so-and-so. We never got that far.

Mr. Baron. You didn't have any action plans for assassination of Lumumba that you had prepared or were aware of?

Mr. Tweedy. No. Planning, yes, but nothing that ever got anywhere.

Mr. Baron. What kind of planning was done?

Mr. Tweedy. It was mostly the kind of thing where one asked the Chief of Station to keep in mind what sort of access one might ever have had to Lumumba for whatever purpose. It was this kind of thing, as best I recollect.

Mr. Baron. Did you send cables raising the question of gaining access to Lumumba for the purpose of assassinating him?

Mr. Tweedy. I suspect that was the first cable that ever went out. In other words, the first cable that ever went out to Larry Hedgman. He must have realized, he would have been perfectly clear on his end, the way one's minds were running even though it was purely a contingency.

Mr. Baron. I am sorry. I don't think I understood that.

You say the first cable that went out.

Mr. Tweedy. That was the first way that Hedgman was ever advised that there was any thinking of that kind in Washington, was via our cable. I am sure he wasn't back in the States over anything of this kind.

Mr. Baron. Today you distinctly remember a cable sent?

Mr. Tweedy. I think I remember that much more distinctly than anything I remember in the last few minutes that it was a cable which asked him to be thinking of that.

Mr. Baron. That was pursuant to your conversation with Mr. Bissell?

Mr. Tweedy. That was.

Mr. Baron. Did you send that cable or Mr. Bissell send that cable.

Mr. Tweedy. It probably would have been a cable I wouldhave written and probably released by him.

Mr. Baron. Do you know what was in that cable?

Mr. Tweedy. God knows, I don't.

Mr. Baron. Or the effect of the language in the cable?

Mr. Tweedy. The effect of the language in the cable would be to get Hedgman to be thinking along these lines.

Mr. Dawson. Would you describe the purpose?

Mr. Tweedy. It would have been the eventuality that we might wish to get rid of Mr. Lumumba personally.

Mr. Dawson. Is that language you think might have been used or that is how you think it might have been done?

Mr. Tweedy. I couldn't even start to reproduce the cable.

Mr. Baron. Did you send a number of such cables to the Chief of Station?

Mr. Tweedy. I imagine there were a few over a period of time. It was not an intensive correspondence as I remember it.

Mr. Baron. It wouldn't be thenormal practice to have an intensive correspondence on such a sensitive subject, would it?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't know. It is the only time I ever had one but I have had very sensitive subjects,operationally sensitive subjects that I have dealt with in extensive cables over a very long period of time, but nothing of this nature whatsoever.

Mr. Baron. Were these cables from headquarters to the Chief of Station in Leopoldville sent in a specially restricted channel?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, all sensitive cables are sent in various types of restricted channels I am sure you aware.

Mr. Baron. This channel even more tightly held and closely restricted than the normal cable traffic that would flow to the Chief of Station?

Mr. Tweedy. That would be a very fair statement, yes.

Mr. Baron. Do you know whether the cable included instructions to destroy it after reading it?

Mr. Tweedy. That wouldn't have been normal.

Mr. Baron. Would you assume that on a subject like this such an instruction would have been given?

Mr. Tweedy. It would really be up to the Chief of Station, I think. It would be up to the Chief of Station what was in the cable and the degree to which he felt he needed to maintain a record for quick reference purposes in the future.

But, he was perfectly capable of keeping a file which would be accessable only to him and the station and if he was sure of his own security within the station I don't think this would have been a problem for him,but to answer your question I don't know what Hedgman himself did.

Mr. Baron. What kind of response did you receive from Hedgman or from the Chief of Station in Leopoldville?

Mr. Tweedy. It was a serious answer. I can't do better than that. It was a serious answer. It wasn't argumentative, I guess it started to discuss, not the pros and cons of policy, at least I don't recall it did, but what it was that he might be able to do. It was a disciplined reply to an instruction from headquarters.

Mr. Baron. Did he mention any specific means that he had of gaining access to Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't recall now. I don't recall. I think he said it was certainly not beyond the question that means could either be developed or might arise but I certainly do not recall that he came up with any very specific ideas in the first instance. On that I am afraid I am terribly hedgy.

Mr. Baron. At the time that you were requesting the Chief of Station to report back on means of gaining access to Lumumba for the purpose of eliminating him, was this access made any more explicit in terms of the kind of personal access that would be needed?

Mr. Tweedy. I am sure that must have been covered at some point, i.e., in perhaps a series of types of accesses.

Mr. Baron. Would this be access to shoot him or would this be access to his personal food or drink or toiletries?

Mr. Tweedy. I suppose all those types of things might have been considered.

Mr. Baron. But this was not access in the sense of -- finding a way to sneak inside the U.N. guard to simply snatch Lumumba from custody, this was clearly access to assassinate him, is that correct?

Mr. Tweedy. That would certainly be my recollection. Kidnapping was never a factor that I recall at all or even considered, at least I don't remember it.

Mr. Baron. In your discussions with Richard Bissell about the prospect of assassinating Lumumba, did he mention to you that he had had similar discussions with Justin O'Donnell?

Mr. Tweedy. I was reminded of Justin O'Donnell's role in all this. As you may recall, when I talked to you and Mr. Wides, and until you reminded me I had forgotten that Justin O'Donnell played any role whatsoever and now that it has been brought to my recollection I recall it. I recall it almost in detail.

I remember being told that he had expressed reservations or disagreement or refusal to participate to Bissell and I think my response to you was if he said that I would believe him but I didn't recall it.

Mr. Baron. Did Richard Bissell ever indicate to you that he had asked Justin O'Donnell to go to the Congo to assassinate Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. Well, he must have indeed have told me that he was going to ask O'Donnell to go to the Congo to examine the thing on the ground, but I don't recall him ever saying, I am going to send O'Donnell to the Congo to knock off Lumumba, not in those words.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

Mr. Baron. When you say examine the thing on the ground you mean he would send O'Donnell to the Congo to take a first-hand look at the means?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, conceivably I suppose this all might have resulted in a climax there but at least my recollection certainly was never that he told me that I am sending O'Donnell to the Congo to knock off Lumumba in those words but that he, I am sure the philosophy was that if anything was done you would want to keep it as separate from the station as possible and thus a man from the outside. It was Bissell's idea that O'Connell might be the man.

Mr. Baron. The man from outside?

Mr. Tweedy. Outside the station.

Mr. Baron. The CIA station in the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. Right.

Mr. Baron. That such a man would be necessary to carry out an assassination operation if one were to be mounted?

Mr. Tweedy. That if one was mounted it would obviously be desirable to do it under auspices which would protect the security of the station or involvement of the station.

That I am sure was the philosophy behind it.

Mr. Baron. But it is your recollection that O'Donnell, was sent to the Congo to assess the possibility for assassinating Lumumba rather than to mount some sort of kidnapping plan to draw Lumumba out from the U.N. guard and put him in the hands of Congolese authorities?

Mr. Tweedy. That is certainly my recollection but I would not want to put too high a value on it. I just don't recall kidnapping as a factor is all.

Mr. Baron. Did Richard Bussell ever mention to you that lethal biological agents had been developed in the CIA laboratories for possible use in the Congo to assassinate Lumumba? Or they were available for such use?

Mr. Tweedy. I think that it would be closer that TSD probably had the capability or had the agent or whatever it was. When I say agent I mean chemical agent. I suspect I heard that, yes.

Mr. Baron. Would this have been under Sidney Gottlieb's auspices or direction in TSD?

Mr. Tweedy. If he was Chief of TSD at the time it would have been. I don't recall. Was he? I think he was.

Mr. Baron. Did Richard Bissell ever indicate to you directly that Sidney Gottlieb was involved in developing poisons that might be used for assassination?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't recall that at all.

Mr. Baron. In your discussions with Bissell, about the feasibility of an assassination operation, did poisons come up as one means that was being considered and which the Chief of Station should explore?

Mr. Tweedy. I am sure it must have. After all, there are not many ways of doing it. Shoot a man, poison him, of course you could, I suppose, stab him or something like that. But basically you are talking about a contingency plan which I assume has the best possibility of protecting the involvement of the U.S. Government and if you want to do it in a manner which would be as distant, if that is the right word, as possible, I think poison would then stand high on the list of possibilities.

Mr. Baron. Did the Chief of Station ever make a response to you via cable which indicated that he was exploring means of gaining access to Lumumba for the possible use of poisoning -- purpose of poisoning him.

Mr. Tweedy. I am sure he must have done that. I don't recall specifically, but that effect is what he was charged to do in the first instance, examine the possibilities.

I would be very surprised if Hedgman didn't come back and in effect comment on this but the nature of his comments I really don't recall.

Mr. Dawson. When you and Bissell had your conversations, whatever time it was, concerning this matter, did he mention to you that he had approval or direction from highest authority to undertake to assassinate Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't recall that, no. I guess I was under the impression when he talked to me that -- I don't know whether this is fair or not -- I honestly don't know what my impression was at the time whether this was something that Bissell had in effect sucked out of his own thumb as a contingency plan which he then raised with higher authority, and because it was contingency planning I don't think at that stage I was particularly concerned. But to answer the question I just don't know.

Mr. Dawson. You stated earlier you knew Gordon Gray very well.

Mr. Tweedy. I didn't say that. I have known Gordon Gray far better since than I did then. I knew Gordon Gray very slightly indeed then, and I am not sure I ever had a -- while he was in office -- that I ever had a personal conversation with him. I have seen a lot of him since he was on the President's Board.

Mr. Dawson. That answers my question.

Mr. Baron. Richard Bissell never made a representation to you one way or the other as to whether he had approval from any authority higher than DDP for this consideration of assassinating Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. No, I do not recall so.

Mr. Baron. Did Richard Bissell ever indicate to you that he was directly in contact with the Chief of Station in Leopoldville or that he had means of dealing directly with the Chief of Station in Leopoldville without going through you?

Mr. Tweedy. He always said that any DDP, of course, that has the capability, and right, it was never my impression that he was using it and going around me, no. But that he did, but he might have done it, I wouldn't gainsay it, he certainly had the right and capability to go into it.

Mr. Dawson. Can we go into how the right was able to be exercised?

Mr. Tweedy. All he had to do was send a cable. He could establish his own channel to Leopoldville with his own set of slugs which would exclude the Chief of African Division. He has the right to do that.

Mr. Baron. It would not be improper for a DDP to send a cable or messenger to the Chief of Station in another country?

Mr. Tweedy. I wouldn't comment on the appropriateness. He obviously had the authority. My relationships with Bissell were such that I do not believe it.

I never had the impression that he ever had any intention or desire to go around me on matters of this kind.

Mr. Dawson. Who else other than the DDP or DCI would have such authority?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't know.

Mr. Baron. Would the President?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, but he would probably have to come to the Agency to find out how to do it. I imagine the President could send a personal representative, I am damn sure he would have no way of knowing how to send a cable out there. He would make a muck of it if he did.

Mr. Baron. Did you learn at any point that lethal biological substances were actually in the custody of the Chief of Station in Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. This was mentioned when I talked to you and Mr. Wides and my answer was that I don't recall it, but that it was perfectly possible for them to be sent there.

Mr. Baron. How would they have been sent?

Mr. Tweedy. They could have been sent one or two ways, they would have been sent through the pouch with the whole thing wrapped in and addressed in such manner that it would be opened only by the Chief of Station or somebody coming out by hand of officer or hand of somebody either way it could be done.

Mr. Baron. Do you have any knowledge of a messenger from CIA headquarters having to go to the Congo to provide the Chief of Station in the Congo with instructions to carry out the assassination of Lumumba, if possible, and also provide him with the tools to carry out such an assassination, namely, poisons and medical equipment for administering them?

Mr. Tweedy. No, I do not.

Mr. Baron. Let me represent to you that we have testimony from the Chief of Station in the Congo at that point that he had received a cable from headquarters saying that a messenger would arrive in the Congo and would be someone that he would recognize and this messenger would give him instructions that he was to carry out.

Did you ever know of such a cable being sent to the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. I should be very surprised if I didn't, but I certainly have no recollection of it whatsoever.

Mr. Baron. And the Chief of Station further testified that shortly after receiving such a cable he received a visit from [redacted] who arrived in Leopoldville and made himself known to the Chief of Station, the Chief of Station said that he immediately recognized [redacted] as an officer of the Agency, and as the messenger that this cable referred to.

Subsequently, the Chief of Station said he had meetings with [redacted] in his apartment in Leopoldville where [redacted] gave him instructions that he said came from the headquarters to carry out the assassination of Lumumba and [redacted] also, according to the Chief of Station, gave him lethal biological substances and medical equipment with which to administer them.

Were you aware of that chain of events?

Mr. Tweedy. That sounds far more definitive than anything I have any recollection of at all.

Scheider

If I understand what you said was, Gottlieb would have left instructions with the Chief of Station which would have empowered the Chief of Station at the conclusion of their conversations, to go out and assassinate Lumumba, without any further recourse or reference to headquarters?

Mr. Baron. That is --

Mr. Tweedy. If that is the case I don't believe it.

Mr. Baron. That is the essence of the testimony that the Chief of Station although he did say that he was not anxious to carry out an assassination mission. He didn't think it was practical or wise and he probably would have gone back to headquarters to consult with them if he thought he was in a position to move immediately to carry out the assassination plan, but it was his opinion that the policy decision had been made and that he had authority to move ahead although he doubted --

Mr. Tweedy. My recollection doesn't go anywhere near that far.

Mr. Dawson. He checked that authority by immediately cabling back to headquarters saying, this guy has made himself available to me as well as he has delivered something and has told me that he had the approval of the highest authority in the land to order me to do what he so ordered, which got another cable back through the specially slugged cable saying yes, what he told you is correct.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

Mr. Tweedy. I don't recall that, which surprises me, because once again I would be very surprised, I wouldn't have been privy to those.

Mr. Baron. If a request such as the plan Mr. Dawson outlined had been sent from the Congo to headquarters and it were in more narrow cryptic terms, for instance, if it had said simply I have seen your messenger and received instructions and request confirmation that I am to carry them out, would that refresh your recollection as to whether you had seen such a cable?

Mr. Tweedy. I can't be at all sure it will refresh my recollection but if you and Hedgman say that such a cable was sent, I am not going to gainsay it.

Mr. Baron. Would that be the manner in which confirmation for such a sensitive operation would be requested?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't know because I never saw one before or since but it sounds highly reasonable to me. This is the way, this would be the way I should have thought any two sensible people would confer on sensitive matters when each knew that the other knew exactly what he was talking about and, of course, you don't have to use unnecessary words but beyond the likelihood of this I can't say that is what

Mr. Dawson. This leaves us with one or two alternatives, either the Chief of Station who has appeared and testified although not necessarily reluctantly, but certainly reluctantly as to substance of his testimony, is not telling us the truth, or he is telling us the truth and you were not privy to what was going on.

Mr. Tweedy. Or I literally don't recall it. This is my problem. I will tell you quite frankly with these things --

Mr. Dawson. It is 15 years ago.

Mr. Tweedy. I really am having trouble with this. I had to be reminded of so many things about the things that I recall the most vividly about all my African experiences were basically the things I was basically concerned with all the time which was putting this division together and the rest of it.

When it comes to operational detail I start getting fuzzy and you would have thought with something like thinking about Mr. Lumumba in these terms, that I would have gone to bed and got up thinking about Lumumba, I can assure you this wasn't the case.

I spent days in a row not even giving Lumumba one single bloody thought. This is my problem.

Mr. Dawson. Let's try to jog your memory on this.

Do you recall any time during that period of any discussions of the use of Dr. Gottlieb whatsoever as a courier?

Mr. Tweedy. No.

Mr. Dawson. All right.

Mr. Tweedy. But if he went as a courier, I will bet I knew it, but I don't recall it.

Mr. Baron. Having heard this story, would it be your assumption it is more likely to be true than not?

Mr. Tweedy. Well, I put it purely this way.

Mr. Baron. I am asking you for your expert opinion here as someone experienced.

Mr. Tweedy. Expert opinion.

Mr. Dawson. You had been the person responsible for promoting this Chief of Station or at least appointing him Chief of Station, I assume?

Mr. Tweedy. That in actual fact isn't true. His appointment was already in the works when I came aboard and I had met Hedgman in London on his previous assignment which, if I remember correctly, was in Brussels and he came to London to discuss an operational matter with me which had nothing whatsoever to do with that and we had a very good discussion. It was only, I think, when I got back to headquarters as it were, took up the reins after the division that I learned that he had been appointed Chief of Station in the Congo, a decision with which I took absolutely no exception whatsoever, but as a number of assignments may be made before I came they had to be they couldn't wait for me to get the word.

Mr. Dawson. Have you ever had any occasion to doubt his veracity or integrity?

Mr. Tweedy. I have not.

I think when I say yes to your basic question, it would be that I would trust his memory and I certainly trust his integrity.

Mr. Baron. We don't question it.

Mr. Tweedy. All of this happened pretty much the way you gave it to me.

Mr. Baron. That would be your --

Mr. Tweedy. The aspect of it I find very difficult to believe it that at any time headquarters said on receipt of these instructions, go ahead and do it. This I find very difficult to -- I do not recall and I find difficult to believe and I believe implicitly the reaction he gave you which was, reaction, that if he found it not feasible he sure as hell would have referred again to headquarters before he did it.

Mr. Baron. Why did you find it difficult to believe such an instruction would have been given?

Mr. Tweedy. That way I would have said in such a matter of this kind, headquarters would have wanted to have a last word up to the last minute.

[illegible]

Not one of these things that Gottlieb runs off to the Congo and by the time he has found Hedgman, given his instructions and all of which could have been four or five or six days later and Hedgman in turn had found a way to do it even then set about his leisure to do it or without further reference to headquarters that is not the way my organization has ever run operations.

Mr. Baron. Was it likely at all that Schneider Dr. Gottlieb would have gone off on his own with these poisons to the Congo to deliver them to the Chief of Station?

Mr. Tweedy. I should have said quite impossible.

Mr. Baron. Without an instruction from the DDP at least?

Mr. Tweedy. That is quite impossible.

Mr. Baron. Would Schneider Dr. Gottlieb have proceeded to the Congo in the way the organization normally worked if the DCI had tasked him directly with such a mission?

Mr. Tweedy. I am afraid I don't quite understand.

Mr. Baron. If the DCI had given Schneider Dr. Gottlieb an instruction to go to the Congo and deliver poisons to the Chief of Station would he have done it without consulting with the DDP?

Mr. Tweedy. I suppose so.

But I don't believe it. I don't believe it ever happened.

To answer your question, I suppose if anybody got a personal private instruction from the DCI, and was instructed to proceed without reference to anybody else he would presumably go ahead and do so.

Mr. Baron. But, because the feasibility of this assassination of Lumumba had been discussed, this was not such a tightly held subject that the DDP would have been circumvented?

Mr. Tweedy. DDP as far as I was concerned was the person with whom the division first discussed the matter entirely. I don't recall ever having discussed it with Allen Dulles. I am sure when I say I am sure I assume Bissell discussed it with Allen Dulles but, this was never a matter which was between the DCI's office and the Leopoldville station insofar as I was aware, and to this day I don't believe it ever was.

Mr. Baron. Just to clarify something we talked about earlier when I think we were jumbling two questions together, it is your expert opinion, expert in the sense of your knowledge of the Agency, and your opinion as a participant at that time that the testimony, the basic testimony we have received about poisons being delivered to the Congo by Schneider Dr. Gottlieb with instructions to use them in the assassination of Lumumba, if possible, would be true testimony?

Mr. Tweedy. Only way I can answer that question, Mr. Baron, is to say I see not the slightest reason and do not believe that you would have been lied to on this point.

But, there is nothing in my experience with the Agency which would really bear on that point whatsoever.

Mr. Baron. Did you travel to the Congo shortly before the independence of the Congo was declared?

Mr. Tweedy. That was my first visit to the Congo as I recall, it was two weeks before independence. I made a long trip through Sub-Saharan Africa which culminated in a drive from Kampala to Sambura and I flew from Sambura, I guess, to Albertville and from Albertville to Leopoldville and that is thefirst time I ever saw Leopoldville.

Mr. Dawson. Do you know whether Mr. Hedgman was there at that time?

Mr. Tweedy. Mr. Hedgman I am almost sure was not. His predecessor was there. He had many children, I can't remember his name.

Mr. Baron. And you left the Congo before independence was declared.

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, I was only there for, I suppose I was there for four or five days and I thought I was going to end my whole tour there and whole trip there but eventually I had to go up to the Ivory Coast to settle an unexpected problem.

Mr. Baron. For the record would you agree with me that independence was declared about June 30, 1960?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. Did you make another trip during which you visited the Congo at some point before the death of Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, well, it is this one that I regurgitated finally which must have been as near as the early part of December and which had started with a visit to Rome in the latter part of November, followed by a trip to Nairobi followed by a brief visit to South Africa, then I think Congo, then briefly Brazzaville and home via Europe.

Mr. Baron. And this meeting in November '60 in Rome was a meeting of Aftican --

Mr. Tweedy. South - Northern African Station Chiefs. [redacted] and these would have been chiefs of stations of [redacted]

Mr. Baron. And the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. No.

Mr. Baron. So the Congo Chief of Station would not normally have been --

Mr. Tweedy. If he came up he must have come up to see Bissell.

Mr. Baron. Richard Bissell was traveling with you on this --

Mr. Tweedy. No.

Mr. Baron. -- tour to Rome and Nairobi?

Mr. Tweedy. He called the meetings. The whole purpose of the exercise was that he wanted to meet a large number of our new Chiefs of Stations in Africa and rather than make a trip around Africa, which he hardly had time, he used a device which we often used, which is to hold regional meetings at a central point to which these people could have ready access and, therefore, it was easy for people on the north Mediterranean littoral or South Mediterranean littoral to proceed to Rome, and the same way it was easy for East African Station Chiefs to proceed to Nairobi, and he had the meetings there, each one two or three days, I suppose.

Mr. Baron. Did the Chief of Station in the Congo attend the meeting in Rome?

Mr. Tweedy. I am sure he would not. In other words, if he saw Bissell he would have merely come to Rome and have seen him, but he would have had no reason whatsoever, in fact it would have been ridiculous for Bissell to invite a man who didn't belong in the North African meetings and merely raised the question whether Hedgman was there.

Mr. Baron. What region in the CIA organization chart would the Chief of Station in the Congo belong to?

Mr. Tweedy. We change around there. We had in those days, we had the North African branch, we had the East African branch, we had a Southern African branch, which included South Africa, Rhodesia, probably Portuguese Africa, maybe the Congo in those days. Later on the Congo was sort of Sui Generis but in that early time I suspect it fell down in Southern Africa but I am not absolutely sure. It might have fallen just in French-speaking West Africa.

We always had a French West Africa, an English-speaking West Africa.

Mr. Baron. We have received testimony from the Chief of Station in the Congo at that point that he did come to Rome to meet with Richard Bissell and he belives that he also met with yourself and Mr. Karamessines at Mr. Karamessines' house.

Mr. Tweedy. I doubt if he saw Mr. Karamessines. It would only be because Mr. Karamessines was host as Chief of Station in Rome. But I am sure he was not discussing any policy problems with Mr. Karamessines who had absolutely no jurisdiction over them in those days whatsoever.

Mr. Baron. That was his testimony, but it was incidental, but if, as he has testified, that he met with Mr. Bissell and yourself, you wouldn't dispute that testimony?

Mr. Tweedy. Absolutely not.

Mr. Baron. And that would be due to the intensity of activity in the Congo at this point and the intensity of concern over that activity?

Mr. Tweedy. Absolutely. It was obviously becoming more and more of a commitment of both the U.S. Government and thus the agency. I think leaving Lumumba entirely aside this was the main reason that I am sure I went to the Congo at that point was the fact that it obviously was going to become a major personnel drain, if you like, on the Division and a major commitment both at headquarters and in the field, thus it was important I sort of look the thing over.

Mr. Baron. Having refreshed your recollection about this meeting between the Chief of Station and Mr. Bissell and yourself in Rome, do you recall what was discussed when you were together?

Mr. Tweedy. I can only assume that some of the things that we discussed by cable traffic were discussed.

The other thing I am sure must have been discussed was what I would call the general assessment of the Congolese situation and what the station might be required to do, thus the sort of support headquarters was going to have to give the Station.

Mr. Baron. Was there any discussion of the assassination of Lumumba or the prospect of --

Mr. Tweedy. I would be immensely surprised if it wasn't discussed but I don't recall in what context it was discussed. In fact, I don't believe it wasn't discussed. It was after all on the agenda, as it were, at least I assume it was, at that point.

Mr. Baron. The prospect of assassinating Lumumba continued to be on the agenda of the Agency until the point that Lumumba was actually dead?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't recall. You probably are much more knowledgeable on that than I am. I don't recall when in effect we no longer considered it or it no longer was a factor. I just don't remember.

Mr. Baron. But, just now you were assuming that that would have the case?

Mr. Tweedy. If it was still on, it was still on the agenda, inevitably we must have discussed it. If it was off the agenda then no, but I honestly don't remember.

Mr. Baron. Let me show you now some cable traffic between the agency and Leopoldville which consists of a series of cables that begins shortly before Lumumba was placed into U.N. custody, then continues after he was placed in U.N. custody.

In an attempt to refresh your recollection about the attitude at the Agency toward Lumumba after he was in U.N. custody --

Mr. Tweedy. Okay.

Mr. Baron. -- the first cable which we will mark Tweedy Exhibit 1 is dated August 26, 1960, from Leopoldville to the Director.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 1 for identification.)

Mr. Tweedy. That is the way all cables were addressed. I see he sent one specifically to DCI.

Mr. Baron. Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Baron. Onthe record.

Let's turn back now.

I believe while we were off the record and examining this cable closely you corrected me, Mr. Tweedy, on the fact that this cable was not sent from Leopoldville to the Director but rather it was sent from headquarters to Leopoldville; is that correct?

Mr. Tweedy. Correct.

Mr. Baron. And it appears to you from the designation "Allen W. Dulles", at the top of the telegram, that this was a personal message signed off by the DCI himself to the Chief of Station.

Mr. Tweedy. Correct. As I said, he might not have drafted it but it certainly would have been his sign off.

Mr. Baron. And let me direct your attention to the portion of the cable that says in high quarters here it is the clear-cut conclusion that if LLL continues to hold high office the inevitable result will at best be chaos and at worst pave the way to a Communist takeover of the Congo with disastrous consequences for the prestige of the U.N. and for the interests of the Free World generally.

Consequently we conclude that his removal must be an urgent and prime objective and that under existing conditi this should be a high priority of our covert action.

Now, do you believe that LLL refers to Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. I do.

Mr. Baron. And why would three L's have been used in the cable?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't know.

Mr. Baron. Would that be a standard way of making sure that at least one of the L's was clear in transmission?

Mr. Tweedy. I honestly don't know.

Now, that isn't the normal way to do it at all. I honestly don't know how. His name was Patrice.

Mr. Baron. But it is nonetheless your opinion tha LLL does refer to Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. I do indeed.

Mr. Baron. Does this accord with your general sense of the policy toward Lumumba at that time at the Agency and State Department?

Mr. Tweedy. It accords much more with my recollect of our attitude toward the potentially disastrous situati the Congo than it does on he personally, but he obviousl was always in the background.

Mr. Baron. Where the cable says we conclude that his removal must be an urgent and prime objective and that under existing conditions this should be a high priority of out covert action, close quotes, -- is that consistent with the policy towards Lumumba as you recall it?

In other words,that Lumumba's removal was a prime objective of the covert actions of the Agency.

Mr. Tweedy. We would have given our eye teeth to have Lumumba not the head of the Congolese state, certainly I would agree with that.

Mr. Baron. As Exhibit 2, let's turn to a cable dated September 16, 1960.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 2 for identification.)

Mr. Baron. This contains references to the fact that "the station ws flooded with reports re outcome Mobutu coup".

And the cable goes on to discuss the fact that U.N. troops had interferred with Congolese troops and prevented them from arresting Lumumba.

Now, this cable was sent to the CIA headquarters from Leopoldville one day after Lumumba sought protective custody from the United Nations and two days after the Mobutu coup where Mobutu took over the government.

In the cable as it has been sanitized by the Agency it now reads:

"Station advised two moderate Congolese politician try work with key Congolese contact in effort eliminate Lumumba. Fear U.N. protection will give Lumumba opportunity to organize counterattack. Only solution is remove him from scene soonest".

WAs that the attitude of the Agency at this point, as far as you understood it, that the fact that Lumumba was in U.N. protective custody did not eliminate him as a threat in the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't really recall but I think the chances are that we feared that U.N. protective custody might very well result in his early release or his ability sti to control matters. I should think that is very probable.

Mr. Baron. And that is the reason why there would be this fear of counterattack organized by Lumumba while he was protected by the U.N. --

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, that is probably true.

Mr. Baron. As Exhibit 3 let's turn to a cable dated September 20, 1960, which is sent -- off the record.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit 3 for identification.)

(Discussion off the record.)

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Baron. Back on the record.

Although the top of this cable does not indicate where the cable was sent to and from, because we don't have the cover sheet for the cable, you have indicated to me by looking at the designations that this cable must have been sent from Leopoldville to headquarters, is that correct, Mr. Tweedy?

Mr. Tweedy. That is correct.

Mr. Baron. Let me direct your attention to paragraph 7 which says:

"Station checking recurring reports of Kasavubu Lumumba reconcilation. Kasavubu denies Bolikango failed deny possibility of Lumumba entering new government, possibly as vice Premier. Believe some substance to rumor but will do best prevent if Lumumba allowed even minor role he most apt come out on top".

Does that indicate to you that the Chief of Station in the Congo at this point continued to be extremely concerned that Lumumba should not be allowed even a minor role in the government of the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. That is what it says.

Mr. Baron. Next, as Exhibit 4, we have a cable dated January 19, 1961.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 4 for identification.)

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Mr. Baron. This was sent from the Congo to --

Mr. Tweedy. Sent from Elizabethville to Leopoldville info headquarters, information headquarters.

Mr. Baron. So that headquarters would have received a copy of this cable sent by the base chief in Elizabethville to the Station Chief in Leopoldville?

Mr. Tweedy. Right.

Mr. Baron. And paragraph 1 of this cable says:

"Thanks for Patrice. If we had known he was coming we would have baked a snake".

Do you have an independent recollection of this cable?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, of course I do, for the simple reason of that phrase, which is another way of saying, a lighthearted way of saying, on the part of Elizabethville Lumumba arrived in Kutanga and he had no idea he was coming.

Mr. Baron. So this cable does not indicate that there was any connection between the CIA and Lumumba's eventual death, the actual causes of his death in Kutanga?

Mr. Tweedy. Will you say that again? I am not quite sure I understood that.

Mr. Baron. Does that cable indicate in any way that the CI was knowledgeable of the actual causes of Lumumba's death at the point when it occurred?

In other words, that they were connected to the people who caused his death?

Mr. Tweedy. I must say I have a hard time following the question. This means that Lumumba arrived under the Congolese auspices in Kutanga and that Elizabethville, the base at Elizabethville didn't know he was coming, our base, didn't know very much, didn't presumably know very much about what occurred, and reported very briefly on what they had heard.

Mr. Baron. Let me put the question in context.

On January 17, Lumumba had been flown to Kutanga?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. And later United Nations investigations concluded that it was the 17th or perhaps the 18th that Lumumba was actually killed in Kutanga.

I was asking you before whether this cable would indicate that the United States would have been involved in bringing about the death of Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. I would have thought that it merely indicates that this part of the Agency, i.e., Elizabethville had no idea he was coming, knew nothing about his fate except these few phrases that he put down here and would imp although it certainly doesn't say so, that he was adding a little information to what was perhaps an enormously ignorant Leopoldville which, of course, is the fact of the matter. We didn't know how all this was occurring and were not able to follow the event except after the event.

WARD & PAUL

Mr. Baron. Was the CIA connected in any way to the events that immediately led to Lumumba's death?

Mr. Tweedy. None whatsoever.

Mr. Baron. CIA was not involved in a plot to fly Lumumba from his previous place of imprisonment in Tysville out to Kutanga where the authorities were known to be so hostile to him that he would probably meet his death there?

Mr. Tweedy. The fate of Lumumba in the end was purely an African event.

Mr. Baron. At what point did you learn of Lumumba's death?

Mr. Tweedy. I suspect probably about the time that the world did. No one had a beat on this.

Mr. Baron. You had no advanced warning that Mobutu intended to fly Lumumba to Katanga?

Mr. Tweedy. Not that I recall, and I am sure the cable traffic would reflect it if I had.

Mr. Baron. Mr. Tweedy, do you recall an asset who was sent from Europe, where he had been recruited by [redacted] 03 , to the Congo in the fall of 1960?

Mr. Tweedy. I think Iwas reminded of this when I talked to you and Mr. Wides a couple or so months ago.

Mr. Baron. This would be an asset who went by the cryptonym of QJWIN.

Mr. Tweedy. So I was reminded then, which was a cryptonym

I didn't remember at all, whereas I do remember quite a number of cryptonyms when reminded of them.

Mr. Baron. Aside from the cryptonym, do you recall 03 there was an asset who had been recruited by [redacted] in Europe and who was sent to the Congo to perform some mission in November and December of 1960?

Mr. Tweedy. I was generally reminded of it by that conversation with you and Mr. Wides but I will confess that my recollection doesn't go any further than that.

But unlike some of the things I have been reminded 03 of, I think recalled that asset of [redacted] had been involved. That is just as about as deep as my recollection goes.

Mr. Baron. Let me see if I can refresh your recollection, first, by relating to you the testimony of Justin O'Donnell who said that he did make use of QJWIN in the Congo as a kind of "alter ego" of his, a general operative of his.

Does that remind you at all of the nature of the mission that QJWIN had in the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. No, it doesn't.

Mr. Baron. Have you heard the phrase executive action?

Mr. Tweedy. In the newspapers.

Mr. Baron. During your tenure as a CIA official you never heard the phrase executive action discussed as part of a CIA program or plan.

Mr. Tweedy. No. Only in bureaucratic Washington terms of executive action.

Mr. Baron. Meaning administrative action?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. Were you aware of any project at CIA to develop the capability of carrying off an assassination of a foreign leader, if required?

Mr. Tweedy. Will you repeat that?

Mr. Baron. Were you aware that the CIA had a project which operated under the cryptonym ZRRIFLE to develop the mea pardon me, to develop the capability of carrying out assassinations if required?

Mr. Tweedy. You mean just generically?

Mr. Baron. Yes.

Mr. Tweedy. No.

Mr. Baron. Aside from the discussions that you had with Richard Bissell about the feasibility of assassinating Lumumba, did you participate in any other discussions at the Agency about assassination capabilities?

Mr. Tweedy. Never.

Mr. Baron. Did you bring anyone else connected with the Agency into the discussion of the feasibility of assassinating Lumumba, other than the Chief of Station in Congo?

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

Mr. Tweedy. The only other person who was aware of it was my deputy.

Mr. Baron. That would be?

Mr. Tweedy. Glenn Fields. He was aware of it in that sense.

Mr. Baron. Did he take any action in realtion to that plan or consideration?

Mr. Tweedy. No; just he was in matters of this kind he would have been my alterego but he was aware of it, that is all.

Mr. Baron. Do you know William Harvey?

Mr. Tweedy. Sure, I know Bill Harvey well. Haven't seen him in a long while.

Mr. Baron. And were you aware that William Harvey was in contact with 03 [redacted] to develop the standby capability for carrying out assassinations?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't know anything about it whatsoever.

Mr. Baron. Did you at any point talk with William Harvey about any CIA activity in the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. Not that I remember.

Mr. Baron. Let me show you a document now that we will Mark Exhibit 5.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 5 for identification.)

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

VBR

Mr. Baron. This is a dispatch from the Chief of KUTUBE/D, which I believe is --

Mr. Tweedy. That is Staff D.

Mr. Baron. In the Foreign Intelligence Division, is that correct?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

12-10

Mr. Baron. Written to the Chief of Station in [redacted] and Chief of Station in Luxemburg through Chief AF and Chief WE.

Would Chief AF have been yourself, Chief of the African Division?

Mr. Tweedy. What is the date?

Mr. BAron. The date is November 2, 1960.

Mr. Tweedy. I would have been.

Mr. Baron. And William Harvey would hve been Chief of KU2D?

Mr. Tweedy. I suppose he was then. He certainly was Chief of Staff D, in which case he could have, that is what he would have been then.

Mr. Baron. Mr. Tweedy, while we have been off the record you have had a chance to review this document and tell me some things about it I would like to repeat on the record.

First of all, on this copy of the document there is typed the words Danuel M. Pressland, under the space for officer's signature, and you said to me a moment ago that you are almost 100 percent sure that that is the pseudonym of William Harvey, is that right?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. And you were just pointing to --

Mr. Tweedy. Chief of ID. You told me he was Chief of ID at the time. He certainly was Chief of ID. You told me he was Chief of ID than, I put those two together and say I am pretty sure my recollection is Pressland was Harvey, I can't swear to it, but I am virtually sure.

Mr. Baron. And do you have any independent recollection of the subject matter that is discussed in this document?

Mr. Tweedy. None at all. It doesn't ring a bell at all.

Mr. Baron. Even after reviewing the document do you have any recollection of what QJWIN's mission in the Congo would be, would have been?

Mr. Tweedy. No.

Mr. Baron. You said that such a memo --

Mr. Tweedy. You told me he was going out there to work with O'Donnell and when O'Donnell went out there I guess he was going to look into a number of things for headquarters and the Station pertaining to Congolese matters. When I say I guess I am in effect asking you because I don't recollect by any emeans what the full auspices of O'Donnell's visit to the Congo were and you said that Mr. QJWIN was going out as sort of his caddy, if you like, he was going to work for him and act as his general assistant.

Mr. Baron. That was the way Mr. O'Donnell described it, although in this lengthy memo which apparently precedes the dispatch of QJWIN to the Congo there is no mention of Mr. O'Donnell.

Mr. Tweedy. This I don't think necessarily has anything to do with O'Donnell's mission whatsoever. This, I think, is generic mission, seems to indicate that he is going to muck around with Corsicans. I don't recall Corsicans, I know O'Donnell in the Congo at all.

Mr. Baron. Would this kind of dispatch have been written by the Chief of Staff D without consultation with the Chief of the African Division?

Mr. Tweedy. He did consult, that is to say, he wrote the dispatch. I haven't read the whole thing but I gather from this -- you see there is also a reference here. I don't know what the reference is about. But I gather that Dakar is brought into this activity because they wanted to act in a support capacity to this headquarters activity.

Mr. Baron. You don't have any recollection of a mission in Dakar Senegal about this time that headquarters was concerned with?

Mr. Tweedy. No, I surely don't. On the contrary.

Mr. Baron. Would it have been proper for the Chief of Staff D to arrange an operation in the Congo directly without going through the African Division although keeeping the African Chief informed?

Mr. Tweedy. Well, the two are mutually exclusive. You can't have one without the other. To answer your first question, it would be quite improper and wouldn't have occurred that the Chief of Staff D was operating in an African Station without the African Division being informed. This, however, makes it amply clear that that was not the case, the African Division was informed. In what depth in terms of terms of headquarters purposes I don't know but it would have been sufficient for Harvey to have done what he did and coordinate this with the Division and if the Division had perceived any objection or saw any problems they would have raised it before the dispatch went out.

Also I noticed Dakar is also invited to find problems with this, if it did, and say so.

Mr. Baron. What kind of missions generally would Staff D have been carrying out in Africa at this time?

Mr. Tweedy. Well, you know what the role of Staff D was.

Mr. Baron. This would be obtaining codes by surreptitious entry.

Mr. Tweedy. This is in effect the obtaining of signals intelligence by whatever means, yes, absolutely.

Mr. Baron. Would it be surprising to you that QJWIN might have been used in some manner in connection with an assassination plot against Lumumba and have been directed or supervised by William Harvey without your knowledge?

Mr. Tweedy. It would have surprised me exceedingly and would today. To put it differently, I am sure it didn't occur.

Mr. Baron. After reading this memo, you told me a moment ago that you thought this might indicate that QJWIN was being recruited for ZRRIFLE activities.

Mr. Tweedy. Well, you mentioned ZRRIFLE, which frankly I hadn't heard before. This sounds as if he was going to have some kind of generic assignment. I merely put those two together but I know nothing about it at all.

Mr. Baron. The dispatch says, "In view of the extreme sensitivity of the objective for which we want him to perform his task, he was not told precisely what we want him to do."

Do you have any knowledge of what it was precisely that QJWIN was asked to do?

Mr. Tweedy. I do not.

Mr. Baron. Then, on page 3 of the dispatch it says:

"The operation we have in mind is too sensitive to risk blowing it in this phase and the search for assets must be conducted with truly" -- which is underscored -- "minimum risk".

What would these assets have been used for, what was the search for assets all about?

Mr. Tweedy. I just do not know.

Mr. Baron. Let's turn now to a document that we will mark Exhibit 6, dated January 11, 1961, which is a memo for the FN Division from William K. Harvey, Chief of FI Division D.

In this memo I will direct your attention to the sentence that says in that cable COS Luxemburg was told to TA/A all QJWIN expenses to headquarters since QJWIN was being used for FI/D purposes."

Do you know what FID purposes QJWIN was being used for?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't know.

Mr. Baron. The memo goes on to say that:

"QJWIN was sent on this trip for a specifically sensitive operational purpose which has been completed".

Were you informed by William Harvey that QJWIN's mission was completed?

Mr. Tweedy. I don't recall that at all and don't recall any aspect of the mission or its completion.

Mr. Baron. Okay.

Did you know of an asset of the Chief of Station in the Congo known as WIROGUE, who was sent to the Congo after receiving plastic surgery so that he wouldn't be recognized by his fellow Europeans who might be traveling through the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. I do recollect that and you brought it to my attention, when you and Mr. Wides and I discussed this a couple of months ago. I do remember the cryptonym and remember generally the circumstances in which he was sent as a sort of general purpose agent to the Congo with the thought if we got involved in paramilitary activity he would be helpful and he was recruited on that rather general basis, and when you discussed with me a later alarming exchange of cables which indicated that he landed running and made some rather irresponsible remarks and we commented on them to the station.

My best recollection is that in the long haul he stayed on in the Congo and I think became, I believe he became a somewhat useful intelligence source, but Hedgman would have a much better recollection of that. But I do remember quite well his dispatch. He had been seen by two or three members of my Division, including my deputy. I don't recall that I ever met him unless I met him in the Congo. If I did I just don't remember. But I remember he was assessed, as it were, recruited in the United States and dispatched on a general purpose mission.

Mr. Baron. So, he would be viewed as one of the major assets that Hedgman had in the Congo at that point?

Mr. Tweedy. How major I don't know. He was an asset. Only time would have told how major it would have been. He was thought qualified to perform one of a variety of things in the Congo by Hedgman.

Mr. Baron. Would one of those things for which he was qualified have been an assassination mission against Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. As I told you previously, told you and Mr. Wides previously, absolutely not, for the simple reason he was basically dispatched, assessed and dealt with by the balance of the Division, not by me personally, Glenn Fields personally, and he was in effect a station as set mounted by the Division.

The Division knew nothing about the balance of this thing.

Mr. Baron. You are saying that Division personnel outside of yourself and Glenn Fields would not have known --

Mr. Tweedy. To my knowledge.

Mr. Baron . -- would not have known that the assassination of Lumumba was being considered?

Mr. Tweedy. Considered at all, that is correct.

Mr. Baron. And --

Mr. Tweedy. If they did learn of it I never knew that they learned of it and certainly never learned of it through me or Fields.

Mr. Baron. The fact that you left the recruitment and training of this asset to other people in the Division than yourself and Fields would indicate to you that he wasn't being considered at that point for an assassination mission?

Mr. Tweedy. I will put it differently. As far as I know he was never considered for an assassination mission at all.

He thought he was presumably being sent ouf for deeds of daring in the PM field and began to talk rather lusty when he arrived, but I think he was soon put straight.

Mr. Baron. PM is paramilitary operations?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. Let me show you a document we will mark Exhibit 7, dated December 17, 1960, which is a cable to the headquarters, marked to Director fromLeopoldville dealing with WIROGUE on an approach he made to agent QJWIN.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 7 for identification.)

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, I know that. This is the one we discussed two months ago and this happens all the time.

Mr. Baron. We are referring specifically to QJWIN's report that"WIROGUE had offered him $300 per month to participate in intel net and be member" --I am sorry -- "member 'execution squad'".

Mr. Tweedy. Yes; I remember all of this as a result of your having previously brought it to my attention and I recall it, it was a typical example of an agent or asset full of piss and vinegar exceeding his brief and he was certainly put back on the track very early on.

But in this business do not confuse execution squad with anything to do with the assassination of Lumumba or anything else. It had nothing to do with that.

Mr. Baron. You are saying even though you would assume that Mr. Hedgman's testimony about poisons coming to the Congo and instructions to carry out an assassination coming to the Congo was true, the approach that WIROGUE made to QJWIN was probably not a part of that mission.

Mr. Tweedy. It was quite specifically not a part of that mission. There was a chapter of accidents. You have seen it happen, I have seen it happen, a thousand times before, two people who are periphically involved in the same thing and run into each [illegible]er and one smells something on the other.

Mr. Baron. Again, why are you so sure that this would not have been connected in any way to the assassination mission?

Mr. Tweedy. I thought I made that clear because this man went out up to a point through what I would call the open channel, it was developed by the Division, giving training by the Division and was sent out. This had nothing to do whatsoever with the other thing and wouldn't have been handled that way.

Mr. Baron. Could he have been instructed by Mr. Hedgman, after he got to the Congo, that he was to undertake recruitment of assets for participation in an assassination mission as part of his general duties in the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. It is purely a speculative question. He could have been but Hedgman would also have been required and would have told headquarters what he was doing with him. That was not the purpose for his being sent. The purpose for which he was sent out was unspecific at the time, generally in the PM field.

Mr. Baron. Did this report create a flap at headquarters at the time when the cable was sent?

Mr. Tweedy. No, not at all.

Mr. Baron. It would have been considered a fairly usual --

Mr. Tweedy. It is not.

Mr. Baron. -- example of free wheeling by an operative?

Mr. Tweedy. It is the sort of thing that can happen. What you want to do is put a stop to it. But no great problem. The problem must have lasted 30 minutes.

Mr. Baron. Have you ever discussed events in the Congo with Sidney Gottlieb?

Mr. Tweedy. Have I ever discussed events in the Congo with Sidney Gottlieb?

I can only assume I must have seen Sid during this period, during this period, but I don't recall any discussions. In fact, if there had been any discussions with Sidney Gottlieb on the Congo it would have been at that time.

Mr. Baron. Why would that be so?

Mr. Tweedy. Otherwise Sidney Gottlieb would have had no interest in the Congo.

Mr. Baron. So you mean if there had been any discussions between yourself and Sidney Gottlieb it probably would have --

Mr. Tweedy. It would have surrounded these events.

Mr. Baron. The development of lethal biological substances in his laboratory?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, sir. Not necessarily that, because I think that would have been Sidney Gottlieb's business as to what he developed in his laboratory. My only interest presumably would have been was there anything in his inventory that could possibly be used if we ever wanted to use something.

Mr. Baron. You might have had at least an exploratory conversation with him on that subject?

Mr. Tweedy. I would be surprised if I didn't. Or perhaps Bussell had a conversation with him and then I followed it up, something like that. I would suspect that probably the first conversation would undoubtely have been held between Dick Bissell and Sidney Gottlieb but this is merely what I would suspect was the way it occurred.

I don't say that that is the way it occurred. But other than that no conversation with Sidney Gottlieb on the Congo at all.

Mr. Baron. I am at the end of my questions on specific facts concerning the Congo during this period of time leading up to Lumumba's death which, as you know, is the narrow subject of our inquiry right now, and first of all I want to say that I appreciate tremendously and know that the Committee is appreciative and grateful for your testimony here today. It is a difficult subject. It is only one narrow aspect of what the Committee is undertaking, and unpleasant, but unnecessary aspect to assemble.

I wonder if you have any facts that you would like to add to the record that you think are necessary to put our discussion today into context?

Mr. Tweedy. I think the strongest recollection about my period as Chief of the African Division and the Congo -- let's leave the balance of Africa out -- and U.N. and U.S. involvement in the Congolese matter, that I have never seen an element of the Agency so totally involved in a matter which clearly had the highest policy approval. I am not talking about Lumumba, I am talking about the Congo.

Mr. Baron. There was an extreme sense of urgency at that time?

Mr. Tweedy. Not only an extreme sense of urgency, the U.S. was supporting the U.N., the Agency was supporting the U.S. Government, the U.S. Government requests. What the Agency was doing was very closely coordinated appropriately with any organs of government that need to be covered, mostly State, the White House. I must say the Executive Department was very much working as a team during these days. AGain forget Lumumba. I am now talking the whole Congo action. And I never felt that anything we were doing was wandering off into left field or that I didn't know the way the White House was thinking about things, or the State Department was thinking about things, and the National Security was thinking about things, and I have no reason to believe they ever felt that they didn't know how CIA was thinking about things. It was an extraordinarily close thing.

I remember Mennen Williams trying to form a Congo club. When I retired from the African Division I was given a little thing for a watch chain, if I had one, which would be a member of the Congo Club, and it was rather typical of the way the government worked on this thing and I personally felt excellent advised that the U.S. was absolutely right to support the U.N. on this. I think it could have been a total disaster if Kutanga had been allowed to succeed, and although Mobutu was acting like an ass now, that is Africa for you, but on the whole that country has done pretty well and I consider we had a considerable role in giving it a chance to move the way it has.

There are going to be ups and downs with the things but that is the way it is. I feel very strongly about it.

Does that somewhat answer your question, does that help?

Mr. Baron. I simply wanted to give you a chance.

Mr. Tweedy. I felt that very strongly and no other assignment that I have ever had was this kind of government team and cooperation ever really required because we weren't engaged or I wasn't engaged in that kind of activity.

Mr. Baron. Is this government team efforts that you are talking about one that was primarily put together to carry out the paramilitary activities in the Congo in the latter part of the 60's, '62, '63.

Mr. Tweedy. It was put together to preside over whatever activity the United States Government felt it needed to be engaged in in the Congo. This included such things as purely policy questions of what the Ambassddor to the U.N. might say to the Secretary General of the U.N.or what the President might want to say conceivably I suppose to the Chief of the Belgium state on such matters. Everything certainly didn't just involve what CIA was going to be involved in. It was the whole policy ball of wax with respect to the Congo which obviously had many ganglia and which the CIA part and paramilitary activity was just a bit.

Mr. Baron. Did this high degree of organization and intensity of concern begin sometime after the death of Lumumba or had it gotten rolling?

Mr. Tweedy. I think --

Mr. Baron. After the Congolese independence?

Mr. Tweedy. I think the U.S. Government was thoroughly seized with the intimate problem and danger of a disintegrating Congo that started in the earliest days of independence and continued and, of course, when the Tschombe-Kutanga thing became a fact of life, which is basically why the U.N. was there, then, of course, that was it.

In other words, I would say that U.S. involvement, U.S. concern, merely moved with the events, as anybody could read them in the press just continued and continued, but one thing was perfectly clear, was that the U.S. was quite determined to see this thing through. Nothing had been clearer than the way President Kennedy presided over those two meetings. He was annoyed by the Congo and irritated by it and he was worried that he had to spend so much bloody time on it, but he was damn well determined to see the thing through and he was continually goosing his staff to do just that , but in support of the U.N. We weren't going to do it all by ourselves. It couldn't have been clearer.

Mr. Baron. All right, as I mentioned before, the Committee is interested in your wisdom on policy-making and analysis in the intelligence community generally and there may be other members of the Committee staff that would like to call upon you to testify on other subjects because of your long experience in Agency activities.

But I want to thank you now for your complete cooperation and the tremendous amount of information that you have provided on this one subject that has been very helpful?

Mr. Tweedy. Thank you, Mr. Baron. I can assure you anything I can do to help the Committee in other areas I will be glad to do it and if I don't think I can help because I don't think I know enough about the subject I will just say so, otherwise I am not afraid to put my two bits in.

Mr. Baron. As far as your two bits goes, we would be interested in your two bits worth on policy recommendations in general, institutional, critique or suggestions for change or any kind of recommendations that you would care to make, and we will take that up at some point in the future. But you have obviously had a good deal of experience at the policy level in the Agency and we like to take advantage of that.

That is all, thank you.

Mr. Tweedy. All right, than you very much.

(Whereupon, at 3:55 p.m., the hearing was concluded.)

PROCEEDINGS

The Chairman. We will come back into order.

Mr. Goodwin, would you please take the oath?

Do you swear that all the testimony you are about to give in this proceeding will be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Goodwin. I do.

The Chairman. I am given to understand that there has been some problem in connection with your appearance here today and that there are some notes that you have that you feel you need for purposes of your testimony which you have not brought with you. Is that the case?

Mr. Goodwin. Yes, I think they might be helpful. They have been in storage for several years and I just had no access to them. I have to go get them out of the storage. They were notes -- my files and everything have been in storage for several years. I've had no access to them. And they consist of the files that I brought from the White House with me.

The Chairman. Have you been interviewed by members of the staff and shown certain documents that the staff believes will be pertinent to your testimony?

Mr. Goodwin. I have been shown documents connected with the Dominican Republic and the assassination of Trujillo today.

The Chairman. And do you believe that you are prepared today to give us testimony relating to Mr. Trujillo or do you believe that you need to or ought to review those notes before you give any testimony?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, I'm of course fully prepared to testify to the best of my recollection to any matter, and I think probably in the case of the Dominican Republic, the documents have been adequate. I think there's a good chance that going through the files may very well add something to my recollection of Cuba and Castro.

The Chairman. Well I will have this suggestion to make. We will take your testimony on the Trujillo matter today, and then -- how long will it take you to get your files and review them and come back fully prepared to give us your testimony on the other issues?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, it will take a day or two. It is possible I will not be able to get access to them until Monday morning. It's kind of like trying to get to Pocatello and find them in a warehouse, because I'm up in Rumford, Maine. But I am sure that it would not take more than a day or two.

The Chairman. So that if the Committee were to give you that opportunity, would you then get those files, review them, and respond to the request by the Committee that you appear the first of next week to testify?

Mr. Goodwin. If that is your wish, certainly.

The Chairman. We are most anxious to complete the record and your testimony is necessary, and it would certainly accomodate our need if you would cooperate.

Mr. Goodwin. I would be glad to.

The Chairman. All right.

With that understanding then, Mr. Schwarz, are you prepared to proceed with the questioning on Trujillo?

Mr. Schwarz. I'm sorry Mr. Goodwin that we didn't have a chance to get together. I thought we were going to have a chance to do that on Tuesday, and I have not had a chance to speak to you but I do know some of the material, and perhaps we can work on the material.

Before we do so, could you state your full name and your address please?

TESTIMONY OF RICHARD M. GOODWIN

Mr. Goodwin. Richard M. Goodwin, 1536 32nd Street, N.W., Washington, D.C.

Mr. Schwarz. And as a matter of course, we tell all of our witnesses what they no doubt know, that they have their right to counsel, and you know that, and if you want to stop to obtain counsel, you know that you can do that?

Mr. Goodwin. I already have too many lawyers.

Mr. Schwarz. And you know what your constitutional rights are?

Mr. Goodwin. Hopefully.

Mr. Schwarz. Now, what connection did you have with the Dominican Republic in the winter and spring of 1961?

Mr. Goodwin. I came into the White House as Assistant Special Counsel to the President, having worked on Latin American affairs policy statements in the preceding campaign. I became involved in Latin America. And from that period until I left to go to the State Department, I was involved on a daily basis with President Kennedy and his activities in Latin America which included what was happening in the Dominican Republic in terms that I drafted contingency plans, I prepared cables that went to Mr. Dearborn focussing on the areas that you are interested in, and I was with him every day on something connected with Latin America.

Mr. Schwarz. Without your turning to the documentary material, would you recount for the Committee your understandin of what the United States government policy toward the Dominic Republic was in the winter and spring of '61 and what actions were taken to implement that policy.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, that policy was a continuation of the policy established by President Eisenhower when he, in accordance with the vote of the OAS, voted to sever -- decided to sever diplomatic and commercial relations with the Dominican Republic and the situation which you know arose was precipitated by the attempted assassination of President Betancourt by the President of the Dominican Republic.

So that from that point on when we came in, the feeling was, first of all, of course that Trujillo was even more at odds with the philosophy of the Alliance for Progress than had been and beyond that, having cut off diplomatic and other relations, that Trujillo's time in office was probably numbered. The principal support of the regime in that decade which was often in great domestic difficulty had been the concept of American support, it strengthened Trujillo against his opposition.

At that point our policy became one of trying to anticipa at least, the fall of Trujillo. Of course the Castro thing was very much in everybody's mind and the principal concern of the President, the one thing he didn't want was for Trujillo to go and a Communist leader to come in. So I think the policy was to keep up our economic and diplomatic pressure to hope that when Trujillo went, however he went, whether violently or peacefully or died a natural death that the succession would be a moderate, democratic group friendly to the interests of the United States in the Caribbean and therefore try to keep in touch with and help out and keep communications open with the potential successor groups, and it was very hard to pinpoint.

Mr. Schwarz. What steps did you take during the period of time you were involved, or prior thereto, if you know about it, in order to assist one or more of the dissident groups?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, we did all sorts -- everything from policy statements, the use of USIA, the use of economic pressure, to maintain our network of contacts with exile groups principally in New York and elsewhere. A certain number of limited covert operations, some transfer of arms. Dearborn of course was one of the principals, his principal instruction was to try to keep all channels of communication open, he was zealous in this because he disliked Trujillo intensely himself and felt that he ought to be allied with these other groups. And I read through the sort of overall planning papers, and I think they fairly reflect that range of operations.

None of them were terribly effective.

Mr. Schwarz. In connection with the transfer of arms, what, to your understanding, was the time at which authorizatio was provided to transfer arms?

Mr. Goodwin. January 12, 1960, under President Eisenhower.

Mr. Schwarz. And that was at a meeting of the Special Group?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, I don't know because they didn't let me in that week, but there was an NSC action memorandum of some kind which just set forth the authorization. I don't really know the procedure.

Mr. Schwarz. When were the arms passed?

Mr. Goodwin. I don't know. I became aware of the transfer of arms. The transfer I think you're thinking of is the transfer of a couple of carbines and .38 pistols. After the transfer had been made, in the message of communication that came to us from the Dominican Republic along with the request for the transfer of machine guns which were to be used in an effort to kill Trujillo, the smaller guns were to be given as Dearborn told me later in conversation after the assassination because these people felt their own lives were in danger, especially if they embarked on anything as risky as trying to kill Trujillo, and they wanted some self-defense weapons, and they were given to them for self-defense and then they made a request that they wanted weapons to try an assassination, they wanted a machine gun.

Assassinating Trujillo, of course, a lot of people had tried and most of them, they were all dead. It was a very risky business. It's not the kind of thing they would want to try with a .38.

And I think also, I mean nobody, I think -- as I say, we had no particular anticipation that this or any other group would be successful in something that nobody had been able to do for thirty years, but at any rate, those were the backstops.

Mr. Schwarz. Did you know how the arms were passed into the Dominican Republic, as opposed to passed to the dissidents?

Mr. Goodwin. No, I only know what Dearborn later told me in conversation. I only have this fifteen year old memory on my part that he gave them to them in the consulate. I may have known at one time how he got them. There were a lot of guns in the Dominican Republic.

24

Mr. Schwarz. Did you know that arms were passed through the diplomatic pouch?

Mr. Goodwin. I did not know that, but I wouldn't be surprised, weapons of that size.

Mr. Schwarz. Now again, when were the arms passed, as far as you know?

Mr. Goodwin. Well I don't know. I don't have the exact -- the message is in here. I think it was after President Kennedy took office.

My knowledge of it was on the basis of the message --

The Chairman. Is there someone that can help Mr. Goodwin with the documents?

Mr. Schwarz. Let's mark that as Goodwin Exhibit No. 1, a document consisting -- dated May 13, 1961 and headed Subject, CIA Covert Activities, Dominican Republic, stating: "Attached is the special briefing paper of CIA covert activities directed against the Dominican Republic which is requested by Mr. Richard Goodwin at the White House," and attaching a several page document with that heading and that date.

Mr. Goodwin. This is the paper that they sent me and that's where, I guess, I found out about it.

(The document referred to was marked Goodwin Exhibit No. 1 for identification.)

Mr. Schwarz. Now that indicates, does it not, that the weapons were passed sometime after late January, you can tell that?

Mr. Goodwin. Yeah.

Mr. Schwarz. All right.

You can tell that by looking at the heading 2 which indicates when the request for the passage of the arms was made.

Mr. Goodwin. Yes, it says in late January. Of course they weren't authdrized until the 12th.

Mr. Schwarz. But they were passed, in any event, after the Kennedy Administration took office.

Mr. Goodwin. Yes.

Mr. Schwarz. Now you told President Johnson, Vice President Johnson,-- we will mark this Goodwin Exhibit 2, a memorandum which, Senators, is at Tab H, the book which is marked book 2 of 2 and dated June 1, 1961.

(The document referred to was marked Goodwin Exhibit No. 2 for identification.)

Mr. Schwarz. Would you read into the record, Mr. Goodwin, this is a memorandum for the files dated June 1, 1961, subject Report of Point Raised at meeting with Vice President.

Would you read into the record the second paragraph?

Mr. Goodwin. "At one point during the meeting, the Vice President asked about the three carbines which the Agency had turned over to the dissidents, specifically asked about the date of delivery. Mr. Goodwin made a statement to the effect that this was done under the previous Administration, i.e., prior to January 20, 1961, pursuant to a decision of the Special Group."

Can you tell me if this his memo I'm reading? I'd like to know.

Mr. Schwarz. Well, there are some initials at the bottom of the page, do they help you decide whose memo it is?

Mr. Dennin. I believe we were told by Secretary of State Rusk that it's Under Secretary of State Johnson. That's what the U stands for.

Mr. Schwarz. Did you make that statement, Mr. Goodwin?

Mr. Goodwin. I don't remember making it. It is an inaccurate statement, and there was a clear record that it would be inaccurate in documents that I had already seen. I thought that I wouldn't have made it. I had no purpose in making it. And this is --

The Chairman. What is the inaccuracy of this?

Mr. Goodwin. The delivery of the arms was not made prior to January 20th. The authorization, Senator, was prior to January 20th.

Senator Schweiker. Was when, again? Was what date?

Mr. Goodwin. The authorization was the 12th of January.

Senator Schweiker. What year?

Mr. Goodwin. 1961.

Senator Schweiker. And delivery was when?

Mr. Schwarz. Sometime subsequent to January 20th.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, now that I look at this, all it says was late January.

The Chairman. This is June 1st, this is dated June 1st, and you are reported to have said, "At one point during the meeting the Vice President asked about the three carbines which the Agency had turned over to the dissidents and specifically asked about the date of delivery. Mr. Goodwin made the statement to the effect that this was done under the previous Administration, i.e., prior to January 20th, 1961, pursuant to a decision of the Special Group."

Actually the delivery took place after January 20th 1961.

Mr. Goodwin. Well that was my first impression on reading that, but I notice that all it says was late January, Senator, so I suppose the 20th or the 19th in somebody's mind could be late January. I mean, I don't really remember.

Mr. Schwarz. But Mr. Goodwin, you know, independent of the document which we marked as Exhibit 1, in fact the arms were delivered after January 20th.

Mr. Goodwin. I may have known. All I -- my first knowledge was this document, the timetable that I requested which simply informed me that the delivery of carbines had been made in late January. I don't know any more than that.

Mr. Schwarz. All right.

Mr. Goodwin. This is my source of knowledge. I may have learned more subsequent to it if Dearborn pinpointed it.

Mr. Schwarz. In addition with dealing with Dearborn, were you dealing with anybody from the CIA on this?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, they were always at the meetings.

Mr. Schwarz. Who do you remember from the CIA?

Mr. Goodwin. Tracy Barnes -- I can't be sure who all was there. At the meeting with the Vice President, I'm sure somebody like Bissell, at least, would have been there. But I'm sure you must have a list.

Mr. Schwarz. Now I would like you to testify in answer to a series of questions as to what you were or were not told.

Now, were you told that the arms which had been delivered had been delivered to persons who said at times that they wanted to use them for personal defense, but who said more often that they wanted to use them for assassination purposes?

Mr. Goodwin. I was given to understand and told specifically and it's reflected in the documents, that they wanted -- in order to carry out an assassination, they thought they needed transfer of additional weapons, of submachine guns. I don't remember any indication that anyone thought that a carbine or a .38 was adequate to mount an effort of that kind against Trujillo. But they, of course, were interested in assassinating Trujillo, involved as they were in a very life and death struggle, their families were being slaughtered --

Mr. Schwarz. The record demonstrates that the Agency was informed in April, prior to the memorandum that went to you which we marked as Exhibit 1, that the dissidents intended to undertake the assassination effort and to do so within the means that they eventually actually did, by blockading the road and shooting Mr. Trujillo as he was visiting his mistress. And that they intended to do it whether or not they received the machine guns, but they would like the machine guns, just to help.

Now, were you informed by the Agency or by anyone else that the dissidents intended to accomplish the assassination with the small arms whether or not they got the machines?

Mr. Goodwin. I was informed that both this and other groups intended and wanted to assassinate Trujillo. We got reports of assassinations about to occur almost every two or three weeks in the White House. There is a long gap between wanting to kill Trujillo and being able to do it, and -- but at all times, continually, up into May, there was the very insistent request for additional arms that would make the plot feasible and at the specific request of President Kennedy, those arms were denied and --

Mr. Schwarz. I'm going to come to that. I want to know what you were informed about the intentions of the dissidents. You didn't answer my question. You said you were frequently informed about assassination plots all over the world, but specifically with respect to the Dominican Republic, were you or were you not informed that the Agency had been told by the dissidents that they intended to accomplish the assassination of Fidel Castro -- excuse me, of Trujillo -- whether or not they received the machine guns?

Mr. Goodwin. I was told that afterwards by Dearborn. I wasn't told that particularly at the time, although that wouldn't surprise me if they said that. By the Agency, you mean Dearborn, or --

Mr. Schwarz. I mean the Central Intelligence Agency.

Mr. Goodwin. They communicated directly with the Agency in this instance?

Mr. Schwarz. There were Agency people in the Republic. Did you know there were Agency people in the Republic?

Mr. Goodwin. I knew they were in and out.

Mr. Schwarz. In and out?

Mr. Goodwin. They ran some guns in at one time, as I remember, and they also were engaged in the collection of intelligence about dissident groups.

Mr. Schwarz. Was it your impression that Dearborn was in charge of the Dominican Republic, or the Agency personnel was in charge of the Dominican Republic?

Mr. Goodwin. My impression at the time was that the instructions given to Dearborn were carried out, and all instructions from the President went to Dearborn.

Mr. Schwarz. Apart from instructions from the President, was it your impression that the Agency was in charge of the Dominican Republic or that Dearborn was in charge of the Dominican Republic.

Mr. Goodwin. My impression was that Dearborn was in charge of the Dominican Republic, subject to very close supervision from Washington.

The Chairman. Dearborn was the --

Mr. Goodwin. He was the Consul. We had no formal relations.

The Chairman. He was the Consul?

Mr. Goodwin. Right.

Wasn't that true?

Mr. Schwarz. The paper record makes it look quite likely that the Agency, at least from their point of view, thought that they were in charge.

Mr. Goodwin. They should have told the President. We sent all of our messages to Dearborn.

Mr. Schwarz. What was your understanding of the location of the machine guns that the dissidents wanted?

Mr. Goodwin. I don't remember, but it's in here somewhere in the paper.

(Pause)

Mr. Schwarz. Well, let me cut through the question.

Did you know that the machine guns were sent to the Dominican Republic through the diplomatic pouch?

24

Mr. Goodwin. I know now.

Mr. Schwarz. Did you know about it?

Mr. Goodwin. No. I knew, when the issue arose in May that we had -- we had brought in machine guns, but the precise method by which they were brought in I never asked about.

The Chairman. I am having a little difficulty following.

We began with your being told that it was the policy of the previous Administration to encourage dissident groups and do whatever possible to isolate or to undermine and bring down the Trujillo regime. Then, following the Inauguration of President Kennedy, certain weapons are passed to these dissidents in the Dominican Republic for the purpose of assassinating -- of their use in the assassinating President Trujillo.

Now when did you learn that weapons had been in fact passed to dissident groups, that obviously had occurred after President Kennedy had been inaugurated. When did you first learn?

Mr. Goodwin. On the 13th of May when we requested from the White House a briefing paper on all covert activities in the Dominican Republic, that had been conducted in the Dominican Republic.

Mr. Schwarz. Now that briefing paper was requested from whom?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, it would have been requested by me for the President.

Mr. Schwarz. From the CIA?

Mr. Goodwin. From the CIA.

The Chairman. From the CIA, and that briefing paper has been identified for the record?

Mr. Goodwin. That is correct.

The Chairman. All right.

When you found out that these weapons had been transferred in January to certain dissident groups for the purpose of assassinating Trujillo, what did you do?

Was it then your understanding that this was President Kennedy's policy?

Mr. Goodwin. No.

The Chairman. Then what did you do when you received that information?

Mr. Goodwin. If I may go back for a moment, Senator, and that is the briefing paper involved a very clear distinction between these weapons which were to be used for purposes of personal type side-arms, the self-defense attendant to any project and the desire for assassination weapons which would have consisted of machine guns.

Our response to this briefing paper was immediately to try to review our entire policy toward the Dominican Republic and prepare, which we did over the next couple of weeks, instructions to the Consul about the nature of future relations with dissidents, because the President felt that things might be getting out of hand, with what was happening in the Dominican Republic.

So we did prepare that paper. The President had, as I said, two great concerns. He didn't want anybody trying to push Trujillo over unless he knew what was going to happen next, because he would much rather have Trujillo in there than a Communist leader. And secondly, that the United States not be associated with any kind of violent overthrow. And in the telegram that was --

The Chairman. All right.

Now when the President told you that those were his two concerns, what action was then taken to implement the President's policy?

Mr. Goodwin. The action that was then taken was to take and set aside the original instructions from the State Department and at the President's instructions, I typed up the telegram which is here in my handwriting, which was to go and did go, slightly revised to --

Mr. Schwarz. All right. Let me mark the one in your hand as Exhibit 3.

(The document referred to was marked as Goodwin Exhibit No. 3-A for identification.)

Mr. Schwarz. Well, let's mark them, Mr. Goodwin -- you know how to do this as well as I do. Make them 3-A, 3-B and 3-C.

Mr. Goodwin. In which I personally added in the course of rewriting --

The Chairman. Can you identify in the Senators' books where these documents appear?

Mr. Schwarz. Where is 3-A?

Mr. Goodwin. This is 233 at the bottom.

(Pause)

This xerox of my raw, personally typewritten draft appears on page 237. That's my very bad typing and handwriting.

And then page 256 is the final. And the same page, 242, page 237 and 242.

The Chairman. Is 242 the final version of the message that went out?

Mr. Goodwin. Yes.

The Chairman. This is for Dearborn from State?

Mr. Goodwin. That's correct.

The Chairman. And by whom was the messages signed?

Mr. Goodwin. Probably the Secretary, I guess, but they are both my drafts. I received a draft from the State Department, discussed it with the President, and at his instruction prepared this redraft. I never would have overridden the State Department on my own, and adding to it two major points aside from rewording it. The first one is on a different matter, and the second one was to say in the final version, "However, we must not run the risk of U.S. association with political assassinations, since the United States as a matter of general policy cannot condone assassinations. This last principle is overriding and most prevail in doubtful situations."

That was inserted at the instruction of the President, a much stronger statement of that than occurs in the State Department draft, and it finishes again with -- it says, "Clearly, at the present time we are unable to transfer arms to dissidents. We feel that the transfer of arms would serve very little purpose."

(The document referred to was marked Goodwin Exhibit No. 3-B for identification.)

The Chairman. Now you saw this telegram and approved it before it was sent by State?

Mr. Goodwin. I wrote it.

The Chairman. But you said that the State Department changed the language.

Mr. Goodwin. No. They had prepared an original draft which I changed and redrafted. Now that is here too, including a note from them saying that I wasn't satisfied with their draft.

The Chairman. So this was your own message, then, that you believed accurately reflected President Kennedy's policy?

Mr. Goodwin. It was prepared at the specific instruction of the President. It was shown to him before transmission.

The Chairman. It was shown to the President?

Mr. Goodwin. Oh, yes.

The Chairman. Very well.

Then, reading the first paragraph, "The President has now approved contingency plans discussed during your stay here with one major exception. You are not to request a pre-signed request for help from Dominican dissident groups."

Mr. Goodwin. I can explain that, Senator.

There was a proposal made in the State Department version that has been discussed that the dissident groups, that in case they managed to take over the government and there was some kind of fighting that they should request help from Venezuela, Columbia, a few of our allies and therefore we ought to prepare them in advance for such a request. The President thought that putting such a document in their hands would amount to a declaration of war and wanted it struck.

The Chairman. All right.

Then the second paragraph, "We consider it essential that you continue to work" -- well, before we go on with the second paragraph, in the first paragraph you say, "The President has now approved contingency plans discussed during your stay here with one major exception."

Now, what were those contingency plans that had been discussed?

Mr. Goodwin. They have them here, I believe. I think -- this is a very thick document, where you have a series of contingency plans, it discusses here. "The paramount interest of the United States is to assure that Castro-Communist elements not take over." It says Trujillo is weak, and then it is an analysis of the dissidents and their intention, the weakness of the Trujillo regime, and it goes into the covert activities, which, I think probably -- is that your principal interest at this time?

The Chairman. Yes.

Mr. Goodwin. There's an Appendix that sets forth all the covert activities. Recommendation A of the United States, not initiate the overthrow of Trujillo, that we inform pro-U.S.

tape 5b

dissidents that if they succeed on their own and form an acceptable government we will be glad to come in and help them and then the rest talks about here; ways of recognizing --

The Chairman. There is nothing in that contingency plan that contemplated the assassination of Trujillo himself?

Mr. Goodwin. It contemplated only the possibility that he might be assassinated, not that we would assassinate him.

The Chairman. But if he were assassinated, it would have presumably been the result of an action by a dissident group to overthrow his regime?

Mr. Goodwin. Yes.

The Chairman. All right.

Moving to Paragraph 2 in your message -- the President's message to Mr. Dearborn, "We consider it essential that you continue to work to strengthen pro-U.S. sentiment among dissident groups. Your work along this line has been invaluable. However, we must not run the risk of U.S. association with political assassination, since the U.S., as a matter of general policy cannot condone assassination. This last principle is overriding and must prevail in doubtful situations."

Now that language, it has been suggested by some members of the Committee that your concern here had to do with avoiding any relationship that might lead to a disclosure that the United States had indeed an interest in or was somehow involved in a plot to assassinate Trujillo. Because you say, "however we must not run the risk of U.S. association with political assassination, since the U.S. as a matter of general policy cannot condone assassination. This last principle is overriding and must prevail in doubtful situations."

Now don't those words at least convey or lend themselves to the interpretation that your primary concern was that the United States should not get caught?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, I don't believe so, Senator, because I think, to me, the plain meaning of the words and as I understood it was that we must not run the risk of U.S. association with political assassination. That means not be associated with the process of political assassination in any form.

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman?

In that same vein, if I could interrupt for just a second, is it true -- and would Counsel prompt me -- that the guns had already been dispatched?

Mr. Schwarz. Certain guns.

Senator Baker. I'm not talking about how many, Fritz. Guns had been dispatched.

Mr. Schwarz. But this telegram refuses the passage of four machine guns.

Senator Baker. I'm not going to argue with you. I am just saying that guns had been dispatched.

Senator Schweiker. What's the date of this telegram?

Senator Baker. This was just before the assassination, two days before the assassination.

Mr. Smothers. Carbines and pistols had been dispatched. Machine guns were in the country but had not been turned over to the dissidents.

Senator Baker. And now, in retrospect, we're not quite sure -- or there's no indication that the guns were actually used in the assassination, although they may have been in the back seat. Is that about the way it stacks up?

The Chairman. And the dissidents had requested machine guns.

Senator Baker. And the witness, or another witness, has said we thought the signals for assassination efforts for machine guns, when in fact it would appear that they went ahead with the material in hand.

Mr. Goodwin. I believe they had additional guns of their own. You wouldn't try it with a .38.

Senator Tower. I think the type of guns is important, because carbines or pistols wouldn't be used in an assassination against a heavily armed --

Mr. Goodwin. Trujillo travelled with bodyguards in a heavily armed car.

Also, if I might add, Senator --

The Chairman. Just to understand what you have said, as the author of this instruction and having conferred about it and having shown it to President Kennedy, are you testifying that it was your understanding that the meaning of that sentence -- that that sentence was intended to convey to Mr. Dearborn a prohibition against involving the United States in an assassination attempt on the life of Mr. Trujillo?

Mr. Goodwin. Absolutely. And in my first draft, I did it in terms of disclosure and changed that, struck that phrase about disclosure in order to make the point, and always at the President's instruction, to make absolutely clear to the Consul; because I used the very word disclosure, you can see here, and I crossed it out, in my handwriting.

Mr. Schwarz. Could you read into the record how you changed it?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, it's not very grammatical, it's embarrassing. Also, on the xerox -- I can't read the handwriting on the xerox.

"However we also must not" -- something -- "permit any danger of disclosing any U.S. association with political assassination or intervention in the Dominican Republic," it says or intervention. All that was struck.

Senator Baker. That sounds like exactly what the Chairman asked you. It sounds like it might be interpreted as, please don't get caught.

Mr. Goodwin. Absolutely, which is why I changed it, Senator, to read "However, we must not run risks of U.S.

association with political assassination since the U.S., as a matter of general policy, cannot condone assassination."

Senator Baker. I've got to say, and I don't mean it to be critical of this witness, but on first reading of this document, which was some time ago, it sounded a lot to me like the Mission Impossible opening when they say, if you get caught the Secretary will disavow any knowledge of this undertaking.

Mr. Goodwin. I wasn't familiar with the program at this time.

Senator Baker. Nor was I, at that time.

I need reassurance, and I think the record does, that the coincidence of that this cable, this wire, going out, say two days before the assassination, ' after guns in fact had been dispatched, although not the guns they requested, and under the circumstances it might lend itself to that interpretation.

This witness says it does not. There is no evidence to the contrary that I'm aware of, and I don't know that we need to pursue the issue any further.

Mr. Goodwin. If I may, Senator --

Senator Baker. And it also, as Smothers points out, that there was another communication saying destroy anything you've got, all those communications except this cable.

Mr. Aaron. That is standard practice. That is the standard practice for covert operations.

Mr. Goodwin. My response, Senator, is that the carbines and pistols were transferred in late January, 1960, subsequent to an authorization of January 12th, prior to Kennedy's taking office. I'm not sure of the date of the transfer. I haven't seen any indication of the date of that transfer. I do know that the President was not aware of any transfer of guns, because he told me he was not aware of it, until we finally requested a review a couple of months, a few months later, of our complete covert operations in the Dominican Republic, at which point we became aware that this transfer had occurred. I still don't know the date of that transfer.

And then it was the basis of that briefing paper, which obviously the Dominican Republic was not the first matter on President Kennedy's agenda when he came into office, on the basis of that briefing paper, he reviewed our policy and sent this telegram.

The Chairman. And was the purpose of the telegram to call off any further involvement by the United States government in an assassination attempt against Mr. Trujillo.

Mr. Goodwin. The purpose was to make sure the United States was not involved in any assassination. The purpose was to slow down that kind of over-zealousness. The President was not that anxious to see Trujillo thrown out.

Senator Tower. That doesn't totally answer the question.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, I'm sorry.

The Chairman. Well, you see, we know, from your testimony, that you had been advised in May that certain weapons had been transferred to certain dissident groups who at least had expressed an interest in assassinating Trujillo.

Mr. Goodwin. Correct.

The Chairman. So there was a connection, the connection being that the American government, through the CIA, furnished weapons to a group that had communicated its interest, if not its intention, to assassinate Trujillo.

So then you send this message, and I'm asking you if the message was meant to call this off, this involvement. What exactly was meant? You weren't saying recover those arms.

Mr. Goodwin. No, I wasn't. No.

The Chairman. But at the same time, you were saying, don't transfer the machine guns, were you not?

Mr. Goodwin. That's right. I think the President -- what we were saying is --

The Chairman. What exactly were you saying?

Mr. Goodwin. We were saying that we didn't want to do anything that would involve us further, the United States further, in any effort to assassinate Trujillo.

The Chairman. I see. I see.

Mr. Goodwin. Because we were not for assassination.

Senator Baker. The distinction is --

Senator Tower. Well, it says here in number 3, it says, continue to inform dissident elements of U.S. support of their position. So what, again the interpretation that can be drawn from this is that we don't want to be involved, but go ahead and have the other guys on, because their position would be to assassinate Trujillo, so what you are in effect doing is saying, let's don't be involved in it but let's indicate our support for what they are doing.

Mr. Goodwin. We were indicating our support for what they were doing on the basis of the estimate in the contingency paper that Trujillo's days were numbered and whoever took office we wanted to be our man, that is correct. And so we were going to support and try to retain relations and say we would support, which is not a difficult thing to do, as you know, any group that might take office and be moderate and pro-United States. That was all we were interested in, was having a pro-American government.

Senator Schweiker. Well, there are two other references here, Mr. Goodwin. Paragraph 3, "In case of assassination or overthrow" -- obviously you still had a reference there, whether initiated by a pro-U.S. group or not, was still part of the planning, and then back on page 3 you say, "In actual fact, we feel the transfer of arms would serve very little purpose and expose the United States to great danger of ultimate disclosure in participation in an assassination attempt," and that is scratched out, and says "assassination attempt," meaning that there was -- to me -- some other plan afoot to assassinate since the ultimate would still be disclosed if you gave this.

So what interpretation? I mean, this is rift here with assassination propositions, and the fact that you have "ultimate disclosure," fear of ultimate disclosure of participation, meant that certainly there was something already afoot, that ultimately would be disclosed if you went ahead with this pass through.

Mr. Goodwin. I think what we were saying is if we did, it would be found out ultimately, which means not right away, but later. In the case of assassination or overthrow, there were many groups, a continual flow of groups, of information, that there were various groups planning to assassinate Trujillo.

Senator Schweiker. Well, if that's what it meant, then why did you delete it?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, I think --

Senator Schweiker. If that was your interpretation, why in fact did you delete those four words, "ultimate disclosure of participation?"

Mr. Goodwin. Could you tell me what page you're reading from?

Senator Schweiker. Page 3.

The very words that you interpret one way were in fact deleted, which shows to me that you meant them another way, or they wouldn't have been deleted, and you substitute two words for it.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, I mean --

Senator Schweiker. So that you disguise that.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, the words were deleted because they were words that were going to give exactly the impression you are talking about. By talking about ultimate disclosure, we were afraid of being found out and what we didn't want was any association with the assassination attempts, so the reference to disclosure was struck and the words association were inserted.

Senator Schweiker. But you still call off -- you still left the language, in actual fact we feel the transfer of arms would serve very little purpose and expose the United States to great danger of association with assassination attempts. That still makes the point that you want to make, but you had other language, that says "ultimate disclosure of participation" which implies to me you were concerned about other things you were doing and things that had already been programmed and an operation that you were as much concerned about those being -- or you wouldn't have changed the language to still say the same thing with that one distinction about something else being afoot. I don't --

Mr. Goodwin. Well, I changed it, I believe, Senator -- I mean it's hard to be held responsible for language that was rejected because it was inaccurate. The problem was not one of disclosure, the problem was we did not want to be associated with assassination. That's why I struck it out.

Senator Schweiker. You changed the language, but the first part of it remained exactly the same. In fact, we feel the transfer of arms would serve very little purpose and expose the United States. So while you changed the language, you had the same condition there that you were not going to supply those arms.

Mr. Goodwin. We weren't, that's correct. We were not --

Senator Schweiker. But why were you not concerned about the other language, because --

Mr. Goodwin. Because the implication of the other language was that, well, we were worried about being found out, when in fact what the policy was was that we did not want to be involved. So I struck the implication.

Mr. Smothers. Mr. Goodwin, why was the communication of our withdrawing to Dearborn? The only way Dearborn could have been any closer to this plot would have been to become one of the dissident group. They told him everything they did, down to and including when the car was coming down the road. And we knew that, didn't we?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, I haven't seen any communications to us that said that. I would not have -- I mean, one of his instructions was to keep in very close contact with these dissident groups. I wouldn't be surprised if they dropped by and if they told him everything they were planning to do. But it's a long jump between saying you're going out and kill Trujillo and pulling it off, as many people tried.

But I was not aware, as I can remember, that he had any kind of detailed information.

Mr. Smothers. His messages back to CIA, in fact, convey those details, don't they?

Mr. Goodwin. Not that I saw after this, when these -- none of them that --

Mr. Schwarz. Well, did you know or did you not know that the dissidents intended to use the small arms, carbines and pistols, and other materials they had themselves, but intended to use the weapons we had supplied to assassinate Trujillo in precisely the way he was, in fact, assassinated? Did you know that before you wrote the telegram, or not?

Mr. Goodwin. No, because what I'm responding to is a request that says we can't do it unless we have the machine guns, and that's to be used for the assassination. We are saying, don't give them machine guns.

Later on they said to Dearborn, I mean he did tell me that afterwards, I don't know when they told him, well, we'll do it, whether or not we get the machine guns. I mean, that might also just bravado, or an effort to bluff us into saying, well, you might as well give it to them anyway since they're going to do it. I don't know why anyone would take on Trujillo with a .38. I wouldn't have thought that, if I thought about it.

President Kennedy went to Paris a week or two later. When the assassination actually occurred, we were all taken by surprise, so that Dearborn had detailed knowledge of when it was going to occur, we didn't. The Vice President -- he called an emergency meeting with the Vice President, a telegram was sent to Paris, and then the assassination ended up getting announced by Pierre Salinger.

But this instruction, the President told me he wanted to make it absolutely clear we're not getting involved in assassinations.

Senator Mondale. Mr. Goodwin, the record shows -- I think you've testified to this -- that toward the end of the Eisenhower Administration, they decided to supply arms to this dissident group and assist in the assassination of Mr. Trujillo. Then, as these documents show, at some point very near to the time that Mr. Trujillo was actually assassinated, a telegram was sent to our Consul saying, we don't want to be associated with this.

Why didn't we also say stop it, tell these people not to proceed further, in light of the fact that they may have thought, because of previous history, that their efforts to assassinate Trujillo had our blessing? In other words, there is still a piece missing, in my opinion, that should have suggested --

Senator Tower. Well, the next line says, "Continue to inform dissidents of U.S. support for their position."

Senator Mondale. In other words, if I were one of those dissidents and I got that from the United States pursuant to this earlier agreement, I would feel encouraged to believe that I had the support of the United States in killing Trujillo, and that we weren't exactly neutral in that, at least, our government was not really neutral, that it encouraged them.

It is true that they didn't get the machine guns, and it is true, apparently that what you understood was that they wanted the machine guns for assassination and they wanted the other weapons for personal defense, but there was still, it would seem to me, reason for them to believe that they had our support.

Why didn't we say or communicate to them we want you to stop and we don't want this man assassinated, and we want you to know that we will have nothing to do with it?

Why wasn't that final -- I just want to make one more point --

There was a similar telegram sent just before Diem was assassinated -- now these are entirely different matters, and I appreciate that -- but it always seems to me that if we're worried about human life, if we're worried about correcting a policy that may have set a possible assassination in motion, the way to really disassociate it is to say stop, and that is really what I don't understand.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, let me say, Senator, first of all, that the question of assassination now is paramount in people's minds. There is no doubt that we hoped that Trujillo would be overthrown. Not only was their no doubt, but there was a unanimous vote of the Organization of American States that it be ostracized and sanctions imposed with the hope that it might happen. And that occurred ever before we took office and we were in full agreement with it.

There are papers here which talk about the event of a coup of how you're going to get Trujillo some money to get him out of the country. Assassination was always a possibility, but a coup d'etat, a revolution or a civil war of some kind, a whole range of possibilities. And we did, in fact, believe that Trujillo was going to be overthrown one way or another and not necessarily, or even in paramount in our minds, by assassination because -- in fact, it would seem at that time to be the most difficult thing of all to do. He was heavily guarded and protected, ordinarily. They knew more about it than we did.

And when that happened, which we favored that happened, because we felt that the establishment of a democratic regime in the Dominican Republic was something not only beneficial to the United States and to our policies. I mean, when we're talking about Trujillo he was not -- I mean, about human life, the man was not only a Fascist, but he was a murderer. He used to have a freezer room in the back of his house where he would take people and show them the bodies of enemies.

But in any event, that's none of our concern, but our real concern was that this was regarded as an inevitability and we wanted to be associated with the new government.

Senator Mondale. I understand, but the argument is made with respect to that last telegram that it was a fig leaf telegram designed to cover our tracks should assassination occur and you argue, and I think persuasively, that you intended much more than that, you intended to make it clear that we were not supporting the assassination, that machine guns were not going to be used.

If that was our intent, and I take it that it was, why we didn't we go one step further and say please communicate to these dissidents who have every reason to believe from past history that we may be supporting the overthrow, including assassination, that we oppose the assassination of Mr. Trujillo.

Wouldn't that make it very clear then that we were out of the business?

Mr. Goodwin. I don't know. It would have made it, I suppose, clearer to them. On the other hand, I think, it's their country, and they could deal with Trujillo as they wanted to. It was not going to be us that dealt with him in this fashion.

Senator Mondale. Yeah, but see, if we were completely neutral I'd agree with that. If they wanted to assassinate Trujillo that's their business. I agree with it, that's none of our business.

But I think we were already implicated. It's sort of like being in a criminal conspiracy and then pulling out the day before the job is done and not telling anybody. It seems to me you should say, boys, I'm out and I don't want you to do it.

The Chairman. I've changed my mind.

Senator Mondale. That's why I don't understand.

Senator Baker. It's sort of like the situation that's been described to us where people were beyond control and you couldn't communicate with them after the forces had been set in motion.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, may I tell you, I don't know that there ever was any statement that those guns that were authorized on January 12th, either in the authorization or subsequent, for the purposes of assassination or otherwise.

Mr. Schwarz. Well, there were scores of those, and whether they reached you or not is a separate and important question, but there are four or five examples of communication to the Agency, and I think passed on to the State Department, and that those guns were to be used for an assassination effort whether or not the machine guns were obtained.

Senator Mondale. Well, you see, that could be important.

because if your understanding was as you have just described then the telegram makes more sense. But if in fact we were implicated, as I understood earlier in assassination attempts --

The Chairman. Fritz, look at the way Dearborn is. I think it's very important to understand this matter, to look at the way Dearborn apparently understood the instruction. He was the one to whom it was given, and he wires back, having received the instruction, the following -- now this is at Tab J, book 2 of 2, the second J.

It says -- first of all, do you have that, Mr. Goodwin?

Mr. Goodwin. Yes, I do.

The Chairman. It says: "One, I believe we can hold pro-United States dissidents, although with some grumbling on the basis set forth." Now you're not likely to hold them if you tell them you're no longer connected with their scheme and Mr. Dearborn had not been instructed to tell them that.

"Two, following our observations for Department and CAS considerations, A) if attempt is made by United States' friends to assassinate Trujillo, there will be accusations against us and the best we can do is see there is no proof."

Senator Baker. To see there is no proof.

The Chairman. "The greatest danger point is Thomas Stockard. He was given a small number of arms by dissident agents to hold several days and has told several persons dissidents obtained these items from Consulate. Stockard told me saying, I have informed him this cannot be true or I would know and when he requested me supply arms through him for dissidents, I told him it was impossible. He is greater danger because of personal embitterment against CAS, a matter of which CAS headquarters is fully informed."

Then he goes on to say that "since local CAS is now to engage mainly in intelligence collection and reporting, I recommend urgent transfer from the Dominican Republic of three CIA officers. If simmering assassination plot should materizlie they would be in danger and might be picked up for Trujillo-type questioning. This is easily avoidable by quick transfer now. These three have engaged in fully authorized activity which, if uncovered, could put the United States in bad public position. There is still considerable job in counterespionage and the collection and reporting and need to follow GODR, foster Leftist activities."

Now there's a vote on.

I read this because it suggests that Mr. Dearborn got a different message than the one you say you intended to send.

(A brief recess was taken.)

tape 6a

The Chairman. Let's go back on the record.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, that paragraph, to me, Senator, Paragraph A -- I am not sure whether his interpretation of instructions, or at least in specifics, seems to be clear. He says that he has informed them that he cannot supply arms to the dissidents, and that is what is what Kennedy, of course, had said in the telegram. And the request had been to know whether or not he could supply arms.

So that I see from that point of view, I am not sure, quite clear, in what way he misinterpreted the telegram.

The Chairman. Well, let's go down -- I don't think he has misinterpreted his instructions not to supply more arms. That's clear enough. But if you go down to B -- are you with me now?

Mr. Goodwin. Yes.

The Chairman. "Since local CAS" -- I guess that should be Chief of Station -- "Since local Chief of Station, then" -- and that would be CIA Chief of Station -- "Since local Chief of Station is now to engage mainly in intelligence collection and reporting, I recommend urgent transfer from Dominican Republic of three CIA officers. If simmering assassination plot should materialize" -- now that in itself, if I may digress a moment, suggests that in Dearborn's opinion assassination might be imminent. For he says "If simmering assassination plot should materialize, they would be in danger and might be picked up for Trujillo-type questioning. This is easily avoidable by quick transfer now." -- again the indication of his feeling that an assassination might be imminent, otherwise, why transfer them. "These three have engaged in fully authorized activities which, if uncovered, could put the United States in bad public position."

Now I would read those words as meaning that Mr. Dearborn anticipated at least the real possibility of assassination attempts in the immediate future and that he was recommending that those CIA officers that had been connected with having supplied weapons should be taken out of the Dominican Republic right away.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, I would agree with a good part of that, Senator, although I think that there were assassination plots simmering in the Dominican Republic and now, and of course this in fact took place. And I think he was concerned that the assassination would be unsuccessful, that Trujillo would pick up the Americans and find out not simply about the transfer of guns but the whole range of covert activities that they had been engaged in, torture them and perhaps kill them.

And he thought the safest thing to do, with this thing in the air, was to get them out of the country. There was nothing, I think, in the telegram that was sent to him that denies the possibility that Trujillo might be assassinated or that there might be an attempted assassination, which is the purport of Dearborn's, because if the assassination was successful, there was no need to get the CIA out.

The Chairman. But there is something more, really. If the possibility of assassination was a long continuing thing, always on the mind of Dearborn, why does he respond to this instruction by saying, get these men out now?

Mr. Goodwin. Well I think obviously these people had relayed to him that they're going to try to make the attempt anyway, with or without the machine guns. He thought the attempt might be abortive, and if so, he thought that all Americans or people that worked for him or with him would be in danger.

The Chairman. Then you would have to agree with me, wouldn't you, that in his opinion, Dearborn's opinion, he had evidence that suggested to him that an assassination attempt was imminent.

Mr. Goodwin. I think that's clear. Yes, I think it was.

The Chairman. And he took this sufficiently serious to recommend getting the three CIA agents out without further delay?

Mr. Goodwin. I think that's right. That's absolutely true, because I think he believed that there was a serious attempt in the offing, as indeed there was, and he was absolutely right and he was doing his job well.

I would like to say, if I might go back, that in terms of the telegram, is that I sat in the office with President Kennedy who instructed me to draft a telegram to say that he wanted nothing to do with political assassinations, which I did, so it's not a matter of interpretation, because he cannot testify to that matter, so it's not a question of reading the text so much as deciding whether or not I'm telling the truth about that instruction.

Mr. Schwarz. Assuming that you are telling the truth --

Mr. Goodwin. Thank you.

Mr. Schwarz. We have to explore whether something went wrong in the communication process, and I want to put some information in front of you and then see if you can help us explain what, if anything, went wrong.

Would you show him Exhibit 2-A.

Now Exhibit 2-A is a cable dated March 20th from the Agency in the Dominican Republic to the Agency in Washington. And reading in Paragraph 3, it describes the way in which -- it describes a plot.

In Paragraph 4, it says the following: "To do, they need five M-3's or comparable machine guns and 1500 rounds ammunition for personal defense in event fire fight. Will use quiet weapons for basic job." Now the basic job is apparently the assassination.

Now again, were you told -- now, in Exhibit 1, you were told in the briefing on covert action by the CIA that the carbines and the pistols had been passed for personal defense weapons and not to do the basic job, as this telegram indicates.

Mr. Goodwin. That's correct. That's what it says.

Mr. Schwarz. Right. I understand that.

Now, what I am trying to understand is, in telling you that the weapons had been passed for personal defense purposes, do you think that is consistent, is candid, in light of the fact that the Agency had been told that other weapons were going to be used for the basic job, that is the assassination.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, there are several communications regarding the weapon details of the plan and they are obviously inconsistent.

Mr. Schwarz. They are.

Mr. Goodwin. The telegrams say it, but on the other hand, a carbine or pistol is hardly a quiet weapon. I mean, I would regard that as saying I am going to strangle him. And if you're going to have a fire fight with machine guns, I mean in other words, it seems to me that somebody is interpretting what they say, or they might have had five or six different plans.

The request that came to the White House, finally, was very specific, and this is too, that additional weapons are needed in order to carry out an assassination plot. I mean, however you read this, they do say they need additional weapons to carry off an assassination. And that is what the President at that point had in mind on May 13th, around May 13th, about the original transfer, which was not pursuant to any policy that he had established or any directions that he had given, immediately said, you know, make it clear to Dearborn that we're not getting involved in assassinations. They can do what they want, but we are not going to get involved.

Senator Mondale. In other words, the President was advised by you that there was an assassination plot in which we were implicated and he told you that we don't want any part of it and you are to send a message on his authority saying that, and that is what you thought you had done?

Mr. Goodwin. I would phrase it a little bit differently, Senator, which is to say I would say there were people who wanted to assassinate Trujillo to whom we had given some guns and his response was probably like, you mean some idiot gave them guns? I said, yes. He said -- this is a paraphrase -- you know, if you knew Senator Kennedy, or President Kennedy, I mean, he said, well, let's make it clear. And if you compare my draft with the State Department draft, I was overriding, as they point out, because their draft says, we're trying to get this message through but we're blocked by Mr. Goodwin and have to send his message instead. They would rather blame me, of course, than the President.

It is clear that the stress is changed to make it clear that the President wants nothing to do and cannot condone assassination. It does not say cannot condone being caught at assassination, it says cannot condone assassination. And I did that because he told me to do that.

The Chairman. And you have characterized the Kennedy policy as one of getting the government no further involved because there had been a past involvement? He knew that and you knew that, to the extent that weapons had been furnished dissident groups who had expressed an interest in assassinating Trujillo. And your intention here in sending this telegram was to convey to Mr. Dearborn that the Kennedy Administration wanted no further involvement in this --

Mr. Goodwin. That's right. We found -- the President found out on May 13th that pursuant to the authorization that preceded his coming into office that a couple of carbines and pistols had been transferred in order to mount a major assault on a government that had lasted for thirty years, and it seemed at that point like a formidable threat to Trujillo.

He wanted to make it absolutely clear when he found out that anybody who wanted to assassinate Trujillo in the Dominican Republic that they were going to do it on their own, the United States would have nothing to do with it and we give out no more weapons and this is why he said we do not want to condone assassination or be associated with it. And that's why I wrote the telegram that I drafted that's in my handwriting.

Senator Tower. Well, may I ask you, then, what you interpretted the meaning of the first sentence in number 3, "Continue to inform dissident elements of U.S. support for their position?"

Mr. Goodwin. They were -- their position was that, what they regarded as that Trujillo should be overthrown and replaced by a moderate government. We supported that position, as did the other members of the Organization of American States, and we wanted to make it very clear that we did support that position, and we wished them well in their efforts to establish that position and if they did we would recognize their government and send them assistance, which we did.

As a matter of fact, we took much greater efforts to get rid of Ramfes Trujillo in the six months that followed the assassination than anything that preceeded it, including bringing the American fleet practically into the harbor at Cuidad Trujillo at the direction of the Secretary of Defense. Instead of carbines and pistols, we brought in destroyers, aircraft carriers and Marine battalions so that they would know what the consequences might be if they didn't get out when they got out.

If I might make one more point, Senator, if I may, is that the countries of South America are full of guns sent there by the American government to be used to kill thousands of people over the last several decades, and with the lone exception of both revolutionaries from underneath and armies from on top -- of course you're well-acquainted with that -- sent knowing that they would be used to kill people in internal struggles. The only distinction in this case is that Trujillo happened to be the head of State, which is a practical distinction, but you could hardly make a moral one.

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman, could I ask a question in that respect?

The Chairman. Well, I am not sure I agree with that, although that is a philosophical argument.

Senator Baker. Are you telling us, Mr. Goodwin, that assassination, not of heads of state, but assassination of lesser figures was a common, ordinary occurrence in South America at the behest of America or with American support?

Mr. Goodwin. No, I am talking about that we supply arms to revolutionary groups or to armed groups which we did in say Bolivia, or sometimes to the government itself, or in Chile we gave assistance of various kinds to dissident groups with the knowledge that our assistance would be used in internal struggles.

I don't have to use the word assassinations.

Senator Baker. But how about for internal struggles, then, as opposed to assassination?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, this is an internal struggle in the Dominican Republic.

The Chairman. I think you recognize the distinction, because it is well-defined in our criminal laws. There is a difference between first degree murder and manslaughter. There is supposed to connote a certain difference in moral connotations, and undertaking deliberate action that is targetted against a particular person with the intention of murdering that person is normally regarded under our criminal laws as the most reprehensible kind of homicide and therefore definted as murder in the first degree. So there must be some gradation there.

Mr. Goodwin. Well, there are gradations, although I do think that many of the activities against, say, someone like Allende or others are equally targetted in Latin American countries and not just general conflict or the killing of particular -- Mexicans, of course, traditionally go out and shoot down leaders of new guerrilla groups or insurgents, but not necessarily with our guns.

The Chairman. But in any event you're not testifying here to your certain knowledge the United States government participated in an assassination attempt or assisting in an assassination attempt --

Mr. Goodwin. No, I don't have any deep knowledge of that subject, what was the natural end consequence of our acts. In any event, I do want to return to this.

This was -- clearly President Kennedy was much closer to yours.

Mr. Schwarz. After the Trujillo assassination took place, President Kennedy was in Paris and as one of the documents we looked at indicates, there was a meeting at which Vice President Johnson was interested in finding out what had happened and you had a review of this, and discussed in that review that the weapons had been passed, the small arms and the machine guns hadn't been passed and the assassination occurred.

Now, after that review, were any steps taken to make, as a matter of more general, governmental policy, the policy which is expressed in the telegram you drafted at President Kennedy's instruction?

Mr. Goodwin. Not to my knowledge.

(A brief recess was taken.)

The Chairman. Do you have any more questions?

Mr. Schwarz. I don't have any more questions.

The Chairman. Do you have any other matters that you can tell us about the Trujillo assassination for our enlightenment?

Mr. Goodwin. On the assassination?

The Chairman. On the assassination.

Mr. Goodwin. I don't think so, but let me read through all of this, and when I come back the next time, I might have something else, if I can find anything else in there -- I do think this is pretty complete.

The Chairman. We will expect to hear you again early next week, on the Cuban phase of your testimony.

Mr. Goodwin. And Duvallier.

The Chairman. Mr. Dennin, they've been up all night, would like to ask two questions.

Mr. Dennin. Well, when you said there were no more questions, I just raised the possibility and you discussed it about meetings held after the assassination back in Washington when Mr. Dearborn came back as well as those meetings held after the assassination before he came back, at which the whole matter was discussed, initially with Vice President Johnson presiding and ultimately, the last one, with President Kennedy.

Mr. Goodwin. That's right. We had, of course, a series of emergencies. We had an emergency meeting, and cabled the President who was in Paris, and the first matter on our mind was how to keep Ramfes Trujillo, who was the son of Trujillo, from taking over, and we didn't know where he was, at first, it took us awhile to find out that he was in Paris, which at least indicated, Senator, that if they were planning it, it wasn't done in a very comprehensive fashion, and we found he was in Paris and we wanted to stop him from returning, to detain him, but it was too late. By the time we found out, he had already chartered an Air France jet and was on his way to Cuidad Trujillo, and I believe there was some effort made to bluff him off by sending messages to the plane in flight, diverting it to some American airport, but he didn't do that, and he landed and took over. And I think the principal aim of our policy from that point on was how to get him and his uncle, Hector -- and I forget the other fellow's name -- out of there so that the kind of moderate government that we wanted could be installed.

And John Martin was sent down to talk to him and to make various inducements like he could take his money out, it was discussed that if he would leave peaceably, but what finally happened was when McNamara moved the fleet in over the horizon and an Air Force General bombed the palace, that was the end, he got on his boat and left.

The Chairman. Air Force General?

Mr. Goodwin. A Dominican Air Force General.

He decided that was an easier target than the American fleet.

The Chairman. Was the bombing done at our instruction?

Mr. Goodwin. No, I don't believe so. I was trying to remember that, but I don't believe it was. As I remember, it was quite a surprise to us that this fellow had taken the initiative. The moving of the fleet was intended as sort of a threat that if they didn't get out we might come in and get them. There was no, however, no, at that point, no country attempted to do that, just to scare them. And the fleet was actually cheered in the Dominican Republic, a very rare occasion.

But this Air Force General did, and then he tried to make himself dictator and two of his own officers arrested him. They all had been trained in American military schools.

Mr. Schwarz. To complete the record on the response to the telegram We had Dearborn's reaction. We will read into the record the cable back from the CIA Chief of Station in response to the telegram Mr. Goodwin drafted.

Assume -- reference B, that's the telegram. "Final word on present policy in which KUBARK" -- that's CIA -- "work here must be based. Para 2 and Para 5, that reference, are for practical purposes retreat from previous policy. However, Headquarters aware extent to which ODYOKE" that is, the United States --"already associated with 01 EMSLEW" -- that is the assassination of Trujillo. -- "if we are to at least try 'cover up tracks' KUBARK personnel directly involved in 01 EMSLEW preparations must be withdrawn now."

I don't know if that merits comment or not. It just happens to be how it was interpretted by CIA.

Mr. Goodwin. I think it's accurate and it also reflects Dearborn's own disappointment that --

Mr. Schwarz. CIA.

Mr. Goodwin. CIA's disappointment, which is understandable.

The Chairman. Any further questions?

Senator Tower?

Mr. Smothers?

Mr. Smothers. Mr. Chairman, I'd rather wait till the return of the witness.

The Chairman. Yes.

Let's make certain that Mr. Goodwin has an opportunity to meet with the staff so that the pertinent documents that will up in connection with our interrogation on Castro will be reviewed. We're not interested in any kind of entrapment. We want you to be fully aware of whatever documentation we have so you can help enlighten us of your understanding of the policy at the time.

Mr. Goodwin. And whatever I bring I can give to you and then duplicate it.

Mr. Schwarz. Well, shall we plan, for safety, on the staff seeing you on Wednesday morning and having your testimony Wednesday afternoon, or could you be here by Tuesday?

Mr. Goodwin. Well, since I'm going to Rumford, Maine and getting the things out, I think it will be safer Wednesday, if that's not too inconvenient.

The Chairman. Wednesday?

All right. Thank you very much.

(Whereupon, at 6:35 o'clock p.m., the hearing was recessed, to reconvene at 8:30 o'clock a.m., Friday, July 11, 1975.)

United States Senate,
Select Committee to Study Governmental
Operations With Respect to Intelligence Activities,
Washington, D. C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 11:25 o'clock a.m. in Room 407, The Capitol, the Honorable Richard Schweiker presiding.

Present: Senator Schweiker (presiding).

Also present: Frederick Baron and Rhett Dawson, Professional Staff Members.

PROCEEDINGS

Senator Schweiker. Would you raise your right hand?

Do you solemnly swear that the testimony you are about to give is the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, so help you God?

Mr. Tweedy. I do.

Senator Schweiker. It has been nice meeting you.

Mr. Tweedy. Thank you very much.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Baron. Mr. Tweedy, you have just received the oath from Senator Schweiker, who has now left the room, and you are under no obligation to continue to testify in his absence, but obviously the Committee would appreciate it greatly if you would continue to testify.

Are you willing to continue to testify in the Senator's absence?

Mr. Tweedy. I plan to testify fully.

Mr. Baron. You are willing to testify to the truth as best as you can do it?

Mr. Tweedy. I will indeed.

Mr. Baron. Are you aware that you have the right to counsel?

Mr. Tweedy. I am.

Mr. Baron. You are appearing here voluntarily without counsel?

Mr. Tweedy. I am.

Mr. Baron. Are you also aware that you may cease answering questions at any point if you wish to consult with counsel?

Mr. Tweedy. I am.

Mr. Baron. Finally, are you aware that all of your Constitutional rights are intact, including your Fifth Amendment rights to remain silent?

Mr. Tweedy. I am.

Mr. Baron. All right, then.

Let us proceed to review a set of documents which were not available to us in your first examination. The attempt here today is not to go over a lot of old ground that we covered in your first examination but to focus our concerns on a few main events in the alleged story of an assassination plot against Lumumba, and to refresh your recollection by review of these documents.

Let me introduce as Exhibit 1 a cable from Allen Dulles to the Leopoldville Station, marked for Robert Guthman on October 26th, 1960.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 1 for identification.)

TESTIMONY OF BRONSON TWEEDY

Mr. Baron. We discussed this cable in your previous appearance, did we not?

Mr. Tweedy. August 26th.

May I correct the date? It is August 26th.

Mr. Baron. Certainly.

Mr. Tweedy. It is rather important.

Mr. Baron. It is August 26th.

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, we did indeed discuss it the last time.

Mr. Baron. After you took another look at this cable this morning before we went on the record, you made a remark to the effect that this cable was a source of authority as far as you were concerned at the time.

Is that your impression now?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Let me just add to that a bit. The cable per se I did not remember, but it is perfectly obvious the cable is the authority. When I first talked to Mr. Bissell about this, he certainly implied the only reason the subject was being raised is because it had been of national policy level concern. I do not think it could be more clear-cut than that. This was basically, this was the formal expression of that by the Director himself.

I cannot remember which came first, did I see this cable first, or did I talk to Mr. Bissell first. I suspect that I talked to Mr. Bissell first. It must have been absolutely in the same time period.

This merely confirmed what I think I probably heard from Mr. Bissell first.

Mr. Baron. In this discussion with Mr. Bissell, you are referring to the subject of getting access to Lumumba for the purpose of assassination.

Mr. Tweedy. I think it probably came up in the sense that the thrust of the American position was that there was no solution in the Congo without the fall from power of Mr. Lumumba, and no measure should be overlooked to achieve this -- constitutional, revolutionary and indeed, executive action, if you want to call it that.

Mr. Baron. Meaning assassination?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

But none of these possible measures were excluded, and the main point was that everybody agreed that Lumumba had to go or we were in for very serious trouble in the Congo.

Mr. Baron. You were referring a moment ago in discussing this cable from Allen Dulles to the fact that when you first discussed the possibility of assassinating Lumumba as one means of removing him from power with Richard Bissell, Bissell referred to this cable.

Mr. Tweedy. No, I would have seen this cable when it went out. I am afraid you cannot pin me down on this, because I cannot remember the sequence of events. It would have been a perfectly natural follow-up to my discussion with Bissell. It is conceivable that this went out before I talked to Bissell, I do not exclude that, but the two were totally in tandem.

Mr. Baron. Having taken a look at all of the documents that we are about to introduce into the record today, before we begin taking your testimony on the record, are you able to pinpoint with any more precision your initial discussion with Mr. Bissell of the prospect of assassinating Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. Pinpoint it in terms of time?

Mr. Baron. Yes.

Mr. Tweedy. No, not in terms of time. I can only assume --

Mr. Baron. It would have taken place shortly before this Allen Dulles cable?

Mr. Tweedy. Either shortly before, or shortly after, because the next series of cables obviously get the show, as it were, on the road.

May I comment just generally on those cables as a group? There are no surprises in them as far as I am concerned, in terms of detail. Much of it, even to this day, I still do not remember.

One aspect emerges very clearly for me, that we were very careful about examining this on the possibilities of doing anything against Lumumba. Basically, this whole period was a series of exchanges with the field who were seeking, as you can see from that cable traffic, various measures that might perfor or achieve the goal, including, indded assassination, but not by any means limited to that, that we were in trouble finding means which appeared secure, particularly means which kept the U.S. hand hidden. It is the to and from, and the atmosphere of it which is very familiar to me; the details of it, much of it even on reading them, is rather unfamiliar to me. I found no surprises in it.

Mr. Baron. Having refreshed your recollection by reviewing these cables, can you add any greater specificity to the record about the substance of your conversations with Richard Bissell on the possibility of assassinating Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. I think what we used to do, as I remember it, when it came to the technical exchange with the Station on one asset versus another, the possible security weakness of this man versus the possible strengths of another, Bissell left this largely to me. I do not mean to say that we did not from time to time review it. He did not debate with me on whether White Clam.lu was somebody who was worth dealing with or not, because he had Belgian connections, for example.

Mr. Baron. You are saying he would have left the operational details to you?

Mr. Tweedy. The operational details of trying to come up with some solution that looked as if it made sense, and had a promise of success. I do not recall that we would discuss this type of a cable in detail. As you can see, he released quite a number of them, because he wanted to remain familiar with them.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Baron. Back on the record on this subject.

Mr. Tweedy. No, I do not have any further recollection of detailed discussions with Bissell on this. On the other hand, it was perfectly clear that he remained actively interested in it. I am sure that he was the one that had the idea of Justin O'Donnell, for example, I think he undoubtedly came up with that idea. As you recall, I had forgotten entirely that Justin O'Donnell had ever played a role in this. I am sure when he fixed on O'Donnell the possibility to assist the Chief of Station he must have discussed this with him. I can almost say I remember it, but hardly.

Mr. Baron. Do you have any recollection of what Bissell said to you in the series of discussions on the prospect of assassinating Lumumba about the level at which the exploration of this prospect had been authorized?

Mr. Tweedy. No. That is the aspect I was never clear on except that it was perfectly clear to me that he was quite confident that this was -- I am now talking about the elimination of Lumumba by whatever means. I am not talking necessarily about assassination; I want to be quite clear on that.

I was quite clear in my mind that the policy levels of Washington were agreed that Lumumba must go. I cannot go any further than that. I cannot say, for example, that Bissell said I think as an Agency we should consider assassination on this or that this had been discussed with the policy levels of government. I do not know, and it was never made clear to me nor does this cable make clear, but it was perfectly clear that Mr. Dulles felt quite quiet in his mind about discussing any of these aspects with the State Department or the Ambassador.

Mr. Baron. Off the record.

(Whereupon, a brief recess was taken.)

Mr. Baron. We are back on the record now.

When we stopped, we were discussing your account of your meetings with Richard Bissell where the subject of assassinating Lumumba had arisen among other means that had been considered in disposing of Lumumba. Did Richard Bissell ever indicate directly or indirectly to you that he had the authority of the President of the United States for moving forward with an operation which might include assassinating Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. Let me make it quite clear, he certainly never mentioned the President at all.

Mr. Baron. By name?

Mr. Tweedy. By name, or even by any indication. It was merely my impression reinforced, certainly, either before or after, of this cable of Allen Dulles that this was a policy level decision, but the extent to which the Executive had assassination discussed with him at all, I cannot comment on.

WARD & PAUL

It is perfectly obvious that the Agency felt that it had the support of the Executive in efforts to eliminate Lumumba. It was at least my impression throughout this whole period that if it ever came down to the point where somebody said, I think we can do it, and we decided upon the means, that someone would have said, well, before we do, obviously there has to be final approval. I would not have known where the final approval would have come from. I would not expect that my correspondence with the Chief of Station in Leopoldville would result in the assassination of Mr. Lumumba without further reference.

Mr. Baron. You were under the impression that whatever steps you were involved in toward eliminating Lumumba, as you put it, were fully authorized at the highest level of the government?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, I was.

Mr. Baron. That would include the President?

Mr. Tweedy. I do not really think I can answer that question, Mr. Baron. When somebody at my level, fairly senior though it was, receives clear-cut assurances that the policy level wants something done, it is very difficult for him to judge whether the President per se has been in contact with the Agency or that he has done this through his National Security Advisor, the Secretary of State, or whoever. There could be no way that I could judge that.

I think it would be quite misleading if I were to try to read into it either then or now.

Mr. Baron. Whatever impression you had of the extent of the authority for the steps that you were taking to eliminate Lumumba was derived from your conversations with Richard Bissell?

Mr. Tweedy. And the cable.

Mr. Baron. And the cable by Allen Dulles.

Mr. Tweedy. Which merely indicated to me that the Agency was confident that it had its policy guidance and was thus acting accordingly.

Mr. Baron. Between this cable on August 26th which Allen Dulles dispatched to the Congo and the cable we will now mark Exhibit 2, which is a cable from yourself to Leopoldville on September 19th, marked Eyes Only, Guthman from Jadwin--

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 2 for identification.)

Mr. Baron. Were there any other meetings that you recall between yourself and Richard Bissell where he asked you to move beyond the exploratory stage to the implementation stage in assassinating Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. I do not know at all. I just do not recall that that ever occurred.

Mr. Baron. Let us turn, then, to this cable.

This cable indicates --

Mr. Tweedy. This is the one on the 19th?

Mr. Baron. Yes.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Baron. Back on the record.

This cable begins with your indication to the Chief of Station that someone was proceeding shortly to the Congo who would announce himself as Sid from Paris.

First of all, to backtrack, Guthman, in this cable, is the Chief of Station, is that right?

Mr. Tweedy. Correct.

Mr. Baron. Who we agreed would be referred to as the Chief of Station or by his alias, Hedgmena, and Jadwin is --

Mr. Tweedy. My pseudonym.

Mr. Baron. Did you have a first name in the pseudonym?

Mr. Tweedy. Thomas K.

Mr. Baron. Who was Sid from Paris?

Mr. Tweedy. I was trying to think. The identity is Sid

Brown. Sid Brown as a name means nothing to me.

Mr. Baron. If I represent to you that we have had testimony from Sidney Gottlieb that this identity stood for himself, does that refresh your recollection?

Mr. Tweedy. It would not surprise me. It was my assumption that it probably was, but I could not recall, so I find -- in other words, your explanation, I think, is what I would have expected.

Mr. Baron. Do you have any independent recollection of dispatching Sidney Gottlieb on a mission to the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. I have the most unclear recollection that I discussed with Mr. Bissell Sidney Gottlieb's going to the Congo. I have no recollections of any conversations I had with Mr. Gottlieb himself, although I am quite convinced I had them.

In other words, it is inconceivable to me that he would have gone to the Congo without seeing me. I cannot recall the substance of our discussions, although I assume, and I imagine Mr. Bissell must have shared in this, we discussed what it was all about, the operational problems involved, so that he, in turn, could be somewhat sensible about what his own supporting role in this might be.

When I say this, it is a reasonable assumption but it is not direct recollection.

Mr. Baron. Does this cable indicate to you that you did dispatch Sidney Gottlieb to the Congo on a highly sensitive mission?

Mr. Tweedy. It does indeed.

When you say I dispatched him, I would say it would be more accurate to say that Mr. Bissell and I dispatched him. I am sure the authority for him going would have come from he rather than me, but we arranged the details.

Mr. Baron. Your comment about the fact that the authority would have flowed from Mr. Bissell directy is borne out, is it not, by Mr. Bissell's initials on this cable?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, exactly.

Mr. Baron. Was that a fairly unusual practice, to have both the DDP and the Chief of the Africa Division sign a cable?

Mr. Tweedy. Quite common. Throughout the organization on matters of either particular sensitivity or so important that the DDP wished to be constantly informed about correspondence on a subject, the Chief of the Division would originate and send out cables and have it actually signed off by the DDP. That was quite a common practice in the Agency.

Mr. Baron. Do you have a recollection, having seen this document, of the fact that you set up a special channel using the YQPROP sensitivity indicator?

Mr. Tweedy. I did not recall YQPROP, but I recall special channels.

Mr. Baron. This would have restricted all traffic from yourself to Chief of Station, is that correct?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes. My Deputy would also have access to it in my absence.

Mr. Baron. That would be Glen Fields?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. Would Richard Bissell have access to it?

Mr. Tweedy. Indeed he would.

Mr. Baron. Allen Dulles also?

Mr. Tweedy. Certainly if he wanted, absolutely.

Mr. Baron. Why was a special communications channel set up in this cable?

Mr. Tweedy. Because of the sensitivity of the subject. This, again, was a frequent procedure in the Agency on sensitive matters. If one was about to mount a sensitive operation, one of the first things normally done was to set up special communications procedures so the dissemination of the messages could be restricted to what was required.

Mr. Baron. In this case, the especially sensitive subject to which you were restricting communications access was the elimination of Lumumba by one means or another?

Mr. Tweedy. That is correct.

Mr. Baron. What was the assignment that Sidney Gottlieb was to explain to the Chief of Station when he arrived in the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. That, I do not recall. I can only assume that Sidney Gottlieb would have discussed with the Chief of Station instruments which TSD might have which could be of assistance in an assassination attempt. I assumed he discussed his inventory, whatever it might be, and the two presumably were trying to come to some conclusions as to what might have the best chance or the most practical chance of being used.

This is my assumption. I think in this early stage, that would have been the purpose of the exercise.

Mr. Baron. Let me represent to you the testimony of Sidney Gottlieb about two conversations that he had at Headquarters before he undertook the mission to the Congo in September of 1960.

First, when Dr. Gottlieb looked at this cable and some subsequent cables which we will discuss today, he said these cables applied to himself. He confirmed the fact that he took a trip to the Congo and arrived on September 26th as is indicated by a subsequent cable, and left on October 5th, as is indicated by another cable.

Dr. Gottlieb said before he left the Congo -- I am sorry, before he left for the Congo -- he had a conversation with you and Glen Fields in which you instructed him to take a lethal material to the Congo and give it to the Chief of Station with instructions to assassinate Lumumba if it were possible and to instruct the Chief of Station in the technical means by which this lethal material could be administered through Lumumba's food or toothpaste or something that he would ingest.

Mr. Gottlieb also testified that in that conversation you indicated to him that these instructions were being given at Richard Bissell's authority.

Did that conversation take place?

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Tweedy. His testimony does not basically refresh my memory. The only aspect of it which I would find unrealistic is that he had an instruction from me to tell the Chief of Station to use this material and go ahead and assassinate Lumumba, as if, in effect, that is all the authority that was necessary.

To be frank, that does not make sense. The rest of it is perfectly feasible. I do not recall it in the detail, but I am not going to deny what Sid said. I think his recollection that I told him, in effect, to go to the Chief of Station and sort of get the show on the road and use the poison and assassinate Lumumba without any further ceremony is just not the way it would have happened.

Mr. Baron. Why is that?

Mr. Tweedy. For the simple reason that under no circumstances would that instruction have been given by me without reference to higher authority up through the chain of command.

Mr. Baron. When you say reference to higher authority, what do you mean?

Mr. Tweedy. My higher authority in the first instance would be Mr. Bissell.

Mr. Baron. Dr. Gottlieb did testify --

Mr. Tweedy. I understand.

Mr. Baron. -- that you referred in your conversation with him to the fact that you had authority from Mr. Bissell for the assignment you were giving to Gottlieb.

Mr. Tweedy. The only thing that Mr. Gottlieb would disagree on is that there would be no further reference, which his statement implies from Leopoldville before they took any action on this matter, in other words, take the final action on this matter, and that was never a matter, to the best of my recollection, that was ever delegated by Mr. Bissell. In other words, Mr. Bissell never said, look, you have the picture, go ahead and do it in your own good time without any further reference to me or anybody else, nor is the tenor of this correspondence as I read it that way at all.

Mr. Baron. Do you recall if Mr. Bissell ever went as far as telling you that if an opportunity arose to carry off the assassination of Lumumba in a situation where it would be practically impossible to confirm, that there was authority for proceeding with the assassination with Headquarters, that the Chief of Station would be, under those circumstances, authorized to proceed to assassinate Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. No, I do not.

Mr. Baron. Do you have a recollection about that one way or the other?

Mr. Tweedy. I do not recall that he ever put it to me this way.

Mr. Baron. Let us then break down your statement about this meeting with Dr. Gottlieb into component parts.

You agree now, having heard Dr. Gottlieb's testimony, that it is true that you had asked Dr. Gottlieb to go to the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. Indeed, as I assumed I had, yes.

Mr. Baron. It is also true that you knew that Dr. Gottlieb was to carry a lethal material to the Chief of Station in the Congo?

Mr. Tweedy. If he says so, I do not disagree with him. I do not frankly recall that at this point, but I am perfectly wedded to accept what he says.

Mr. Baron. Assuming, for the moment, that you would have required the Chief of Station to check back with Headquarters before he carried out an assassination mission, would it be true that you assigned Dr. Gottlieb the task of instructing the Chief of Station to assassinate Lumumba on that basis?

Mr. Tweedy. Dr. Gottlieb was the head of the Technical Services Division, or whatever it was called in those days.

Mr. Baron. Let me jump in for a moment.

At this point, for about a year and a half, he was the Science Advisor to Mr. Bissell, and he moved to Technical Services shortly thereafter.

Mr. Tweedy. The way you put it to me was that I instructed Gottlieb to assassinate Lumumba. The answer to that is, I am sure I never instructed Gottlieb to assassinate Lumumba. This is the way you put it to me.

Mr. Baron. Let me correct that.

What I meant to say was, would you have asked Gottlieb to convey the instruction to the Chief of Station that he was to assassinate Lumumba if he found a way to do it and if he confirmed it with Headquarters?

Mr. Tweedy. My answer to that is almost certainly not. That would have been covered in other correspondence, which I think is demonstrated by these cables, to the Chief of Station direct from me with authority of Mr. Bissell. I would not have used, neither would Mr. Bissell, Mr. Gottlieb as the channel for this instruction.

Mr. Baron. Dr. Gottlieb has also testified that, aside from carrying the materials to the Chief of Station and instructing in their use and giving him an instruction about a mission to assassinate Lumumba, that he had one further role in the Congo; he was to serve as a technical advisor to the Chief of Station on the feasibility of using these biological substances to carry off the operation.

As Gottlieb put it, Gottlieb was to stay down there for a short period of time to determine the technical feasibility of the operational plan that the Chief of Station might come up with.

Mr. Tweedy. This seems quite reasonable to me. Presumably with his technical knowledge of the nature of these materials he would be in a position to either comment on or advise the Chief of Station as he attempted to put together some kind of operation. That makes good sense to me.

He would require, basically, a technical advisor.

Mr. Baron. Dr. Gottlieb also testified that the materials he took with him were of a fairly short life. Their toxicity would wane within a matter of weeks.

Given that bit of information to refresh your recollection, does that make it more likely that Gottlieb was there to aid the Chief of Station in actually carrying off the administration of these drugs, as opposed to giving him general instructions in the use of such lethal substances?

Mr. Tweedy. I do not know really that I can comment on that. If the materials would deteriorate fast, the use of them, if possible, I would stress the latter, would necessarily have to be expeditied, but the overwhelming concern of Headquarters and the field, again, demonstrated in this correspondence was our concern that this thing could be done at all, that it be done right, securely, and that the U.S. hand should be concealed.

If this were at odds with the life of these materials, I think that would have just been too bad. But I think it is perfectly clear that we would not have expedited anything at the risk of doing it unprofessionally.

tape 1b

Mr. Baron. At the point that Gottlieb left for the Congo after talking with you, would he have been enpowered to convey to the Chief of Station that an assassination of Lumumba could be carried off if he could meet the criteria you just laid out, concealment of the U.S. hand and use of these materials before their potency waned?

Mr. Tweedy. My answer to that would be he would be in no position to do anything more with the Chief of Station if they reached that point in planning, that as of the last time he was at Headquarters that there would probably be an approval from Washington.

Mr. Baron. You would expect, then, the Chief of Station would have been expected to reconfirm with Headquarters the fact that he had a go-ahead?

Mr. Tweedy. It would never have occurred to me otherwise.

Mr. Baron. It would be your testimony that, although you do not specifically recall your conversation with Dr. Gottlieb, you would have made that clear to Dr. Gottlieb?

Mr. Tweedy. I would have thought so, yes, but I could not comment any further.

Mr. Baron. The reason for that is you do not recall the conversation?

WARD & PAUL

Mr. Tweedy. Not only that; Dr. Gottlieb was as familiar as I was with (a) the sensitivity of this particular project and what was involved and the way that the Agency did its business, which was things of this kind were not dealt with on sort of an offhand basis.

Mr. Dawson. What is offhand?

Mr. Tweedy. The fact that the field and Dr. Gottlieb were given something in the nature of a blank check as to how they would go about it and when, without further reference to Headquarters.

Mr. Dawson. If we are to tie this to the cables, then, is there something in the cables predating Gottlieb's visit to the Congo which would lead you to believe that it had previously been authorized by some words in those cables?

Mr. Tweedy. What, Mr. Dawson, had previously been authorized?

Mr. Dawson. The authorization of the assassination effort, the elimination of Lumumba.

Mr. Tweedy. Only in the most general terms. No operation had been put forward by the field. In our business, these things were done by operational planning, at which point one came up with an operation that was agreed upon by the Station and by Headquarters, and this, then, would have been either implemented or not, according to the say-so from Headquarters.

Mr. Dawson. That kind of operational planning is after Mr. Gottlieb arrives in the Congo, is that correct?

Mr. Tweedy. This, in effect, is that (Indicating). You can tell by the Chief of Station, there is no further reference to Mr. Gottlieb, as I recall.

Mr. Baron. In this cable traffic?

Mr. Tweedy. In this cable traffic, was looking at all sorts of ways and means of eliminating Lumumba, not restricted to assassination, which coincides exactly with my recollection of the period between when the subject was first broached to the Station and that rather indefinable period when, in effect, it was all over, which, I suppose, basically is the disappearance of Lumumba.

I think all of this traffic supports my contention that under the instructions he was given, the Chief of Station in Leopoldville set about exploring all alleys and found none crystal clear. There were problems with all of them. Some looked more promising than others. Individuals who might be used obviously looked more promising than others. Some were discussed and discarded. We commented on some. And so it went.

Mr. Baron. I think that we should proceed in a moment to go through these cables with a close eye, one by one.

One further point in Dr. Gottlieb's testimony, to be fair to him, he said he was under the impression that it was general Agency procedure that in a mission like this one the Chief of

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

Station probably would check back with Headquarters, that any prudent Chief of Station would check back to reconfirm his authorityto go ahead with an assassination operation, but Dr. Gottlieb said in his conversation with you he was not told that he should convey to the Chief of Station the requirement that he should check back with Headquarters before he proceeded with the assassination of Lumumba.

Mr. Tweedy. I cannot comment on his statements, because I cannot recall what I said to him. It certainly is perfectly conceivable to me that I could have had this conversation with him and not mentioned this, that this would be covered in all the basic correspondence that I was having with the Chief of Station.

Mr. Baron. So then it is possible -- or is it probable that in your instructions to Sidney Gottlieb about his mission to the Congo you might not have explicitly mentioned the requirement that the Chief of Station return to Headquarters to reconfirm his authority to move ahead with the assassination.

Mr. Tweedy. It is, I suppose, possible. I am not going to say it is not possible. I am merely saying that that is not the way we did business, and on the whole, Sidney Gottlieb would be as familiar with that as I would -- perhaps not as familiar with it, because he was on the technical side where I was on the operational side and used to this chain of command thing and the relationship between the Division and Station Chiefs in the field, to a greater extent than Dr. Gottlieb would.

The last thing I am doing is impugning his veracity and his testimony.

Mr. Baron. When you say it is not the way we do business, you meant to say it was your understanding in general Agency practice that the Chief of Station in a situation like this would be expected to check back with Headquarters?

Mr. Tweedy. When a Chief of Station was given the authority to carry out something entirely on his own initiative, that was made quite clear -- I'm not talking about this case, I mean generally -- this was made quite clear.

Mr. Baron. When you were talking about the fact that "this was not the way that we generally did business," you were not referring to the fact that you would have made it absolutely explicit in any conversation with Sidney Gottlieb or anybody like him who was undertaking a sensitive mission that the Chief of Station would be expected to check back?

Mr. Tweedy. If I had not mentioned this to Sidney Gottlieb and he said I did not, I am perfectly prepared to believe him, it would be because it never occurred to me that the Chief of Station would act in any other way. That is it.

Mr. Dawson. Of course, Mr. Hedgeman also testified that it never would have occured to him to have carried this out without having checked back, and he did so, of course; the cables will show that very clearly. What we are trying to focus on is exactly what Mr. Gottlieb conveyed to Mr. Hedgeman, which, of course, you could not testify to.

Mr. Tweedy. I could not.

Mr. Baron. Or what you said to him.

Mr. Tweedy. I think it is quite possible that I did not say to Mr. Gottlieb, Sid, for Heaven's sake, do not have the Chief of Station go off assassinating this fellow without referring back to Headquarters. It would never have occurred to me to do that. It would have been, in my view, superfluous.

Mr. Dawson. You are, of course, aware that Mr. Hedgeman was aware of this practice in the Agency?

Mr. Tweedy. Certainly.

Mr. Dawson. You had seen that happen. He had only been Station Chief for a short time; in spite of that, he was still aware of Agency practice?

Mr. Tweedy. I think that it would be perfectly true to say that any clandestine services officer who had reached a certain seniority in field experience whether he was Chief of Station or not, he would have sucked this in with his mother's milk. We were, if I may say so, a very disciplined organization in that regard.

Mr. Dawson. Specifically as to Mr. Hedgeman, that would apply to him also?

Mr. Tweedy. It would indeed.

Mr. Baron. Let us proceed then to a document we will mark

Exhibit 3, which is a cable from Bronson Tweedy to the Chief of Station for his eyes only on September 22, 1960.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 3 for identification.)

Mr. Tweedy. This is mostly discussion of 04 [redacted]

Mr. Baron. The man you referred to was at this time an agent that was in contact with the Chief of Station?

Mr. Tweedy. I remember him very well. I could not possibly remember his name. I remember him very well; I met him later.

Mr. Baron. He proved to be a highly effective agent for the Station?

Mr. Tweedy. He was a very good intelligence agent, an excellent intelligence agent, for the simple reason that he was able to make contact with groups and media in the Congo which was very difficult for non-Africans to reach. He was, for a year or two, a first-class intelligence source basically: not an action source, but an intelligence source.

Mr. Baron. When you read the sentence that is at the beginning of paragraph B on the first page where it says: "Concur this possibility worth watching, but if decided support for YQPROP objectives. Believe essential such be provided through third national channel with PBPRIME role completely concealed."

What are you referring to there?

Mr. Tweedy. I am not sure; I do not remember. I do not recall what the incoming cable said.

What I am obviously saying is 04 [redacted] had, I guess, an 05 [redacted] wife who was, at least had been, 08 [redacted] [redacted]. I think what I was saying is, if we wanted to use Schotroffe directly in an assassination attempt, that I would not dismiss it out of hand.

Mr. Baron. You would be concerned about its security?

Mr. Tweedy. Absolutely.

Mr. Baron. You then would say the phrase "YOPROP objectives" would refer to an assassination attempt?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baren. That the assassination, discussion of an assassination attempt, was being restricted to the YOPROP channel?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. On the last page of this document --

Mr. Tweedy. The only thing that worries me about this conclusion of mine is this, the more I read it, 2-B is another paragraph, which may not have had anything to do with Schotroffe at all and I do not feel, at least I cannot recollect, why any leaks would almost certainly have included the French if Schotroffe were involved in this. Thus, I am inclined to feel I am talking about somebody else and not Schotroffe.

Mr. Baron. I will represent to you in other cable traffic, I believe, which we will review as we proceed here, there was discussion of the use of ano[illegible].

Mr. Tweedy. This was probably the case. I do not think this refers to Schotroffe. B here I do not think refers to Schotroffe. I cannot recall --

Mr. Baron. Who?

YQPROP objectives would still refer to exploring possibilities to an assassination attempt?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. This may refer to exploring it with a different agent?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. On the last page, paragraph 3, it tells the Chief of Station: "Not intended you construe above comments as basically negative. You and colleague understand we cannot read over your shoulder as you plan and assess opportunities. Our primary concern must be concealment PBPRIME role unless outstanding opportunity emerges which makes calculated risk first class bet. Ready entertain any serious proposals you make based our high regard both your professional judgments."

What are you referring to in that paragraph? What message are you conveying to the Chief of Station?

Mr. Tweedy. Well, I think if you read the cable you will notice that we have found difficulty with a number of his proposals. These were exploratory proposals. I wanted --

Mr. Baron. For carrying off an assassination mission?

Mr. Tweedy. You keep coming off with an assassination mission as if this was always just around the corner. What I am saying is, we are in a period here quite common in our business of very intensive operational planning and exploration.

All sorts of things were coming up from the field. I had commented on it here; in the end, I say, do not be discouraged because you do not see the probable channel we will use. I assume the colleague was Sid Gottlieb, because I guess he was still there.

Mr. Baron. The first time he had not arrived, but you had already cabled that his arrival was imminent?

Mr. Tweedy. I assume that that is the colleague. I do not think he would have talked to anybody else on it. That is all it means.

It is, if you like, a technique of management.

Mr. Baron. Moving on to a document that we will mark Exhibit 4, the next cable, is from Allen W. Dulles of September 24, 1960 and your pseudonym is also listed as one of the senders of the cable to the Chief of Station.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 4 for identification.)

Mr. Baron. In this cable, in the first paragraph, it says: "We wish give every possible support in eliminating Lumumba from any possibility resuming governmental position or if he fails in Leop" -- meaning Leopoldville -- "setting himself in Stanleyville or elsewhere."

First, for the record, any time your pseudonym "Jadwin" or your name "Tweedy" appears in the upper lefthand corner of a cable or your signature appears on the bottom, you dispatched that cable? Is that not right?

I am referring generally to the cable traffic.

Mr. Tweedy. What it means is this. It could mean several things, but I personally dictated the cable and dispatched it without further reference, or for some reason I constructed the cable and had it released by a higher authority, either Mr. Bissell or Mr. Dulles. Although those were not the only alternatives, if my name was on it, I was connected with it in one form or another.

I would guess that I dictated the cable and that Mr. Dulles -- and I do not have any idea how this came about -- Mr. Dulles wanted to see it, and Mr. Bissell suggested that it go out from Mr. Dulles and myself, I just do not know. What this means is, Dulles and Tweedy were totally aware of the cable.

Mr. Baron. Returning then to the sentence I cited from the cable where you and Dulles were talking about giving every possible support in eliminating Lumumba, what message --

Mr. Tweedy. "Eliminating Lumumba from any possibility resuming governmental position." This, if I may say so, reverts to the original instruction from Mr. Dulles which was that the U.S. position was that Mr. Lumumba must be removed from a position of authority in the Congo and that assassination was not by any means the only way by which this might be accomplished.

This, I think, merely reiterates that it is not a -- being a YQPROP cable does not refer specifically to assassination.

Mr. Baron. Would this cable, in using the phrase "eliminating Lumumba" in this context contemplate assassination as at least one of the possible means that might be used?

Mr. Tweedy. I am afraid if I may say so you are putting words in my mouth. This is exactly what it says. He has two messages now from Mr. Dulles. The first one, I think, was perfectly clear. Since then he has had messages from Mr. Dulles' subordinates like myself. This merely makes it clear again that Headquarters wishes to "give every possible support in eliminating Lumumba from any possibility resuming governmental position." and I cannot say more than that, and I think to say that this stresses assassination would be quite untrue. But the Chief of Station in Leopoldville was already under instruction to be considering this as one of the possibilities.

Mr. Baron. Assassination?

Mr. Tweedy. This does not change that.

Mr. Baron. I think that is fine.

The interesting aspect of that sentence for me is the rest of the sentence where it makes it clear that not only is there a concern about Lumumba being able to resume his position in Leopoldville, but anywhere else, and it would seem that assassination would at least have to be one of very few means that could insure that fact that Lumumba would not resume a position of power anywhere.

Mr. Tweedy. I do not think I can comment any further.

Mr. Baron. Let us introduce as Exhibit 5 a cable dispatched from the Chief of Station on September 27th, 1960 for your eyes only, and this cable begins with a reference to Dr. Gottlieb.

It says he was contacted 26 September. "We on same wave length." Then it continues, "Hence believe most rapid action consistent with security indicated."

The next paragraph says, "Basis 2 talks considering possibilities:" -- there follows a list of possibilities from A to G and paragraph 3 on the bottom of page 2 says, "Plan proceed on basis priorities as listed above, unless instructed to contrary."

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy
Exhibit No. 5 for identification.)

Mr. Baron. Does that indicate to you that on the list of priorities, priority A would have been considered by the Chief of Station to be his top priority?

Mr. Tweedy. Can you read, by the way, paragraph 2: "Basis 2 talks considering possibilities" of dispatching 04 [redacted] to Stanleyville and taking refuge -- that would be refuge, would it not?

Mr. Baron. Yes. "Recall 04 [redacted] from Stanleyville" --

Mr. Tweedy. -- "and have him take refuge with Big Brother" --

Mr. Baron. -- "Would thus act as inside man to brush up details to razor edge. Also would provide info on food and agricultural problem. Guthman recalling 04 [redacted] to Leop."

When Dr. Gottlieb looked at this cable, he testified that this cable indicated that he arrived in the Congo on the 26th of September. He had two talks with the Chief of Station where they discussed various operational possibilities of getting rid of Lumumba. The letter A represented their top priority plan.

Would you agree with that interpretation of the cable?

Mr. Tweedy. I would think so.

Mr. Baron. Would you --

Mr. Tweedy. When he says: "Plan proceed on basis priorities as listed above" this again is not what he was going to do at the conclusion of this without further reference carry out an assassination. He says, what we see is 04 [redacted] the best answer to our problem.

Mr. Baron. Does he not indicate in this cable though that he would proceed to implement these plans unless he were instructed to the contrary? In other words, this very cable might constitute his request for a confirmation.

Mr. Tweedy. I disagree. I think these various possibilities still need further exploration is what he was suggesting to Headquarters he concentrate on, that is the best possible use of 04 Schotroffe on this including further operational intelligence on the situation which might lead to an agreement that we would use this man, and then all these others, but it does not in any sense, as far as I am concerned, it is not in any sense the Chief of Station saying, if A looks terribly good I shall just go ahead and finish the job without further reference. Not at all.

Mr. Baron. I do not understand how you can read the phrase "unless instructed to the contrary" in that way.

Mr. Tweedy. Because there are other possibilities here. I am sorry, but I am afraid looking at it fifteen years later -- in the subject that you are engaged in, I think you would look at it entirely differently than I would, working on a day-to-day matter with the Chief of Station. There is absolutely nothing in this cable which says that they have the answer to 04 Schotroffe's use.

Mr. Baron. Does paragraph A indicate that 04 Schotroffe woul take refuge with Big Brother, meaning move into Lumumba's entourage?

Mr. Tweedy. I think probably this would be -- I am trying to think how this was.

06

Was this possibly [redacted]?

Mr. Baron. I do not know the operational details.

Mr. Tweedy. He did have some access to Lumumba's entourage, which was the reason we were so interested.

04

Mr. Baron. Would you assume that this cable is suggesting that [redacted] be recalled to Leopoldville so that he might move into Lumumba's entourage?

Mr. Tweedy. Absolutely.

Mr. Baron. Where it says he "would thus act as inside man to brush up details to razor edge," would you assume that refers to exploring the means by which Lumumba might be poisoned?

Mr. Tweedy. I think that is quite a possibility. I cannot specifically say yes. I suspect he was our best potential source for operational intelligence, if you like, on this.

Then he says "Also would provide info on food and agricultural problems." I have a vague recollection at this point that he was reporting rather importantly on aspects of food and agriculture which was a major political factor within the Congo then. I cannot put it any more clearly than that.

I think it is that this would be a byproduct of this, that we would get more good reporting on the subject.

Mr. Baron. You would read that sentence literally instead of an oblique reference to getting access to Lumumba's food by which he might be poisoned?

Mr. Tweedy. I would read it much more literally than that.

Mr. Baron. Let us turn then to Exhibit 6, which is a cable from the Chief of Station on September 30th to Jadwin, which is yourself --

Mr. Baron. -- in which the Chief of Station says: "No really airtight op possible with assets now available. Must choose between cancelling op or accepting calculated risks of varying degrees."

[redacted] best asset available. View necessity act immediately, if at all, urge Headquarters authorize exploratory conversations to determine if [redacted] willing take role as active agent or cut-out this op."

First, would you read the sentence or the phrase "view necessity act immediately, if at all" to refer to the fact that at this point Gottlieb had informed the Chief of Station that the lethal material was of a limited life?

Mr. Tweedy. I cannot really comment on that. That is certainly a perfectly reasonable explanation for that remark, but as I do not know exactly where Lumumba sat on that particular moment when this cable was sent, it might have something to do with his availability or something else, I just do not know.

Certainly your first point is a possibility. It equally makes clear, of course, that although [redacted] had been use in an operational intelligence support role, he at this point had never been cut in on plans. Of course, Chief of Station did not know whether he would be willing to go along with this set up or not.

Mr. Baron. The Chief of Station here is considering an approach to Schotroff first on a hypothetical basis --

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

04

Mr. Baron. It is clear here, is it not, that Schotroff is being viewed as a potential assassination asset?

Mr. Tweedy. Indeed.

Mr. Baron. Let us introduce as Exhibit 7 a cable on 30 September 1960 signed by Glen Fields to the Chief of Station, again in the YQPROP channel.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 7 for identification.)

Mr. Baron. Presumably, it is responding to the cable that we just looked at, and in this cable, Glen Fields says, "You are authorized have exploratory talks with OY [redacted] to assess his attitude toward possible active agent or cut-out role."

Would you assume that Glen Fields consulted you before sending this authorization to the Chief of Station?

Mr. Tweedy. Not necessarily. I might have been out of town that day. As you will notice, all he says is, "You are authorized have exploratory talks" and "Agree with you initial discussions should be on hypothetical basis." And, of course, at that point, we would expect a report from the field on how it went. He was taking it one step further. He might not have cleared that with me if I were away. He might also have perhaps cleared it with Mr. Bissell.

Mr. Baron. As your Deputy, it would have been perfectly proper in your eyes for Glen Fields to have issued this cable without consulting you?

Mr. Tweedy. Certainly. It is quite possible, too, that he even told Mr. Bissell what he was planning to do. I cannot tell you specifically. This is all that this cable authorizes. I find it entirely within his delegated responsibilities.

Mr. Baron. Would it have been standard procedure for Glen Fields, in your absence, to mention to Richard Bissell the fact that such authorization to be sent to the Chief of Station on an exceptional and sensitive mission like this one?

Mr. Tweedy. Would you say that again?

Mr. Baron. Would it have been standard procedure for Fields to check with Bissell in your absence before he sent such a cable?

Mr. Tweedy. No. Field's understanding of his authorities and his relationships with the DDP on such matters were exactly the same as mine. We would have seen eye to eye with him.

If I had sent the cable, undoubtedly I would have let Mr. Bissell know that I was planning to carry this thing that much closer. The reason for that is that we were getting close to informing a third party that this was in the wind. Therefore, before we actually took this step, I think something like this, a third party being 04 [redacted].

tape 2a

Mr. Baron. As Exhibit 8, we will introduce a cable on October 7th, 1960, from the Chief of Statin to Jadwin, which is yourself.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 8 for identification.)

Mr. Baron. This cable begins with a reference to Sidney Gottlieb, and he: "Departed Leop for PBPRIME 5 October, view expiration date his materials. However, left certain items of continuing usefulness. Guthman plans continue try implement op."

Do you have any independent recollection of receiving this cable?

Mr. Tweedy. You know, it's terribly hard when you see something that clearly occurred, and to me I read, it's terribly hard at this stage to say, of course I remember. It all reads perfectly familiar to me now. To say quite specifically I recall receiving the cable will perhaps go a little beyond my memory.

Mr. Baron. Based upon having read this cable at that time, which you assume you did, is that correct?

Mr. Tweedy. Absolutely.

Mr. Baron. You would have known that Sidney Gottlieb had left the Congo on October 5th and that the Chief of Station planned to continue to try to implement the operation.

Mr. Tweedy. Which means that he would continue his exploratory operational work to see if he could come to some solution.

Mr. Baron. You would read that sentence still to apply to an exploratory phase, a phase in which the Chief of Station was exploring the feasibility of assassinating Lumumba as opposed to moving to implementing?

Mr. Tweedy. Absolutely. Under no circumstances anything else.

Mr. Dawson. Based upon this Exhibit and the previous one then, Mr. Tweedy, is it your opinion that in this case no agent was ever asked to assassinate Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes, indeed. That also coincides with my best recollection which is not all that damn good. It is perfectly obvious that 04 [redacted] was never requested to assassinate Lumumba, and I have no recollection of anybody having been asked to do this.

Mr. Dawson. Whether the discussion was hypothetical, as outlined in the previous exhibit.

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Dawson. Why is it obvious that 04. [redacted] was never asked to assassinate Lumumba in light of the sentence in this cable that reads, "Although did not pick up ball," -- referrin to the fact that 04 [redacted] did not necessarily pick up the ball on assassinating Lumumba in his conversation with the Chie of Station, the Chief of Station nevertheless believed "he prepared take any role necessary within limits security acco plish objective."

Does that not indicate that 04 [redacted] was at least viewed as someone who was prepared to undertake an assassination mission if he should be tasked with it?

Mr. Tweedy. I did not say he was not. This at that time is the Chief of Station's best assessment of what the 04 [redacted] reaction would be if the thing was formally put to him so bluntly that he understood entirely what it was all about. I do not recall, I do not believe any of this residual traffic indicates that it ever got so far that we did that, and I think, my own belief is it is a 50-50 proposition on whether 04 [redacted] would agree to do it. I think probably in "limits security accomplish objective" is probably the controlling factor. I cannot really recall anymore.

Mr. Dawson. Off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

Mr. Baron. Back on the record.

This report on October 7th by the Chief of Station refers back to the exploratory conversations that he mentioned he was --

Mr. Tweedy. Implied to by Fields.

Mr. Baron. -- authorized by Fields in the previous cable of the 30th.

Mr. Tweedy. Right.

Mr. Baron. As Exhibit 9, we will introduce a cable signed by B. Tweedy to the Chief of Station in the YOPROP channel.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy
Exhibit No. 9 for identification.)

Mr. Baron. It begins, "Had good discussion your colleague 7 October. Comments follow:"

"A. Be assured did not expect YOPROP objectives be reached in short period and understand current situation fully warranted return your colleague."

And then it continues to discuss the fact that you were considering dispatching a third country national operator and a senior case officer from the CIA who would "run this op and outside agent full time under your direction."

Does this cable refer to the fact that you debriefed Sidney Gottlieb?

Mr. Tweedy. I am sure it does. That is what it must be, yes.

Mr. Baron. The first paragraph is meant to indicate that the Chief of Station should not feel that Headquarters would be disappointed in the fact that he did not pull off an assassination mission in such a short period of time?

Mr. Tweedy. I want to be careful to how I reply to that. All I was saying to a very professional colleague was that we had no illusions about the fact that the planning operation of this would be very difficult, at best, and would take time and thoroughly agree with the fact that prospects, immediate prospects, were such that there was no alternative for Sidney Gottlieb to return. That is all I was saying.

But to say what I was trying to express to him was the fact that we were not overly disappointed that Lumumba was not assassinated at this point is just not the level of intercourse that I had with a very professional Chief of Station. That is all.

Mr. Baron. Does not the paragraph A here indicate that the objective of the mission that was discussed in the YQPROP channel was to assassinate Lumumba in view or in light of the fact that Gottlieb had gone to the Congo with materials that were only going to be lethal for a short period of time?

Mr. Tweedy. That is what it says.

Mr. Baron. In other words, what I am trying to explore with you is your characterization of this entire stage of the operation as one of planning and exploration when we know that Gottlieb took materials to the Congo which would only be lethal for a short period of time and presumably was prepared to move from exploration to implementation?

Mr. Tweedy. If, as a result of the Station focusing on the problem for the first time, as a result of Headquarters' request, they had come up with a plan that they thought was exceedingly solid and which Headquarters approved, it is not surprising, perhaps, that we wanted the materials there to take advantage of such, if you like, an unlikely event. But this would not change the normal sequence of events, which would be that the Station would explore, keep Headquarters informed, Headquarters would comment, it would then be a cresendo of agreement or no agreement at all resulting from either a final request for approval or either approval or no approval. This would not have changed.

Mr. Baron. Because Gottlieb took lethal materials to the Congo with him that had such a short period of lethality, were you not contemplating at that time that the operation might well move from the exploration phase to the implementation phase just as soon as Gottlieb and Hedgeman determined that it was feasible?

Mr. Tweedy. I think I would put it quite differently. I think that I would say that we would have been remiss in not being in a position to exploit, if we reached the point where we all agreed that the thing was possible.

If they had merely gone over and said we think we can do it, by why do you not send the stuff from Headquarters, that would have been sort of nonsense, if you follow me.

Mr. Baron. You would have expected the Chief of Station to cable back for confirmation, but it was certainly within your contemplation at the time that when Gottlieb went to the Congo, when the Chief of Station cabled for confirmation, you would probably give him a go ahead to assassinate Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. I did not say that at all.

Mr. Baron. If the operation were feasible?

Mr. Tweedy. I did not say that at all. It would not have been my say-so. I do not know what the policy levels of my Agency, who in turn would have been reflected in the policy levels of the government, would have done if it had come to the point where somebody said, we can do it, do you want us to do it.

Mr. Baron. You would have referred that to Bissell?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

Mr. Baron. He would have referred it?

Mr. Tweedy. He would have referred it according to his lights. That was not my business. He was his own level of authority. He was as aware of his authority as I was at my level. I only assume that this would have been discussed at the highest level, certainly at the Agency. I assume that the decision would have had to have been made by Allen Dulles and who else he wished to consult in Washington.

These are pure assumptions on my part. Under no circumstances would I have given the go ahead.

Mr. Dawson. That is interesting.

Mr. Baron. I just have one more question on this line. I realize we are going very closely over this ground. We would not be doing it if it weren't important in trying to get you to clarify for the record exactly what shade of meaning you want to attach here.

Would it be fair to say that when you dispatched Gottlieb to the Congo you expected to hear back --

Mr. Tweedy. I expected this would result in a dialogue between the Station and ourselves as to what might be feasible.

Mr. Baron. You were hoping?

Mr. Tweedy. Gottlieb assisting the Chief of Station in his explorations.

Mr. Baron. In view of the entire policy of the Agency at that time, as indicated in the cables of Dulles and the cables from yourself and Bissell to the Congo, you were hoping that Gottlieb and the Chief of Station would find a feasible means of carrying out an assassination mission and then inform you of that.

Mr. Tweedy. I am not going to comment on the hope. I do not know what my frame of mind was on that.

The purpose of the exercise was to see whether this was possible. One thing was clear, that I was the instrument of policy in carrying out the exploration which was entirely a professional matter. If the exploration had reached a point where we felt that we could submit to higher authority a plan which we thought made some sense, at that point higher authority would have to take the ball and run with it and let us know what they concluded.

Mr. Baron. By higher authority here, you mean any authority higher than yourself?

Mr. Tweedy. It would start with me in my chain of command. I would not be concerned with the National Security Advisor to the President or anybody else, I was perfectly clear in my mind because of what had occurred and the way that these matters had been broached to the field by Mr. Dulles, that the thing was in the national arena and was just not in the Agency's arena.

What Mr. Dulles would have done and what he felt his authorities were from higher authority I cannot tell you.

Mr. Dawson. That would have been a matter that would have been between Mr. Bissell and Mr. Dulles, is that correct?

Mr. Tweedy. In the first instance, it would have been between Mr. Dulles and the outside world, the Executive.

Mr. Dawson. The chain of command would have been, you would have talked to Bissell, you would not have been expected or would have asked what Mr. Dulles' view were?

Mr. Tweedy. Mind you, we were also an Agency that was very flexible. I am not saying Mr. Dulles might not have talked to me about this, that was because Mr. Bissell was not immediately available, or something of this kind.

What I am saying is at the working level, the operational level, the Divisional and the Station level, we had come up with a plan which made professional sense to us which we felt sound enough so that we would present it to our masters, we would have done so and the resultant instruction to the field would have depended on their reaction as far as I was concerned within the Agency. As far as Mr. Dulles was concerned, I cannot tell you.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

In other words, the degree to which he thought he would have to refer further to Washington on, I have no idea.

Mr. Baron. It was your job to find a feasible way to carry out an assassination; it was the job of Bissell and those above him to decide whether to go ahead, as far as you were concerned?

Mr. Tweedy. As far as I was concerned, that is the way it started.

Mr. Dawson. You have no independent or specific recollection that you ever went to Mr. Bissell and said, we do not have a shot at this, or we do, and we could do it this way, and him saying one thing or another? You have no recollection either way?

Mr. Tweedy. Mr. Bissell read the same traffic I did.

Mr. Dawson. I did not know that.

Mr. Tweedy. He read these cables. When I say he read every single one of them word for word -- all I can say is he had full access to these cables and anything he had not read or had any reason to believe he had not read, I would have kept him generally briefed on the progress of the planning. Naturally, he would have been interested. He would not have followed it in detail.

Mr. Dawson. Would Mr. Dulles have had any access to these cables?

Mr. Tweedy. Not routinely. I think he would have expected

Mr. Bissell to keep him orally informed on a thing like this. He did not want any more paper floating around in those days. Mr. Dulles was in even another building. Now, we were all down at the Reflecting Pool at that point, were we not, and Mr. Dulles was on E Street. It doesn't make any difference. The number of papers on this YQPROP thing would have been restricted to the absolute minimum. I do not think Mr. Dulles would have expedted to be bothered with the operational details. What he would have expected from Mr. Bissell was progress on planning the elimination of Lumumba by whatever means.

Mr. Dawson. Was the routine way that that information would have been given to Mr. Dulles -- for instance, what I'm thinking was, were there staff meetings at which you attended with Mr. Bissell in Mr. Dulles' presence concerning what was happening generally on a routine quarterly or weekly basis?

Mr. Tweedy. Mr. Bissell would have seen Mr. Dulles by and large every day.

Mr. Dawson. They would not review meetings on a weekly or routine basis?

Mr. Tweedy. He had his own staff meeting every morning, Mr. Dulles did. These were attended by his Deputy Directors, of which Mr. Bissell was one.

I used to see Mr. Bissell -- he had a staff meeting once a week which all Chiefs of Division attended. Nothing like this would be discussed at those. I had my own private meetings with him on these matters whenever it seemed necessary by one or the other of us.

Mr. Baron. Returning to the cable of October 7th, 1960, which you sent to the Chief of Station, the reference to a senior case officer who might be dispatched to the Congo, is that a reference to the fact that Bissell was considering dispatching Justin O'Donnell?

Mr. Tweedy. No other candidate, no other. I assume that is who it is.

Mr. Baron. O'Donnell's account that he was asked by Bissell to go to the Congo to carry off the assassination of Lumumba would fit here?

Mr. Tweedy. Sure.

Mr. Baron. The third country national referred to in this cable and in other cables as someone you are considering dispatching to the Congo to help with the operation, would that be QJWIN or WIROGUB?

Mr. Tweedy. As I told you before, definitely not WIROGUE. Presumably this other fellow, whose identity and what he was is very, very unclear to me.

03

Mr. Baron. The agent that was run by Arnold Silver?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes. This would have been the man that would have worked with Justin O'Donnell if it had all happened.

Mr. Baron. That was QJWIN. I will represent to you that QJWIN was the agent who was supervised by Justin O'Donnell.

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

Mr. Tweedy. We read that that time, which is my only recollection of it. That is the person I am sure.

Mr. Baron. Let me correct myself here.

I will represent to you that QJWIN was the agent that was recruited by Arnold Silver 03 and sent by Silver 03 to the Congo for use by O'Donnell and perhaps by the Chief of Station.

Is that consistent with your recollection?

Mr. Tweedy. No, it is not consistent with my recollection. It is certainly consistent with what I read the last time I saw you, which I have no reason to dispute. I just cannot remember the blighter at all.

Mr. Baron. As Exhibit 10, let us introduce a cable of October 15th, 1960, which is not sent in the YQPROP channel. It is marked RIBAT[redacted]FLAT 02 in the space where sensitivity indicators are usually placed.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 10 for identification.)

3182

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

Mr. Baron. This cable requests the views of the Chief of Station on suggestions A, B and C for various covert operations. In paragraph C, there is a reference to 02 WIROAK.

Mr. Tweedy, we have received the representation from the CIA that that was a cryptonym used to refer to Lumumba. Is that consistent with your interaptation of the cable?

Mr. Baron. It is indeed.

Mr. Tweedy. This paragraph C says in part: "Only direct action we can now stand behind is to support immobolizing or arresting 02 WIROAK, desirable as more definitive action might be. Any action taken would have to be entirely Congolese."

Now, you signed this cable, but it was not sent in the special sensitivity channel that dealt with Gottlieb's mission to the Congo?

Before we discuss this cable, let us also introduce into the record as Exhibit 11 another cable which you signed on October 15, 1960 which was sent in the YOPROP channel to the Chief of Station.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 11 for identification.)

Mr. Baron. This contains the following language: "You will note from cable through normal channel currently being transmitted" then it continues "on YQPROP suggestions. You will probably receive more along these lines as stumbling bloc OZ WIROAK represents increasingly apparent all studying Congo situation closely and his disposition spontaneously becomes number one consideration."

Mr. Tweedy. I think by that, I think it is perfectly God-awful English.

Mr. Baron. The cable continues --

Mr. Tweedy. Obviously that means that everyone one talked to said there is no solution to the Congo as long as Lumumba stays in a position of power or influence there. That is what that means.

Mr. Baron. The cable continues: "Raise above so you not confused by any apparent duplication. This channel remains for specific purpose you discussed with colleague and also remains highest priority."

Now, does this pair of cables indicate that at this point despite the indication in the first cable that we looked at that "direct action would be limited to entirely Congolese action" the actual position of yourself and others at Headquarters involved in this operation was that exploration of an assassination mission remained the highest priority for the Chief of Station?

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

410 First Street, S.E., Washington, D.C. 20003

Mr. Tweedy. I think that is accurate.

We had come to the end of the road, at least temporarily on the YQPROP aspect and for the time being we were in no position to approve anything but what was discussed in the 02 WIFLAP cable. Nonetheless, as long as the threat to the Congo from Lumumba existed, there remained a high priority to search for means to take care of the YQPROP planning aspects.

Mr. Baron. When the cable refers to the specific purpose you discussed with colleague --

Mr. Tweedy. This is assassination with Gottlieb, I am sure.

Mr. Baron. It then says: This purpose remains highest priority. Would that not indicate to the Chief of Station that he should proceed to find a way that Lumumba could be assassinated?

Mr. Tweedy. What this would mean to the Chief of Station was that he should retain exploration of possible means of assassinating Lumumba as highest priority. He should continue to seek means to do this, not to do it.

Mr. Baron. Again, you are maintaining you have just made yourself clear, as far as you were concerned, you were still asking him to explore and not implement at this point?

Mr. Tweedy. Nothing else but.

Mr. Baron. Who would have had access to or received distribution of the first cable we looked at which travelled in the [redacted]FLAT channel?

02

Mr. Tweedy. It would have been restricted, but not as restricted as the other.

Mr. Baron. Would somebody at the Embassy conceivably have been cut in on cable traffic in the channel that dealt with 02 [redacted]FLAT operations?

Mr. Tweedy. Could be, certainly.

Mr. Baron. In other words, the purpose of sending a second cable on the same day which dealt with action against Lumumba was what?

Mr. Tweedy. The simple reason I think -- I say I think, because I cannot tell you so -- as I said a few minutes ago, obviously you'd come temporarily to the end of the line on YQPROP. Measures taken to shore up 01 [redacted] position in the Congo, Mabutu, would have served to support the general objective, of containing Lumumba by whatever means. It is all part of the same purpose.

Once again referring to the original cable from Mr. Dulles which said all means, in effect, and I think the reason I'm putting this in the open channel, the open channel is still --

Mr. Baron. Simply the ordinary channel used between yourself --

Mr. Tweedy. Still a restricted channel. RIBAT is a restricted thing, in any event. This could have been discussed with the Ambassador or the Embassy, if any aspect of it seemed appropriate by the Chief of Station.

Mr. Baron. By contrast, the YQPROP cable would only have been seen by the Chief of Station?

Mr. Tweedy. The Embassy would not have been shown this cable anyway. We do not show the traffic to the Embassy; we discussed it.

Mr. Baron. It would have been propr for the 02 [redacted]FLAT cable to be conveyed in some manner?

Mr. Tweedy. To be discussed.

Mr. Baron. Between the Chief of Station and perhaps the Ambassador?

Mr. Tweedy. Discussed; only orally.

Mr. Baron. By contrast, the YQPROP cable clearly would have been restricted to the Chief of Station?

Mr. Tweedy. I have no reason to believe that the YQPROP business was discussed with the Ambassador, I do not believe it was, although Mr. Dulles, in his original cable, said he could, if he wanted to.

Mr. Baron. Let us introduce as the final exhibit for the moment Exhibit 12, a cable of October 17, 1960 going to Jadwin from the Chief of Station.

In this cable, the Chief of Station is responding to your suggestion that a senior case officer might be dispatched to the Congo to handle the YQPROP operation. He says it is an excellent idea. Is that a fair interpretation?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes.

(The document referred to was marked Tweedy Exhibit No. 12 for identification.)

Phone (Area 202) 544-6000

WARD & PAUL

Mr. Baron. The Chief of Station then makes a suggestion in the fourth paragraph for equipment that might be provided if such a case officer were to be sent. He says, "If case officer sent, recommend Headquarters pouch soonest high powered foreign make rifle with telescopic sight and silencer. Hunting good here when lights right. However as hunting rifles now forbidden, would keep rifle in office pending opening of hunting season."

Would you take that to be a recommendation by the Chief of Station, if a case officer was sent to the Congo to concentrate on the YQPROP operation, he should be provided with the kind of weapon that would be suited for a sniper shot at Lumumba?

Mr. Tweedy. Yes. Not necessarily to be fired by the case officer, obviously not, but at least used in the operation.

Mr. Baron. This reference to the hunting season can be taken as a reference obliquely to the fact that Lumumba was in UN custody and that there would not be, in effect, "open season" on him until he showed his face outside of UN custody. Would that be a fair interpretation?

Mr. Tweedy. I would not have interpreted it quite the same way. I would have interpreted it this way, which was if it, as a result of Headquarters suggestion that a rifle be provided to the Station, the Station would come up with an operational plan involving the use of the rifle which Headquarters would approve, and that thus, in effect, the operation was on by a rifle, that would be the opening of the hunting season. In other words, the point where they knew how it could be used and Headquarters had approved its use.

Mr. Baron. I have one other general question before we take a break, and that is, returning to Sidney Gottlieb's account of his conversation with Richard Bissell about making preparations for carrying off an assassination against an African foreign leader if it were required, Gottlieb said in that context that he had higher authority for such an operation. Gottlieb also said that he clearly interpreted Bissell to mean that Bissell had Presidential authority for such an operation? Did you have any knowledge of such a conversation between Gottlieb and Bissell from any source?

tape 2b

Mr. Tweedy. I do not recall that Gottlieb and I ever discussed higher authority and approval. I do not say that it did not occur. If Gottlieb said that he had this impression in talking to Bissell, I cannot say no, but I cannot comment on it further.

Mr. Baron. For the moment, we have no further questions and we will take a break now and pick up again before the full Committee and Executive Session this afternoon.

Thank you very much for your patience in going through these documents one by one. It has been extremely helpful to us.

(Whereupon, at 1:40 p.m. the hearing concluded.)

Chronology of Events

1959

		Issues and Questions
November 4	Special Group discusses Allen DULLES' "Cuba Propaganda Project" for use of radio transmitters. GRAY said "he was sure (the project would meet with high level approval" provided it was acceptable to the President of Mexico.	GRAY represents President EISENHOWER at Special Group meetings.

1960 (Cont'd)		Issues and Questions
February 12	A "special" NSC meeting was held on this day. The only record of this meeting in the NSC minutes states: "On instructions from the Executive Secretary no memorandum was written." (NSC Minutes)	Why were no minutes written?
February 17	Special Group approves evaluation of agents for Cuban sugar mill sabotage. GRAY "discussed this matter with his associate" (Eisenhower) and reported two tactical objections. (SG Minutes)	Does context show that phrase "his associate" refers to President EISENHOWER?
March 9	GRAY tells Special Group that any covert action like sugar mill sabotage should be undertaken only after overall consideration of "whether and how the U.S. wishes to move against CASTRO." (SG Minutes)	Did such consideration involve assassination plotting?
March 14	At an NSC meeting, Allen DULLES "reported that a plan to affect the situation in Cuba was being worked on. Admiral BURKE suggested that any plan for the removal of Cuban leaders should be a package deal, since many of the leaders around CASTRO were even worse than CASTRO." (NSC Minutes)	Was this "package deal" the simultaneous triple assassination plot that was mentioned on November 3, 1960?
	At a Special Group meeting, after a paper titled "General Covert Action Plan for Cuba" was read, there was "a general discussion as to what would be the effect on the Cuban scene if FIDEL and RAUL CASTRO and CHE GUEVARA should disappear simultaneously." (SG Minutes)	Does this simultaneous disappearance plan refer to assassination planning? Is there a connection between this Special Group discussion and the NSC discussion on March 14, 1960, re a plan to remove Cuban leaders?
April 7	"GRAY asked the [Special] Group's views on what happens after TRUJILLO, specifically how CASTRO can be kept out of the Dominican Republic." Acting DCI CABELL recommends U.S. military intervention after TRUJILLO departs. (SG Minutes)	Did U.S. support TRUJILLO'S opponents out of a desire to keep CASTRO out of the Dominican Republic?

1960 (cont'd)		Issues and Questions
April 14	At an NSC meeting presided over by Vice President NIXON, Allen DULLES reported "TRUJILLO'S position continued to weaken and was now quite precarious. . . [he] thought further attempts will be made to kill or oust TRUJILLO." Under Secretary of State DILLON said "if TRUJILLO could be removed from power in the Dominican Republic while pro-CASTRO elements were prevented from seizing power in that country, our anti-CASTRO campaign throughout Latin America would receive a great boost. The Vice President agreed that getting rid of TRUJILLO would be a favorable development for us." (NSC Minutes)	Were these U.S. attempts to kill TRUJILLO? DILLON'S comment indicates that the U.S. had an active interest in removing TRUJILL What did NIXON mean by "getting TRUJILLO"?
April 14	Allen DULLES predicted at an NSC meeting, that one possible outcome with respect to CASTRO was an assassination that would make CASTRO a martyr. (NSC Minutes)	Does this show that assassination was not a favored alternative because it would produce martyrdom?
June 30	GRAY says "the U.S. has taken publicly about all that it can afford to take from the CASTRO government." (SG Minutes)	General atmosphere of vehement opposition to CASTRO.
July 1	Memo from the Chief of CIA's Western Hemisphere Division to the Acting DCI recommending delivery of high-powered rifles with telescopic scopes to the opponents of TRUJILLO. The memo said: "approval for delivery of these arms has been given by ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE ROY RUBOTTOM."	Was the Special Group aware of this action Was the President aware of the plan? Purpose of weapons?
July 5	President EISENHOWER met with Secretary of State HERTER and others to discuss the Dominican Republic. "The President thought we should knock out of any documents on file any reference to starting a revolution." (Conference Memorandum)

1960 (cont'd)		Issues and Questions
July 7	Allen DULLES reported to the NSC that the Venezuelan government wants the United States to lead the way in breaking relations with TRUJILLO. DULLES stated: The Venezuelan government was engaged in an all-out effort, through the OAS and otherwise, to isolate, condemn and cause the downfall of TRUJILLO. . . . [Because] they have convincing evidence that TRUJILLO was responsible for the assassination attempt on BETANCOURT [President of Venezuela] . . . BETANCOURT believes another attempt will be made momentarily and therefore it [his government] wants a showdown without delay." (NSC Minutes)	The U.S. was under pressure to move against TRUJILLO. Did TRUJILLO'S attempt against BETANCOURT make him "fair game" for assassination in the eyes of OAS nations including the U.S.
	"Mr. DULLES stated that he believes, and the intelligence community agrees, that the problem of TRUJILLO must be settled before the problem of CASTRO can be dealt with, even though CASTRO is the greater threat." (NSC Minutes)
	The NSC Minutes further state that BETANCOURT was told that the U.S. cannot act without ascertaining TRUJILLO'S successor. The U.S. will work with BETANCOURT and FIGUERES of Costa Rica on suggestions for a successor to TRUJILLO. President EISENHOWER suggested that a government in exile should be ready to go into the Dominican Republic in the event of TRUJILLO'S downfall. (NSC Minutes)	Did the U.S. determine a successor? Did the U.S. "act"?
July 21	GRAY said "his associates" would favor the development of sabotage operations in CUBA. (SG Minutes)	"Associate" is the euphemism for Eisenhower. Does sabotage imply the further steps of assassination?

1960 (cont'd)		Issues and Questions
July 28	President EISENHOWER stated at an NSC meeting: "Until TRUJILLO is eliminated, we cannot get our Latin American friends to reach a proper level of indignation in dealing with CASTRO." In this regard, "the President said if we attempted to take any action with respect to Cuba before settling the TRUJILLO situation, we would be the loser." (NSC Minutes)	Does "elimination" mean "assassination"?
August 12	BISSELL outlines 13.3 million dollar budget for Cuban operations which was to be laid before "higher authorities" for decision. (SG Minutes)
August 16	Dr. Edward GUNN (CIA Office of Medical Services) receives box of Cuban cigars to be treated with lethal poison for use against CASTRO. (IG REPORT p. 21)	Were EISENHOWER, GRAY, or DCI DULLES aware of this?
August 25	After the Special Group approved anti-LUMUMBA operations in the Congo, "GRAY commented, however, that his associates had expressed extremely strong feelings on the necessity for very straightforward action in this situation, and he wondered whether the plans as outlined would be sufficient to accomplish this . . . . It was finally agreed that planning for the Congo would not necessarily rule out 'consideration' of any particular kind of activity which might contribute to getting rid of LUMUMBA." (SG Minutes; emphasis added) At the NSC meeting, Mr. STANS suggested that the U.S. might "throw out LUMUMBA by peaceful means." (NSC Minutes)	Is this circumlocutious order for assassination from the President? An indication that at the least, assassination was within the range of acceptable means for "getting rid of LUMUMBA"?
August (approx)	BISSELL asks EDWARDS to find underworld contacts with Cuba to aid in an assassination operation	Were EISENHOWER, GRAY, or Allen DULLES aware of this? Was it authorized by

1960 (cont'd		Issues and Questions
September 8	During brief discussion of CONGO developments, "GRAY said that he hoped that Agency people in the field are fully aware of the top-level feeling in Washington that vigorous action would not be amiss." (SG Minutes; emphasis added)	Against LUMUMBA personally?
September 21	Allen DULLES stated at an NSC meeting that "LUMUMBA was not disposed of and remained a great danger as long as he was not disposed of." (NSC Minutes)	Did the NSC contemplate "disposing of" LUMUMBA by assassination?
October 24	At an NSC meeting, Allen DULLES reported that "five Congolese soldiers had attempted to assassinate MOBUTO on the 15th of October. The U.S. had prior information of this attempt and had warned MOBUTO . . . (NSC Minutes)	Did this information prompt the U.S. to plot the assassination of LUMUMBA in retaliation or to protect MOBUTO?
November 3	At a Special Group meeting, Mr. MERCHANT "asked whether any real planning has been done in taking direct positive action against FIDEL, RAUL and CHE GUEVARA. He said that without these three the Cuban government would be leaderless and probably brainless. He conceded that it would be necessary to act against all three simultaneously."	Was MERCHANT referring to an assassination of Cuban leaders?
	The minutes further state: "General CABELL pointed out that action of this kind is uncertain of results and highly dangerous in conception and execution, because the instruments must be Cuban. He felt that, particularly because of the necessity of simultaneous action, it would have to be concluded that Mr. MERCHANT'S suggestion is beyond our capabilities." (SG Minutes)	Shortly before this, CIA had made the assassination contract with the Mafia. Was General CABELL unaware of this CIA contract? Was General CABELL expressing a traditional CIA objection to assassination proposals? If so, on what other occasion did Mr. GRAY hear the CIA objection?

1960 (cont'd)		Issues and Questions
December 29	At a Special Group meeting, Mr. BISSELL gave the broad outlines of a two-pronged plan for proceeding with certain limited covert activities directed against the TRUJILLO regime, but "he also emphasized that the proposed actions would not of themselves bring about the desired result in the near future, lacking some decisive stroke against TRUJILLO himself." (SG Minutes) (Source: Minutes, December 29, 1960, by T. Parrott, of Special Group Meeting, December 29, 1960, 02752)	TRUJILLO was assassinated on May 30, 1961. Did Mr. BISSELL or the Special Group propose to approve aiding Dominicans who might assassinate TRUJILLO to effect such a "decisive stroke"?
January 12	Special Group approves the State Department proposal explained by MERCHANT "that limited supplies of small arms and other material should be made available for dissidents inside the DOMINICAN REPUBLIC." Was the EXECUTIVE ACTION project initiated or authorized during the EISENHOWER Adminis tration?

GORDON GRAY: Short Summary

Gordon Gray was Special Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs from 1958-1961. During this period Gray represented President EISENHOWER at Special Group meetings at which the following subjects were discussed: "any particular kind of activity which might contribute to getting rid of LUMUMBA"; provision of small arms to opponents to TRUJILLO in the Dominican Republic; and detailed planning for "how the U. S. wishes to move against CASTRO".

Gray's testimony should involve the following questions (see attached list of exhibits):

CASTRO

1. What was Admiral Burke referring to at the March 14, 1960, NSC meeting when he spoke of "a plan for the removal of Cuban leaders should be a package deal"? (Exhibit at Tab E)

2. Is there a connection between the plan referred to by Admiral Burke at the March 14 NSC meeting and the discussion at the March 14 Special Group meeting on the "effect on the Cuban scene if Fidel and Raoul Castro and Che Guevara should disappear simultaneously"? (Exhibit at Tab F)

3. Were President Eisenhower or Mr. Gray aware that on August 16, 1960, the CIA Office of Medical Services received a box of Cuban cigars to be treated with poison for use against Castro? (Exhibit at Tab O)

4. Were President Eisenhower or Mr. Gray aware that in August 1960 Bissell asked Edwards to find underworld contacts with Cuba for an assassination mission? (Exhibit at Tab R)

5. At the November 3, 1960, Special Group meeting, was Mr. Merchant referring to planning for assassination when he asked whether planning had been done "in taking direct positive action against Fidel, Raoul, and Che Guevara"? How does General Cabell's response (that Merchant's suggestion "is beyond our capabilities") square with the fact that shortly before November 1960 the CIA had made contact with the Mafia for a Castro assassination effort? (Exhibit at Tab V)

TRUJILLO

1. Was Vice President Nixon referring to assassination at the April 14, 1960, NSC meeting when he said "getting rid of Trujillo would be a favorable development"? (Exhibit at Tab H)

2. Was the Special Group, Mr. Gray, or President Eisenhower aware that Assistant Secretary of State Rubottom was reported, on July 1, 1960, by the CIA Western Hemisphere Division Chief to have approved delivery of high-powered rifles with telescopic sights to Trujillo opponents? (Exhibit at Tab YZ)

3. When President Eisenhower was reported at the July 28, 1960, NSC meeting to have said that "until Trujillo is eliminated . . .", was he referring to an assassination? (Exhibit at Tab M)

4. On January 12, 1961, the Special Group approved making available "small arms" to dissidents in the Dominican Republic. Were these assassination-type weapons such as the rifles with telescopic sights referred to in Exhibit at Tab YZ? (Exhibit at Tab X re January 12 meeting)

5. Did the attempts by Trujillo to assassinate President Betancourt of Venezuela prompt the Special Group to favor supplying arms to Dominican dissidents who might try to assassinate Trujillo? (Exhibit at Tab K)

LUMUMBA

1. When Mr. Gray commented at the August 25, 1960, Special Group meeting that "his associates had expressed extremely strong feelings on the necessity for very straight-forward action", was he referring to assassination? Do Mr. Dulles' reservations indicate that he was objecting to a suggested assassination? (Exhibit at Tab P)

2. When Mr. Gray said at the Special Group meeting on September 8, 1960, that "he hoped that agency people in the field are fully aware of the top level feeling in Washington that vigorous action would not be amiss", was he referring to assassination of Lumumba? (Exhibit at Tab S)

COMMAND and CONTROL

What was the command and control system for covert action operations in the Eisenhower Administration?

Pertinent Relationships

President Eisenhower	Gray was the President's liaison to the intelligence community and the National Security Council (including the Special Group).
DCI Allen Dulles	Gray met with Dulles in the Special Group.
DDP Richard Bissell	Gray knew Bissell well. Bissell initiated the CIA-Gambling Syndicate plot to assassinate Castro and the Executive Action capability.

Gray's testimony should involve the following questions:

- Did any of the Special Group meetings implicitly or explicitly contemplate or plan assassination attempts against LUMUMBA, TRUJILLO, or CASTRO?
- To what extent were CIA plans against these leaders authorized by or made known to President EISENHOWER, Gordon GRAY, DCI Allen DULLES, or the Special Group as a whole?
- What were the general command & control practices?

Questioning of Gray should focus upon the following documents:

- Special Group Minutes, November 3, 1960.

SUBJECT: Minutes of Special Group Meeting, 3 November 1960

PRESENT: Messrs. Merchant, Douglas, Gray, Gen. Cabell, Gen. Lansdale

1. Cuba

Mr. Gray inquired once more as to the status of planning for problems which would arise post-Castro. Mr. Merchant said he would check into the progress of the State Department group which has been charged with developing recommendations on this matter.

From this the Group launched into a far-ranging discussion of the entire concept of U.S. efforts against Castro. Mr. Douglas, supported by Mr. Gray and Mr. Merchant, expounded the idea that perhaps things have now progressed to a point where covert activities of the type originally envisaged for CIA to undertake will not be effective. Mr. Douglas referred to the extensive program of the militia, Mr. Gray cited the matter of arms from the Soviet bloc, and Mr. Merchant dwelt on the increasing effectiveness of Castro's measures to control the population in ways which the Communists have developed so well. The latter said that he and others in the State Department had originally thought that a popular rebellion would develop within Cuba and that this could be augmented by the comparatively small-scale efforts of exiles under CIA control. Now the same people are beginning to feel more and more that despite the numerous defections and the economic deprivations being experienced by the middle and upper classes, time is actually working on Castro's side. Mr. Merchant said that he foresaw that there would occur a point in time beyond which covert intervention would not do the job.

Mr. Gray expressed the opinion that we will never be able to "clean up" the situation without the use of overt U.S. military force. He suggested the possibility of using the CIA-backed exiles to mount a simulated attack on Guantanamo in order to offer an excuse for overt intervention. This led to an involved discussion, the general conclusion of which was that such action on our part would not be desirable, but that should Castro be foolish enough actually to attack Guantanamo this would almost certainly mean war. Mr. Gray said that he had had the subject of Cuba inscribed on the NSC agenda for next Monday in order to be able to arrive at a top-level decision on this very point. He thought it essential that the policy of the U.S. should be completely understood by responsible officials, so that any overt Cuban act would be met with a previously-agreed-on response.

Mr. Merchant stated that, apart from any attack on Guantanamo, he thought that some of the previous argumentation in today's meeting was faulty, in that we could not have it both ways. By this he meant that it is not logical to conclude that an indigenous uprising is impossible and yet that it is feasible for the U.S. to go in overtly and "clean up the mess." He pointed out that if Castro's support were such that an uprising was out of the question then an open invasion by the U.S. would be met by a hostile population and we would be plunged into a situation like Algeria.

Turning to the immediate problem before the Group, Gen. Cabell outlined the general proposal to establish bases in the U.S., with the reasons for coming to this conclusion. He cited specifically the possibility of U.N. investigation in Guatemala and the increased scope of the program, which has been brought about by the increased strength of the Castro regime. All members of the Group expressed serious doubts as to whether such activity could be kept at all secure. Mr. Merchant said at one point, that although this does not represent a final conclusion on his part, he is inclined to think that the proposal embodies the worst aspect of both worlds; that is, the choice should rest between continuing our operations entirely on foreign soil or preparing to make the best possible case for overt intervention.

Mr. Gray suggested that the decision could be put up to his associates at the same time Tibet is discussed. Mr. Merchant agreed that this is where it should end up, but asserted that he is not prepared to move in that direction until a survey has been made of the possibilities of keeping operations in the U.S. unrevealed.

In this connection Gen. Cabell mentioned the possibility of using a refugee organization - either an existing one or a contrived one - to backstop the operations.

THE WHITE HOUSE

Mr. Douglas said that in any case he would be prepared to have the Department of Defense investigate the availability of specific locations that would be suitable.

Finally, Mr. Merchant asked whether any real planning has been done for taking direct positive action against Fidel, Raul and Che Guevara. He said that without these three the Cuban Government would be leaderless and probably brainless. He conceded that it would be necessary to act against all three simultaneously. Gen. Cabell pointed out that action of this kind is uncertain of results and highly dangerous in conception and execution, because the instruments must be Cubans. He felt that, particularly because of the necessity of simultaneous action, it would have to be concluded that Mr. Merchant's suggestion is beyond our capabilities.

✓4. Supply Drops - Cuba

Gen. Cabell explained that the Pinar de Rio supply mission had not taken place because of the absence of specified communication from the DZ, and the Escambray operation had been canceled because of weather. He said that these missions are still planned, and assumed that the Group had no objections. The members so signified.

✓5. U-2, Cuba

Gen. Cabell said that the photographic coverage on the first flight had been only about 50%, because of cloud cover. He continued that we are analyzing the exact results on a priority basis and that some time after the middle of next week we should be in a position to make recommendations for the missions required to extend the coverage.

Mr. Gray commented somewhat wryly that this was all right with him since he "would certainly not be available to discuss anything of this kind before the middle of next week." The other members appeared to have the same reaction.

✓6. Policy Consideration Re Cuban Exiles

Mr. Gray said that Assistant Attorney General Yeagley had spoken to him after his meeting with Col. King and Messrs. Esterline and Holman. He had said that the information given to him by the CIA representatives, and the arrangements for future coordination if necessary, were entirely satisfactory to him. He had stated, however, that a problem remains with respect to action the FBI should take; that is, the FBI needs guidance in its handling of Cuban exile groups other than those under the direction of CIA.

The Group agreed that the best way to attack this problem would be to have Mr. Yeagley attend next week's Special Group meeting and discuss the matter at first hand. Mr. Parrott was asked to make arrangements ~~for this~~.

2. Budget for Cuban Operations: Mr. Bissell summarized the budget which had been prepared as a basis for seeking a release from the Reserve to finance Cuban operations for the balance of the fiscal year. The budget for the year totals approximately thirteen and a quarter million dollars, not including provision for the replacement of material with an estimated value of 1.6 million dollars to be withdrawn from Agency inventory. Since 2.5 million dollars of budgeted and Reserve funds have been made available for this program by an earlier action, the balance required is about ten and three-quarters million dollars. Mr. Dulles stated that a release of ten million would be requested at this time since there is inevitably a wide margin of uncertainty as to what the actual costs will turn out to be. Mr. Bissell stated the amounts required by major sub-headings as follows:

Political Action	$ 960,000.00
Propaganda	2,152,120.00
Paramilitary	8,055,753.00

It was agreed that the operations in question must go forward and that the amount did not seem unreasonable for activities of this scope and scale but it was understood that Messrs. Merchant and Gray could not state that they had reviewed in any detail the manner in which the estimates had been arrived at. Following further discussion, it was agreed that this matter should be laid before the appropriate higher authorities and a presentation would be arranged hopefully within the next ten days. This was believed to be wise, not because any actions involving major political risks were to be taken in the near future, but because the Agency would soon become committed to various substantial expenditures which should not be undertaken without reasonable assurance that the operation was to go forward.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Acting Director of Central Intelligence

VIA: Deputy Director (Plans)

SUBJECT: Clandestine Delivery of Arms to Opposition Leadership in the Dominican Republic.

1. This memorandum recommends action by the Acting Director of Central Intelligence. Such recommendation is contained in para 5.

2. While Ambassador Farland was in the Dominican Republic, a principal leader of the opposition requested that a limited number of arms be made available which could be used to precipitate the overthrow of the regime of General Rafael Leonidas Trujillo. These arms presumably would be used against key members of the Trujillo regime.

Within recent months, the Trujillo regime has become increasingly unstable due to growing opposition within the professional and middle classes to the excesses of the dictatorship. Political oppression of these groups has brought about severely strained relations between the Catholic Church and the Trujillo regime. Most knowledgeable sources have been predicting that the fall of the regime is imminent.

Since the fall of the Trujillo regime appears inevitable, is to the interest of the U.S. that our relations with the opposition be as close as possible. Providing the arms as requested would contribute significantly toward this end.

3. It is proposed to procure and deliver to underground opposition forces in the Dominican Republic twelve (12) sterile U.S. rifles, Model 1903 (Springfield), with telescopic sights, together with five hundred (500) rounds of ammunition for same. Arms and ammunition are immediately available at [illegible] depot; approximate cost is $2700. It is planned to deliver these weapons by air through DPD facilities provided arrangements can be worked out with the opposition for their reception. If they cannot be delivered by air, plans are currently being studied in the CA staff for delivery by sea.

4. Approval for delivery of these arms has been given by Assistant Secretary of State Roy Rubottom, who requests that the arms be placed in the hands of the opposition at the earliest possible moment.

3. Air Drops - Cuba

Mr. Bissell notified the Group of plans for five supply drops in the next three days.

5. Dominican Republic

Mr. Bissell gave the broad outlines of a two-pronged plan for proceeding with certain limited covert activities directed against the Trujillo regime. He emphasized that although support would be given to the Figueres group, there is no intention of establishing a para-military force as such, since this would be impractical in view of requirements for Cuba. He also emphasized that the proposed actions would not of themselves bring about the desired result in the near future, lacking some decisive stroke against Trujillo himself.

The Group agreed with the proposal as outlined and felt that it should be mentioned at the Tuesday meeting. It was noted that Mr. Pawley feels that overt intervention in the Dominican Republic should be mounted simultaneously with the Cuban operation. The consensus of the Group was that this would not be entirely consistent. However, it was agreed that the plan is worth beginning at this time no matter what the eventual decision on overt intervention may be.

6. Cuba

Mr. Merchant reported a brief conversation he had had with Mr. Gray's associates this morning. The latter had made two points: (a) it would be desirable to obtain the cooperation and support of individual Latin American governments, (b) it would be desirable, if possible, for the U.S. to break relations with Cuba, in concert with other countries, some time before January 20th.

Mr. Merchant explained the feeling of the Department of State that limited supplies of small arms and other materiel should be made available for dissidents inside the Dominican Republic. Mr. Parrott said that we believe this can be managed securely by CIA, and that the plan would call for final transportation into the country being provided by the dissidents themselves. The Group approved the project.

Mr. Dulles and Mr. Parrott outlined generally the results of the three successful U-2 flights over Vietnam, noting that Hanoi had not been covered because of clouds, and that it is planned to fly a mission to cover that area as soon as the weather permits.

The Group agreed that no such flight should take place after January 20th. They also requested a brief memo summarizing results, for the meeting of the 19th.

1. Congo

Mr. Parrott outlined broadly three (or as Mr. Dulles later described them "2 1/2") operational lines that we are following in mounting an anti-Lumumba campaign in the Congo. These included: operations through the chief advisor of the Christian Trade Unions; the planned attempt of a Socialist labor Senator to arrange a vote of no confidence in Lumumba; and a brand new contact with an alleged leader of certain independent labor groups. He emphasized that the latter had just come up and that we are now in the process of assessing the bona fides and capabilities of the individual.

The Group agreed that the action contemplated is very much in order. Mr. Gray commented, however, that his associates had expressed extremely strong feelings on the necessity for very straightforward action in this situation, and he wondered whether the plans as outlined were sufficient to accomplish this. Mr. Dulles replied that he had taken the comments referred to seriously and had every intention of proceeding as vigorously as the situation permits or requires, but added that he must necessarily put himself in a position of interpreting instructions of this kind within the bounds of necessity and capability. It was finally agreed that planning for the Congo would not necessarily rule out "consideration" of any particular kind of activity which might contribute to getting rid of Lumumba.

Mr. Irwin commented that certain individuals in Defense have given thought to the possibility of using high officials of the Catholic Church in Africa to promote the general objectives of the West. In this connection, he cited a preliminary assessment which had been made of the Negro Cardinal recently appointed by the Pope - the assessment being that the individual in question is a man of not outstanding intelligence, ability or drive, but that he is obviously well motivated. Mr. Irwin asked whether there might be other individuals of similar, although naturally lesser, stature in the church hierarchy who could be useful.

Mr. Merchant commented that the Catholic Church in Black Africa is not a very substantial force. Mr. Dulles concurred in this, but added that this would be something to keep in mind as appropriate.

√4. Cuba

The DCI summarized the progress we have made in establishing contact with certain dissident groups within Cuba. In this connection he also noted the apparent fulfillment of a sabotage requirement which had been levied on one of these groups as a test of its capabilities (after this action had been cleared with the Special Group).

He also said that we hope to have a paramilitary force of approximately 500 people ready to operate by November. In answer to Mr. Irwin's question, he outlined two possible ways of initiating the tactical combat phase.

Mr. Gray then told the Group of a talk he had had with the Director of the Bureau of the Budget. The latter had told Mr. Gray that he had discussed the Cuban project with Mr. Macy and that as a result of this discussion he, Mr. Stans, had two reservations that he would like Gray to look into.

One of these had to do with the statement by Macy that in his discussion with CIA representatives in connection with the latest withdrawal from the Reserve, he had received "no evidence" that any effective resistance had been identified within Cuba. (Mr. Gray had answered that in the formal presentation last week, Mr. Dulles and Mr. Bissell had mentioned a number of such groups.)

The second point had to do with a feeling that we might not know enough about the political attitudes of the members of the Frente, particularly as to basic freedoms, their attitude toward restoration of seized American property, etc. (In answer to this, Mr. Gray had pointed out that the Frente is composed of people who have broken with Castro, at least on the basic philosophies.)

PROPERTY OF

In an attempt to clarify the situation with respect to the first point, Mr. Parrott told the Group about last Monday's meeting with Mr. Macy, at which Mr. Barnes had covered in considerable detail all aspects of the Cuban project. He said that he was at a loss to understand how Macy could have received the impression that CIA is not aware of dissident groups. He went on to say that in answer to Mr. Macy's question as to the outlook, Mr. Barnes had stated - and had developed at considerable length - the thesis that our view was one of limited optimism, and that he had explained in detail just why this is so; this explanation had included specific comments on the steps that have been, and are being, taken to identify such groups and to assess their apparent leaders. Mr. Parrott said further that the point had been made forcibly to Macy that it would be out of the question for CIA to attempt to mount an invasion of Cuba by itself, without the participation of large numbers of disaffected individuals within the country.

On the second point, Mr. Dulles said that we do know a good deal about the basic political sympathies of Frente members, and cited as an example the position that had been taken as to the inclusion of certain ultra-conservative groups. He said that the Frente had issued a statement of its aims, which he summarized very broadly as being to preserve the principles of the revolution. He said that as to specific stands on restoration of U.S. property rights, etc., this was thought to be unwise because it would give the Frente the appearance of being a tool of the Americans. He agreed, however, that Mr. Stans' point was a valid one to bear in mind and said we would certainly do so. He added that he expects to lunch with Mr. Stans in the near future and would take that opportunity to discuss these matters further, as appropriate.

Mr. Parrott said that there was no disagreement that the political ideas of these individuals must be constantly assessed and must be clearly established before the operation actually comes off. He added, however, that it should be borne in mind that once these politically-screened individuals had issued their general statement of objectives, our primary operational task has been to hold the FRD together, and that at this particular stage it would not be practical to insist on a more precise spelling out of individual or group views.

Mr. Parrott also said that Mr. Macy had raised a related point which Mr. Barnes and he had agreed had validity, and that Mr. Barnes had undertaken to assure Macy that it would be given adequate attention by the interagency planning group. This was a concern expressed as to planning for the support - fiscal and otherwise - of a new Cuban government immediately after a successful overturn of the present one. Mr. Merchant said that he agreed fully with the necessity for making contingency plans of this sort, and had in fact directed three weeks ago that State officials begin to draw them up.

While agreeing that the Government could not take an official stand, Mr. Merchant expressed his personal opinion that if the companies should suspend operations, this would give the Soviets a great opportunity, given the fact that the Cuban economy is so dependent on oil. He pointed out that no alternative leader to Castro has yet emerged, and that the United States would be held liable for any economic crisis that might be precipitated in this way.

Mr. Gray related the consideration of this sort of action to the sugar project discussed three weeks ago by the Group. He emphasized that in his opinion these are isolated actions and that any moves of this kind should be made only after an over-all consideration of whether and how the United States wishes to move against Castro. Mr. Irwin took some exception to this, indicating that he thought it was possible and perhaps desirable to take such actions as those contemplated in the sugar proposal, apart from any concerted across-the-board program. Mr. Dulles emphasized that in any case we will have to decide before long whether covert action should be taken in Cuba.

It was then agreed that a special meeting of the Group should be held on Monday, March 14th, to consider what might and should be done in Cuba. It was agreed that in addition to the regular members, Mr. Rubottom, Admiral Burke, Mr. Bissell, Mr. King and perhaps Colonel Lansdale should attend.

There was then a brief discussion of Admiral Burke's letter to Mr. Merchant. It developed that the attachment to this letter has now been given the status of a JCS document but that it has not been forwarded to the NSC as the JCS had desired. (Mr. Irwin said that he had held up this action because of the informal nature of the letter.) Mr. Merchant said the Department is preparing comments and that he hoped the JCS paper would not be considered apart from State's comments.

Mr. Dulles said that we would require a policy decision on whether a black radio could be established on U.S. territory, probably in the Florida Keys. It was agreed that this proposal should be staffed through the Scott office.

✓3. Dominican Republic

Mr. Gray asked the Acting DCI whether he had anything to add on the situation in the Dominican Republic to what had been covered by himself and the Secretary of State that morning at the NSC meeting. General Cabell replied that he would only like to add the comment that it appears evident that Trujillo will not consider making any arrangements for an orderly succession to himself, but that he will either hang on to the bitter end or flee the country on short notice, à la Batista.

Mr. Gray asked the Group's views on what happens after Trujillo, specifically how Castro can be kept out of the Dominican Republic. General Cabell commented that so far no worthwhile opposition to the Benefactor has been identified, and that in his opinion it might well become necessary to dispatch U.S. forces, openly identified as such, to the country in the immediate aftermath of the demise or flight of Trujillo. Mr. Merchant said that his preliminary thoughts were that there would probably be a good chance to get OAS support for a move of this kind to forestall Castro; on the other hand, we might expect some internal revulsion at the arrival of U.S. forces because of the memory of the Marine occupation.

Mr. Merchant added that Mr. Rubottom was thinking seriously of a plan to seal off the land approaches to the Dominican Republic via Haiti, thereby requiring any sizeable Castro effort to be an amphibious one. He said that this plan has not yet been formally

4. Cuba

Mr. Gray expressed satisfaction with the organizational arrangements for interagency groups considering the continuing development of the Cuban situation. In this connection he expressed some concern that USIA and CIA might be working on parallel or conflicting lines with respect to radio. General Cabell assured him that the top people in USIA are aware of CIA plans and there should be no crossing of wires.

SUBJECT: Minutes of Special Group ~~Meeting, 28 April 1960~~

PRESENT: Messrs. Hare, Gray, Dulles

Mr. Joseph Scott of the Department of State sat in as an observer.

✓ 8. Cuba

Mr. Gray said that he had discussed with his associates the organizational entities within the U.S. Government which have been established to deal with the Cuban situation. He noted that a number of different groups and committees, with varying interests and objectives, are concerning themselves with this situation and that there seemed to him to be no "chief of staff" to whom all could look as a central point.

He said that the opinion had been expressed to him that Mr. Dillon should assume this function, but that in Dillon's absence, Mr. Hare should take on the responsibility and should inform himself of the general outlines of what has been going on in the Government. Mr. Gray said that it had been felt essential to have such an official available over the coming weekend, because of the expected May Day troubles, and that since this official should be of such a stature as to permit access to the highest levels, Mr. Hare had been decided upon, pending Mr. Dillon's availability.

In this connection it was agreed that Mr. Dillon should be brought up to date at an appropriate time on the status of covert operations with respect to Cuba.

C2084

Inter alia, Mr. Gray expressed concern and some surprise at statements and actions by UAR officials with regard to Cuba. Mr. Hare explained at some length his conviction that Deputy Foreign Minister Sabri (older brother of Ali Sabri) is largely responsible for this kind of thing, and that it does not represent the feelings of Nasser or Ali Sabri. He traced the brother's background and described him as a "twisted personality."

2. Cuba

Mr. Merchant began by stating that in his opinion we are putting more burden on the Guatemalan government with our training base than that government can support for very long. He noted that Mr. Mann believes the solution is to move our training activities to the U.S., but Mr. Merchant does not think we can get away with this, particularly if an increase in numbers is contemplated. Therefore, the only solution would seem to be to move to another base or bases in other countries; this would involve the same burden on the other countries as now exists with respect to Guatemala. Although he has not discussed this point with Secretary Herter, Mr. Merchant believes that it is time to take another look at Cuba and if the U.S. attitude toward Castro remains unchanged then we should consider shifting our entire posture. This would involve a break in diplomatic relations, the support of a government in exile, and other activities mostly overt, including some training in the U.S.

Mr. Mann commented that he thinks we cannot maintain training anywhere in Latin America indefinitely, although he does think we could maintain small airstrips without too much danger. He said that he believes everyone in Guatemala knows by now the true nature of our activities there, and that if they are going to be publicized before the world he would rather have them exposed in the U.S. rather than in Latin America. He recognized that this would be highly embarrassing for this country, but that for most Latin American governments it could be fatal. He spoke of the impending OAS investigation of Guatemala, and conceded that OAS support would be required to carry out training successfully in the U.S. To this, Mr. Merchant replied that he did not think exposure of such activities on American soil would be acceptable, particularly in the U.N.

Mr. Bissell then said that he has agreed for some time with Mr. Mann's point as to the strain on Guatemala. He said that we have developed an evacuation plan to be used in the event of outside investigation, but that this is not a satisfactory answer to the problem. He said that within about four weeks an alternate site could be established in Nicaragua but that this would be very expensive, would tie us into the Somoza brothers, and would call attention to Nicaragua in the same way as Guatemala.

Mr. Bissell said that he foresaw several possibilities for constructive change in the training operation, some for the immediate future and some over a period of longer range. They include:

a. A sort of refugee camp in the U.S. ostensibly designed for temporary care of Cuban exiles. This story could be defended but it is difficult to say for how long or how effectively.

b. A guarded military facility in the U.S. This could be handled more securely, but the existence of an area where peculiar things are going on could not be kept secret indefinitely. An alternative would be private property such as the King Ranch, but this would take longer to arrange than a military base.

c. Vieques Island, off Puerto Rico. This is fairly remote, but the government of Puerto Rico is already trying to get the U.S. Marines out.

d. The CIA site on Saipan. This would be very secure but would require a large amount of airlift.

e. Fort Randolph, in the Panama Canal Zone. At this location the trainees could be kept secure but would almost certainly know where they were.

Mr. Douglas said that a military base could be made available, such as Laughlin Air Force Base near Del Rio, Texas. He said that the use of such real estate might be tied into some sort of cooperation with Tracy Voorhees' Committee on Cuban Refugees. He felt also that the U.S. capability for intervention in Cuba will probably not be effective enough unless there is more overt participation than has been contemplated to date. Gen. Lansdale said that he and Gen. Bonesteel were of the same opinion.

Mr. Gray supported this general position, stating that when the current Cuban plan was approved, the situation in that country was different than it is now. Since then, the Cubans have received sizeable amounts of bloc arms and have organized a militia, and Mr. Gray wondered how effective a few hundred exiles could be. Mr. Dulles acknowledged that it would be necessary to have internal support if the Castro government were to be successfully overthrown; he felt that there is reason to believe such support might develop, perhaps within the militia itself.

Mr. Mann expressed the opinion that the way to proceed is to seal Cuba off from the rest of Latin America and to settle down for a one or two year wait, presumably to see whether the tide might not turn in our favor. He said that in the meantime we could infiltrate small groups of trained Cubans as a token, but that we should postpone a decision on a striking force for four or five months. In this general connection, Mr. Bissell said that even if it is finally decided that overt U.S. forces should be used, there still should be a nucleus of trained Cubans available. Therefore, our present activities should be continued in any case.

Summing up, the Group decided that the possibility of splitting the present body of trainees into three or four groups should be examined urgently (particularly in view of Mr. Mann's estimate that the OAS investigation might take place in two or three weeks). Alternate sites to be examined would include Vieques, Laughlin AFB and Fort Randolph.

[illegible]

The latter location should absorb no more than 200. Mr. Douglas cautioned that the use of DOD facilities should at the present time be considered as a holding operation rather than a continuation or stepping up of present training. The possibilities of establishing a kind of CCC under the Voorhees auspices should be examined.

✓3. Advice to Assistant Attorney General

Mr. Parrott tabled the draft of suggested advice to Mr. Yeagley in connection with Cuban exiles. Mr. Douglas felt that it was not desirable to give Mr. Yeagley any piece of paper. He suggested that Yeagley should simply be advised that the Group feels the best method of procedure might be to prosecute one test case, e.g. Masferrer, but not to institute wholesale prosecutions. In answer to a question, Mr. Parrott stated that he did not know whether this procedure would satisfy Mr. Yeagley, but that he would discuss it with Mr. Gray, who had by that time left the meeting. (Later, Mr. Gray talked to Yeagley, who appeared satisfied with the oral guidance.)

✓ 5. U-2 for Cuba

Mr. Bissell summarized the results of the first U-2 flight over Cuba and asked for the Group's permission for two additional sorties to fill in the remaining 50% coverage. The Group agreed, subject to Mr. Gray's concurrence. (This was obtained later.)

2. Cuba

Mr. Bissell reported that further consideration following the meeting of last Saturday had led to a tentative conclusion that Saipan would be the best place to which to move the bulk of the Cuban trainees. He emphasized the security advantages of the location, and said that it is believed the move can be accomplished with our own transportation plus two roundtrips by C-124s. These we would request the Department of Defense to provide. We would probably move some small commando-type units - about 50 men - to Fort Randolph. Mr. Bissell also stressed the fact that additional construction costs would be significantly less at Saipan than anywhere else.

The DCI agreed in general with this preliminary thinking. He urged, however, that the matter of morale of the trainees be borne constantly in mind, and that the move not be accomplished all at once. Gen. Lansdale agreed. Mr. Dulles also asked that President Ydigoras be informed.

Mr. Bissell concluded that plans would not be firmed up until receipt of Defense's report on facilities available in the U.S.

Mr. Bissell then spoke of the report of a possible attempt by Cuban dissidents to take over the Isle of Pines. He explained that we have nothing to do with the plan and would in fact be unable to give much support to it. He said that it is highly questionable whether this attempt will take place on the reported time schedule, or indeed at all, but emphasized that this illustrates how initiative might be taken by others, so that we could be presented with drastic requests for assistance on very short notice. Mr. Bissell also mentioned the report of possible major sabotage to be carried out in the very near future. In addition, he said that we now have six B-26s, plus eleven crews, available for combat, with other aircraft for supply. He noted that Nicaragua might be used for refueling in the event of actual operations, but that the immediate objective would be to obtain strips on the Isle of Pines. Mr. Dulles remarked that this would of course require an active revolt.

Mr. Dulles also mentioned the proposal by Peter Grace to encourage Father Peyton (described as a sort of Catholic Billy Graham) to carry out activities in Cuba.

2. Cuba

Mr. Gray solicited the Group's assistance in arriving at a consensus of views as to what exactly had been decided as a result of the high-level meeting of the day before. The following points were agreed:

a. Mr. Gray's associates stand ready to deny U.S. activity based in Guatemala, even though it may become blown (Mr. Douglas urged that every effort be made to make it possible to deny plausibly).

b. If the program is enlarged, additional facilities may be obtained, but at this stage not in the U.S. No training of Cubans will be conducted in the U.S. under present circumstances. (Mr. Bissell told the Group of the possibility of an additional finca in Guatemala.)

c. Evacuation plans should be kept in readiness. (Mr. Mann said that he thought he could arrange a week's notice before any OAS committee actually visited Guatemala and that it might be possible even then to avoid actual investigation on the spot. Mr. Bissell said that if we do have a week, evacuation could be carried out by Agency aircraft; if more speed is required DOD assistance might be necessary. Mr. Douglas, with Mr. Dulles and Mr. Bissell concurring, felt that the possibility of emergency evacuation to Florida under the guise of ordinary refugees should be kept in mind.)

Mr. Dulles suggested that questions on Cuba might be asked at the next Presidential press conference and that we should be prepared with a statement along the lines that we do not entirely discourage revolutionary activity. Mr. Merchant said he would arrange to have a draft prepared along these lines. In this connection, Mr. Parrott reported the request from Assistant Attorney General Yeagley for guidance as to possible action against an alleged collaborator of General Pedraza. (Note: Mr. Yeagley was later told that we have no operational interest and no objection to the Department of Justice's pursuing the case. Mr. Yeagley said that they would proceed with investigation, but that it is by no means certain the case will ever come to trial.)

Mr. Gray then outlined his understanding of his friends' desires with respect to organization of the anti-Castro effort. He said that the principal need foreseen was for an individual to serve as a focal point for diverse interests in this situation, and to be available to meet with Mr. Gray's friends at any time. In addition, someone should be available to deal with the FRD and to talk to other Latin American governments.

After a considerable amount of discussion, the consensus of the Group was as follows: Probably two men will be required, one to handle the overt and the other the covert aspects. They would work together on a daily basis and both would have the entire picture in mind, but responsibility for the execution of covert operations would have to rest with CIA. The overt man should ideally be a government official, preferably someone senior in the Foreign Service or the Department of State. There should be a sort of "board of directors" to oversee all aspects of the operation. This should be the Special Group plus Secretary Anderson when matters of major policy are considered. (Mr. Gray was not entirely sure that his friends would accept the two-man concept but Mr. Dulles and Mr. Merchant emphasized that whether there were one man or two, CIA would have to maintain its own organizational integrity.)

There then ensued a lengthy examination of qualifications and availability of a number of individuals. It was finally decided that, taking all things into consideration, including the aspect of quick availability, Ambassador Willauer would probably be the best choice. On the CIA side, Mr. Dulles nominated Mr. Barnes. It was recognized that these nominees would have to be checked with Mr. Gray's associates.

Mr. Mann suggested that Mr. Willauer might also do the FRD job, but the DCI pointed out that this requires a covert approach and must be done by the Agency.

As to Mr. Pawley, it was decided that it would be unwise to have him embark on a grand tour or to endow him with official government status. Mr. Merchant said he would not object, however, to Mr. Pawley's talking to President Frondizi.

Mr. Gray then mentioned the report which had reached his friends about a representative of the FRD who had apparently just returned from a trip around Latin America. It was noted that the individual referred to was probably Sardinius, and Mr. Dulles said he would obtain a written report of the trip, for passage to Mr. Gray's associates.

Mr. Bissell reminded Mr. Douglas of the outstanding request to the DOD for thirty-eight NCOs and officers for service outside the U.S.

The project providing for covert spotting and assessment of potential agents for eventual sabotage of sugar mills was discussed at some length. Within the limits outlined - that is, that no action would be initiated under the terms of any approval reached at this meeting, but rather that approval would cover only the identification and evaluation of assets - the Group expressed general approval. Mr. Dulles reiterated that he was not asking for approval actually to proceed with operations. Mr. Irwin stated that he and Secretary Douglas were enthusiastic about the project. It was agreed that it should be presented to the Secretary of State and that Mr. Gray would discuss it further.

(Later Mr. Gray reported that he had discussed this matter with his associate. The latter had made two points:

a. He doubted the efficacy of the proposed action, feeling that if it were successful in denying money to the Castro regime which could otherwise be used for subversive activities, the Cuban government could obtain offsetting funds from other sources.

b. He would not agree to identifying assets for this particular sabotage operation. He would agree that the Agency could proceed to spot and assess potential agents for a variety of possible tasks. He said that once this

SENATE SELECT COMMITTEE ON INTELLIGENCE
CONCLUDING REMARKS

You will, I hope, permit me some personal, but I think not unimportant observations. I hope that you will complete your work as expeditiously as possible as I feel very strongly the need for a viable Central Intelligence Agency operating, of course, within its charter. I believe that the present furor about C.I.A. is impeding it in the performance of its mission and the sooner it is able to go about its business, not in a fish bowl, the better our country will be served. I believe that we will continue to need effective, intelligent collection and analysis for our policy makers and I think there will be occasions when covert activities should be undertaken in the interests of our National security.

Finally, one thing that bothers me, Mr. Chairman, is that there is tremendous concern now -- and I don't suggest that it is improper -- with the activities of the Central Intelligence Agency, while at the same time people seem not to be equally concerned about what the Soviet Union is up to in this country, especially through its very many KGB agents here. I would hope that a Congressional Committee would be interested enough to investigate this most serious matter.

OCCURRENCE: At a National Security Council meeting on July 7, 1960 Mr. Dulles stated: "The Venezuelan government was engaged in an all-out effort, through the OAS and otherwise, to isolate, condemn and cause the downfall of Trujillo. An important reason for the vigor of the Venezuelan efforts was the fact they have convincing evidence that Trujillo was responsible for the assassination attempt on Betancourt /President of Venezuela/ "Betancourt believes another attempt will be made momentarily and therefore it wants a showdown without delay." Mr. Dulles further explained that the Venezuelan Foreign Minister wants the United States to lead the way in breaking relations with Trujillo and that Betancourt wants a meeting of the OAS nations to deal with the Trujillo problem.

OCCURRENCE: On July 7, 1960 at a National Security Council meeting ~~"Mr. Dulles stated that he believes, and the intelligence community agrees, that the problem of Trujillo must be settled before the problem of Castro can be dealt with, even though Castro is the greater threat."~~

The NSC minutes further state that the United States told Betancourt of Venezuela that the United States can't act without knowing who the successor to Trujillo would be. The U.S. will work with Betancourt and Figueres of Costa Rica on suggestions for a successor for Trujillo. President Eisenhower suggested a government in exile be ready to go into the Dominican Republic in the event of Trujillo's downfall.

Re: DELETION IN SPECIAL GROUP MINUTES OF NOVEMBER 3, 1960

Date: July 7, 1975

In a phone conversation with Jim Wilderotter of the White House, Wilderotter assured me that after the line "beyond our capabilities" on page 3, there was a double space followed by Item 2, which deals with the African continent (not Congo), followed by a double space, then Item 3, which deals with Southeast Asia.

Wilderotter assured me that neither item related to our inquiry. He said that there was nothing deleted on page 3 that related to Cuba.

MEMORANDUM

TOP SECRET

FROM: Frederick Baron

DATE: July 5, 1975

SUBJECT: SUMMARY OF INTERVIEW WITH GORDON GRAY

GENERAL BACKGROUND

1. Staff Responsibilities Under Eisenhower:

Gray said that the structural chain of command ran directly from the DCI to the President during the Eisenhower administration. Allen Dulles was able to approach Eisenhower directly, rather than through Gray.

Andrew Goodpaster staffed President Eisenhower on many of the same subjects that Gray worked on. Gray was responsible for long-range planning; Goodpaster was responsible for spot work. Gray said that Goodpaster and he kept each other "intimately informed". However, Gray said that any covert action program would go through him and not Goodpaster. "Although I would tell Goodpaster about anything I discussed with the President." Some covert action programs were extremely tightly held, for example, on the U-2 incident only the following people were knowledgeable: Eisenhower, Goodpaster, and John Eisenhower.

"I didn't live with Eisenhower 24 hours a day. I don't know everything that he did. But I do think I knew every major decision, approval, or action of Eisenhower's."

2. Special Group Function

At the 54/12 committee, Gray said, "I represented the President's interest, that was my role."

Gray said that shortly after the BERLIN TUNNEL, Eisenhower said, "I want the 54/12 committee to consider any action that impinges upon the sovereignty of another country."

TOP SECRET

Gray said that in almost every case, a proposed covert action would have been discussed with the State Department and would have been staffed out before Special Group meeting. "Most of the rest of us did not have a chance to reflect before the meeting."

Gray said that during his tenure, there was no chairman of the 54/12 (Special Group). But perhaps Merchant conducted the meetings.

Gray said that during the transition to the Kennedy administration, he asked McGeorge Bundy to promise him that the Special Group would not be washed out. Gray explained that the Special Group was necessary for the protection of the President. The Special Group discussions allow the President the chance to know in advance about actions which are potentially embarrassing to him. The President's representative to the Group (Gray, then Bundy) has the right to object to an action and take it up with the President. The President has a chance to know about everything that goes on in the Special Group, and through his Special Assistant for National Security Affairs, the President would have a chance to say "no" to a proposed action. Gray said that the presence of the Special Group would protect a President from operations such as assassinations.

3. "His Associate":

Initially, Gray did not recognize the phrase used by Parrott in the Special Group minutes "Mr. Gray's associate" or "his associates". Gray's first reaction was that "his associates" would probably refer to members of his NSC staff.

But after seeing the minutes of the Special Group meeting of February 17, 1960, Gray said that it was clear that in those minutes "his associate" referred to President Eisenhower.

Gray said that he never used the phrase "associate", that was Parrott's phrase. Gray was not aware the phrase was used at the time in those minutes and couldn't, without reconstructing each minute, be sure it referred to the President in each case. He said that when he attended the meetings,he would refer to "the President" directly.

(Note: Since the phrase "the President" is never used in Parrott's minutes, it is fair to assume that at least some of the references to "Mr. Gray's associate" are euphemisms for President Eisenhower.)

NSC DOCUMENTS

Gray recalls that the President called him, and perhaps Allen Dulles, into his office shortly after Gray's appointment and said that "no minutes, notes, or memos of Special Group meetings are to be kept, except by the DCI and they are to be kept in the DCI's files." Gray said that Dulles was not present at this meeting. He knows that he would have told Dulles shortly afterwards.

Gray did not keep personal notes of the Special Group meetings. Although he did defy the Presidential directive in one specific instance, by deciding to make a memorandum of every meeting with the President relating to the subject of Cuba. These memoranda are on file at the Presidential Library in Abilene, Kansas.

Gray said that he never reviewed Thomas Parrott's minutes of the Special Group. But the NSC minutes were passed to the principals at the meeting for their review. Gray prepared the "records of action" for the NSC, along with Jimmy Lay, Gray's assistant.

LUMUMBA

Gray said that he did not remember the August 25, 1960 meeting at which it was reported that Gray commented that "his associates had expressed extremely strong feelings on the necessity for very straight-forward action" in relation to LUMUMBA. Gray said at first that he did not remember LUMUMBA's position in the Congo. Gray said that he did not remember talking with Eisenhower about LUMUMBA.

However, Gray does remember that "we were anti-LUMUMBA and wanted to see him removed from his position of responsibility."

In reference to the August 25 meeting, after he had seen the minutes of the meeting, Gray said that "when I said 'straightforward action', certainly assassination would be one possibility." Gray continued to say that Allen DULLES was consistently in opposition to assassination and "he was probably saying to me that assassination was one of the things we shouldn't do."

With reference to testimony received by the Select Committee from Robert JOHNSON, a State Department official who was a member of the Policy Planning Council, he said that he had no recollection of a meeting in the summer of 1960, at which President EISENHOWER ordered the assassination of LUMUMBA or said words to that effect.

Gray said that he knows Bronson TWEEDY, but he never discussed LUMUMBA with TWEEDY.

TOP SECRET

TRUJILLO

"I am sure there was no discussion with EISENHOWER about the assassination of TRUJILLO."

"I don't see how the DCI and the Department of State could have approved arms shipments without going up to the Special Group. The DCI should have taken a suggested course of action to the Special Group after checking with State."

Gray said: "A high-powered weapon with a telescopic site would connote to me that it would be used for the purpose of assassinating an individual."

CUBA

Gray said that President EISENHOWER would frequently remark at meetings on Cuba that an operation should be planned so that it would be carried through successfully, otherwise it should not be planned at all.

Referring to the minutes of the Special Group meeting of February 17, 1960, Gray said that at some point during that period of time, Allen DULLES brought his sugar mill sabotage plan to President EISENHOWER, who listened attentively. Afterward, the President said, "I don't think sabotage of sugar mills will do something significant. Bring me a complete plan." Subsequently, DULLES brought the President a four-point program: propaganda; economic sanction; sabotage; and the training of Cuban exiles. GRAY said the President approved this memo. (Note that Gray also said that he made a memo of this meeting and subsequent meetings on Cuba.)

After the BAY OF PIGS, Gray called President EISENHOWER and offered to show him all of the memos that Gray had prepared on Presidential meetings on Cuba. Gray said that JOHN EISENHOWER obtained the memos and brought them to Gettysburg. Gray and President EISENHOWER reviewed the memos. Gray said that the President objected to the word "planning" in reference to a Cuban invasion, on the basis that there was no actual military planning. EISENHOWER suggested that the page should be retyped to change the word "planning". Gray said they did retype the page.

Gray said that although in his mind and EISENHOWER's, there was no military "planning", definitely EISENHOWER knew that Cuban exiles were being trained for an amphibious landing in Cuba.

President EISENHOWER went so far in contingency planning, said Gray, as to advocate to Allen DULLES the formation of a government in exile among the Cuban community. But, Gray said, the Cubans could never settle among themselves who would constitute the leadership of such a government.

Referring to the minutes of Special Group meeting of August 12, 1960, Gray remembers the presentation by Richard BISSELL of a budget for Cuban operations over 13 million dollars, with a heavy emphasis on paramilitary operations. Gray said that the reference at the end of the memo to laying this budget before "higher authorities" for approval clearly referred to President EISENHOWER.

Referring to the minutes of the Special Group meeting of November 3, 1960, at which MERCHANT asked a question about whether there had been planning "for taking direct positive action against FIDEL, RAUL, and CHE GUEVARA," Gray said that he did not remember the meeting. Gray acknowledged, however, that the phrase "direct positive action" in this context "could have included assassination." Gray said that the reaction by General CABELL that such action would be beyond CIA capabilities, was the "usual DCI reaction".

Referring to the Special Group minutes of December 28, 1960, Gray said that "the special meeting" mentioned therein is clearly a meeting with the President. Gray though that this must have been the last meeting on Cuba with the President, the purpose of which would have been to clean up the Cuba project for the new administration. Gray said that there must have been dozens of meetings on Cuba (all of which will be reflected in the Gray memos in Abilene).

CASTRO/GAMBLING SYNDICATE OPERATION, PHASE I

Gray said that he was completely unaware of any conversation between Richard BISSELL and Sheffield EDWARDS about establishing underworld contacts for the purpose of an assassination attempt on CASTRO. Gray also said that he was unaware of any development, within the Technical Services Division of the CIA, of assassination devices to be used against CASTRO such as lethal cigars. Likewise, he was unaware of the development of any devices designed for the disorientation or embarrassment of CASTRO.

Gray said that he knew BISSELL well, but not EDWARDS.

Gray said that, if such operations were in progress, the DCI should have known about them. Gray said that if the DCI knew about such operations, "he would have raised it at the Special Group or with me. He didn't. I think I would have known if Allen DULLES had discussed such subjects with the President." Gray said that it was possible that BISSELL was acting unilaterally on this matter. Gray said that he'd talked to Andrew GOODPASTER about the recent news stories which indicate that there was assassination planning against CASTRO during this period of time, and GOODPASTER said that he'd never heard about such things.

EXECUTIVE ACTION

"I never heard of EXECUTIVE ACTION until David BELIN mentioned it to me."

ASSASSINATIONS GENERALLY

Gray said that he remembered two mentions of assassination: (1) When NASSAR was riding high, someone at the planning board said "we ought to bump him off". But Gray said this was not a serious discussion. Assassination was not an option that went to the President. (2) At the PFIAB meetings, one member consistently would ask the CIA "about bumping off the leadership in Hanoi". Gray did not think this was a serious suggestion. Gray said the member who suggested this is "well-known" and he was reluctant to provide the name to us.

"I followed closely any covert operations I was interested in." Gray said that "if I had known of any assassination attempt, I probably would have called" the responsible official to stay abreast. He said he didn't know of any such attempts.

TOP SECRET

Interview Questions For Gordon Gray

TRUJILLO

1. MEMO of July 1, 1960 from J.C. King, (Chief, WHD) to Acting DCI recommending the delivery of arms (high-powered rifles with telescopic scopes) to the opposition of TRUJILLO. The Memo says that "APPROVAL FOR DELIVERY OF THESE ARMS HAS BEEN GIVEN BY ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE ROY RUBOTTOM".

- Were there any proceedings of the Special Group at this time which authorized delivery of arms? (We don't have record of any authorization until January 12, 1961 S.G. Minutes)

- If not, did the DCI and Assistant Secretary of State exceed their authority?

- Generally, what was the procedure in the Eisenhower administratio for handling the approval of such a project?
  - Could the DCI approve it under his own authority?
  - Did the Assistant Secretary of State exceed his authority by not requesting and receiving approval from the Secy of Stat

  - Shouldn't the Special Group have been consulted?

2. SPECIAL GROUP MINUTES of 12 JANUARY 196~~2~~1. GRAY was present. The Group approves shipment of arms to "dissidents inside the Dominican Republic".
   - Do you remember this event? Are the minutes accurate?
   - What was the policy behind the approval?
   - Weren't the weapons intended for use in assassination?

Date: 7/5/75

Biographical Background

1951-62 National Security Council staff member

1962-67 State Department, member of Policy Planning Council

Chronology of Events

Summer, 1960 Johnson attended a meeting of the NSC to discuss developments in the CONGO. "At some time during that discussion, President EISENHOWER said something -- I can no longer remember his words -- that came across to me as an order for the assassination of LUMUMBA...There was no discussion; the meeting simply moved on."

- --Johnson said he might have omitted the statement from his de-briefing memo due to its sensitivity.
- -- J. said probably Allen DULLES and Gordon GRAY were present at the meeting (in the Cabinet Room).
- --The formal record of decision by the NSC is unlikely to contain information on this subject, he said.
- --The memos which Johnson did on the meetings would be with President Eisenhower's papers.(10)

"I was surprised ...that I would ever hear a President say anything like this in my presence or the presence of a group of people. I was startled."

Short Chronology*

Biographical
1940-47	Counterespionage work as FBI agent
1947	Joined CIA as head of Soviet Intelligence Branch
1948	Deputy Assistant Director, Office of Special Operations (which became DDP)
1952	Chief of Station, Berlin (Berlin Tunnel operation)
1959	Became Chief of Foreign Intelligence staff Division D (FI/D) which handles communications intelligence and sensitive methods of obtaining it (e.g., surreptitious entries)
1960
August 16	DR. EDWARD GUNN (Office of Medical Services) receives box of Cuban cigars to be treated with lethal poison. (21)
1961
Late January (approx.)	EDWARDS and O'CONNELL ask for development of POISON PILLS. (24)
February (approx.)	BISSELL (DDP) asks HARVEY to establish an EXECUTIVE ACTION capability under project ZRRIFLE. Harvey's notes are quoted as saying that Bissell said he had been "twice urged by the White House" to establish such a capability. (37) Harvey is briefed, probably by both BISSELL and EDWARDS, on the Phase I assassination plot run by Sheffield EDWARDS and James O'CONNELL (Office of Security) which involved criminal syndicate connections. (37) HARVEY uses agent QJWIN (recruited earlier by ARNOLD SILVER for use in an assassination operation against LUMUMBA) as the principle asset for ZRRIFLE. (38) Edwards has the POISON PILLS tested. (25)

---

* Page references in parentheses are from the 1967 Report of the Inspector General of the CIA.

Early Feb.	According to Dr. GUNN, HARVEY asked about the pills he tested. Gunn briefed Harvey, who told him to brief SIDNEY GOTTLIEB about techniques but not targets. (27)
Late Feb.	Pills given to ROSELLI by O'CONNELL are passed to TRAFFICANTE. (27) ROSELLI reports to O'CONNELL that pills reached ORTA in Cuba. ORTA returns pills in couple weeks. (27)
March-Early April	O'CONNELL gives pills and money to ROSELLI who passes them to VARONA. (32)
Mid-April	Bay of Pigs invasion fails; JFK appoints Taylor Committee.
November 15	Beginning of PHASE II: BISSELL instructs HARVEY to apply the ZRRIFLE assassination capability to Castro. (39) Harvey takes over the criminal syndicate contacts developed in Phase I. (39) HARVEY is told by HELMS that he is to take over the CIA Cuba task force. (39)
November 29	MC CONE replaces Allen Dulles as DCI

1962

February	EDWARDS briefs HARVEY on Castro operation. (40)
February 7	EDWARDS meets with FBI to ask them not to prosecute the Rowan wiretap case because of CIA concern. (60)
February 19	HELMS (DDP nominee) authorizes HARVEY to handle ZRRIFLE project with unvouchered funds. (38)
April 8-9	HARVEY, ROSELLI, O'CONNELL, and perhaps MAHEU meet in New York to plan Phase II. (43) (Harvey disputes O'Connell's recollection that Maheu was there and knowledgeable of Phase II.) Both Edwards and Harvey check with HELMS before the meeting is arranged and HARVEY obtains Helm's approval not to brief MC CONE (41). Harvey thereafter begins regular reporting to Helms on Phase II. (41)
April 14	HARVEY, ROSELLI, and O'CONNELL meet in Miami. (46)
April 18-19	Pills are delivered to Harvey in Washington. (46)

1962 (cont'd)

April 21	HARVEY passes the pills to ROSELLI in Florida. (47) Roselli was to give the pills to Varona, who had an asset in Cuba with access to Castro's restaurant. At this point Roselli is using Tony VARONA and "MACEO" as contacts with Cuba rather than Trafficante. (47-8)
Late April	HARVEY, with help of Ted SHACKLEY (Chief of JMWAVE station in Miami), loaded arms and equipment in a U-Haul truck which was left in a parking lot for Roselli, who delivered it to a Cuban contact. (49-50)
Throughout May	Intense contact between HARVEY and ROSELLI. Roselli reports that pills are in Cuba at the restaurant frequented by Castro awaiting the opportunity to use them. (50)
May 7	EDWARDS and HOUSTON brief ATTORNEY GENERAL ROBERT F. KENNEDY on PHASE I of the assassination operation. (62a)*
May 14	Edwards tells HARVEY of the briefing of RFK. (65) Harvey says that he briefed HELMS about this and advised against briefing McCone (DCI) or Carter (DDCI); Helms agreed. (65)
	HARVEY is told by EDWARDS that the "tacit approval" of the DCI should be obtained if Roselli was to be used any further. (65) Harvey told Edwards that Roselli would not be used any more. (According to Edwards' memorandum of 5/14/62.) (42)
June 21	ROSELLI tells HARVEY that VARONA has sent three men to Cuba to recruit others for the pill plot. (51)
August 10	Special Group (Augmented) meets on OPERATION MONGOOSE. HARVEY and MC CONE said that McNAMARA raised the subject of assassinations at this meeting in regard to new plans.
August 13	General LANSDALE'S memorandum assigns to HARVEY the drafting of an outline of intelligence, political, economic, and paramilitary activities for the implementation of MONGOOSE. The task includes planning for "splitting the regime, including liquidation of leaders".

---

* RFK asks to be told before the CIA works with the Mafia again. (62a)

1962 (cont'd)

August 14	HARVEY writes a memorandum to DDP HELMS saying that he advised Lansdale's aide FRANK HAND to excise the words "including liquidation of leaders" from the LANSDALE memo because of "the inadmissibility and stupidity of putting this type of comment in writing in such a document". Harvey also tells Helms that he has "careful notes" on MC NAMARA'S discussion of assassination at the Special Group meeting of August 10.
September	Pills still in place; HARVEY learns that VARONA is ready to send another team to Cuba. (51)
October	CUBAN MISSILE CRISIS

February	HARVEY and ROSELLI agree in Los Angeles to call off the operation, although not to break precipitously with VARONA. (52)
June	HARVEY and ROSELLI have last dinner in Washington and are observed by SAM PAPICH of the FBI, who has ROSELLI under intensive surveillance. Harvey asks Papich to let him know if HOOVER is going to call MC CONE. (53-4) Harvey briefs Helms and Helms agrees not to brief McCone unless it appears that McCone will receive a call from Hoover. (54)
August 16	Spurred by a Chicago newspaper story of the same day, HELMS sends MC CONE the Edwards memo of 5/14/62 of the RFK briefing. (69)

Subject: Alternate Course B

INVENTORIED MAR 21 1977

In compliance with the desires and guidance expressed in the 10 August policy meeting on Operation Mongoose, we will produce an outline of an alternate Course B for submission. The CIA paper "Operational Plan (Reduced Effort)" will be used as the starting basis.

Since this is to be a bare outline, to permit further policy guidance to be developed, I believe the paper need contain only a statement of objectives and a list of implementing activities. The list of activities will be under the headings of: Intelligence, Political, Economic, Psychological, Paramilitary, and Military.

We will hold an Operational Representatives work session in my office, at 1400 hours, Tuesday, 14 August, to complete the outline paper for submission. Each of you is to bring 5 copies of completed assigned work to this work session, to permit each of us to work from a full set of drafts.

Papers required from each of you for the Tuesday meeting:

Mr. Harvey: Intelligence, Political (splitting the regime, [redacted]), Economic (sabotage, limited deception), and Paramilitary. Also, any suggestions for inclusion in other sections of the paper.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Deputy Director (Plans)

SUBJECT : Operation MONGOOSE

1. Action. None. This memorandum is for your information.

2. Reference is made to our conversation on 13 August 1962, concerning the memorandum of that date from General Lansdale. Attached is a copy of this memorandum, excised from which are four words in the second line of the penultimate paragraph on page 1. These four words were "including liquidation of leaders."

3. The question of assassination, particularly of Fidel Castro, was brought up by Secretary McNamara at the meeting of the Special Group (Augmented) in Secretary Rusk's office on 10 August. It was the obvious consensus at that meeting, in answer to a comment by Mr. Ed Murrow, that this is not a subject which has been made a matter of official record. I took careful notes on the comments at this meeting on this point, and the Special Group (Augmented) is not expecting any written comments or study on this point.

4. Upon receipt of the attached memorandum, I called Lansdale's office and, in his absence, pointed out to Frank Hand the inadmissibility and stupidity of putting this type of comment in writing in such a document. I advised Frank Hand that, as far as CIA was concerned, we would write no document pertaining to this and would participate in no open meeting discussing it. I strongly urged Hand to recommend to Lansdale that he excise the phrase in question from all copies of this memorandum, including those disseminated to State, Defense, and USIA. Shortly thereafter, Lansdale called back and left the message that he agreed and that he had done so.

Project ZRRIFLE

1. Identification: The purpose of Project ZRRIFLE is to spot, develop, and use agent assets for Division D operations. Agents will be spotted in several areas, including the United States, but for operational security reasons will probably not be used in their countries of residence. Present developmental activity is being conducted in the WE and EE areas, but it is anticipated that this will be extended to other division areas. The project will be operated against third-country installations and personnel.

2. Objectives: The objective of this project is the procurement of code and cipher materials, and information concerning such materials, in accordance with requirements levied on the Clandestine Services, primarily by the National Security Agency. Since these requirements are subject to frequent revision, no listing of targets would be valid for the duration of the project. Specific operations will be mounted on the basis of need and opportunity. The project will be conducted by Division D with assistance from area divisions and stations as needed.

3. Background: In response to the increasing requirements for the operational procurement of foreign code and cipher materials, Division D in 1960 began the spotting of agent assets as a developmental activity. During the same period requirements from NSA became more refined and in many respects more sensitive. Because most stations are not equipped to conduct this type of operation and because of the desirability of completely control over this entire effort, it was determined that Division D, which is in closest touch with NSA on procurement requirements, could best conduct the activity. The spotting activity has now advanced far enough to justify removing from the OOA category.

4. Operational Assets:

(1) Personnel: QJWIN is under written contract as a principal agent, with the primary task of spotting agent candidates. QJWIN was first contacted in 1958 through the Chief of the Luxembourg I. S. by the Chief of Station, Luxembourg, in connection with an illegal narcotics operation into the United States. For a period of a year and a half he was contacted sporadically by COS, Luxembourg, in behalf of the Bureau of Marcotics. Files of this Bureau reflect an excellent performance by QJWIN. In October 1960,

Re: Richard Goodwin Materials and Summary

Summary

A. Goodwin Interview of July 16, 1975

Mr. Goodwin was interviewed for a second time on July 16, 1975. He indicated that he chaired the "Cuba Task Force" after the Bay of Pigs. Paul Nitze had previously chaired the group. It was this Cuba Task Force that suggested the establishment of the Lansdale project. In this regard, Goodwin noted that Lansdale proved to be very efficient. Goodwin indicated that he was present during the conversation between President Kennedy and Tad Szulc concerning the question of assassinating Castro. (See Szulc's testimony infra.) He spoke with the President after that conversation and remembers JFK saying about assassination: "We can't get into that -- we'll all be targets." He noted that Bissell never mentioned anything to him, Goodwin, about assassination attempts. With regard to the August 10, 1962, meeting which he attended, Goodwin noted that McCone never made any oration upon the immorality of assassinating Castro. He remembered the August 10 meeting and said that "assassination was not shot down". When pressed for details at this point, and after being shown the Lansdale (8/13/62) and Harvey (8/14/62) memoranda, he said he wanted to think about the meeting before he made any more statements about who said and did what. He noted, however, that in 1966 while in Peru with Robert Kennedy that Kennedy, in a fleeting retort to a series of questions about U. S. assassination attempts against Castro, said "Tell him (the interpreter) I saved his (Castro's) life."

At the conclusion of the interview he turned over to the Committee various documents related to Cuba which he had found in his personal papers. Those are appended to this summary.

B. Goodwin Interview of May 27, 1975

During the course of this earlier interview, Goodwin alluded to the Cuba Task Force. According to the Committee notes of that interview, the discussion went as follows:

> In general, Goodwin had not heard much specific talk of assassination, although it would not have surprised him if it had gone on. He mentioned one specific instance in which he had heard talk of > assassinating Castro. After the Bay of Pigs, a Cuba Task Force was established, first chaired by Paul Nitze and then by Goodwin in his capacity as White House Staff Officer. At a meeting of the Task Force, held at the State Department, McNamara suggested "getting rid of Castro", someone from the CIA, perhaps Bissell, then asked if McNamara meant "Executive Action". McNamara responded that he did and stressed his interest in the idea. However, Goodwin did not bring the topic up later in the meeting after McNamara left. (See interview infra.)

C. The Goodwin Documents

The documents which Mr. Goodwin has furnished the Committee are of no startling significance. One document, the May 2, 1961, memorandum from Bissell to Goodwin, is noteworthy because it does not advise him of the Roselli connection or the efforts to assassinate Castro. Bissell notes, "I have not attempted to provide you with much detail." A May 24, 1961, Memorandum of Conversation with Bissell by Goodwin does not mention any reference by Bissell to actions against Castro on the assassination front. An Arthur Schlesinger memorandum of June 30, 1961, to the President discusses the need for revamping of the "intelligence set-up" of the United States. In a footnote in that memorandum, Schlesinger notes that the CIA is not able to control its operatives once they are in the field and of the attendant dangers this poses. (See page 6 of the memo.)

The other documents indicate the thinking that went on up to the point where the Lansdale group was established as the coordinated effort against Cuba.

Areas of Inquiry for Goodwin

-- What, if anything, does Goodwin remember of the August 10, 1962, meeting of the Special Group which he attended?

-- Is this meeting different than the meeting he refers to in his initial interview where McNamara broached the subject of assassinating Castro? Or has he simply confused them and are they one and the same?

-- How does he explain McCone's recollection of having given an oration on the immorality of assassinating Castro when it was brought up at the August 10 meeting?

-- Was McNamara the person who brought up the subject at that meeting?

-- What discussion, if any, followed?

MEMORANDUM

To: McGeorge Bundy
From: Dick Goodwin

Here are a few scattered thoughts on the "Cuba" problem.

Cuba is a threat to the security of the United States in two basic ways:

1. As a direct military menace in the Caribbean, a menace which will be intensified as communist arms shipments continue. However, even this increased danger will be minimal. Our treaty obligations commit us to the defense of any American nation which is attacked directly. Any military moves by Castro could be met immediately by our forces. Similarly we could intervene in case of Castro military aid to guerilla operations in the Americas.

2. As an exporter of revolution: There is no doubt that Cuba is being used as a base for export of the communist-fidelista revolution. This is done through the actual supply of funds and technical assistance to insurgent elements, through widespread and reasonably effective propaganda apparatus including a news service and radio network and through the use of Cuba as an example of the alliance between fidelismo and necessary social reform -- identification with the welfare of the people.

This threat is significant -- especially in the Carribean area. However, even here, in the last six months there has been a significant decline in Cuban effectiveness. This has come because of the growing isolation of communist--fiedlista elements from the Democratic left as Castro's pro-Soviet bent has become more apparent; and as Castro has become increasingly erratic in his personal behavior. There are signs, in fact, that, the communists are looking for another, more stable, hero -- perhaps Cardenas of Mexico.

3. While this means a declining influence of fidelismo over popular movements; it does not necessarily lessen the importance of Cuban-Soviet-Chinese material and technical aid to revolutionary movements. It is important to remember that even if Castro were wiped out tomorrow we would not have solved the problem of communist influence in the Americas. In fact, most of the greatest danger spots (E.G. Northeast Brazil, Columbia back-country, communist dominated student movements, etc.) do not owe either their existence or strength to Castro, but to local and independent leadership. This danger has been steadily growing, and would continue to grow if our only anti-communist move were to knock out Castro. These movements will Benefit from material assistance, even if they do not look to Cuba for leadership.

Suggested Course of Action:

Action Aimed At Cuba Directly

1. Before acting directly against Castro, in any fashion, we need a complete reassessment of the vulnerability of his regime -- the degree of popular support, the probably declining position of the Cuban economy and its impact on the Cuban people, the efficiency of his police state, the possibilities of underground organization, etc. Without such an assessment it is impossible to realistically determine what alternative courses of action are open to us.

2. To meet the military threat we can work out defense agreements with Central American nations along the lines suggested with Professor Berle.

3. We should approach the government of Chile to call an Inter-American arms limitation conference. This conference should deal with methods of stopping external arms shipments in the context of the over-all limitations which are desparately needed in Latin America. We should decide, before this meeting, whether the risks in an OAS blockade of arms shipments to Cuba are outweighed by the dangers involved in halting and searching international shipping.

4. Immediately consult with heads of major nations in Latin America to see how far they are willing to go in terms of collective action. This should be done via a personal emissary. Although we should have a reasonably clear idea of what we want to do, this should be a genuine consultation among allies. All the myriad proposals for OAS action, etc., depend on the reaction of other Latin nations -- a reaction as yet undetermined.

5. Underlying all these proposals is the feeling that we should not move quickly in direct action against Cuba. I do not believe that there is any course of direct action which we can wisely take on the basis of current knowledge and conditions.

Attempts to stop direct export of Castroism

1. We should provide Carribean nations with the technical help (e.g. radar to spot incoming planes) and navy patrol assistance to meet the dangers of arms shipments from Cuba to insurgent elements in those nations.

2. There are two or three real danger spots (E.g. Dominican Republic and Haiti) where we should now be developing democratic alternatives to the present regime -- organizing replacement governments. If we do not do this then the inevitable changes in government may be followed by Castro-type regimes. When Democratic alternatives are organized we should consider means of precipitating the fall of Trujillo and Duvalier and possibly Somoza. In this way we can exert maximum control over the type of replacement government -- the timing and initiative should be ours.

3. Help provide counter-propaganda assistance to Latin governments -- e.g. radio transmitters. The more we can work through Democratic-liberal forces in Latin America, rather than through USIA alone, the more effective will be our propaganda.

General counter-communist operations

Our long-range strategy in the Americas should have two basic elements: First, the organization of a strong political counter-force. We have a ready instrument in the newly organized League of Democratic parties.

We should assist these parties -- financially and technically -- to develop progressive political movements (in some cases revolutionary movements, especially in the less progressive countries) through helping them in techniques of organization down to the village level, ideological warfare, etc. U. S. government help should be covert.

Second, the Alianza para el progreso. This program with its emphasis on social and economic advance is the real hope of preventing a communist takeover. The Alianza is proceeding about as rapidly as possible given present organization of effort, and the magnitude of available funds. Both of these elements are unsatisfactory.

A. Funds: Present plans provide for the allocation of 250-350 million dollars worth of economic assistance to Latin America in fiscal 1962. This is out of a total of 2. 4. billion. (This sum does not include the social development fund). One hundred million of this will go to Brazil to get them over their current financial crisis. I am not clear that any substantial allocation could be made given the enormous needs in Asia (especially in India and Pakistan) -- although I believe there can be some increase. However, these funds are probably not sufficient to make a real and effective start in economic development.

B. Organization: If communist takeover comes in Latin America it probably will not come through guerilla warfare, but through the capture of indigenous revolutionary movements. We cannot meet such a threat effectively -- well-organized as it is -- when our overseas operations are as diffuse and uncoordinated as they are today. The aid program, the political bureaus of State, the USIA, educational exchange, CIA activities all go, to too great an extent, their own way under separate heads and often in pursuit of separate goals. I believe that resulting diffusion of effort, results in great waste of resources and intelligence. We must organize our non-military overseas operation to reflect our basic objective in Latin America -- the strengthening of democratic Western-oriented nations and governments so that they have the capacity to resist communist attack in all its forms. Those who are charged with the responsiblity for achieving this objective must have control over the instruments which our government provides. Just as we have seen the need for some centralization of command in fighting hot wars -- it is needed for effectively waging a cold war. This does not necessarily mean a "Chief of Hemisphere Operations"; but at the very least it means that, within each key country there must be a central operational capacity and authority with direct lines to the levels of action in Washington.

As indicated by the combined INR/ONE estimate, anti-Castro activity within Cuba will probably be muted at least for the next several months. Most individuals whose loyalty is in any way suspect have been arrested. A recent report from the Swiss Ambassador indicated that political prisoners now number 100,000. All internal services will continue to work on a theory of repression plus undoubtedly swift and brutal penalties. Consequently, it will be very difficult to carry on any clandestine operations and it is doubtful that such operations can have any significant impact in weakening the Castro regime.

In spite of this, evidence is still available that there is opposition to the regime among individuals still at large and that such opposition is prepared to undertake action despite the risks involved. Moreover, there are still agents distributed through most of the six provinces and communications can still be had either directly or indirectly with these individuals. At the very least these agents can and will continue to collect information and to transmit it to the Agency. In addition, certain of these individuals, plus some additional ones who might be infiltrated, could attempt to carry out some sabotage. Individual acts of sabotage are possible with relatively few men and small amounts of material. Successive acts of sabotage or extensive sabotage operations are more difficult and inevitably more costly in terms of loss of men. Nevertheless, it would be possible, starting in the near future, to attempt limited sabotage with a view to determining its feasibility and with the hope that gradually an increased program might be developed.

A capability also exists for types of maritime operations including infiltration and exfiltration of individuals, landing and caching of arms, under-water sabotage of shipping and small raider operations. Under present circumstances it would seem wrong to attempt these except on a very limited scale and, in all likelihood, raider operations should not be attempted until more information regarding feasibility has been obtained.

The Agency also has a small air arm including some transport aircraft (C-54 and C-46 types) plus attack bomber aircraft (B-26). Although it is not absolutely certain, there is reason to suppose that Cuban crews also are available for operational flights. At the moment, air operations should be substantially eliminated with the possible exception of supply flights to support opposition elements unable to survive without such support. Even with respect to such operations, however, it should be remembered that the percentage of successful night drops is extremely limited so that the urgency should be great to justify the risk. B-26 strikes could, of course, be flown against chosen targets (e.g. refineries, power plants, tire plants) and, if successful, might have the effect of extensive sabotage. In view of the risks involved, however, and the poor deniability of U.S. support where aircraft are involved, it is recommended that such operations be avoided at least for the present.

Manolo Ray of the MRP has asserted an independent MRP capability to conduct infiltration, intelligence collection, sabotage and defection operations into Cuba. He recognizes a need for U.S. support but is very firm in his desire to operate as independently as possible of any official U.S. connection. His initial request is for five boats, some materiel and some money. He admits, however, that, looking ahead, additional support such as real estate, some help with training and communications will be required. He offers to share his information with the U.S. Government, seek U.S. advice and, at least for a period of time, be willing to operate with the Revolutionary Council. The Council's views are being canvassed and Ray has been asked to prepare a prospectus giving in some detail his needs for U.S. support for the immediate future and the step-up required over a period of time should his efforts prove successful.

The Ray proposal should certainly be examined and given support within reasonable limits if the relationships proposed both with the Council and with the U.S. are satisfactory.

In addition to the activities described above, propaganda activities such as radio broadcasts and publication of magazines and newspapers can be continued independently by the Agency or in support of Ray or the Revolutionary Council. Moreover, limited political action operations are possible. As to both propaganda and political action, however, the amount of effort and the type of activity undertaken will depend to a large extent on the decisions with respect to the operations described above. Consequently, these will be noted here as mere possibilities.

3. U. S. POLICY TOWARD CUBA
(NSC Action No. 2413-c; Memo for NSC, same subject, dated May 4, 1961)

a. Agreed that the political objective of U. S. policy toward Cuba is to bring about the downfall of the Castro regime.

b. Agreed that the United States should not undertake military intervention in Cuba now, but should do nothing that would foreclose the possibility of military intervention in the future.

c. Agreed that the Cuban situation should be kept under constant review, in the light of the possibility that actions by Castro would prompt a reconsideration of the decision not to intervene.

d. Agreed that the United States should not impose a naval or air blockade against Cuba at this time.

e. Noted the importance the President attaches to obtaining timely and adequate intelligence as to Cuban military capabilities, especially the enhancement of such capabilities by Sino-Soviet Bloc military assistance, taking into account the possibility of U. S. intervention at a future [redacted] date.

f. Noted the importance the President attaches to publication in the Free World press of the terroristic actions of the Castro regime.

g. Noted the President's direction that the Task Force on Cuba make a detailed study of possible weaknesses and vulnerabilities in the elements which exert control in Cuba today.

h. ~~Noted that a Special Committee, under the direction of the Director of Central Intelligence, would prepare a plan of special covert operations with respect to Cuba, for the consideration of the President.~~

i. Agreed that no separate Cuban military force should be organized in the United States, but that Cuban nationals would be encouraged to enlist in the U. S. armed forces and trained ~~in special units consisting of Spanish-speaking nationals~~, under a plan to be presented by the Secretary of Defense in connection with his review of U. S. conventional forces.

j. Agreed that Cuban nationals now in the United States will be given refugee status and assisted, under a program to be developed and directed by the Secretary of Health, Education & Welfare, in carrying on their former occupations. Refugees now in Miami will be encouraged to locate in other areas. Cuban nationals entering the United States will be given refugee status.

k. Agreed not to impose a complete trade embargo on Cuba for the present, but if later actions by Castro resulted in a decision to do so, all trade with Cuba would be stopped. The Secretary of State agreed to send to the President an analysis of how a U. S. embargo on trade with Cuba would affect our trade relations with other countries under the Battle Act.

l. Noted that the President would discuss with Canada the position of Canadian subsidiaries of U. S. corporations in the event of U. S. impositions in trade embargoes on Cuba.

m. Agreed that the United States should at once initiate negotiation to enlarge the willingness of other American states to join in bilateral, multilateral and OAS arrangements to quarantine Castro, such as (1) breaking diplomatic relations with Cuba; (2) controlling subversive activities of Cuban agents; (3) preventing arms shipments to Castro; (4) limiting economic relations with Cuba; (5) creating a Caribbean security force; (6) initiating a naval patrol to prevent Cuban invasion of other states in the Caribbean; and (7) denunciation of Castro as an agent of international communism by all nations of this hemisphere.

n. Agreed that the Alliance For Progress should be strengthened by such measures as (1) rapid implementation of selected social development projects; (2) acceleration of the implementation of other Latin American aid; and (3) provision of additional resources for Latin American economic and social development, including consideration of a supplemental appropriation for development loans.

o. Agreed that the U. S. Information Agency would expand its existing program in Latin America rather than initiate electronic warfare against the Castro regime. [illegible]

p. Agreed that U. S. military officers, under general guidance to be prepared by the Department of State, would discuss the Castro threat to all Latin America with Latin American officers.

g. Agreed that the Secretary of State should prepare a report on a possible new juridical basis for effective anti-communist action.

4. U. S. POLICY TOWARD THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC AND HAITI

Agreed that the Task Force on Cuba would prepare promptly both emergency and long-range plans for anti-communist intervention in the event of crises in Haiti or the Dominican Republic. Noted the President's view that the United States should not initiate the overthrow of Trujillo before we knew what government would succeed him, and that any action against Trujillo should be multilateral.

DRAFT RECORD OF ACTIONS
483rd NSC Meeting
(5/5/61)

1. U. S. POLICY TOWARD IRAN

Agreed that a Task Force should be established under the Assistant Secretary of State for Near Eastern Affairs to prepare and circulate a report on the subject by May 15 for discussion by the Council on May 19.

2. U. S. POLICY TOWARD KOREA

Agreed that a Task Force under the Assistant Secretary of State for Far Eastern Affairs should be established to prepare and circulate a report on the subject by May 15 for discussion by the Council on May 19.

3. U. S. POLICY TOWARD CUBA
(NSC Action No. 2413-c; Memo for NSC, same subject, dated May 4, 1961)

a. Agreed that U. S. policy toward Cuba should aim at the downfall of Castro, and that since the measures agreed below are not likely to achieve this end, the matter should be reviewed at intervals with a view to further action.

b. Agreed that the United States should not undertake military intervention in Cuba now, but should do nothing that would foreclose the possibility of military intervention in the future.

3. U.S. POLICY TOWARD CUBA (Continued)

c. Agreed that the United States should not impose a naval blockade or attempt an air war against Cuba; it was noted that neither course had the support of the Department of Defense or the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

d. Noted the importance the President attaches to obtaining timely and adequate intelligence as to Cuban military capabilities, especially the enhancement of such capabilities by Sino-Soviet bloc military assistance, so that U. S. capabilities for possible intervention may be maintained at an adequate level.

e. Noted the importance the President attaches to publication in the Free World press of the terroristic actions of the Castro regime, and to possible political action to end the current terror.

f. Noted the President's direction that the Central Intelligence Agency, with other departments, should make a detailed study of possible weaknesses and vulnerabilities in the elements which exert control in Cuba today.

g. Agreed that relations with the Revolutionary Council should be improved and made more open, and while it cannot be recognized as a government-in-exile, support should be given to it insofar as it continues to represent substantial Cuban sentiment.

h. Agreed that no separate Cuban military force should be organized in the United States, but that Cuban nationals would be encouraged to enlist in the U. S. armed forces under plans to be developed by the Secretary of Defense.

i. Agreed that Cuban nationals now holding U. S. visitors' visas will be given refugee status and assisted, under a program to be developed and directed by the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, in carrying on their former occupations. Refugees now in Miami will be encouraged to locate in other areas. Cuban nationals entering the United States will be given refugee status. All refugees will be eligible to apply for travel privileges, and it was understood that they would also be eligible for citizenship.

j. Agreed not to impose an immediate trade embargo on Cuba. The Secretary of State agreed to send to the President an analysis of the effects of a U. S. embargo on trade with Cuba in relation to the Battle Act. It was agreed that when an embargo is imposed, it should be as complete as possible, with certain exceptions for Canada and with Red Cross distribution of drugs.

k. Agreed that the United States should at once initiate negotiation to enlarge the willingness of other American states to join in bilateral, multilateral and OAS arrangements against Castro, such as (1) breaking diplomatic relations with Cuba; (2) controlling subversive activities of Cuban agents; (3) preventing arms shipments to Castro; (4) limiting economic relations with Cuba; (5) creating a Caribbean security force; (6) initiating a naval patrol to prevent Cuban invasion of other states in the Caribbean; and (7) denunciation of Castro as an agent of international communism by all nations of this hemisphere.

l. Agreed that the Alliance For Progress should be strengthened by such measures as (1) rapid implementation of selected social development projects; (2) acceleration of the implementation of other Latin American aid; and (3) provision of additional resources for Latin American economic and social development, including consideration of a supplemental appropriation for development loans of the order of $200-$400 million.

m. Agreed that the U. S. Information Agency would expand its existing program in Latin America, but not initiate electronic warfare against the Castro regime; means of propaganda should be made available to non-U. S. groups.

n. Agreed that U. S. military officers, under general guidance to be prepared by the Department of State, would discuss the Castro threat to all Latin America with Latin American officers.

o. Agreed that the Secretary of State should prepare a report on a possible new juridical basis for effective anti-communist action.

p. Agreed that pending appointment of an Assistant Secretary of State for Latin American Affairs, the Task Force on Cuba should be continued under the chairmanship of Richard N. Goodwin, Assistant to the Special Counsel to the President.

4. U. S. POLICY TOWARD THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC AND HAITI

Agreed that the Task Force on Cuba would prepare promptly both emergency and long-range plans for anti-communist intervention in the event of crises in Haiti or the Dominican Republic. Noted the President's view that the United States should not initiate the overthrow of Trujillo before we knew what government would succeed him, and that any action against Trujillo should be multilateral.

5. U. S. POLICY TOWARD BRITISH GUIANA

Agreed that the Task Force on Cuba would consider what can be done in cooperation with the British to forestall a communist take-over in that country.

6. U. S. POLICY IN MAINLAND SOUTHEAST ASIA

a. Noted that efforts should be made to reassure Sarit and Diem that we are not abandoning Southeast Asia.

b. Noted the President's view that Sarit could be told that we are considering inclusion of U. S. troops in SEATO forces to be stationed in Thailand, the timing to be dependent on developments during or after the forthcoming 14-nation Geneva Conference.

c. Noted that the Secretaries of State and Defense would be sending recommendations to the President promptly on the number of U. S. training troops to be stationed in Thailand.

MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION WITH:

Dick Bissell
Tracy Barnes

Mr. Bissell agreed that no major decisions concerning covert activities in Cuba should be made before the President returns from his European trip. However there are a few things he thought should be done immediately:

1. That he revise the internal CIA organization in preparation for possible covert activities. This means changes bothehere and in Miami.

2. That a small group (30 to 40) Cuban pilots be continued as pilots under commercial cover in Central America and perhaps one or two American companies. No commitment should be made to them that they would be used in future activities. They would be trained as individuals and not as any group or "movement." This is primarily to keep their skills alive and to keep them available.

3. He wishes to clean up the Nicaraguan situation. We have left a lot of Military hardware there as a residue of the Cuban operation. He would like to pull this equipment out of there, turning some of the B 26's over to Somoza and allowing some of the Cuban pilots to remain there to train Nicaraguans in flying these planes. This would be at Somoza's request and would only be done if he insisted upon it as a re-payment for services rendered. I stressed that no Americans should be involved in the training of Nicaraguan pilots.

4. He would like to train a few Cubans as radio operators. They would be trained as individuals and would not know each other or that any others were being trained. This amounts to training some individual agents for possible future use. No commitments would be made to any of the men trained. It is felt that this much activity is necessary in the next few weeks.

5. In addition, the Agency would like to survey the various potential insurrectionary groups which now exist. There are several of these groups, three or four of which claim to have an underground in Cuba. We should speak to them. We should tell them we could make absolutely no commitment as to any future activities. However, he would like from them an assesment of what they thought they could do in the future and -- if they were to be active -- what help they would require from the United States.

TOP SECRET

This would enable us to make a judgment as to whether we should engage in covert activity based partly upon this information -- information which would tell us what help in specific terms would be required and what we could expect from these groups. This has already been done in the case of Mirona Ray. The groups contacted would include the Council, the MRP, UNIDAD and MRR.

6. In addition, he was informed that Swan radio could not be used by the USIA. They are unable to assimilate it into their system. I suggested that we might try to find a good Latin American group, e.g., The League of Democratic Parties or the Institute of Political Education run by Jose Figures, to use it. I said that for the Council to operate the station did not seem to me to be desirable.

7. I discussed the general situation in Miami and the various newspaper reports. I pointed out that the CIA agents now in Miami were known to everyone, including the press, and were the same people who were identified with pre-invasion activities. Their presence I felt only intensified the rivalry among Cuban groups and served as a focal point of discontent. I requested that this group be broken up and that to the extent agents were necessary new people -- people not identified with the pre-invasion activities -- should be sent to Miami.

8. It was agreed that no future covert activities should be conducted in the Miami area and that the groups with whom we dealt should be scattered in other cities throughout the Southeastern part of the country. I said that working in Miami was like trying to carry on covert activities in the city room of a newspaper.

9. We also agreed that Dr. Miro could be informed that we were making a survey of other Cuban groups but that he should be told nothing more specific than that.

10. I also referred to the newspaper stories which reported that Batistianos were being used supported by U.S.-CIA funds. They said this was not accurate. They said that this would be very carefully looked into and that the most specific instructions would be given that absolutely no Batistianos should be supported directly or indirectly by the U.S. government.

11. I am strongly of the opinion that we must clear up the Miami area as soon as possible. Therefore, I will get Ribicoff to expedite the Refugee program, probably through the use of Mutual Security funds in order to get these people into jobs, schools, etc. in other parts of the country. Unless we do this we are going to have continually increasing problems in the Miami area.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

SUBJECT: CIA Reorganization

I submit the following views as one who worked in OSS during the war and served as a periodic CIA consultant in the years since.

On balance, CIA's record has probably been very good. In the nature of clandestine operations, the triumphs of an intelligence agency are unknown*; all the public hears about (or should hear about) are its errors. But, again in the nature of the case, an agency dedicated to clandestine activity can afford damned few visible errors. The important thing to recognize today, in my judgment, is that the CIA, as at present manned and constituted, has about used up its quota. Its margin for future error is practically non-existent. One more CIA debacle will shake faith considerably in US policy, at home as well as abroad. And, until CIA is visibly reorganized, it will (as in the Algerian instance) be widely blamed for developments of which it is wholly innocent.

The argument of this memorandum is that CIA's trouble can be traced to the autonomy with which the agency has been permitted to operate; and that this autonomy is due to three main causes: (1) an inadequate doctrine of clandestine operations; (2) an inadequate conception of the relationship between operations and policy; (3) an inadequate

---

*Or should be -- a grave and repeated CIA failing has been its occasional readiness to succumb to the temptations of favorable publicity. The Guatemalan and Iranian operations were almost nullified by the flood of self-congratulatory publicity which followed them (e.g., the articles by Richard and Gladys Harkness, "The Mysterious Doings of CIA," Saturday Evening Post, Oct. 30, Nov. 6, 13, 1954).

conception of the relationship between operations and intelligence. The memorandum also suggests ways in which some of these problems can perhaps be alleviated.

I. CIA Autonomy

CIA conducts three main forms of secret work: clandestine intelligence collection; covert political operations; and paramilitary activities. It carries on those functions with relative autonomy. The reasons for the autonomy are historical.

When CIA began, the State Department, still thinking too much in terms of its traditional missions in foreign affairs, looked on this new venture with suspicion and renounced the opportunity to seize firm control of CIA operations. It did not, for example, try to establish any effective system of clearance for CIA activities; and some ambassadors frankly preferred not to know what CIA was up to in their countries. After 1953 the fact that the Secretary of State and the Director of Central Intelligence were brothers further confirmed CIA's independence from supervision by State Department desks.

In the meantime, CIA grew in size and power. During the fifties it began in some areas to outstrip the State Department in the quality of its personnel. Partly because CIA paid higher salaries and even more perhaps because Allen Dulles gave his people courageous protection against McCarthyite attacks, CIA was able to attract and hold a large number of able and independent-minded men. The more it added brilliant activists to its staff, the more momentum its operations developed, and the greater role it played in the initiation of policy.

By the time that State had begun to be fully aware of the problems created by an active and autonomous CIA, it had long since missed the chance to establish its own ultimate authority. While State retained a nominal supervision over covert political operations, this was to some degree offset by CIA's tendency to present a proposed operation almost as a fait accompli; State never had title to control over clandestine intelligence collection; and it had lost ground in such areas as overt political reporting and even in the maintenance of overt diplomatic contacts.

For its part, CIA had developed a whole series of functions paralleling already existing functions of the State Department, and of the Defense Department as well. Today it has its own political desks and military staffs; it has in effect its own foreign service; it has (or has had) its own combat forces; it even has its own air force. Its annual budget is about __ times that of the State Department. The contemporary CIA possesses many of the characteristics of a state within a state.

II. Doctrine

Though CIA's autonomy developed for historical reasons, it has been able to endure because there is no doctrine governing our conduct of clandestine operations. The problem of doctrine for CIA is the extent to which its various clandestine missions are compatible with a free and open society.

It is idle to argue that, because the Communists can do such-and-such, we are free to do it too. Communism is a creed nurtured in conspiracy; and the whole point of Communist social and political organization is to make conspiracy effective. If 'fighting fire with fire' means contracting the freedoms traditionally enjoyed by Americans in order to give more freedom to CIA, no one seriously wishes to do that. Yet I do not feel that we have tried rigorously to think through the limits which the maintenance of an open society places on secret activity. Until this is done, CIA's role will not be clearly defined and understood. The problem which must be faced is: what sort of secret activity is consistent with the preservation of a free social order?

We must begin, I believe, by accepting the fact that the United States will continue to be a nation in which politicians will ask questions and make speeches, reporters will dig out stories, newspapers will publish editorials, individuals, driven by promptings of conscience, will blurt out things harmful to the state, and so on. We do not wish to change these things and could not do so without violating the essence of our society. These things make up the framework in which CIA must operate. In short, they constitute the problem; and, as General Marshall used to say, "There's no point in fighting the problem."

There follows from this, I would think, the conclusion that secret activities are permissible so long as they do not corrupt the principles and practices of our society, and that they cease to be permissible when their effect is to corrupt these principles and practices.

Each form of secret activity presents its own problem. Clandestine intelligence collection has been a traditional function of the national state. Its rules and usages are fairly well established. In the main, espionage, if conducted with discretion, should present no great problem. However, when conducted with an open checkbook and a broad mandate, even espionage can begin to push against the limits of secret activity in an open society. I consider later, for example, the question of the Controlled American Source (CAS) and whether the overdoing of CAS is not beginning to harm other activities of the government.

Covert political operations present a trickier problem. Occasions arise when it is necessary to subsidize newspapers, politicians and organizations in other countries. But corruption of the political life of another nation is not a responsibility to be lightly assumed. I wonder whether CIA has not done too much of this for the joy of it. Paramilitary activities create an even more difficult problem, if only because the problems of concealment are so much more difficult.

In general, I would suggest that any secret operation whose success is dependent on the suppression of news, on lying to Congressmen and journalists and on the deception of the electorate should be undertaken only when the crisis is so considerable that the gains really seem to outweigh the disadvantages. This suggests that the size of the proposed operation may be of crucial importance. Small operations can be done with a minimum of accompanying corruption. The greater the visibility of the operation, the more its success depends on thwarting the impulses and denying the values of an open society, the riskier it becomes, and the more urgent it is that an overwhelming case be made for its necessity.

In short, when confronted with a proposed operation, we must not only ask whether the operation is technically feasible in its own terms; we must ask whether its success requires our open society to be in any serious way false to its own principles.

III. Operations and Policy

Clandestine activities should be assessed not only in the context of their relationship to an open society but also in the context of their relationship to United States foreign policy.

CIA operations have not been held effectively subordinate to U.S. foreign policy.

1. Clandestine intelligence collection is, by charter, free from State Department control. This fact exposes American foreign policy to a multitude of embarrassments when CIA is discovered recruiting agents or developing sources in a friendly country. The recent Singapore case, when CIA, without notice to the Consul General, tried to subvert a member of the Special Branch of the Singapore Police provides an instructive example. After complications of ludicrous complexity, including an attempt to subject the recruit to a lie-detector test, it turned out that the recruit had long since informed his superiors of the CIA approach and was leading CIA into a trap which, when sprung, produced considerable embarrassment to relations between the US and the Singapore government. There have been troubles of a comparable sort in Pakistan and in Japan (where a group of Chinese Nationals were smuggled into Sasebo to work in a CIA-NSA operation).

CIA has said that, in such cases, neither the Embassy nor the Department in Washington is normally informed of this type of operation. In short, no one knows how many potential problems for US foreign policy -- and how much potential friction with friendly states -- are being created at this moment by CIA clandestine intelligence operatio Surely there is an argument for permitting State to decide whether th advantage to be gained by the operation (e.g., the information derive from an agent within the Special Branch of the Singapore Police) outweighs the risk (e.g., exasperating the local government and shaking its confidence both in our purposes and in our sense). Clandestine intelligence operations should plainly be cleared both with the Department of State and (save for exceptional instances and on agreement o the Secretary of State) with the local U.S. Ambassador.

2. Covert political operations technically require State Department clearance. In practice, however, CIA has often been able to seize the initiative in ways which reduce State's role almost to that of a rubber stamp.

This has been partly the consequence of the superior drive and activism of CIA personnel, especially as compared with the diffidence of State Department personnel. For example, when men come to CIA with the assignment of developing covert political campaigns or organizing coups or preparing for paramilitary warfare, these men naturally fall to work with ingenuity and zeal; they probably feel that they are not earning their pay unless, say, they organize as many coups as possible. The concept of 'contingency planning' has legitimatized the concrete preparation of operations still presumably in a hypothetical stage; people did not at first notice that 'contingency planning,' when carried to the stage of recruitment and training of personnel, creates a vested interest which often transforms contingencies into apparent necessities. Thus, if a group is assembled and revved up on a contingency basis, then the failure to carry the project through (it is argued) will invite the disappointment and alienation of the group; so the pressure increases to follow through on what had started as a pure speculation. This was a central factor, of course, in the Cuban decision -- the fact that disbandment of the Cuban force in Guatemala just seemed to create too many problems and embarrassments. Having entered into relations with personalities in foreign lands, CIA has sometimes seemed to feel that we must thereafter do pretty much what they want -- or else they will blow security or even go over to the Communists. This approach has made us on occasion the prisoners of our own agents.*

*We become prisoners of our agents in another sense too. The Cuban episode leaves the strong impression that CIA is not able to control its own low-level operatives. While the CIA people in Washington are men of exceptionally high quality, the men attracted to field jobs are sometimes tough and even vicious people motivated by drives of their own and not necessarily in political or even moral sympathy with the purposes of the operation. Such actions as locking up the Revolutionary Council, such enterprises as Operation 40 in Miami where CIA agents reportedly trained Cubans in methods of torture, such episodes as the detention and third degree reportedly administered to Dr. Rodolfo Nodal Tarafa and 16 other democratic Cubans this February -- all these suggest that things go on under CIA sponsorship with which CIA in Washington is only dimly acquainted.

It has meant too that the State Department, often apprised of an operation only in its later stages, is under great pressure to endorse the operation as already mounted because of the alleged evil consequences of exercising a veto. I well remember Tom Mann's remark the day the decision was made to go ahead on Cuba: "I would never have favored initiating this operation; but, since it has gone as far as it has, I do not think we can risk calling it off." Moreover, at a time when there is increasing premium on activism, State, when it questions CIA operations or initiatives, casts itself in a prissy, sissy, negative role. The advocate of clandestine activities seems 'tough' and realistic; the opponent has to invoke such intangibles as the reputation of the United States, world public opinion, "What do we say in the United Nations?", etc., and seems hopelessly idealistic, legalistic and 'soft.'

The result of CIA's initiative in covert political operations has been to create situations which have forced policy on the State Department. This was not the original idea behind CIA. As Allen Dulles wrote in his 1947 memorandum to the Senate Armed Services Committee, "The Central Intelligence Agency should have nothing to do with policy." Yet, in the years since, CIA has, in effect, 'made' policy in many parts of the world. A number of governments still in power know that they have even been targets of CIA attempts at overthrow -- not a state of mind calculated to stimulate friendly feelings toward the United States. Indonesia, of course, is a prime example.

This experience suggests that the present system by which CIA notifies State of a projected covert operation is inadequate to protect US interests. There must be some means by which State can be informed of such operations at an early enough stage to affect the conception and preliminary planning of the operation. Otherwise CIA will continue to confront State with propositions having potential impact on foreign policy but at too late a point to subject that impact to reasonable control.

3. The Controlled American Source (CAS) represents a particular aspect of CIA's encroachment on policy-making functions. CIA today has nearly as many people under official cover overseas as State -- 3900 to 3700. About 1500 of these are under State Department cover

(the other 2200 are presumably under military or other non-State official cover). Originally the use of State Department cover for CIA personnel was supposed to be strictly limited and temporary. The Dulles-Correa-Jackson report stated in 1948, "The CIA should not use State Department cover as a simple answer to all its problems, but should proceed to develop its own outside cover and eventually in this way and through increased efficiency of its overseas personnel, find a way to temper its demands upon the State Department." Nonetheless CIA has steadily increased its requisitions for official cover.

There are several reasons why CIA has abandoned its original intention of developing systems of private cover. It is easier to arrange cover through State; it is less expensive; it is quicker; it facilitates the security of operations as well as of communications; it insures a pleasanter life for the CIA people. But the effect is to further the CIA encroachment on the traditional functions of State.

In some missions, I understand, CAS personnel outnumbers regular State Department personnel. In the American Embassy in Vienna, out of 20 persons listed in the October 1960 Foreign Service List as being in the Political Section, 16 are CAS personnel; of the 31 officers listed as engaging in reporting activities, over half are CAS. Of the 13 officers listed in the Political Section in our Embassy in Chile, 11 are CAS. On the day of President Kennedy's Inauguration 47 percent of the political officers serving in United States Embassies were CAS. Sometimes the CIA mission chief has been in the country longer, has more money at his disposal, wields more influence (and is abler) than the Ambassador. Often he has direct access to the local Prime Minister. Sometimes (as during a critical period in Laos) he pursues a different policy from that of the Ambassador. Also he is generally well known locally as the CIA representative.

In the Paris Embassy today, there are 128 CIA people. CIA in Paris has long since begun to move into areas of political reporting normally occupied by State. The CIA men doing overt internal political reporting outnumber those in the Embassy's political section by 10-2. CIA has even sought to monopolize contact with certain French political personalities, among them the President of the National Assembly. CIA occupies the top floor of the Paris Embassy, a fact well known locally; and on the night of the Generals' revolt in Algeria, passers-by noted with amusement that the top floor was ablaze with lights. (I am informed that Ambassador Gavin was able to secure entrance that night to the CIA offices only with difficulty.)

CIA is apparently now firmly committed to the CAS approach as a permanent solution for its problems. It is pressing to have CIA people given the rank of Counselor. Before State loses control of more and more of its presumed overseas personnel, and before CAS becomes permanently integrated into the Foreign Service, it would seem important (a) to assure every ambassador the firm control over the local CAS station nominally promised in the NSC Directive of January 19, 1961, and (b) to review the current CAS situation with an eye to a steady reduction of CAS personnel.

4. Paramilitary warfare, I gather, is regarded in some quarters as a purely technical matter, easily detachable from policy and therefore a proper function of the Department of Defense. Yet there is almost no CIA function more peculiarly dependent on the political context than paramilitary warfare.

There are several reasons for this. For one thing, a paramilitary operation is in its nature a large and attributable operation and thereby, as suggested above, clashes with the presuppositions of our open society. (These considerations need not apply, however, to the training of, say, the South Vietnamese in guerrilla tactics or to the support of already existing guerrilla activities.) For another, the moral and political price of direct paramilitary failure is acute for us. Communists, when they stimulate paramilitary activity, are doing what the world expects from them: when we do it, we appear to betray our own professed principles and therefore cannot afford to compound delinquency by defeat. Moreover, as the recent Algerian episode showed, once we convince the world that we are committed to a paramilitary endeavor, we will be blamed for all sorts of things. And, as the recent tractors-for-prisoners episode showed, when we do send men to possible death, we cannot lightly write them off and close the books. The Communists, on the other hand, have no scruples about liquidating a losing show.

Moreover, guerrilla warfare is fought, much more than military men ordinarily realize, in an ideological context. The guerrilla succeeds when his program enlists grassroots support; and it is very difficult indeed to beat him when the countryside is with him. Van Mook told General Marshall in 1946 not to worry about the guerrillas in Indonesia: "we are sending 50,000 men out there and will clean the situation up in the three months." Marshall, who had had experience fighting guerrillas in the Philippines, replied, "It won't be so easy. You will find that they will bleed you to death." Cyprus and Algeria illustrate the difficulty of overcoming guerrilla resistance through sheer weight of military force.

Serious guerrilla movements have been defeated only three times since the end of the Second World War: in Greece, because Tito's defection closed the northern border; in the Philippines; and in Malaya. In the last two cases the guerrilla resistance ended because of the combination of political and military countermeasures. The struggle in Malaya, as Field Marshal Templer understood (and said), was for the minds and hearts of the people; it therefore involved not only paramilitary operations but a vast educational program, organization of trade unions, political reform and an offer of national independence. If the guerrilla's power lies in his revolutionary program, the answer lies in part in meeting the needs which enable the guerrilla to rouse the countryside. "Without a political goal," wrote Mao Tse-tung, "guerrilla warfare must fail, as it must if its political objectives do not coincide with the aspirations of the people and if their sympathy, cooperation and assistance cannot be gained." He added, "Do we want the support of the masses? If we do, we must go among the masses; arouse them to activity; concern ourselves with their weal and woe."

For these reasons, paramilitary warfare cannot be considered as primarily a military weapon. It is primarily a political weapon and must therefore be subjected to close and careful political oversight. It probably should be retained in a reconstituted CIA rather than transferred to Defense.

SECRET

5. _How to Establish Policy Control?_ Here I wonder whether the British experience might not be of value. The notable feature of the British intelligence system is the determination to keep clandestine activity under strict Foreign Office control. This control is achieved in a number of ways:

a) Secret Intelligence Service (MI-6) itself operates under the direction of the Joint Intelligence Committee, which has a Foreign Office chairman (until recently Sir Patrick Dean, who is now the British representative at the UN) and which includes the Service Intelligence directors and representatives of the Colonial Office and the Commonwealth Relations Office as well as the Chief of SIS.

b) basic political warfare directives are originated, not by SIS, but by the Information Research Department in the Foreign Office, often in consultation with an interdepartmental Working Group on International Communist Fronts, and under the ultimate control of the Superintending Under-Secretary of the Permanent Under-Secretary's Department in the Foreign Office.

c) SIS covert political action campaigns must not only conform to Foreign Office directives but must be cleared with the appropriate Foreign Office geographical desks.

d) working groups under IRD chairmanship govern operations in special areas, such as, for example, Sino-Soviet relations or the World Youth Festival.

e) a Foreign Office Staff Liaison Officer sits next to the SIS Chief, and Foreign Office officials serve tours of duty in SIS sections.

All these devices might be adopted for use by the State Department. Organizationally, this would mean that the intelligence agency would retain operational autonomy but that its operations would be at all points subject to State Department clearance -- a clearance to be enforced by directives, by State Department chairmanship of working groups, and by the infiltration of State Department personnel into the intelligence agency.

Obviously this set-up would not succeed, however, unless the State Department itself were prepared to overcome its inbred habits of diffusion, negativism and delay and to take a firm and purposeful grip on the situation.

IV. Operations and Intelligence

The relationship between operations and intelligence raises particularly perplexing questions. 'Intelligence' includes two separable activities: clandestine collection; and research, analysis and evaluation. The first deals with that small portion of raw intelligence procured by secret means (Mr. Dulles estimated in 1947 that "a proper analysis of the intelligence obtainable by . . . overt, normal, and aboveboard means would supply us with over 80 percent, I should estimate, of the information required for the guidance of our national policy"); the second involves the collation and interpretation of all forms of intelligence, however obtained and the production of estimates.

Under the British system, clandestine collection is entrusted to the Secret Intelligence Service. The research, analysis and estimating function is located in the Foreign Office Research Department.

Under the American system, CIA has responsibility for both clandestine collection and research and analysis. The State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research also has research and analysis responsibilities; but, in practice, CIA has established control over the machinery for producing national estimates in such a way as to reduce State's contribution to submitting its views to CIA for acceptance or rejection. In other words, where in Great Britain the Foreign Office plays the coordinating role in the intelligence field, in the United States that role has been assumed by CIA.

The argument against incorporating the research and estimate function in State was made by Dulles in 1947: "For the proper judging of the situation in any foreign country it is important that information should be processed by an agency whose duty it is to weigh facts, and to draw conclusions from those facts, without having either the facts or the conclusions warped by the inevitable and even proper prejudices of the men whose duty it is to determine policy and who, having once determined a policy, are too likely to be blind to any facts which might tend to prove the policy to be faulty."

Precisely the same argument can be used with equal effect against the incorporation of the research and estimate function in CIA -- i.e., if intelligence is too closely connected with operations, then those committed to a particular operation will tend to select out the intelligence which validates the operation.

Obviously both arguments conclude in a case for the establishment of a fairly independent research and estimate group. But, if the R&E group is too independent, one runs into the opposite danger: that is, that neither policy nor operations will be subjected to adequate intelligence checks.

The trouble with the Cuban operation, for example, was not that intelligence and operations were combined, but precisely that the Cuban operation evaded systematic intelligence judgment. The intelligence branch (DDI) of CIA was never informed of the existence of the Cuban operation. The Office of National Estimates was never asked to comment on the assumption, for example, that discontent had reached the point in Cuba where a successful landing operation would provoke uprisings behind the lines and defections from the Militia. In December and February, the Office of National Estimates produced general appraisals of the Cuban situation, but these were wholly independent of the Cuban operation. I gather that, if its opinion had been invited, DDI would have given quite a different estimate of the state of opinion in Cuba from that on which the operation was based. There existed, in short, the ridiculous situation that knowledge of the Cuban operation, flaunted in Miami bars by any number of low-level agents in the operations branch of CIA, was denied to even the top officials of the intelligence branch. The Bureau of Intelligence and Research of the Department of State knew even less about the Cuban operation.

The problem, then, is to have an R&E group sufficiently independent of both policy and operations to resist the pressure to make the case for vested ideas and interests -- yet sufficiently close to be able to subject projected operations or policies to the most intense and searching scrutiny.

Where could this group be located? If the CIA were to become subordinate to State, as MI-6 is to the Foreign Office, then the R&E function might be vested in a coordinate subagency, somewhat independent of both State and CIA, yet closely connected with both in day-to-day operations. The R&E subagency would receive intelligence from CIA and from State, as well as from the services and, of course, from public sources. It would represent, in effect, a fusion of CIA/DDI and State/Intelligence and Research. It might also take over certain of the service functions now confided to CIA -- photographic interpretation, biographical data, foreign broadcast monitoring, overt collection, maps, etc. There might be in addition a Joint Intelligence Board with representatives from all the intelligence agencies and with a State Department or White House chairman.

V. Conclusion.

The argument of this memorandum implies a fairly drastic rearrangement of our present intelligence set-up. It also implies the capacity of the State Department to assume command of the situation and to do so in an effective and purposeful way. If the State Department as at present staffed is not capable of assuming effective command, this is not, in my judgment, an argument against a rational reorganization of intelligence. It is an argument for a drastic overhaul of the State Department.

The structure which would meet the criteria suggested in this memorandum would be as follows:

1) The State Department would be granted general clearance authority over all clandestine activity. This might be effectuated on the British model by the appointment of a Deputy Undersecretary of State for Intelligence, who would act for the Secretary in these matters and who might serve as chairman of a Joint Intelligence Board.

2) The Joint Intelligence Board would include representatives from all elements in the intelligence community and also from the White House.

3) The operating branches of the present CIA would be reconstituted under some blameless title (the National Information Service). This new agency would be charged with responsibility for clandestine collection, for covert political operations and for paramilitary activities. It would submit projects to the Deputy Undersecretary of State for Intelligence for clearance. In general, the agency would bear somewhat the same relationship to State as the Disarmament Administration and ICA presently do.

4) A second semi-independent agency would be set up, again bearing a blameless title (the Foreign Research Agency), coordinate with the operations agency. This agency would be charged with responsibility for collation and interpretation. It would include CIA/DDI, the Bureau of Intelligence and Research in State, and the various service functions now carried on by CIA (photographic interpretation, biographical files, foreign broadcast monitoring, scientific intelligence, maps, overt collection, etc.). It might well be located in the CIA building in McLean.

MEMORANDUM FOR MR. RICHARD GOODWIN

SUBJECT: Cuban Covert Plan

Analysis of this plan shows that it envisages (a) "an island-wide resistance organization responsive to Agency direction"; "internal assets under close Agency control and direction"; (b) "support and guidance to those anti-Castro groups who are revealed to have a potential for clandestine operations"; and (c) "primary operations bases" in the US. In short, what is intended is a CIA underground formed on criteria of operational convenience rather than a Cuban underground formed on criteria of building political strength sufficient to overthrow Castro.

Despite the pretense of political impartiality, the effect of these CIA specifications is obviously to favor those groups most willing to accept CIA identification and control, and to discriminate against those groups most eager to control their own operations. I. e., the plan discriminates in favor of mercenaries, reactionaries, etc., and discriminates against men of independence and principle. Thus these criteria eliminate the Manuel Ray group; yet I can find nowhere in the documents any explicit exclusion of pro-Batista people.

Leaving aside the moral merits of this discrimination, the practical effect is to invest our resources in the people least capable of generating broad support within Cuba. The Agency fails to confront the key problem: i. e., that those most capable of rallying popular support against the Castro regime are going to be more independent, more principled and perhaps even more radical than the compliant and manageable types which CIA would prefer for operational purposes.

My recommendation is that you stop this paper in its present form and demand that it be recast to make political sense. The key is the statement that our covert activity "should be viewed only as the covert contribution to any national program designed to bring about the eventual replacement of the Castro government." This is correct; and there follows from it (a) that our covert activity should encourage the spread of the political sentiments within Cuba most likely to rally support for Castro's overthrow (which means, for example, Ray rather than Batista), and (b) that our covert activity should harmonize with our basic national policy of rescuing the Cuban Revolution, as set forth in the White Paper.

It is a fallacy to suppose that clandestine activity can be carried out in a political vacuum.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT

The Cuban Task Force met at the White House on Thursday, August 31. Present were Under Secretary Ball, Assistant Secretary Woodward, two members of the ARA Bureau, Dick Bissell, Tracy Barnes and myself.

The following decisions were made:

1. We would proceed immediately to discuss with other Carribean governments the possibility of organizing a Carribean Security Force. This could be organized on the basis of informal understandings within the framework of existing treaty arrangements, as a series of new bilateral treaties, or a formal, multilateral treaty. It was thought that the basis of organization would depend on the judgment of other Carribean countries as to how they could accomplish the objective of establishing the force without running serious internal political risks. The United States, for its part, would prefer the formal multi-lateral arrangement. Such a Carribean Security Force would have at least four major aspects:

(1) Advance committment to come to the aid of other signatories threatened by Castro revolutions and, perhaps the designation of specific units for participation in necessary multi-lateral actions.

(2) The establishment of a pool of intelligence information concerning subversive activities with provision for exchange of such information.

(3) The establishment of a Carribean air and sea patrol to watch for suspected infiltration of Castro arms or agents.

(4) A training program in combatting subversive tactics, police organization and procedure, etc.

It was conceded that the substantive aspects of this arrangement could, if necessary, be achieved informally. However, the decision to seek a more formal arrangement was primarily arrived at on the basis of internal political considerations in the United States.

SECRET

2. It was decided that our public posture toward Cuba should be as quiet as possible -- trying to ignore Castro and his island.

3. Our covert activities would now be directed toward the destruction of targets important to the economy, e.g., refineries, plants using U.S. equipment, etc. This would be done within the general framework of covert operations -- which is based on the principle that para-military activities ought to be carried out through Cuban revolutionary groups which have a potential for establishing an effective political opposition to Castro within Cuba. Within that principle we will do all we can to identify and suggest targets whose destruction will have the maximum economic impact.

4. We will intensify our surveillance of Cuban trade with other countries and especially U. S. subsidiaries in other countries; and then employ informal methods to attempt to divert this trade -- depriving Cuba of markets and sources of supply. I understand that we have already had a few successes in this effort.

5. We will establish next week -- in the State Department -- a psychological warfare group. This will be a full-time group of three or four people charged with the responsibility of assembling all available information on the Sovietization of Cuba, repression of human rights, failure of the Cuban economy, etc. -- much of which has been hitherto classified -- putting this information into readable, popularized form, and developing methods of disseminating it through Latin America. Such dissemination would be primarily through USIA channels but would include feeding it to Latin papers for "exclusive" stories, helping to prepare scripts for Latin American broadcasts, perhaps a direct mailing list of intellectuals and government officials to be handled by a front group, etc. The basic idea is to get this stuff into channels of Latin American communication, instead of treating it as official U. S. propaganda. We have selected someone to head this effort -- Jim O'Donnell of George Ball's office who was a free-lance magazine writer (including work for the Saturday Evening Post) for many years and who Ball highly recommends.

6. The CIA was asked to come up -- within the week -- with a precise, covert procedure for continuing the below-ground dialogue with the Cuban government. The object of this dialogue -- to explore the possibility of a split within the governmental hierarchy of Cuba and to encourage such a split -- was fully detailed in my last memorandum to you. This is an effort to find an operational technique.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE PRESIDENT:

I believe that the concept of a "command operation" for Cuba, asdiscussed with you by the Attorney General, is the only effective way to handle an all-out attack on the Cuban problem. Since I understand you are favorably disposed toward the idea I will not discuss why the present disorganized and uncoordinated operation cannot do the job effectively.

The beauty of such an operation over the next few months is that we cannot lose. If the best happens we will unseat Castro. If not, then at lease we will emerge with a stronger underground, better propaganda and a far clearer idea of the dimensions of the problems which affect us.

The question then is who should head this operation. I know of no one currently in Cuban affairs at the State Department who can do it. Nor is it a very good idea to get the State Department involved in depth in such covert activities. I do not think it should be centered in the CIA. Even if the CIA can find someone of sufficient force and stature, one of the major problems will be to revamp CIA operations and thinking -- and this will be very hard to do from the inside.

I believe that the Attorney General would be the most effective commander of such an operation. Either I or someone else should be assigned to him as Deputy for this activity, since he obviously will not be able to devote full time to it. The one danger here is that he might become too closely identified with what might not be a successful operation. Indeed, chances of success are very speculative. There are a few answers to this:

(1) Everyone knowledgeable in these affairs -- in and out of government -- is aware that the United States is already helping the underground. The precise manner of aid may be unknown but the fact of aid is common knowledge. We will be blamed for not winning Cuba back whether or not we have a "command operation" and whether or not the Attorney General heads it.

(2) His role should be told to only a few people at the very top with most of the contact work in carrying out his decisions being left to his deputy. If that deputy is someone already closely identified with the conduct of Cuban affairs then it would appear as if normal channels are being followed except that decisive attention would be given to the decisions which came through those channels. There are probably three or four people who could fulfill this criterion.

This still leaves a substantial danger of identifying the Attorney General as the fellow in charge. This danger must be weighed against the increased effectiveness of an operation under his command.

MEMORANDUM

I believe that the operation should be organized with five staff components:

1. Intelligence collection and evaluation
2. Guerilla and underground
3. Propaganda
4. Economic warfare (exclusive of covert activities within Cuba)
5. Diplomatic relations

Each of these divisions would be headed by someone directly responsible to you. In addition you would have a deputy who would do the actual contact work between this operation and the various government agencies involved. He would be the one identified as the source of orders and directives when direct contact with the agencies was needed. ~~In fact he would perform a largely ministerial function.~~ He should be from CIA for reasons discussed below. I would act as Staff Assistant to you. My primary job would be to see that current questions for decision were presented to you at your morning staff meetings with the alternatives fully discussed. I would have no direct operational duties; thus keeping in the back ground.

I have talked to MacNamara and he has promised to supply a topflight guerilla and underground man, as well as whatever additional personnel we need. I think this is the best way to handle it. However, it will be necessary to use the CIA apparatus and agents for this. That is why it will be valuable to assign a CIA man to you as deputy in order to keep them happy and ~~make them feel~~ ~~[illegible]~~ deeply involved at the command level. In this way we can probably avoid an internal struggle between the CIA field operatives and the Defense command.

Both the diplomatic relations and economic warfare people can come from State. I have some ideas on this and -- if you give the signal -- will discuss it with George Ball.

EYES ONLY FOR THE PRESIDENT AND THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

TOP SECRET

One of Bob Amory's brightest young men should be assigned to intelligence collection and evaluation.

As for propaganda, I thought we might ask Tad Szulc to take a leave of absence from the Times and work on this one -- although we should check with Ed Murrow and Dick Bissell.

These people should have a headquarters. It should probably be at the Pentagon because (a) we might get better security; (b) MacNamara will be easier to work with in terms of getting whatever staff services, secretarial personnel, etc; (c) It is a relatively neutral place between State and CIA; (d) you could rearrange your schedule to stop in on the way to Justice every morning -- perhaps for a breakfast or post-breakfast meeting.

This operation should not be discussed at tomorrow's meeting. Initially only George Ball (and Rusk, of course), MacNamara, McCone and Bissell should know of your participation. When they are named, the five section heads will have to know -- ~~the~~ the initial organizing work and contact work should be done through your Deputy and myself. If this subject is discussed tomorrow then already too many people will know about it.

The first steps are (a) name the section chiefs (b) review with them all current operations in their field, establish their authority over operations, get necessary staff assistance (on as small as possible basis), and start them to work; (c) establish the physical headquarters; (d) arrange for financing -- presumably coming largely from CIA.

If this meets with your approval I will begin work on the above items with all final decisions on personnel and other matters subject, of course, to your approval.

November 4, 1961

The following are some tentative recommendations meant to serve as a basis of discussion:

I would recommend that the Cuban operation be organized in five components:

a. Intelligence collection and evaluation
b. Underground and guerilla
c. Propaganda
d. Economic warfare (other than covert activities within Cuba)
e. Diplomatic relations

Although these sections will make use of available agency capabilities the operational authority for each of these aspects of the operation will be in the hands of the section leader who is responsible to the chairman of the group. All of these activities will be compartmentalized as much as possible, i.e., only the chairman will be kept completely informed on all aspects of the operation.

The operation should have its physical headquarters in the Department of Defense, both for maximum security and to detach it as much as possible from identification as a CIA activity.

The first steps are:

1. Designation of section chiefs;
2. A complete survey by each section chief of current operations in his field;
3. The establishment of control over operations by the section chief;
4. The expansion of operations where feasible.

Bob Amory should be asked to designate one of his best men to centralize the intelligence collection and evaluation.

The Defense Department should designate the section chief for underground and guerilla activities.

EYES ONLY

TOP SECRET

We should discuss expansion of propaganda operations with Ed Murrow and appropriate CIA officers -- not relating it to stepped up operations in other fields. With these people we should select a single person to be the propaganda chief, coordinating CIA and USIA operations. I have suggested that Tad Szulc -- if he can be persuaded to take a leave of absence -- would be a useful person to advise on this aspect of the operation.

Both economic warfare and diplomatic relations should be handled by a designee of the State Department. It is important to keep the diplomatic relations aspect of this operation under some sort of control so that we con't involve ourselves in potentially embarrassing situations in the OAS, e.g. voting to send an investigating committee to Cuba when our operations are at a height and Fidel has evidence to present of U.S. participation.

The Deputy should be from CIA.

The President should not talk to the press. It may be that some contacts with a few key newsmen should be made -- in the most general way. But if the President approaches them personally and the operation does not succeed it is inevitable that he will become the focus of another Cuban failure. There are two types of newsmen involved here. There is a rather large group which will hear rumors and stories of various kind. There is nothing to be done about them. There are a few newsmen whose contacts in the Cuban community are so extensive that they might be able to put together a coherent story. If any approaches are to be made it should be restricted to these; although they should never be told we are going to wage an all-out operation. In addition, as much contact and operational work as possible should be done outside the Miami area.

Our next step should be to designate section chiefs, establish their authority and have them make a complete survey of pessent operations. This would include a survey of current covert operations and capacities here and in Miami (and anywhere else they are going on), as the first task of the Defense Department designee with CIA assistance. The physical headquarters should be established.

Although the Attorney General should maintain a general operational supervision, it is probably unwise for him to be the formal chairman of the group because the risk of identification is fairly high.

If such identification is made, and the operation is not successful, another Cuban failure may be directly traceable to the President. I regard this as fairly remote in this type of operation but the danger can be decreased if the operation is formally headed by someone who is not so clearly acting at the direct behest of the President. The Attorney General can give assistance and maintain general supervision on behalf of the President, working with the Chairman alone -- rather than extending his contacts to include all the operation chiefs.

Bob --

If you approve this (it is based on a brief memo from General Lansdale) I will send it on its way. In addition you should have a meeting -- as soon as possible -- with Lansdale and the senior representatives of State, Defense and CIA. If you want to call me on this after you have read the memo I will suggest a procedure for getting them together.

Richard Goodwin

The following is a summary of the major decisions which have been made in regard to the Cuba Operation.

1. We will go ahead with the discussed project to help Cuba overthrow the communist regime and establish a free Cuba. All available assets will be directed to this end as a matter of urgent national priority.

2. The program will be conducted under the general guidance of the Attorney General, with General Lansdale as his chief of operations.

3. The program will be reviewed in two weeks in order to determine whether General Lansdale will continue as chief of operations.

4. The NSC 5412 group will be kept informed of activities.

5. The Secretaries of State and Defense and the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency will appoint senior officers of their department as personal representatives to assist the chief of operations as required. These senior officers should be able to exercise -- either themselves or through the Secretaries and Director -- effective operational control over all aspects of their Department's operations dealing with Cuba.

6. Knowledge of the existence of this operation should be restricted to the recipients of this memorandum, members of the 5412 group, and the representatives appointed by the Secretaries and the Director. Any further dissemination of this knowledge will be only with the authority of the Secretaries of State or Defense, the Attorney General, or the Chief of Operations.

MEMORANDUM FOR RECORD

SUBJECT: Minutes of Meeting of Special Group (Augmented) on Operation MONGOOSE, 10 August 1962

PRESENT: State: Mr. Rusk, Mr. Johnson, Mr. Martin, Mr. Goodwin, Mr. Hurwitch

White House: General Taylor, Mr. Bundy

Defense/JCS: Mr. McNamara, Mr. Gilpatric, General Lemnitzer, General Lansdale

CIA: Mr. McCone, Mr. Harvey

USIA: Mr. Murrow, Mr. Wilson

1. Mr. McCone said that the conclusion of the Board of National Estimates was that the Soviets will not let the Castro regime fail because of its own inherent weaknesses. This thought had not been contained as such in the NIE. Later in the meeting, Mr. McCone said that he believes we must face the fact that Cuba will be stronger in a year or two than it is now; he added his personal opinion that the Soviets might consider establishing an MRBM base in Cuba. He noted that these two points are not necessarily concurred in by the Board of National Estimates or by the USIB.

2. At Secretary Rusk's request, General Lansdale gave a brief explanation of the four possible courses of action outlined in recent papers. He then summarized progress to date by saying that during Phase I, now completed, an intensive intelligence look has been taken at Cuba, that we have learned a great deal, but that we do not yet have a true assessment of resistance potential.

3. Mr. Rusk suggested the possibility that in the event of a blockade of Berlin, the U.S. might wish to change its posture toward Cuba, perhaps engaging in direct retaliation against Soviet shipping, etc. He suggested that the Berlin and Cuba contingency plans should be closely meshed. Mr. McNamara was uncertain on this point, saying that he did not believe limited retaliation of this kind would constitute an adequate response to a Berlin blockade, whereas world-wide harrassment of Soviet facilities would be a different matter.

PROPERTY OF THE WHITE HOUSE O

4. Mr. Rusk emphasized the desirability of attempting to create a split between Castro and old-line Communists. He pointed out that such a split would be bound to be beneficial to U.S. interests no matter which way the balance of power swung. In this general connection, it was hard for him to visualize a valid pretext for U.S. military intervention in Cuba under any circumstances currently foreseen. However, should reasonably viable resistance develop to the extent for example that some provinces might oppose the Havana Government, then the U.S. might desire to give support to such provincial officials.

In response to the above, Mr. McCone pointed out that at the moment the previously-cited frictions between Castro and the old-line Communists have been resolved in Castro's favor, and no issue currently exists. There has additionally been at least a temporary rapprochement between Fidel and Moscow. He indicated that this of course may be temporary. He said that there has been some success in recruiting Cuban officials abroad to work for the U.S., and that there have been some defections.

5. The discussion then turned to the objectives of the MONGOOSE program. Mr. McNamara questioned whether we cannot separate the building up of agent assets within Cuba from actions that would hurt the U.S. in the eyes of world opinion. This led to the suggestion by General Taylor that we should consider changing the over-all objective from one of overthrowing the Castro regime to one of causing its visible failure.

In this context Mr. McCone then presented an alternate plan (called hereafter the "CIA variant") to the stepped-up Course B described by General Lansdale, which he said had been prepared as a result of the conclusion that stepped-up B would not in fact result in the overthrow of Castro. He emphasized that the stepped-up plan should not be undertaken unless the U.S. is prepared to accept attributability for the necessary actions, including the eventual use of U.S. military force. Mr. McCone said that a stepped-up B will risk inviting an uprising, which might result in a Hungary-type blood bath if unsupported. Not only would the U.S. be blamed, but there would also be a high noise level in the press and eventually a situation would be created which would require intervention.

On the other hand, the CIA variant now proposed would, in Mr. McCone's view, avoid all of these dangers because it would not invite an uprising. Again he repeated his view that the U.S. might, however, face a stronger Cuba in the future.

6. The principal members of the Special Group felt, after some discussion, that the CIA variant should be developed further for consideration at next Thursday's meeting of the Special Group. Mr. McCone was asked to stress economic sabotage, and to emphasize measures to foment a Castro-oldline Communist split. It was emphasized that any actions under this plan must be so designed as to avoid major attribution to the U.S.

7. General Lemnitzer told the Group that the Navy does not wish Guantanamo used as a base for operational activities, as suggested by CIA. He said that the other Chiefs have not yet given an opinion on this but he thought that they would agree with the Navy, as he himself does. The view is that this base is too important to the U.S. and too vulnerable to Cuban pressure to take the chance of provoking Cuban reaction. The State representatives agreed with this view.

8. Mr. Bundy suggested that a hard look be taken at the possibility of support to selected Cuban exiles on a strictly "disengaged" basis; in other words, should they be given covert financial and material support, with the idea of seeing what they could generate on their own.

9. Mr. Rusk suggested that continued pressure should be placed on Castro by keeping interest in the prisoner issue alive.

10. Action to be taken:

CIA to prepare a new version of its variant plan, in accordance with the above-summarized discussion. This should be ready by Wesnesday, August 15th.

Subject: Alternate Course B

In compliance with the desires and guidance expressed in the 10 August policy meeting on Operation Mongoose, we will produce an outline of an alternate Course B for submission. The CIA paper "Operational Plan (Reduced Effort)" will be used as the starting basis.

Since this is to be a bare outline, to permit further policy guidance to be developed, I believe the paper need contain only a statement of objectives and a list of implementing activities. The list of activities will be under the headings of: Intelligence, Political, Economic, Psychological, Paramilitary, and Military.

We will hold an Operational Representatives work session in my office, at 1400 hours, Tuesday, 14 August, to complete the outline paper for submission. Each of you is to bring 5 copies of completed assigned work to this work session, to permit each of us to work from a full set of drafts.

Papers required from each of you for the Tuesday meeting:

Mr. Harvey: Intelligence, Political (splitting the regime, [redacted]), Economic (sabotage, limited deception), and Paramilitary. Also, any suggestions for inclusion in other sections of the paper.

Mr. Hurwitch: Statement of Objectives, Political, and Economic. Also, any suggestions for inclusion in other sections of the paper.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Deputy Director (Plans)

SUBJECT : Operation MONGOOSE

1. Action. None. This memorandum is for your information.

2. Reference is made to our conversation on 13 August 1962, concerning the memorandum of that date from General Lansdale. Attached is a copy of this memorandum, excised from which are four words in the second line of the penultimate paragraph on page 1. These four words were "including liquidation of leaders."

3. The question of assassination, particularly of Fidel Castro, was brought up by Secretary McNamara at the meeting of the Special Group (Augmented) in Secretary Rusk's office on 10 August. It was the obvious consensus at that meeting, in answer to a comment by Mr. Ed Murrow, that this is not a subject which has been made a matter of official record. I took careful notes on the comments at this meeting on this point, and the Special Group (Augmented) is not expecting any written comments or study on this point.

4. Upon receipt of the attached memorandum, I called Lansdale's office and, in his absence, pointed out to Frank Hand the inadmissibility and stupidity of putting this type of comment in writing in such a document. I advised Frank Hand that, as far as CIA was concerned, we would write no document pertaining to this and would participate in no open meeting discussing it. I strongly urged Hand to recommend to Lansdale that he excise the phrase in question from all copies of this memorandum, including those disseminated to State, Defense, and USIA. Shortly thereafter, Lansdale called back and left the message that he agreed and that he had done so.

INTERVIEW WITH RICHARD GOODWIN

Date: May 27, 1975 Time: 10:00 a.m.

Place: Goodwin's residence, 1536 32nd St. NW

Participants: Sel. Com. - David Aaron, Rick Inderfurth, Greg Treverton

Subject: Intelligence Activities in Latin America

Submitted by: Gregory F. Treverton

During the 1960 Presidential campaign, Goodwin did foreign policy work for John Kennedy, specializing in Latin America. After the election he moved into the White House to handle Latin America. During that period he spoke with the President about a Latin American matter on the average once a day. Goodwin left the White House in the fall of 1962, becoming Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs under, first, Robert Woodward and then Edwin Martin. After working for the Peace Corps, Goodwin was brought back to the White House by President Johnson, in the spring of 1964, after the Panama crisis. At that time, however, he did not specialize on Latin America, instead writing speeches for Johnson. He left the Administration late in 1965.

1. Assassinations:

In general, Goodwin had not heard much specific talk of assassination, although it would not have surprised him if it had gone on. He mentioned one specific instance in which he had heard talk of assassinating Castro. After the Bay of Pigs, a Cuba Task Force was established, first chaired by Paul Nitze and then by Goodwin in his capacity as White House Staff Officer. At a meeting of the Task Force, held at the State Department, McNamara suggested "getting rid of Castro," someone from the CIA, perhaps Bissell, then asked if McNamara meant

"Executive Action." McNamara responded that he did and stressed his interest in the idea. However, Goodwin did not bring the topic up later in the meeting after McNamara left. To Goodwin, the idea was not reasonable even apart from moral objections, for the Bay of Pigs had shown that Cuba was politically stable; Castro would merely have been replaced with Raul or with Che Guevara, both worse than Castro. Somewhat later, Goodwin sat in on an interview Tad Szulc had with Kennedy in which the President pledged not to kill Castro. Szulc reported that pledge in an article in Esquire. When he finished his period as Chairman of the Cuba Task Force, Goodwin wrote a memo recommending that the United States let Castro alone; anything the United States did to him could only buttress his position in Latin America.

During his time at the State Department, Goodwin met every week or so with E. C. King, Chief of the Western Hemisphere Division of the CIA, and King never mentioned a plan to assassinate Castro. Nor did Robert Kennedy ever mention such a plan to Goodwin when Goodwin worked for Kennedy, in 1966 and 1967.

Goodwin did believe, however, that the United States was involved, at least indirectly, in the successful plot on Trujillo's life. During the Eisenhower Administration, the United States had severed diplomatic relations with Trujillo and attempted to isolate the Dominican Republic. There were frequent reports that Trujillo was about to be assassinated, but the assassination never came off. In fact, the government was surprised when it occurred. Henry Dearborn, the American Consul in Santo Domingo, had been charged with staying in contact with anti-Trujillo forces. Prior to the assassination, he had transferred some weapons, presumably handguns, to those forces. Goodwin suspected that the President probably did not know of the gun transfer, but he said that the assassination and the U.S. role with respect to it would have come as no surprise to the President. He doubted that the CIA even would have had to clear the transfer, although a general policy of that sort might have been passed by the Special Group.

Goodwin reported no other mention of assassinations. In fact, he said he once heard a CIA man say that assassination was a bad idea because once started, it never ended. However, an agent in the field might regard killings of one sort or another as within his mission in supporting one political faction over another. And of course someone might have gotten carried away. It was clear from the Bay of Pigs that the CIA sometimes acted without, or even against, instructions (e.g. by bringing Batista followers into the Bay of Pigs invasion team). In general, Latin American work seemed to attract the worst personnel in all Washington agencies including the CIA.

2. CIA Activities in Brazil:

Goodwin knew little of CIA activities in Brazil. The United States had strongly backed Quadros and never liked Goulart. In the period before 1964, the U.S. gave political support to anti-Goulart factions: followers of Kubitschek and even to the Furtado in the Brazilian northeast. The U.S. had been involved in Brazilian elections for many years and presumably spent a good deal in the 1963 congressional elections.On the military side, Walters was brought from Rome to keep a contact with the Brazilian military. How much further Walters' activities might have extended Goodwin did not know.

3. CIA Activities in Chile:

The Kennedy Administration decided that left wing democratic forces in Latin America were the only means of combatting communist influence and promoting development in the region. That decision was applied to Chile, and the U.S. switched its support from the conservative Alessandri. Goodwin sat in on meetings of the Special Group only rarely, only if Latin America were the subject of the meeting. As he remembered it, the proposals that came to the Special Group were genera statements, policy papers, not descriptions of recipients of support or conduits. In line with the policy, support was given to left democrati political elements. The U.S. certainly provided assistance to the Christian Democrats in the 1964 elections, but Goodwin did not know how much. The figure of $20 million, mentioned by Stern, did not seem inconceivable to Goodwin. He contested, however, the assertion that the Chilean election was the most intensely watched election in Washington since the 1948 Italian campaign. From his vantage point in the White House it did not seem so.

4. Changes during the Johnson Administration:

Johnson cared less about Latin America than had Kennedy--Johnson was interested only in Mexico--and so knew less about covert actions in the region. Thomas Mann was left to run Latin American policy, although the President did become active in the two crises--Panama and then the Dominican Republic. Goodwin saw a sharp change in United States' policy under Mann. Mann supported the military and conservative elements in Latin American societies, and American support for left democratic reform ended. Goodwin professed himself puzzled by Johnson's assertion that he had discovered a "murder incorporated" in the Caribbean. The only specific instance Johnson ever cited was Trujillo, yet Johnson had known about the Trujillo assassination from the very beginning and so could hardly have "discovered" it after he became President.

5. Covert Operations and Counterinsurgency:

When asked about the ethos surrounding covert actions during the Kennedy Administration, Goodwin responded that the major emphasis was counterinsurgency, not covert action. There was certainly no reluctance to use covert action, but no one believed that American objectives could be secured through it. Counterinsurgency was something different. A good deal of money was spent training police through AID, much more was spent through the Pentagon equipping Latin American militaries, and there was as well some CIA activity. At that point, the U.S. really believed that the communists could not get elected to power and that the threat was subversion. Paramilitary operations were considered by the Special Group (counterinsurgency). Latin American matters were considered there, and in some ways Latin America was considered a kind of training ground for Southeast Asia. Goodwin believed that in sum U.S. counterinsurgency efforts made little difference to the course of events in Latin America. Cuba could not in any case provide support to guerilla movements in South America without substantial support from the Soviet Union, and the guerilla movements that began had little indigenous support.

FILE:

In response to a question about NSAM's, Goodwin noted that these came out of the Bundy shop, which had little formal staff. Goodwin often wrote these documents. They were both general and, on occasion, specific, indicating groups to be supported and the like. Kennedy wanted to know the details of American activities in Latin America.

6. Goodwin Suggestions:

Goodwin believed it impossible to control the activities of intelligence organizations without becoming involved in their day-to-day operations. What is required is an active Congressional committee, on the model of the early Joint Atomic Energy Committee, with an active staff. Once the President is permitted both to decide what is a major operation, and thus needs to be communicated to Congress, and who to tell, the game is over. Confidence in men will not do; institutional checks are required.

With respect to people to be interviewed, Goodwin mentioned that the Station Chief in Mexico functioned as a kind of regional sub-director. He also thought we might talk with the FBI person in Puerto Rico, with Arthur Schlesinger, and with Tad Szulc. In response to a question, Goodwin indicated that Nixon had been interested in the Bay of Pigs through Cushman. He thought that Douglas Dillon might know of that.

the United States. Several months later, I presume because of that trip and several other contacts I maintain with representatives of the Cuban government at the United Nations and the Organization of American States, because of my personal friendship with a number of people at the White House and Mr. Goodwin, Mr. Donnegan and others, in a conversation with Mr. Goodwin it was suggested that I come and see the Attorney General. I was invited to lunch with Mr. Kennedy at the Justice Department. We discussed in considerable length the situation in Cuba following the invasion, the pros and cons of some different possible actions by the United States government in that context.

At the end of this conversation, the Attorney General asked me whether I would have objections to meeting with his brother the President. I said I would of course be pleased to do so.

The following day I received a call from the White House indicating that the President would like for me to come in at 11:00 o'clock in the morning on that day in November, which I did. And I was received by the President in the company of Mr. Goodwin in the Oval Office for a conversation which lasted, if memory serves, in excess of an hour and a half, in which the President discussed a number of his views on Cuba in the wake of the Bay of Pigs, asked me a number of questions concerning my conversations with Premier Castro, a general review of the situation in Cuba, you know, what the United States should do, could do, might do in terms of either in a hostile way or in establishing some kind of a dialogue, most relevant of which I suppose was that at one point the President rather unexpectedly turned to me and said what would you say, what would you think, if I decided to authorize the assssination of Premier Castro?

Let me add for the record that the precise wording appears in the Esquire article from the notes taken at the time. I am now paraphrasing from memory. This was a rather --

Mr. Aaron. Let me read this into the record. "We chatted for a while about Cuba, and then Kennedy leaned forward in his rocking chair and hurled a question at me: 'What would you think if I ordered Castro to be assassinated?'"

Mr. Szulc. I was taken aback and so indicated to the Preside To the best of my recollection, I said in the first instance as a practical matter I thought this would not make all that much difference even if he were because I thought that by then the Cuban structure had been established to a sufficient degree where the murder and disappearance of Fidel Castro would not necessarily mean the collapse of the governing system, if this were the purpose of the United States government.

In the second place, it was more important to me, I said to the President, that my personal feeling was that the United States government should not be party to murders and political assassinations at which point the President leaned back and smiled and said, well I was testing you. I agree with you completely.

And then he went on for a few minutes to make the point how strongly he felt and his brother felt that the United States for moral reasons should never be in a situation of having recourse to assassination in foreign policy. Again, the precise quotes and the precise paraphrase I placed in the article and again I'm paraphrasing from memory now.

And the President added in this context that the reason I have raised it with you, or words to this effect, is because I am under very, very strong or powerful pressure from certain people, whom he did not identify, to authorize an operation resulting in the assassination of Premier Castro. And I think we talked about this for a few more minutes, and I think I repeated the points I made originally and the President said he felt very strongly that same way and the fact he was testing me or trying to see what my response as a reporter or as a citizen would be.

I might add that several days ago Mr. Goodwin and I had the opportunity to discuss this and compare our respective recollections of it, and Mr. Goodwin's recollection is exactly the same as mine. We discussed this at some length, this being last week, and the subject being relevant to the current flow of news and Mr. Goodwin made the point to me, obviously if President Kennedy were planning to authorize the assassination of Castro, he would not likely be discussing it with you in the full knowledge of a reporter and if Castro were killed or an attempt to kill him would surface you would have the professional duty to rush to your typewriter and report on this conversation, even though it was on a personal basis. And Mr. Goodwin's judgment, and in which I concur, was that presumably the President would not have floated this issue with me, and this is really responsive to my own effort to re-evaluate after the passage of time the President's sincerity in disclaiming any desire to do so.

My impression at the time and today fourteen years later is that the President was sincere and serious in affirming his revulsion to such an idea of assassination.

Mr. Aaron. Let me ask you, when was your conversation with Mr. Goodwin?

Mr. Szulc. The most recent one?

Mr. Aaron. Yes, the one you just mentioned.

Mr. Szulc. Last Friday which would have been the 6th of June of this year.

Mr. Aaron. May I read into the record the following paragraph from your article. "Kennedy leaned back in his chair, smiled, and said that he had been testing me because he was under great pressure from advisers in the Intelligence community (whom he did not name) to have Castro killed, but that he himself violently opposed it on the grounds that for

The papers produced by Mr. Goodwin on 7/16/75 contained some Trujillo-related material. Certain documents were selected from this material and are produced herein under Tabs S and T. All of the attached Trujillo-related documents have been produced before the Committee, and Mr. Goodwin has been questioned concerning them. They are attached again herein for possible use in connection with questions concerning handwritten notations appearing on the documents.

TAB S. May 13, 1961 Memorandum to Goodwin re CIA Covert Activities in the Dominican Republic

Page 2 of this document contains, on the original ribbon copy, a pencilled-in circle. Goodwin stated on 7/16/75 that this circle was placed on the original copy of the memorandum by him and indicates that the encircled material (a report of the passage of revolvers and carbines) struck Goodwin as both significant and new to him. Further, the word "neutralize" is underscored in pencil on the original copy of the memorandum. Goodwin might be questioned concerning the significance of this underscore.

TAB T. Various drafts, together with the original of the 5/29/61 cable from the State Department to Dearborn are attached herein. Goodwin stated on 7/16/75 that the handwriting on pages numbered 237, 238, 239, and 240 is his handwriting. The handwriting on pages 233, 234, and 235, a subsequent draft of the same proposed cable is not Goodwin's. Goodwin suggested this handwriting may be that of President Kennedy.

MEMORANDUM:

SUBJECT : CIA Covert Activities, Dominican Republic

Attached is the special briefing paper on CIA covert activities directed against the Dominican Republic which was requested by Mr. Richard Goodwin of the White House.

EYES ONLY

SECRET

PROGRAM OF COVERT ACTION FOR THE DOMINICAN REPUBLIC

I. BACKGROUND

A. On 29 December 1960 the Special Group approved a plan of covert action to support the internal and exiled Dominican dissidents which involved provision for increased propaganda directed against Trujillo, and the financial support of selected exiled groups. Additionally this authority included authorization for CIA to make available to selected exile groups communications and equipment support necessary for them to develop a capability to undertake the infiltration of personnel and equipment into the Dominican Republic. Since none of the exiled groups had an existing underground organization within the area, it was the Special Group's concept that this delivery capability could be eventually used to support the plans and activities of the internal opposition with whom the Agency and the Consulate are currently in contact.

B. On 12 January 1961 the Special Group authorized CIA to make available to Dominican dissidents a limited supply of small arms and other materials on the condition that the internal opposition develop the capability to receive these materials and that the materials be introduced into the Dominican Republic by Dominicans themselves.

II. CURRENT COVERT ACTION OPERATIONS

A. In late January 1961, CIA advised selected internal opposition leaders that we were prepared to make available to them limited supplies of arms, communications, equipment, and sabotage materials which they had repeatedly requested provided they developed a capability to receive it via air drops or sea infiltration. To date the internal opposition has not been able to develop this capability, nor have they been able to nominate training candidates for code radio operators or saboteurs. This turn of events is primarily due to the comprehensive nature of Trujillo's security services, the understandable fear that prevails throughout the Republic of being caught or suspected of anti-Trujillo activities, and the fact that the organized internal opposition apparently consists of only a few individuals with no real underground structure. CIA has had in the direct custody of its Station in Ciudad Trujillo a very limited supply of weapons and grenades. In response to the urgent requests from the internal opposition leaders for personal defense weapons attendant to their projected efforts to neutralize TRUJILLO, three (3) 38 Cal revolvers and three (3) carbines with accompanying ammunition have been passed by secure means to the opposition. The recipients have repeatedly requested additional armed support.

B. CIA has established working relationships with selected exile groups. These relationships have taken into account that President Betancourt of Venezuela has in effect designated former Costa Rican President Jose Figueres as his emissary and representative to work with Dominican exile groups. Through Figueres and with the knowledge of President Betancourt, CIA is providing financial support and technical guidance to the following activities:

(1) The development of a Dominican exile council in San Jose, Costa Rica, composed of representatives of the two older exile organizations, a representative designated by Betancourt, and chaired by Figueres. The council had its first organizational meeting in San Jose on 12 May 1961. Subject to CIA's review of the council's proposed program and with the concurrence of President Betancourt, CIA has indicated to Betancourt and Figueres that it is prepared to support the council's program in the amount of $15,000 a month. It is Figueres' initial concept that the council will undertake propaganda activities directed against Trujillo, and train selected Dominicans in democratic process, administrative skills, and public administration so as to equip them to assume positions of responsibility in any successor government. Figueres has also proposed that an exile paramilitary force be trained, but CIA has discouraged this activity to date since neither Betancourt nor Figueres have indicated a clear plan for its eventual use. It is CIA's judgment that the exile groups represented on Figueres' council have little if any popular support among the internal dissidents. However one of the chief advantages that can and is being gained by support of the council is the number of credits that this gives to the United States Government in its dealings with Betancourt and Figueres in utilizing them in other operations. Betancourt has been adamant that no action be taken against Castro until Trujillo is disposed of. This support has served to neutralize his attitude on that point since it amounts to a guarantee to Betancourt of the United States's basic attitude toward Trujillo. Likewise it serves to solidify the attitudes of dissident exiled Dominicans so that they are not anti-U.S. and will make them more approachable and amenable to U.S. Government objectives once Trujillo is overthrown. (2) The conduct of radio propaganda from Ponce, Puerto Rico, which is under the direction of Horacio ORNES, Secretary General of Vanguardia Revolucionaria Dominicana (VRD). This radio program is heard in the Dominican Republic as the voice of the ORNES organization.

(3) CIA has refurbished a small yacht belonging to ORNES so as to give it the capability to deliver small quantities of arms or personnel into the Dominican Republic. This potential para-military boat capability has not been utilized to date. It is contemplated that both the ORNES propaganda program and this limited boat capability will be absorbed by the exile council now being formed by Figueres.

C. With the knowledge of President Betancourt, and using his government as the ostensible source of funds, CIA has provided limited financial support to a small group of Dominicans who are developing a para-military capability in Venezuela.

D. CIA has recently re-located Dr. Juan Isidro Jimenez Grullon from Venezuela to San Juan, Puerto Rico. Jimenez, a physician and university professor, is a highly respected Dominican exile and enjoys the confidence of the internal opposition. He is currently working with the Puerto Rican Government in developing a training program within the structure of the Puerto Rican Government. The objective of this program is to provide "on-the-job" training for selected Dominicans in democratic processes and selected administrative skills. Through Jimenez and a small group of recently exiled Dominicans who were active in the internal opposition, CIA is in the process of establishing communication channels to the internal opposition which will supplement those currently in being through our Station in Ciudad Trujillo.

E. CIA has a continuing program utilizing news media assets throughout the hemisphere in an effort to discredit Trujillo.

III. COVERT ACTIVITIES CIA IS PREPARED TO UNDERTAKE BUT HAS NOT INITIATED

A. Train selected members of the internal opposition as code radio operators. CIA has the appropriate radio equipment "on-the-shelf" at our Station in Ciudad Trujillo. However, this program has not been initiated due to the internal opposition's failure to provide individuals who are able to undergo the required training outside of the Dominican Republic and willing to run the risk of having the radio equipment in their possession.

B. Train selected members of the opposition in sabotage and underground resistance techniques. Here again the internal opposition has provided no training candidates or developed a capability to receive explosive materials through clandestine channels.

IV. POSSIBLE COVERT ACTIONS WHICH REQUIRE ADDITIONAL AUTHORIZATION

A. CIA has a supply of four (4) calibre 45 sub-machine guns and a small number of grenades which are currently in the direct custody of our Station in Ciudad Trujillo. A secure means of passing these weapons to the internal opposition for their use in personal defense attendant to their projected efforts to remove Trujillo can be developed by the Station.

B. CIA can initiate leaflet drops over the Dominican Republic, in response to past requests from the internal opposition for leaflets exploiting the excesses of the Trujillo regime.

C. While to date the internal opposition has developed no capability to receive arms or sabotage materials by either air or sea delivery, CIA could initiate operations to cache such supplies off the coast of the Dominican Republic for later retrival by the opposition when they develop such a capability.

D. Initiate the training of para-military cadres. CIA has been reluctant to recommend the initiation of such training since current information indicates that any invasion of the Republic unless massively supported by overt action would be impractical.

MEMORANDUM FOR: Mr. McGeorge Bundy
The White House

Following up on our discussion of the Dominican Republic at yesterday's meeting of the Special Group, I am forwarding you a draft telegram which we would like to send to Henry Dearborn, our Consul General in Ciudad Trujillo, supplementing the guidance he will be receiving on the recently approved contingency plans. The text of this draft telegram has been shown to the Agency and agreed to by them. I am also forwarding copies of the exchange with Dearborn leading up to the present draft telegram to him.

I know it will be difficult for the President to find time before he leaves to have a look at this but, in view of the situation in the Dominican Republic, I feel that he should approve it personally so as to be sure that it is consistent with his views as stated in the NSC Record of Actions for May 5.

END OF MESSAGE

THE WHITE HOUSE OFFICE

FOR DEARBORN FROM STATE

1. President has now approved contingency plans discussed during your stay here with one major exception: You are not to request a pre-signed request for help from Dominican dissident groups.

2. We consider it essential that you continue to work to strengthen pro-U.S. sentiment among dissident groups. Your work along this line has been invaluable. However, we must not run risk of U.S. association with political assassination, [illegible] U.S. as matter of general policy cannot condone assassination. This last principle is overriding and must prevail in doubtful situation. However, there is much you can do to protect U.S. interests within this framework of policy; including most of the measures in which you are now engaged. Specific instructions follow.

3. Continue to inform dissident elements of U.S. support for their position. In case of ~~assasination or~~ overthrow of Trujillo--whether or not initiated by pro-U.S. group--the pro-U.S. group should promptly make every effort to constitute itself as reasonable and plausible provisional government. It should immediately declare itself such and request assistance from U.S., Venezuela, Colombia and OAS. If advance discussions show that dissidents are favorable to this procedure discuss the specific content of such a request and procedures for handling it. All possible preparations should be made short of actual formulation in writing of a ~~signed~~ request in advance of the event. Underlying this procedure is the policy that, under no circumstances, can we take the chance of a communist type takeover in the Dominican Republic even if we must intervene without a request. This last possibility should not be discussed with the dissidents.

4. Reference to multilateral action in record of actions means only that further open sanctions will be multilateral; and that in the case of direct intervention it would be preferable for forces to be multilateral. No broader interpretation is justified. All other U.S. actions--whether propaganda or covert activities--will be continued on a bilateral basis.

5. Covert activities are, as you know, very small due to inability of dissidents to develop a method of receiving supplies which will effectively disassociate U.S., and failure to provide candidates for training as radio operators or saboteurs. Our offer to help along these lines--provided they develop capacity and effective cover--remains open. However, you must request and receive further specific instructions for any specific covert activity. At the present time we are unable to transfer arms to dissidents. Tell them that this is because of our suspicion that method of transfer may be unsafe. In actual fact we feel that the transfer of arms would serve very little purpose and expose the United States to great danger of ~~ultimate~~ association with ~~disclosure of participation in~~ assassination attempt. The basic policy is to continue to hold open offer of covert help, while carefully examining and clearing the specific help requested. This is feasible because, in actual fact, the covert help is very slight except for verbal encouragement and exchange of information.

6. We intend to keep up anti-Trujillo propaganda campaign and other external pressures.

7. FYI, in event overthrow of Trujillo military forces will be dispatched immediately to stand-by ~~pre-invasion~~ positions. On receipt of request from provisional government, and your concurrence, we will be prepared to go in immediately ~~will go in~~ If no request is received and there appears to be any danger of communist takeover then decision will be made in Washington whether to intervene regardless. This makes it imperative that a request be obtained if at all possible. End FYI

8. Begin conversations immediately with dissidents informing them of U.S. position and the necessity for an immediate request. Foreign & Military Subcommittee Meeting

- - -

Tuesday, March 9, 1976

United States Senate,
Select Committee to Study Governmental
Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities,
Washington, D. C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 10:30 o'clock a.m., in Room S-407, the Capitol, Senator Walter D. Huddleston (Chairman of the Subcommittee) presiding.

Present: Senators Huddleston, presiding, Hart of Colorado, and Mathias.

Also present: William Miller, Staff Director; Joseph diGenova, Charles Kirbow, Elliot Maxwell, Elizabeth Culbreth, Jan Orloff, William Bader, Lynn Davis, Al Quanbeck, Charles Lombard, Rick Inderfurth, Bob Kelley, Greg Treverton, Jim Johnston, and Britt Snider, Professional Staff Members.

TOP SECRET

PROCEEDINGS

Senator Huddleston. Let's come to order.

Mr. Aaron. The agenda today is to proceed with the DCI section and in addition we would like to get the Subcommittee's if you will substantive approval of the paper on the production of intelligence so that it might go to the Agency and we could go through the process of clearing its details.

I don't know which of those you wish to take up first but --

Mr. Kirbow. We should really take up the paper first because it already went out this morning.

Mr. Aaron. Well, they are reading it but we have not negotiated with them yet.

Senator Huddleston. Any comment on that paper?

Mr. Miller. Which paper?

Senator Huddleston. The production of intelligence.

Mr. Aaron. It is in the larger book.

Mr. Kirbow. Senator, I have some comments but I defer to the Senators if they have some comments first.

Mr. Aaron. It's at Tab III. C6.

Senator Huddleston. Charley, go ahead.

Mr. Kirbow. Thank you.

The concern that has been expressed by the senior witnesses from the Agency and other parts of the community not only before this Committee but as a matter of record for the Senators. I'm sure they know that the big fight in the House last year was to avoid the excruciating details on budget figures and I think we had kind of discussed perhaps publishing 3 or 4 major features. I'd like to point out that in this particular document, such great detail as that portion of the CIA, the DDI which produces intelligence, we speak of an authorized project to $70.9 million with 2,269 employees, exact percentage of the Agency's budget and the exact percentage of the personnel. That one page of this document is probably the most classified single compilation.

Senator Huddleston. What page is that?

Mr. Kirbow. Page 3.

Senator Huddleston. Of course it's out of the Agency. I would assume they would have some comment on it.

Mr. Aaron. The point was not, the view was not to produce these precise numbers but A, to have them for the Subcommittee so that they could understand them and much as in the case of the DCI's original paper to expect that these things will be modified and to lay the basis for an appropriate discussion with them as to how one might modify it and yet capture the essence of the argument, and we'll just see how far that goes in trying to reach --

Certainly we have no intention of -- Senator Huddleston. Could we say this Department represents a substantial expenditure with a large number of employees?

Mr. Kirbow. Well if I could tell you what my position on it is, in speaking to Beth Bloomfield last night I specificall asked her -- well, she says that's to give them something out there to take out so that we'll have enough left in here that would be a worthwhile document at the end.

And I think that if we are kidding ourselves that we have either the time or -- and we should not have the inclination in my opinion to waste the time of the people at the Agency or anything by "putting in things which will give Mr. Boldin something to gnaw on so he won't bother the rest of the thing," I just didn't think that we were going to get into that kind of dealing with the Agency people. I thought we were going to be forthright in what we thought we should put in and what we would put in a document like this because the whole production of intelligence thing or the whole theme of the paper is [illegible] this inadequate attention given to the analytical portion of production.

And if we are doing this and sending it out there in this classified form full well knowing at the outset -- she says, well, that's not even material. If they want to take it out, just take it out.

Well, if it's not material, I would hope that we're not wasting both our times -- we've read about 10,000 words in the last month.

TOP SECRET

Senator Huddleston. I think it's probably material to also to have a firmer grasp when we start discussing and defending the report maybe, even to the extent of having specific figures.

I think it's highly unlikely that they will let that stay in there and we'll probably have to modify it. I see your point in a way that we might save ourselves time by scaling it down to begin with to what we think will be acceptable, but on the other hand, we may not guess right.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, for the record then, Senator, I do have exception to this type writing where we deliberately beef it up with known classified information full well knowing that it's going to be taken out and not get to the point that we are trying to make. But I won't dwell on it any further.

Senator Huddleston. Do you have any comment on that aspect, Senator Hart?

Senator Hart. No.

Senator Huddleston. All right, that one's ready to go.

Mr. Aaron. Thank you.

Now we left off yesterday on page 25. We had discussed two oral proposals by way of recommendations. The first was to set a tone for the DCI which was rejected and the second was to confirm the new community wide deputy for the DCI to have him subject to Senate confirmation to establish him as, in effect, the first deputy of the DCI, the man who would succeed in his place.

We also discussed briefly the recommendation number 16 and we agreed that we would make some change in the language relating to what in effect is the re-establishment of the board of national estimates to make clear that they weren't there just for the purpose of endorsing estimates but from the standpoint that they are there for the purpose of reviewing them.

So the next recommendation is recommendation 17, and it is long and complicated. Essentially what the recommendation does is spell out more precisely what the DCI's responsibilities will be for the overall allocation of resources and coordination of the community's activities apart from the production of finished intelligence, which is the purpose of recommendation 16.

Now what it does, the first paragraph summarizes the essential responsibilities along the lines of the President's Executive Order.

Now it is slightly different from the Executive Order in the following sense. The Executive Order establishes an NSC Committee, gives the Committee the responsibility of preparing a national intelligence budget, makes the DCI the Chairman of that Committee, and gives the DCI in his person, if you will, the responsibility for presenting that budget to the President

Now we sort of cut through that somewhat complicated and not entirely clear allocation of authority to the DCI by simply saying he is responsible for preparing the community's budget, and he has this Committee for this purpose in trying to place responsibility squarely on him to do that.

Now this would not mean, however, that the Secretary of Defense be senior to him in the cabinet. I mean the National Security Council could not make a reclama and could not go over his head.

That situation will still exist and this Committee is in fact a committee of the National Security Council, so there is another layer at which inter-Agency disputes, if they continue beyond the level of the Committee on Foreign Intelligence, where they could be resolved.

Now the first -- it also designates him as responsible for preparing the budget and providing guidance for operations programs in general terms and puts him in as chairman of the appropriate NSC committee, and then we reference the CFI and then authorize the following specific responsibilities.

First of all, the establishment of national intelligence requirements for the entire community and it empowers him to draw upon representatives of the members of the intelligence community to help him in the task of establishing these requiremen

Now this is an increase in his authority from his current posture. He has now the authority to issue guidance in the preparation of requirements but he can't really say do this or do that. These are the things we want.

Now as a practical matter, I think it's fair to say that he goes pretty far in getting his way at the present time, but on some of these requirements on a national basis, this would give him the clear authority to ask them to do things.

Now his requirements, the level of detail and so forth, would obviously be something that would have to be negotiated out in the course of his work.

Now that is the recommendation of the first paragraph and paragraph A.

I might just say it also gives the DCI in connection with the requirements process, it refers here to the fact that he may determine the success of various agencies in fulfilling and in fact what the paragraph sets up is a system whereby the DCI can establish requirements and then through the budget process and in the process of evaluating requirements make some estimate of how well the community is doing and either add to the budgets or take away in certain areas and so forth.

This provides some of the real system as opposed to a paper system which he has had in the past.

Paragraph B describes the preparation of the national intelligence budget and points out that he should prepare this budget, present it to the President and to the Congress who would make some reference here to the language in the President's Executive Order in this regard.

It makes the further point that the definition of the elements to be included within a national intelligence budget -- in other words, what parts of the community would fit into that, where you draw the line between technical and national intelligence, between departmental and national intelligence.

This definition would be established by the Congress in consultation with the Executive Branch.

It further points out that he should be involved early in the process of preparing budgets in the budget cycle, and then it makes some hortatory kind of statements about how he should try to consider trade-offs between programs and between collection and production and so forth.

Senator Huddleston. I would suggest there that we use another word besides trade-off. While it is common for us to use it up here in committee work, I don't think it conveys the best connotation to the public.

What we're saying is that he balances out or apportions resources, whatever.

Mr. Aaron. Now I think the final sentence is this important one, and the Senators should note this. The proposal and perhaps this ought to be made somewhat more clear than it is now as to who will do this, but the authority -- I'm sorry, it is clear. But the authority of the DCI to reprogram funds within the intelligence budget should be limited by statute. The President. th Executive Order gives to the Committee on Foreign Intelligence not only the authority to prepare the national intelligence budget, but to reprogram moneys within that budget.

Now our estimate is that that budget would be on the order of $3, 4, perhaps up to $5 billion, depending on what is included in it, and I asked the White House, the NSC member of that Committee what the purpose of that particular provision was, and I asked him specifically did this mean that you would be able to, as in the case of Angola, reprogram money away from some other part of the budget, NSA, NRO, some other major program, and put it into the covert military, para-military action program?

And he said yes, that is the reason that he is given a sort of broad authority to reprogram money.

Senator Huddleston. Well, they were doing some of that, weren't they?

Mr. Aaron. To some extent I believe that's true, but I personally don't know what that extent was.

Now to the extent we will see later that we place some or make some recommendations concerning limitations on the authority to draw upon different funds and to replenish certain funds for the purposes of covert action, this squares with that proposal by saying that there should be by statute certain limitations on the reprogramming of funds.

We're not saying what those ought to be there really thinking that the oversight committees would have to work out.

Now the next paragraph, C --

Mr. Kirbow. Could we take these one at a time because these are rather critical?

Mr. Chairman, one of the things that came before this Committee when I guess it was Mr. Colby testifying and at each meeting that Mr. Miller and the staff had with the people from the White House and the CIA when we were preparing the oversight bill, we heard many good reasons why we should not deprive the DCI of this ability to sign certifying out of certain funds and being able to expend them without a great big red tape machine to hinder that type of operation.

If, as David says, his recommendation here is to prevent reprogramming, except within very narrowly defined statutory limits, is a first step toward restricting that further activity. I would like to except on this and have it discussed before the Full Committee, or in the absence of that, or connected with it, have the record that we have that shows us that we should restrict by legislation here --

Senator Huddleston. What is the major thrust there? Is it to in fact limit or restrict or is it to actually have it defined and specified in the statute as to what circumstances might prevail?

Mr. Aaron. The thrust here is as follows. The DCI can now reprogram money within his own agency to some extent. That budget, depending on the parts he can reprogram, I don't believe he can reprogram it within about $750 million of his own appropriation.

Senator Huddleston. We can't take something out of the NSA now and put it over?

Mr. Aaron. No, we can't do that. But in his new responsibilities as DCI for preparing the budget of the entire national intelligence program, he will now be in a position to reprogram the entire budget and therefore it's a much larger kind of flexibility.

Now the thrust of this particular proposal is not really aimed, this particular one -- later one we do have one which does place some constraints and the purpose is to make it clear where the money comes from and where it's going to go to make it clear to the Congress at least. But this particular one simply says that because this is a much wider reprogramming flexibility, that it ought to be subject to certain kinds of definitions and consider the limitations so that the Congress knows what is happening to the moneys that it appropriates for particular purposes.

Senator Huddleston. Well, for this particular paragraph, then, would define or specify, suffice the word limited, or not?

Mr. Aaron. It should be defined. That's correct.

Mr. Kirbow. I do wish to point out, Mr. Chairman, that that is a departure from the standard reprogramming process that has been adopted in the Senate over the last 10 or 15 years, for instance, with the Committee on Armed Services.

Senator Huddleston. For other departments?

Mr. Kirbow. Where there is an authorizing and an appropriations type action in the Congress, as Senator Hart will know from his experience on that committee, if they wish to reprogram missile money over to aircraft, for instance, it has to be approved by all four of those committees, both Arms Services and both appropriations committees with the exact transfer of the amounts of money and the justifications given therefore.

My concern is not that the Congress should not have a control of this or that you would make it so rigid by making recommendations that leave the oversight committee and the appropriations committee no flexibility to do this. And I would think that unless we have a very good record on this, we should recommend that this should be a matter that the oversight committee in its new rule gives good consideration to.

Mr. Miller. The oversight committees and the appropriations committees would have flexibility. Every appropriations act is a statute, after all.

Mr. Kirbow. They certainly would unless you restrict them by statute.

Senator Huddleston. But we are suggesting a statute which the new oversight committee that has passed, so far would have legislative authority over. So we're really just recommending here that in this statute they provide the framework under which these kinds of reprogramming can be done in view of the fact that we are extending the DCI from his own little bailiwick to the entire intelligence community.

TOP SECRET

Mr. Kirbow. If that's the intent of the committee, I have no reservations about it.

Senator Huddleston. I don't think the military people would object to that kind of language. They'd like to have some definite framework for a man to reach into his budget.

Mr. Kirbow. I think all the various agencies would like to have that kind of protection.

Senator Huddleston. Okay.

Mr. Davis. Number C, the DCI should have responsibility to review all intelligence activities and intelligence resource allocations, including tactical military intelligence in order to carry out his more general responsibilities.

We've used the word "review" very carefully here. This is not a responsibility to direct those operations but simply to be able to look at the whole in order to sort of balance it out.

We're not saying that he's taking over responsibility from the military commanders. If you read the Executive Order the language is different and it says that the CFI and the DCI will not have responsibility for tactical military intelligence. But then it uses the word guidance. That is that the DCI will provide guidance on the relationship between the two and that is ambiguous to us and so we wanted to make sure that the DCI would be able to look at the whole but not have responsibility for directing the tactical military intelligence programs.

Mr. diGenova. The original drafting of that Section C, I think it's actually clearer than the way it's drafted now. The original draft says, while the DCI shall not have responsibil for directing tactical military operations, the DCI shall have responsibility to review all intelligence activities, et cetera.

I think the original one is better because it makes it clearer what you are trying to say.

Mr. Kirbow. If you're going to use that for Senate, you have to say tactical military intelligence operations.

Mr. diGenova. Yes. There's a word missing from the original formulation.

Mr. Davis. The reason it was taken out is because it was a negative and there was the thought that this is saying what he does do and leaving what he doesn't do not to be said. It's up to the Committee how you want to --

Mr. diGenova. But you don't want to do the same thing the President did and leave the thing ambiguous.

Mr. Davis. I have no problem making that first statement.

Senator Huddleston. If you want to be positive you can say while the responsibility for directing tactical military operations resides with whoever it is, the DCI still shall have the review.

Mr. Davis. Well, review is, I think, the right word because he's going to try to look at the whole.

Senator Huddleston. I think Joe makes a point there because that could lead to some misinterpretation.

Mr. Davis. Section D goes on to ask the Director of Central Intelligence to establish a staff to support him in these responsibilities and to draw a staff as widely and from the best talent that he can.

Senator Hart. Is this another staff or is this the staff that is in being?

Mr. Davis. This is the staff in being. He has always had people to help him in this role.

Senator Hart. Why do we have to authorize him to do something he's already doing?

Mr. Davis. We don't want him not to do that. I mean we want him to have a special staff to carry out these responsibilities.

Senator Huddleston. This is about the second or third time we've referred to him having the staff.

Senator Mathias. Why don't you say maintain instead of establish?

Senator Hart. Why if he doesn't want the staff?

Mr. Davis. He's authorized. He doesn't have to.

Mr. Kirbow. He's authorized to have a staff under the President's executive order or in any other normal course of business.

This appears to be dipping down below the kind of statutory authority position that you have and telling them how t structure all of the organizations underneath.

That's my objection to that particular aspect of the recommendation. I kind of side with Senator Hart. He has the authority to do his business and I don't think anyone in their wildest imagination would think that the Congressional record or history in this would establish that he's supposed to do it by himself.

Senator Hart. You took the words right out of my mouth.

Mr. Kirbow. And I once more say this is one of the recommendations that we recommend be taken out.

Senator Hart. Who's we?

Mr. Kirbow. The staff had had discussions at the staff level where several recommendations that things like this be taken out for that very reason be considered, and I think it is inadvertent that they are back in the redraft.

Senator Huddleston. You have no strong feeling about that? Let's omit that paragraph.

Senator Hart. In that connection, and I hate to do this, but I'd like to back up because David sailed right by this -- page 24, recommendation 16. The Director also would be empowered to establish a board of senior advisors.

Now who is that? Who is that board?

Mr. Davis. This would be something similar to the board of national estimates.

Senator Hart. Is he empowered to do that now?

Mr. Aaron. He is not empowered to do that now because it was abolished on him.

Mr. Davis. But he could do it.

Mr. Aaron. I don't think that's correct.

Mr. Maxwell. He abolished it. It was not abolished on him.

Senator Hart. Could Mr. Bush reconstitute it if he wants?

Mr. Bader. Senator, this is in a way a call to the DCI. It is based, I think, on really extensive testimony we have taken here about the utility of the board of national estimates.

Senator Huddleston. It may be more a recommendation than an authorization.

Mr. Davis. At the same time we didn't want to tell him he had to because it is more or less up to him because if he doesn't want to run his shop that way --

Senator Hart. Who are these people?

Mr. Davis. In the past they have been former senior officials and academics who would serve to review the estimates and comment on them for the director.

Senator Hart. Do they perform any function? Have they in the past?

Mr. Miller. Oh, yes. Llewelyn Thompson, for example. There are senior diplomats, senior military men from the outside, people of distinction, people who have seen a lot and have something to contribute.

Senator Hart. Have they had something to contribute?

Mr. Miller. Yes.

Mr. Aaron. There are two functions they can perform. More or less, they can bring their wisdom to bear on the product.

Senator Hart. I want to know what they have done in the past.

Mr. Miller. Soviet matters. Llewelyn Thompson's roles, for example.

Mr. Aaron. And the second thing they have done was to provide some senior support for the DCI and the judgements he is making.

End 1A b 1B

Now the extent to which that support has been translated into horsepower is unclear, except it was sufficiently strong that it was of concern to the previous administration and was one of the reasons that the board among others was dis-established.

Senator Hart. Have they prevented any problems in the past that we know of?

Mr. Inderfurth. I think that's in relation to helping to insulate the DCI from pressures to modify him. In the past, the board of national estimates insulated the DCI from pressures.

Senator Hart. Chile, Angola, all these cases where the DCI comes in and says we don't really want to do that but the President made us, does he bring in the senior advisor to the President and say, Llewelyn Thompson doesn't want us to, either.

Mr. Lombard. I think part of the problem here, Senator, is that the office of estimates was created under the Eisenhower Administration and fitted very well into the formalistic way in which foreign policy was evolved during that administration. Perhaps as a matter of fact it's been criticized as being overly formalistic and the board of estimates was viewed as being somewhat too long-range and somewhat other world and not geared to what the President perceived as being his day to day needs on estimates.

Now I don't know where the equities lie in this thing, but it seems as though these insitutions have changed according to individual Presidents.

So really, beginning with the Kennedy administration, you had the decline of the office of national estimates because it no longer seemed to fit the fabric.

Mr. Aaron. I'm not sure that's really a fair picture of the history of the board. Perhaps you could tell us since you were associated with it Ball.

Mr. Kirbow. I want to talk about the testimony that was given before the committee on this from two of the former DCIs. Mr. Colby, at both the breakfast briefings he gave and in testimony, favored the use of individual intelligence offices around in these various agencies, originating estimates and everything else; whereas Mr. Helms, when he testified here, says I really don't know how that system is working right now. I didn't favor it when Mr. Colby established it, and I had the other system and it worked well for me.

So I think here again you are talking about a man's staffing requirements as they suit the particular times and the individual as to how he wants to run the intelligence community and what apparently suited Mr. Helms fine didn't suit Mr. Colby and he used a different system which he says works great. And I say that that is, again, a step down thing. Unless you want to encourage him to do it in a recommendation and not mandate that he do it, it kind of makes him run his business the way you want it run and to no apparent abuse problems or anything like that.

Senator Hart. Well, my only thought here is that some future oversight committee or select committee is going to be trying to pinpoint responsibility, and there are so many boards and committees and rocks to hide behind that a DCI has or a President or anybody has that --

So again, my intent here is not to be a know-nothing. It just to keep the structure as clean as possible to identify responsibility. That's all. And if this is important to do, let's do it.

Mr. Bader. The record, Senator, and I can only speak from personal experience with the board of national estimates -- I certainly know of at least four estimates with which I had a part of which the board's role was very important in shielding both the DCI and indeed the analyst from the ravages in two cases of the military who felt very strongly that the continuation of our bases in the Azores was much more important than say some hard political realities about the future of Portugese Africa.

And I could cite other cases where this kind of insulating function was enormously important. It had a great deal to do with the experience, the background and the very presence of some of these board members.

They also play a role as the chairman of the coordinating sessions of these national estimates. There's not just an advisory board that sits quite far from the process. Each national intelligence estimate, one of these board members becomes the chairman.

So they do play a very active role in the preparation.

Mr. Aaron. I might mention that in this connection your concern about the accountability problem, which I think is a fair one. We have testimony that Helms' disposition on this was very clear. When he signed the estimate it was his estimate and it really wasn't the board's estimate.

Mr. Maxwell. Perhaps it might be useful because I think it is clear that he is empowered to do it. Two, if the committee desires to make clear that as a recommendation, on the basis of the committee's examination of their record that this is a desirable thing rather than saying that it would be empowered, by statute, because he does have that power.

Mr. Kirbow. Is it the desire of the Committee though, to change the current system which the present director has not seen fit to change yet, which he has full authority to change if he wishes to do so and which the previous DCI established and developed into a working mechanism?

Mr. Miller. The records show that the function of the board had been official results. Then it seems to me we should so state that it is a desirable structure.

Mr. Kirbow. I had one difference with Bill. I don't know that it is desirable to insulate the DCI from the opinions of the respective military departments if they have a vested interest in the outcome of the decision being rendered.

Mr. Miller. The board has distinguished members from the military.

Mr. Kirbow. Then I don't know how it can be used to isolate.

Mr. Miller. Insulate the political pressure. That's the point. Not the point of view of opinion.

Senator Hart. Mr. Chairman, I move that this paragraph stay in, that we move on.

Senator Huddleston. Yes. I think we discussed that thoroughly yesterday, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Aaron. On E, this is the clause which, in effect, makes clear that there is a definite limit to the DCI's authority and the limit being the conduct of warfare, at which time there should be a clear system and process whereby these activities of the intelligence community over which he has responsibility in some general sense here for budget and so forth, that these basic activities come under the Secretary of Defense. It's simply recognizing the fact that we really have two problems. On the one hand, the conduct of intelligence in what is essential peacetime and the conduct of intelligence in wartime.

Mr. Inderfurth. David, could we get some examples of what high tension means?

Mr. Kirbow. We recommended that that come out. Everyone had agreed on that and I think it was put back in. It's something that you can't define. The Secretary of Defense may feel there's very high tension but the DCI may not be willing to give up his control at that time and you wind up with a wrestling match.

Senator Hart. But there's a phrase of art here national emergency maybe?

Mr. Aaron. Well, I think the way we came on it was to simply say if you have the process for a time of war, the President may exercise it, and he may exercise it if he feels it's a crisis.

The point was just to have a process and have it understood what happens.

Mr. diGenova. Is it good to have a system that is operating all right in peacetime and then when you come to the time you really need, you give it to someone else to run?

Mr. Aaron. Well, the requirements change in time of war.

Mr. Quanbeck. The collection would become almost completely operational. The sites would be dedicated to opeational purposes and there'd be no purpose to have direction from the DCI.

In that case it would be a supporting military operation. Similarly, the new satellite systems would be used to support ongoing operations.

Mr. diGenova. In other words, you're saying there wouldn't be very many national intelligence needs.

Mr. Quanbeck. Well, economic intelligence would be relatively unimportant. Verification of arms control agreements would not be a matter of concern.

Mr. diGenova. You're talking about the use of hardware.

Mr. Quanbeck. Yes.

Mr. Kirbow. There's no difference of opinion between the former DCI's -- I don't know Mr. Bush's position -- or the former Secretaries of Defense. Everyone concedes that the control of intelligence should go for Defense's purposes in time of war, the principal control.

Mr. Davis. The point is, too, the argument in the past has been the Secretary of Defense needs the control he has had in order to prepare for war and now you're saying the DCI's going to do more but you don't want to upset the military commanders. And this is a way of saying that we understand that in wartime it is going to go back. It is more symbolic.

Mr. Kirbow. One of the recommendations in the military area we'll come to later is on this same subject with the bulk of the work I guess on the subject being done by that group.

Mr. Davis. This also happens with the clandestine service today. In war the clandestine service comes under the military commander in the field.

Mr. Aaron. There are some arrangements of this character because of the expanded authority of the DCI that is granted both in the order and our proposed statute, particularly in the area of requirements.

It's important to have this caveat, if you will.

Now recommendation 11 really suggests that the oversight committee look at carrying the budget process a step further and instead of appropriating or authorizing the appropriation funds to the different departments for intelligence purposes, that in fact they are authorized to the DCI who would then parcel them out, and it doesn't come down hard to say that this ought to be done but that this is the next logical step in this process and it is something for the oversight committee's agenda.

TOP SECRET

Now number 19 --

Mr. Kirbow. I would like to except on that until such time as the whole subject of the budget and release of the figures and everything else is considered, the whole budget aspect at the same time.

Senator Hart. I don't understand this exception procedure. How does that work?

Mr. Kirbow. Senator Tower has asked the Chairman that if there was anything that had not been in agreement among the staff, that it could be brought before, that it would certainly come to the subcommittee.

Senator Hart. Well, the Subcommittee can go ahead and vote on something, can't they?

Mr. Kirbow. Yes.

Senator Hart. I think every member of the Full Committee reserves his rights when the matter comes before the Full Committee. I don't think there need to be exceptions filed.

TOP SECRET

WARD & PAUL

It's all de novo when it gets up to the Full Committee anyway.

Mr. Kirbow. I simply indicated to the Chairman earlier that I didn't want to have a reservation like that and not point it out to him because I didn't want the absent member to appear to be sandbagging the subcommittee.

Senator Huddleston. He's putting us on notice.

Mr. Aaron. Option 13, this option steps up to the question of whether the DCI in his new capacity as the overall manager of the community, and by manager I don't mean down in the nuts and bolts but having the general management responsibilit of interpreting the budget in terms of requirements, in terms of general guidance for the management of some of these activities, whether that function should be separated from that of running the CIA as an agency.

Now we have heard some testimony about the inconsistency between those two responsibilities. I think the arguments, if I can set them on the two sides, would be as follows. And by the way, there's a difference of opinion in the staff as to which of these is the right one to follow. The argument in favor of going ahead now to separate them is that these are inconsistent, that one could have, you remove the DCI from a conflict of interest situation in which he is both running one of the principal agencies responsible for not only clandestine activities but for a small segment of signals intelligence, the development of certain research and development programs that are of great interest to the community, and you take him out of the position of having to judge other people's research and development programs and other people's SIGINT programs, and other activities when he is the overall director of Central Intelligence, and that therefore this separation, his removal from that, would be a good idea.

The second argument is that you really want to place the authority squarely on the new director of this agency who's going to be responsible for clandestine activities. If he still has a boss above him who is kind of responsible but who in fact because of his increased responsibilities won't be able to give the day to day attention to clandestine activities that he might, if he didn't have these greater responsibilities, one should make the lines of authority clear and place the responsibility for the head of this agency on that agency and leave it there.

Now the argument against that is that -- well, there are two kinds of arguments against. One is that the situation now is justified and that this is a good thing and we don't need to make any change and there are good reasons to believe that.

The second argument might follow in the middle and says, well, there is some inconsistency potentially. There might be some advantages to separating them as well as some costs, but we have now just instituted this new system whereby you have broader responsibilities for the DCI. Let's see how it works for awhile before stepping up to the question of whether he can really adequately perform and wear both hats.

Those are essentially, I think, the arguments. If there are others that ought to be offered in explanation of the choice--

Mr. Bader. I would just underline that, Mr. Chairman, the second point that David has made about recommending the situation to stay the way it is today. That is, that the two hats would stay together.

I think some of us feel that the period in front of us will be a period of experimentation and testing where there are new responsibilities that will flow to the DCI. We'll see how they work, we'll see where his authority takes us. We'll see whether he really will in fact establish himself as the responsible director of, in a DCI sense, and we argued here that the oversight committee should be attentive to this to see how it works out and that if sometime in the future after we've had a chance to see how these expanded responsibilities work in practice, that will be a time to see whether the DCI and the Director of CIA function should be separated.

Mr. Aaron. I think that to argue the first case a little more strongly, if I could, there are two additional points to be made about it.

One is that in fact having the second half, running the agency will be an impediment to him effectively running the overall community.

TOP SECRET

So it isn't really just a question, I would argue, of seeing where the current system takes us. It's a matter of looking at what we have learned as a result of our inquiry and saying, in fact, this is going to be an impediment and it is my personal opinion and I think supported at least by some testimony that that would be the case.

The second argument, I think, is a somewhat broader one, and I guess I'm not prepared to make it. But we've had an inquiry into the CIA, some of its problems, some of its accountability problems, some of its management problems, and as a result of this inquiry there is, at least it strikes me as being some inconsistency to be argued between having this broad inquiry and ending up with a much stronger, larger, and more powerful Central Intelligence Agency in every respect with greater authority over other elements of the intelligence community.

Now you can only carry that so far but it seems to me that there is a serious question here as to, and it is seen in part by other elements of the intelligence community who really are concerned that by wearing the two hats, the DCI will still really be representing the Agency vis a vis their particular agencies like NSA and the others.

That's the choice.

Mr. diGenova. Mr. Chairman, if I could just note for the record that of the witnesses who testified before the Committee. I believe the record reflects that Mr. Schlesinger was the only former DCI who was in favor of separating the Agency from the Director and all those who were still alive to testify who were former directors favored it, most notably Mr. McCone and also Mr. Helms, Mr. Helms characterizing the director as ending up with a disembodied spirit if he were deprived of this analytical vehicle.

So I think as far as the record goes, I think the record is against divesting the director of the Agency, although there is certainly evidence from those who felt that he should be.

Mr. Aaron. Let me see if I can clarify that record a little more.

First of all, the proposal is not to divest him from the analytical and production function. That we clearly provide for and that would not take place.

The second point is that I believe the record goes to the question of sorting out or separating the director as he has to this time existed in the sort of general kind of overseer and the kind of jawbone authority that he has had. And the questions that have been put to the witnesses generally have been put in the context of what was, up until recently, his authority in that capacity, and I might say personally I would agree with that.

I think if you were to divorce the director who essentially only had jawbone authority from an agency and the specific gravity that that gave him, then he would be a disembodied spirit. But we're talking about a somewhat different situation now where he has real authority over the budget.

Mr. Kirbow. But also presupposes, Mr. Chairman, that you have decided already that you're going to separate the analytical side of the house up there from the clandestine side of the house and put them into separate agencies.

I don't believe the committee has decided that. The staff may have.

Mr. Treverton. It doesn't necessarily presuppose that.

Mr. Kirbow. If he's going to put the analytical side of the house over there with the DCI --

Mr. Treverton. Well, in any situation we would leave the DCI with his responsibility for estimates and a staff to do that.

I grant that the argument for separating the DCI from the CIA is stronger.

Senator Huddleston. Well, he wouldn't be without authority over the Central Intelligence Agency. He recommends the budget and tasks them. He gives them the responsibility and apportions the resources.

Mr. Lombard. I wonder if I could ask a question.

We have had previous DCIs who have testified that you should not have the dividing of the DCI from the agency but that was based upon the organization as they then knew it.

Now my question is this. Assuming that we were to achieve all of the measures in the recommendations that we have here for the DCI budget and all the rest, it seems to me that that is an awful lot of work without having to be concerned with the day to day operations of the CIA.

I don't know. I just raise the question.

Senator Huddleston. I think that's a good point.

Mr. Lombard. He first of all has to present the budget to the President. He has to defend the budget up on the hill, and that's in at least four committees. And then he's got to have an analytical base, and presumably the national estimate function and on top of that, worrying about the day to day operations of the Agency.

I don't know if that is more than one may should be asked to do.

Senator Huddleston. Well, when we talk about major reorganization and re-assignment of functions, almost, and we're probably confusing that by continuing to call the man who is going to supervise all of the intelligence the DCI.

Mr. Bader. Senator, what we are entering into here is a period of transition for the DCI where he has new responsibilities which are not certain at this point how they will be implemented.

Part of our problem with this decision is, as has been stated and noted, most of the testimony of former DCIs is against the background of the present situation. So most of it is not really relevant to the question of what the DCI will be doing if, and I underline the word if, these new responsibilities that are being thrust on him by both the Executive and by the Congress, are in fact implemented.

The argument I would make here is that the oversight committee should take some time and consider this, certainly in light of how these reforms, if they are reforms, are carried out.

Senator Huddleston. So that's option one.

Mr. Davis. The Executive Order is an attempt to look at the problem and to make one step which says there will be two deputies, and therefore the DCI will have someone who is managing his operations and takes some of the burden off and that's why they did it. And in a sense they recognized the conflict of interest and this was a step in that direction which we are accepting.

And when you say who prepares the budget, you have to be a little careful as to what that means. I mean the money is still authorized to the departments. They will still have their own budgetary process, and how exactly he gets control over that at this point is unclear. We're giving him language about how it's going to happen, and I think that's the argument for waiting a short time to see whether or not he actually does get control.

Mr. Aaron. I might just say that we have to look at this recommendation as well, not simply in the context of the President's own proposals and own measures that he has taken but in terms of the measures which we propose be taken in statute, which of course the oversight committee or whatever responsible legislative committee will have the power to dispose of these proposals or recommendations.

But in that context it's very clear that we do give very unambiguous authority, very strong authority -- I think I've noted a few other points where we actually strengthened the thrust of the Executive Order. And so when we look at the question of whether he should or should not, whether we should or should not recommend that in the context of this kind of authority there will also be development of a statute that would separate these functions, it has to be seen against what we propose and not what the President just proposed.

Senator Huddleston. The fact is that if everything we have recommended so far should come to pass and the DCI should have the expanded responsibility and authority, he would be a more powerful man if he was separated from the operation of the Agency. He would be a more powerful man then than he is now as running the Agency and being the so-called coordinator, would he not?

Mr. Davis. That's correct, that's the purpose.

Senator Mathias. Mr. Chairman, do we have any testimony from other agency heads, how they would view this question?

Mr. Lombard. We have some from the DIA.

Senator Huddleston. The DIA would favor separating the two.

Mr. Miller. General Allen has also said that.

Mr. Kirbow. General Allen at the meeting when this was discussed, he indicated that this has not created any problem for him, that he didn't see any favoritism being displayed on the part of Mr. Colby and the people he dealt with.

Mr. Maxwell. I think that's part of the reason why a number of us had favored option number one, was that a great deal of the trouble with the President's Executive Order and our recommendations was to give the DCI more authority. But for the period of time in which that has not been sorted out and we don't have a record for, to take away or recommend taking away essentially the troops that the DCI had used, which in the future hopefully he would not need if recommendations on both sides come into being would be to weaken him at a crucial time as people try to fill in the vacuum that is created.

Senator Huddleston. I think the question then is whether or not what we are recommending actually comes to pass. If it does come to pass, then this is an issue that needs to be addressed.

Now the other question is should we remain silent on it in the report or should we, as option one indicates here, leave it as it is until such time as it has been determined that it would be advantageous to separate them.

Is that what we're saying there?

Mr. Aaron. Yes. I think there are really three options. One is to leave the stuff out, and my own personal preference would be to leave it out entirely if the Committee did not feel that, if it didn't want to recommend that. It's kind of a half-hearted --

Senator Hart. Has the Administration already taken a step in this direction with the reorganization?

Mr. Aaron. It has by charging the new deputy out there and saying he's going to have more authority.

Senator Hart. How does one register disagreement with that? Vote for option one?

Mr. Aaron. If you thought that was inadequate, you would vote for number one.

Senator Hart. I don't think it's inadequate, I think it's wrong. I vote for option one.

Mr. Inderfurth. This also comes up under part 5(d), this whole discussion of options separating out.

Mr. Aaron. That's a separable question, the question of the structure of the Agency itself.

Mr. Davis. Under the Executive Order this new deputy for the intelligence community is physically moving out of Langley and coming downtown. That's supposed to be symbolic as well of the separation of the two roles.

Senator Huddleston. Could we solve it by just having a narrative statement at the end of all of these recommendations relating to the DCI to say that the foregoing, preceding recommendations would, if carried out, substantially strengthen the role of the DCI or they are intended to do that?

And this brings up the question as to whether or not in this expanded role he should also at the same time be essentially responsible for the operation of one of the agencies and that this matter, as his duties are expanded, this matter needs to be considered further and a determination made whether or not it's appropriate that he continue to hold that responsibility.

That's not a recommendation. It's just a commentary on what we have done.

Mr. Kirbow. It highlights the problem and passes it to the oversight committee, which would have time to conduct hearings on it after some history had been established on the new role.

Senator Mathias. Could Senator Hart elaborate on his brief statement of position?

Senator Hart. I think the division out there that apparently the President has worked out is a bad one, and I for one would like to go on record somewhere or another as opposing it.

Mr. Miller. Do you mean, Senator, that --

TOP SECRET

Senator Hart. I don't think this little dotted line means a damned thing, frankly. I've never seen an organization like that work in my life.

This is the --

Ms. Culbreth. That's ours.

Mr. Kirbow. At the present time, Senator, the Executive Order leaves the DCI as head of the CIA with a strong kind of executive deputy out there that does the day to day running of that.

Senator Hart. Well, I like that equally less well. That's the same thing.

Mr. Aaron. Senator, do you have -- is there another solution that we haven't considered?

Senator Hart. Yes. Leave it the way it is now.

Mr. Aaron. Make him run it but give him other responsibilities in other areas?

Senator Hart. Well, I don't want to name any names but some of the sort of nameless, faceless people that have been out there running operations in effect with some vague responsibility to report upward.

Senator Huddleston. Well, we say that in practice when these other, if indeed these other recommendations go into effect and he does assume this additional authority over the total community, once that happened, then it ought to be reviewed to see whether or not that additional authority still ought to be operating head.

You know, that can be a dissipation of his accountability. You have a man that is so involved in so many other things that some nameless person is under him calling the shots. But if we were to move him away from that, then that nameless person becomes the man that we're looking to as far as the operation of the CIA is concerned.

Mr. Kirbow. At that time too wouldn't you expect that that person would be named as the Director of the CIA, would be nominated by the President and confirmed by the Senate?

Mr. Miller. What's wrong with having the DCI in charge of the community as long as the deputy is under his direct control?

Senator Huddleston. Well, you have the community of the NSA. You don't call the director out there the director of the DCI.

We should be consistent.

Mr. Aaron. Option 2 -- we'd have a clear deputy, we'd know who he was. He'd be confirmed by the Senate. He'd be a man of stature and he wouldn't be anybody's deputy. He would be responsible.

Mr. Kirbow. He wouldn't be a deputy at all. He'd be the director of CIA.

Senator Huddleston. We'd just elevate the deputy for operations to be the director.

TOP SECRET

Senator Mathias. Isn't that in effect today except for the titles?

Mr. Aaron. Not exactly because he still reports to the DCI. Maybe part of your question goes to who that person ought to be and what kind of requirements there ought to be on that, whether you want to describe the kind of person you want out there.

Senator Mathias. Option 2 is really the President's order except for the semantics.

Mr. Bader. Not really, Senator.

Mr. Quanbeck. Option 2 actually separates. The DCI would be different from the Director of CIA.

Mr. Aaron. The guy you would hold responsible under the current system still has to be the DCI. Under option 2 the guy you would hold responsible would be the head of that agency and not Mr. Bush, in effect.

Senator Huddleston. If we go to my narrativeparagraph --

Senator Hart. Can we have that written up and brought back?

Senator Mathias. I think this could be a critical recommendation.

Senator Huddleston. I was going to say we might add a line in there that a reason to review it and possibly to change it would be to give a better fix on responsibility for the actual operations of the Central Intelligence Agency.

TOP SECRET

WARD & PAUL

That would be the main reason that I would think that you would move the DCI away from that.

Senator Mathias. But it does not appear to me that you exonerate your national intelligence officer, whatever you call him, just because you have someone else you can also point to.

I think you'd get two fish on the same hook if something goes wrong.

Mr. Aaron. I think that would be in part true depending upon what the particular problem was.

Senator Mathias. Well, sure, if their checkwriter is out of wack and they haven't called in the repairman, they might confine the responsibility to --

Senator Huddleston. Actually, you don't exonerate him. As I see it for the operations of the Central Intelligence Agency you have added to him the responsibility for the operations of the other intelligence agencies, too, and he has to review authority and he in fact would be the focal point of any misdeed or wrong deed that may occur, whether it's in NSA or CIA or whatever.

Mr. Aaron. It would really be very similar to the role he would now have under the Executive Order to the NSA. It's much closer to that.

We'll go back and draft a paragraph and present it either this afternoon or at our next meeting.

Now the next section refers to the Central Intelligence Agency in general. Now because so much of our inquiry is focused on the Central Intelligence Agency, we have a rather long series of recommendations regarding it.

Now the sections are briefly these -- those dealing with the charter for the Agency, for its conduct of espionage, counter-intelligence and covert action, and the question of covert action itself, how it might be conducted and what limitati might specifically, or rules and regulations might apply to it.

The production of intelligence, which is on its way, but it's not in here, there is another section. Then the impact on the domestic world of these activities both intelligence collection and covert action and I believe you had a good discussion of that longer paper prepared by Mr. Bader the other day.

And then finally, some discussions of the inspection system, the general counsel, the inspector general and so forth, and some recommendations in regard to that.

Those are the central parts of it. It includes, of course, such matters as proprietaries, cover and so forth.

Now if we could turn to the first set of recommendations, let me just make sure that there are not disagreements in the text that need to be brought to your attention.

Mr. Maxwell. I think there are. There are things that were agreed upon at the staff level that were left out.

Mr. Aaron. I have one here.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, just for your information, there appears to be several things which were not just an occasional one but several things that were agreed on at the staff level that subsequently found their way back here in the exact original language.

But I won't dwell on that now.

Mr. Aaron. I'd be happy to take that out to see what we can do about it.

Now the first bracket that I find is on page 36. If there are any others before that that people have, we can take that up.

Mr. Maxwell. There's one on 33. It's not a bracket but it was a statement that would have been included as to the committee's findings as to internal controls on espionage activities by the Central Intelligence Agency.

Mr. Aaron. Yes, I recall that one.

Mr. Maxwell. Also on that page there's no effective machinery to make sure that those outside the clandestine service. I think that was addressed to the CIA because unless a finding is made at the CIA that the DCI at this point, the Director --

Mr. Aaron. I don't understand

Mr. Maxwell. The second full paragraph on 33 the way it reads, it assumes that the Director of the Central Intelligence Agency who is outside the clandestine service is not able to ensure --

Mr. Aaron. I understand. You're right. Okay, if these are agreed things and they have been dropped out, then let's just get them back in. I don't know that we have to take the subcommittee's time to do it.

But if we missed some that were disagreed and need to be brought to the subcommittee, I'd like to make sure we get them out.

Senator Huddleston. At the bottom of the page on 33, maybe it's just not coming through to me but the CIA engages in both overt and clandestine activity within the United States for the purpose of foreign intelligence collection by overt means from American citizens.

Mr. Aaron. I'm sorry. I think that foreign intelligence collection, period, and then the rest of that sentence comes out.

And then it says the domestic collection does the overt, and the foreign resources does the covert.

Okay, my first bracket is on page 36 and it is that the Committee questions the practice of recruiting for foreign espionage purpose immigrants desiring American citizenship.

The point was made that there have in the past been instances in which those who were immigrants to the United States who wished to have citizenship were then approached by the intelligence agencies and either sent back as legal travellers and what have you and the question being the point of concern being that their vulnerable status of wanting to have permanent citizenship in the country made them more susceptible to either actual or implied or even imagined threats or imagined coercion.

Mr. diGenova. Can I ask a question about that? I'm totally unfamiliar with the subject and I'd like to know what the evidence was on the record.

Mr. Aaron. It came up in two cases that I recall and I'd like for Bill to speak to one of them. One case involved the Chinese in which the Chinese were approached and used for this purpose. I am not aware of any testimony that there was in fact coercion involved. The question was the practice and whether it has within it elements of coercion or at least the potential for it.

Now the second case I think you can speak to.

Mr. Bader. We have received testimony from a professor from a university in the Southwest that said that he had acted or was the middleman in an operation of recruitment of Jewish Russian immigrants who came to the United States who in particular were interested in some of the Russian Jewish immigrants who were quite young in hopes that presumably after recruitment they would return to the United States. I mean the Soviet Union. We did not take that testimony any further than receiving his testimony. That is, we have not taken it to the point of asking the agency whether in fact they have such a program in the Southwest. So the testimony was limited to that one charge which I personally gave some real credibility to.

Ms. Culbreth. Can you explain just what the charge is here? What is the wrong that has been done?

Mr, Kirbow. What's wrong with that? That's the question I had in the original suggestion at the staff level.

The only human collection we are getting from behind the Iron Curtain in Russia today is principally either through our cooperation with the Israeli intelligence community using just this sort of individual and sending them back, or sending this type of individual from the United States back inside. We're not getting the other human intelligence.

Mr. Bader. I was only responding to the question of what the testimony was.

To go on to the further issue which I think is going to be addressed by the Committee, it's not the question of whether we should, the Central Intelligence Agency should be recruiting foreigners in this country for intelligence purposes, people who may return to their country of origin.

The question is whether the individual who is in the process of seeking American citizenship are in quotes "vulnerable to exploitation for such purposes and whether in that shading the Committee would want to take a position about recruitment of that particular group.

Mr. diGenova. My position is this, Bill. The first time I heard about this was when I read it in these findings and conclusions. I never saw a hearing on it, I never saw a document about it, I never had a chance to comment on it as a designee, and I never had a chance to bring it up with my Senator.

I'm not sure that we want to say this, ask the Senators to say this, without having something in a report about what the practice is, how it's been conducted, who has objected to it, what's the extent of it, before we start making a recommendation.

We're saying we question the practice of recruiting.

I have no objection to the Committee ultimately making a statement like this. I just don't know what the record is. This is the first time I've ever seen this.

Mr. Bader. That's why I wanted it bracketed so it could be so discussed.

Senator Hart. What if we said we urge the permanent oversight committee to look into this question?

Mr. Aaron. I think it would make some sense to have gotten the Agency on the record that in fact this is a practice or something that happens.

Senator Hart. If it's happening, I don't think it should. If we have to sacrifice some human intelligence, I don't think we ought to have a CIA guy tugging on somebody's sleeve who's filling out his immigration forms because it is a very subtle and very powerful form of coercion.

I don't think it should go on if it is going on but I think the oversight committee should find out.

Mr. Bader. It's my personal position on this that we don't have the evidence. We have not taken it through to come to a conclusion on this .

I personally think that it's a problem that should be pointed out, and I think perhaps my own view is that the formulation of a recommenation to look into this as a possible, as a problem would be my recommendation.

I don't believe that is David's recommendation.

Senator Mathias. I would think that you might as you contemplate this thing, there are all types of opportunities for this and I don't have any idea whether it's been done or not, but I would think an illegal alien, for example, would be a tremendous target.

Mr. Aaron. I might just say --

Senator Mathias. It's a different problem.

Mr. Aaron. It's a subtle problem because abroad I personall was involved in a case in which someone seeking to emigrate to the United States, his desire to do that was exploited abroad for the purpose of getting him into the Agency.

Senator Mathias. This is the kind of situation I'm thinking of, perhaps not an illegal alien, but someone who is in this country in some sort of legal status but which is of temporary duration and he wants to change his status.

Senator Huddleston. I can see that. Of course you're not going to get one unless there's something he wants. Most of them, it's either money or some change in his status.

Mr. Aaron. We drafted this language to make clear that they were really immigrants and they were not illegal aliens or people here changing their status or people outside trying to get in, but people who are inside applying for their citizenship.

Senator Hart. We could offer an option to have the Statue of Liberty say give us your huddled masses if you work for the CIA.

Senator Huddleston. I think there's a legitimate concern and that exploiting people who legitimately want to be United States citizens.

I also believe that, particularly anyone from the Soviet Union over here trying to become an American citizen, it's going to pretty well diminish his chances if he does go back to the Soviet Union that he's going to be taken into the confidence of very many people over there.

Mr. Kirbow. This is not an uncommon practice for the United States. We've been doing it in the United States military for generations in giving earlier consideration for citizenship if he serves on active duty as an alien in the United States armed forces.

It's been done as long as I can remember and I was in the military over 25 years.

Mr. Maxwell. I think the only question is if we m[illegible] recommend against this practice if we don't even know --

Senator Huddleston. It bothers me that we would indict the Agency with such scant evidence we have.

Mr. Aaron. My recommendation is that we get the Agency on record as to whether this is the practice or not.

Mr. Kirbow. I recommend it be dropped from this if we had only one witness and we've not heard the Agency or that we develop a record to support both that and the same part of that first paragraph, which I don't think we have a record on either.

Mr. Aaron. We do have a record on that. It's an interview record, it's not a sworn testimony record. But the first sentence, there is an interview to support that.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, I think the subcommittee then should carefully consider whether or not it is concerned about the use of American companies in the pursuit of foreign intelligence and if so, how this impacts on anybody's rights or otherwise.

TOP SECRET

We just went through this the other day with the labor unions. The whole paragraph.

Senator Huddleston. I have some concern with that too. When we talk about expressly prohibiting penetration of American companies, it seems to me that the question is whether or not we're penetrating those companies with company executives being unwitting or whether --

Mr. Aaron. That's the point.

Senator Huddleston. It seems to me the real problem is when we were doing it secretly.

Mr. Aaron. And that's the point.

Senator Huddleston. The company ought to have the right to make a determination as to whether or not its interest would be severely jeopardized if this were to happen.

Mr. Treverton. I think this language probably isn't clear enough. If we did human penetration without the knowledge of the company on the operation of the company primarily --

Mr. Kirbow. We're talking about a corporate operation against a U.S. company in the United States?

Mr. Treverton. Presumably it would not be in the U.S.

Mr. Kirbow. If that's what's intended, it does not convey it to even an informed reader.

Senator Huddleston. Well, we say foreign intelligence collection.

Mr. diGenova. May I ask in this regard, it ends up by saying, although according to CIA officials such activity has not taken place -- what's the other evidence that it has which created the sentence?

End 2A, b 2B

Mr. Aaron. In looking at what the foreign resources division does in the way of penetration of businesses as opposed to collecting agents on campuses or in some other walk of life, we found that the FRD actually runs agents in only a few cases.

The cases are Americans employed by local industries in the United States or consulates.

In other words, in diplomat consulate establishments in which there are few cases in which indeed the Americans working for those diplomatic establishments are agents of the CIA through the foreign resources division, and the Americans are not officers of the CIA but they were agents of the CIA in that respect.

Mr. Kirbow. They work in the embassies as you say?

Mr. Aaron. Yes, here in the United States, and this is talking about domestic impact. This is not the foreign situation.

There has been at least one case and I belive there are two but only one I can specify, in which the FRD had an American agent in a foreign company, a foreign-based company. It was very unambiguous that the company was a foreign company because in effect it was a public company of a country whose most business enterprises are owned by the government. But it's a company and it's business and it was a foreign company and the question was, and it related to --

Mr. Kirbow. And this agent was apparently here in the United States?

Mr. Aaron. Collecting intelligence on the activities of that company because that company had foreign policy implications for us.

The next question that was put to, I believe, the chief of the FRD was do you have any regulations that prohibited you from doing the same thing with an American company? And the answer was no, we don't, although we don't do that or we haven't done that or something to that effect.

That is essentially the story and how it came to pass.

Mr. Maxwell. There's some question on both of these whether there are ways of saying things that are important as recommendations without implying that A, these had gone on and B, that we have a record to support that.

There's also, I guess, a slight question in my mind as to the order of magnitude of the recommendations that flow from this in the promulgation of a specific directive.

That's slightly out of synch with the order of some of the other recommendations. The Committee might want to choose to drop that to a footnote or to do it in some other way.

Mr. Aaron. The recommendation that relates to that is where?

Mr. Maxwell. I thought that we had made a finding. It was number 25 on 39. That's a somewhat different order.

Mr. Aaron. Do I take it that --

Senator Huddleston. Is this penetration always in the context that it's unwitting?

Mr. Aaron. Yes. If it's witting, it's really collaborati which is another matter.

Senator Huddleston. So although you could be witting --

Mr. Aaron. Well. the penetrating also applies and maybe we should also make this clear, but for the purposes of conducting some operation with regard to the organization, whether to make it do something in the covert action sense which collect information on it.

If it were simply unwitting cover, that's a different thing.

Mr. Maxwell. I don't think, David, that penetration was used in a context in the agency in the MH/BOUND --

Mr. diGenova. Penetration was for security purposes. It's to discover whether or not there is in fact a fly in the ointment with regard to the security of an American company.

That's the way it was used in MH/BOUND.

Senator Huddleston. That's putting a spy in the organization.

Mr. diGenova. Well, yes. In this case they penetrated Burbank, California and other companies, mostly defense contractors building planes in order to find out they had security risks, a laborer or an executive inside.

Mr. Maxwell. It was witting to a certain extent.

Mr. Bader. I think one of the problems we have here is this question of whether in our formal recommendations that we should enjoin the agency from doing things that they don't do. And where there's no evidence they have any intention --

Mr. Kirbow. The '47 Act prohibits this kind of conduct within the United States.

Mr. Bader. And I think that that should be carefully considered. We have no evidence that the Central Intelligence Agency penetrates Congressional staff, but we have not put it in as a recommendation that they should not penetrate Congressional staffs.

I think the other matter that has been raised about the operational exploitation of recruiting individuals who are in an immigrant status and seeking a change a change in status, we do at least have what I hold to be a responsible source saying that this practice, he has seen this in practice.

I think we should separate the two issues and on the second one it seems to me that if we could frame some language that is language of caution and concern, or we should move very quickly, it seems to me, to take some testimony from the Agency on that matter before we can talk about the matter of the practice of recruiting because I don't think we can use the word practice until such time as we have --

Mr. diGenova. I didn't mean to impugn the integrity of your source.

The question is if the Committee gets asked a question about it later on and someone comes back and reviews these records and sees one person was spoken to or something. I don't really think that's much of a record to go around making findings and conclusions in a final report.

It has nothing to do with the integrity of the man from whom the information came. He's probably right.

Mr. Aaron. I'd like to recommend that on that particular point we tried to nail down with the Agency a little more carefully what the current policy or practice is and on the question -- but I still stand with the view, I might say, on the second one of expressing concern if indeed there is a practice and we do know that some of it has taken place in the past, if there's still no guard against it, then I think perhaps Senator Hart's recommendation about how the oversight committee should pursue this question further would be sufficient.

Senator Huddleston. Well, paragraph 22 over on 39, if applied to the FBD, would be a pretty good approach, I think.

Mr. Aaron. That would not necessarily rule out -- it would not step up to this question. This really is aimed abroad at the question of duplication with overt reporting by the military attaches or by the foreign service or whomever.

In other words, it's trying to establish a standard.

Senator Huddleston. Okay, so where are we?

Mr. Aaron. I think we're at the following point that as far as the bracketed sentence is concerned, we'll go back to the Agency and establish what the practice is when review is necessary of including the paragraph along the lines suggested by Senator Hart saying the oversight committee should look into this particular practice if indeed it is a practice with the absence of policy on this point.

As to the question of American companies, I think I still need to be directed as to how to deal with that. I think when in doubt, delete.

Senator Hart. Can we just commend them for that? Can we say it's a good practice?

Mr. Aaron. Well, the Committee notes that it's been the practice not to do this and that that should continue as a part of their standard procedures.

Senator Mathias. Have we ever commended them?

Mr. Bader. There is much text here which talks about sensible, responsible practices.

Senator Mathias. I do think you should mention that we're talking about their domestic operations of American companies.

Mr. Aaron. Yes. FRD is supposed to tell you that but it doesn't .

Senator Mathias. I think on page 36 and 39 it ought to refer to domestic operations.

Mr. Kirbow. I think we might want to consider too that there's an extensive section of the domestic activities of the CIA coming into the domestic task force report, the subcommittee's report. And if don't put in a comment like this, it'll probably ' all go in that other section. Whereas here we're dealing with an apparent possibility that sometime in the remote future there could be an abuse and there dealing with the abuse section and this kind of departs from what you've done otherwise.

Mr. Bader. I would say on that score that this is a foreign intelligence matter. That is the objective. And I think if it's going to be mentioned, it should be mentioned here.

Mr. Kirbow. It is on the immigrants, but I don't think whether or not you're penetrating an American company to illegally or anything else, if there's any way you can get around the 1947 Act which prohibits that kind of activity by the CIA in the United States for whatever purpose, to penetrate them other than security of your own facility.

Mr. Maxwell. One thing that might make this easier is I think that if weexpressed any concern in that direction exists in regard to this practice, we would get one promulgated quite quickly.

Mr. Aaron. I would recommend that we accept the suggestion that we put this in a positive sense and proceed on that basis and clarify the word penetrate and the fact that it is the domestic aspect.

Mr. Kirbow. Could we ask the Agency to comment in some way so that at least we don't recommend to you that you --

Mr. Aaron. I'd be happy to do that again.

Senator Huddleston. Well, now it's 12:00. I hope there's some way we can get through this today, which would include of course a night session which Senator Mathias and I are available for.

We've done 38 pages out of 160.

Mr. Aaron. I think it will give focus essentially on the recommendations and the bracketed portions that that should prove possible to at least break the back of it.

Senator Huddleston. We can at least try.

Mr. Aaron. If we come back at 2:00, I think we could probably have cleared away a couple of the other sections and then we will be really ready. We will have the full book here and we can go at it.

Senator Mathias. 2:00, I think, would be better for me. Let's say 2:00.

Senator Huddleston. We'll adjourn until 2:00.

(Whereupon, at 12:00 o'clock noon, the hearing in the above-mentioned matter was recessed, to reconvene at 2:00 o'clock of the same day.)

AFTERNOON SESSION (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. BAder. Mr. Chairman, before you begin I might mention that tomorrow morning at either 9 or 10:00, depending upon whether this subcommittee meets tomorrow morning, we've arranged for representatives of the FRD, the Foreign REsources Division of the Central Intelligence Agency, to give us testimony on some of these issues that have been raised, such as the use of immigrants, some of the figures that they've given us, and this question of penetration of American businesses.

That will be scheduled, as I say, at either 9 or 10:00 depending on whether the subcommittee meets tomorrow morning.

We would like to have a Senator swear those witnesses and then obviously any Senator who would like to attend is invited.

Senator Huddleston. My thinking now is that we would meet probably at 10:00.

Mr. Bader. We could certainly do it in an hour's time.

Senator Huddleston. I would like to attend that session.

Mr. Bader. So we'll start at 9:00 promptly.

Senator Huddleston. Senator Mathias had the suggestion that in view of the fact that there is specific legislation relating to that subject and that's in the Immigration Act --

Mr. Bader. I've asked them to be prepared to speak to their interpretation of the provisions and restrictions in the Immigration Act.

Senator Huddleston. But our recommendation is that we would review the act and the practices.

Mr. Bader. If we have this room, as I hope we do, we would take the testimony right here and if need be, move it to another room.

Senator Mathias. In the event that I should not be able to be here, and I hope I will, I think we ought to look at this thing pretty closely.

As Senator Huddleston said earlier, you don't recruit these people just out of the blue unless there's some reason for them to sign up, and I don't think we want to be too critical of recruiting procedures; to revert to the phrase that we used yesterday, these are consenting adults.

I think what we have to look at is the degree of coercion which is implied here, the kind of bind that you get these people in where they really are perhaps totally alienated from wherever they came from, and what sort of a crack do you put them in and that not only goes to the humanitarian aspect of it but to questions over liability and the rest.

Senator Huddleston. I think they could be very helpful to us.

Mr. Bader. Senator, I could also try to adjust the time, Senator Mathias. It could be before or after our afternoon meeting, if that would be more in your reach.

Senator Mathias. Well, I haven't gotten my walking papers for the morning yet.

Mr. Inderfurth. It's interesting in this respect to th about Lee Harvey Oswald, about his being over there, and we're talking about immigrants coming here and defectors and so on.

Senator Mathias. It's the other side of the coin.

Senator Huddleston. There's a question of how many doors we ought to close.

Senator Mathias. Mr. Chairman, I regret to raise a further complication. There's a meeting that I had for 6:00 that's now been postponed to 6:30. So it would probably mean I can't get here until 7:30.

Senator Huddleston. Maybe 7:30 would be a better time; I don't know. These people need to get out and get some fresh air too, I would expect.

Before we get into the substance here, I understand that our new mandate is if possible to complete ours no later than Friday. So we're going to try to shoot for tomorrow.

What the Chairman would like to do would be for us to have our report in some kind of form that we can give to the Full Committee by Friday so that they can review it over the weekend and the Full Committee can start on it on Monday.

Now how do you think you would stand on that proposition?

Mr. Bader. This is the principle findings, conclusions and recommendations?

Senator Huddleston. Yes, which would mean that whatever changes we are making here in phraseology and so forth should be incorporated and retyped.

We have that problem.

Mr. Aaron. I would think that that's do-able. I mean it remains to be seen how extensively you would want to debate some issues and the extent to which you will simply want to bracket them or identify them and have the principal discussion take place in the Full Committee.

But I would think that that's feasible.

Senator Huddleston. To delay it past Friday, of course, would delay the time that the Full Committee could consider it because they need to have it in their hands at least one day. It might go fast in the Full Committee. I have no way of knowing.

Mr. Kirbow. Bill, because you and I both know Senator Mathias's previous intentions stated in the letter to the Chairman, was there somewhere a discussion about releasing this piecemeal ahead of time that might, that should go on the record here?

Mr. Miller. If it's agreeable to the Subcommittee to get it done by the weekend, he proposes that they take up in Full Committee the findings and recommendations of the foreign group.

The domestic group is much further behind, so they would not take it up until about the 24th.

The question of whether to release any information or any report that may be decided by the Committee --

Senator Huddleston. We'll let the Full Committee decide that when they get the report.

Now where are we then on the report part?

Mr. Aaron. We have, we're in an extensive program of trying to get the Agency's views as to what information is sources and methods and what is classified for other reasons and what have you.

We have, I believe, all but four papers have been read by the Agency in one form or another and are in the process of going out there. The four that are not are the Congression oversight and the CIA budget paper, although the budget section of the defense report, which is the substance of that has been discussed at great length with the Defense Department and they are happy with it except -- well, happy with it may be an exaggeration but they have no problems with it except for the numbers and the Committee itself will have to step up to the question of whether the large number or any subsets of numbers will be released.

The internal oversight, the Office of General Counsel and Inspector General has not been.

Is that right?

Mr. Maxwell. That's right. No material that was used there was derived from classified material.

Mr. Aaron. So that shouldn't be a problem. The general papers on covert action and espionage have not been given to them. They are just being completed by the staff essentially. All the others, and the chemical and biological one has not been shared with them.

Now beyond that all the others, I believe, have now gone out to the Agency in one form or another. The only one that seems to be approved, or at least we've gotten the go-ahead on, is the Department of State's paper and the Department requested one deletion, which we are prepared to make.

Senator Huddleston. All right, then. As I understand it, the Chairman, if we are able to get ours to him so the Full Committee can begin on findings and recommendations on Monday or Tuesday, even. his hope is that during the course of the next week the Full Committee will finish that.

In the meantime, of course, we can still be working on these reports looking toward, hopefully, if we could have those by the end of next week, too, then the Full Committee would be in a position of at least having the material available to them if we decided to release everything at one time or if we needed a few more days to refine the reports themselves.

That's about as much as we can hope for.

Mr. Aaron. Okay. I think that to be realistic about the longer material, it is a lot longer and I think to be at all proud of the material we will want to be sure that we have gone through it.

So therefore I think the end of next week is probably not realistic of having it in shape for the Full Committee to bless it.

On the other hand, I think that before the end of the month it would be possible to have a product, unless we run into some enormous snag.

Senator Mathias. But that does not contemplate the executive review.

Mr. Aaron. No, I'm sorry, that is including executive review.

Mr. Miller. But it does not contemplate printing.

Mr. Aaron. That's correct.

Mr. diGenova. Yesterday, Mr. Bolton indicated to me when I was there that there was no way that they could complete sources and methods review by the 15th of March, and I said I didn't see how they could either, since they had just really begun having access a week or so ago or whatever it was. And they seem to think that the end of the month is probably, considering the rewrites and a chance to look at the rewrites--

Senator Mathias. I have been independently advised of the same thing, that the end of the month is maybe a little optimistic.

Mr. Miller. Senator Church just talked to Director Bush and I talked to Mitch Rogovin just prior and worked out an arrangement on the question of clearances of sensitive material and the Chairman told Mr. Bush that he will take whatever time is required, he asked for expeditious effort on their part. Mr. Bush said that he would urge his troops onward, and he recognized that there had been snags and difficulties. The Chairman said that he was not going to press beyond the capability of either side. He wants to do the proper job and whatever time is required.

He said that he hoped that we could cooperate and work it out so that we could finish by the end of the month. And Mr. Bush said that he would make every effort to do that.

So that seems amicable between the Chairman and the Director.

Then the question arose about the deadline on the 15th and the Chairman is going to ask that this deadline be set aside because of the problems of not being able to finish security and those other matters.

So he is taking steps to do that now.

Senator Huddleston. But I think it's still encumbent on us to make a special effort to move as fast as we can, and we plan to go ahead tonight.

Okay, now we get back.

Mr. Aaron. We're on page 37 and the procedure we're trying to follow to expedite things is to look particularly at the recommendations and at the bracketed language.

Now recommendation 20 --

Senator Huddleston. Before we get to 20, there's a problem in wording. "The last paragraph before 20, the Committee also found that there's no established inter-Agency mechanisms for establishing the bona fides of defectors." You've used established twice there.

Mr. Aaron. I think we can take the first one out.

Ms. Culbreth. We might say, David, that the staff hopes to take a real editorial shot at this before it gets published, anyway, and maybe even before it gets to everybody next week, and we would hope that we can get a lot of these things.

But certainly, any that you see that you want us to be sure that we get to, point out.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, on that particular thing, at the staff level I had bracketed that entire paragraph because I'm not sure what we're trying to accomplish by what you say there.

This is probably the most difficult task that faces a counter-intelligence organization any place in the world is to establish whether or not a defector that you have just picked up is a double agent or not.

I listened to the man who has done this all his adult life at the Agency, Mr. Angleton, and he never made it clear just how you ever are sure that you have a bona fide.

And then his follow-on said basically the same thing. What do we intend to do with this finding? Do we intend then to legislate something? What are we going to do with it?

Mr. Aaron. The finding goes to the recommendation later that there be essentially for other purposes. But a subcommittee of the National Security Council on the subject of counter-intelligence which would look at other matters and we will get to that in a moment, but among its tasks is that it would be a forum in which differences of opinion as to the bona fides of a defector could be discussed and potentially reconciled.

Mr. Angleton testified and spoke at length in other forums with us about the fact that when -- that at present there really is no way that there's a difference between the FBI and CIA as to the bona fides of a defector and there's no way for the government to come to a decision about it.

And this really makes that point and leads to the further point that we believe there ought to be some mechanism whereby some decision can be reached. Now people may still have reservations, as they do about this particular individual we refer to here. But in the end one has to make a decision and simply keeping him in a jail some place is probably not a useful way to proceed, and in fact, this is the kind of recommendation that comes from Mr. Angleton and seems to be supported by other people, even his successor at the Agency.

Mr. Kirbow. Do we have any place in our findings that discusses the so-called, this single case of some sort here? Is there some evidence?

Mr. Aaron. Yes.

Mr. Kirbow. It's going to be in the report when somebody else reads this? They'll be able to go some place else and see what you're talking about?

Mr. Aaron. That's correct. It will be in, I believe it's in the paper on counter-intelligence. It's also addressed in the Rockefeller Commission report.

Now as the first recommendation, I think that we have agreed at the staff level to take out the brackets and put a footnote which would make it clear that while the primary mission of the CIA would be to collect denied or protected foreign intelligence information, that this would not, you know, that at the same time the Agency could be directed to perform such other collection tasks as directed by the NSC.

In other words, the point is that certainly they do some overt collection. For example, foreign broadcast information service is done by them as a service and so forth. But at the same time the point of giving the CIA a charter is to give it a charter for its primary mission and as set forth NSCID 5, for example, that mission is to conduct espionage.

Senator Mathias. What about the role of statistical analysis? That kind of analysis that can be deduced from [illegible] study of voluminous quantity of economic information much of which is public?

I'll go back to the ball bearings, the ball bearing factory.

Mr. Aaron. Well, this goes to the point really of the organization of this section. There's a separate section on the production of intelligence which would authorize the CIA to produce national intelligence. That kind of thing. The Central Intelligence Agency as the producer of national intelligence must be the recipient of all intelligence flowing into our overall national intelligence effort, and that intelligence includes overt intelligence as collected from the Treasury Department, from Commerce, from Labor attaches abroad, the full scope of information collecting, most of which is not secret or clandestine and is available to the CIA and it would be their job to compile it.

And that does not exclude other functions. For example, the analytical function is not mentioned here. This is simply to give it the collection function and that is because the paper is simply organized in that fashion. It doesn't try to step up to the whole charter, every aspect of it. We just try to break it down.

Mr. Maxwell. Should there be a kind of overt foreign intelligence which the NSC with the mechanism for allocating priorities within the intelligence community should be done by the CIA?

It could under the formulation now do that.

Mr. Aaron. That's why for example there's one thing that they do that's overt. Even their clandestine people abroad do an overt collection job and that is biographic information and that, while it was once in the State Department, was transferred to the CIA because they have a lot of clandestine biographic information and as a matter of centralizing and efficiency the decision was made to move it over there.

That kind of thing would not be precluded and would still exist.

Now it goes on to state that in doing this we would also recommend authorizing the CIA to carry out the recruitment of agents within the United States for this purpose. And it goes further to say that there would be an annual review of this activity by the Senate oversight committee and by the counter-intelligence committee which we proposed be established and has been agreed here as a recommendation of the National Security Council.

Now the further sentence that is in brackets calls upon the Attorney General to certify to the President and to the oversight committee that these actions are being taken in a manner that does not violate the Constitutional rights of American citizens or any other provision of law.

Trying to keep track of the domestic intelligence recommendations is a little bit like painting a moving train, but this tends to coincide with their recommendation, and the purpose of this is obviously to place a little tighter restriction and more authority in the hands of the Attorney General to ensure that these domestic espionage-related actions that are conducted on a covert or clandestine basis are in fact not infringing on Constitutional rights or attempting to break the law in any way.

Mr. Kirbow. You're really talking about recruitments now. You're not talking about other clandestine and covert activities and operations?

Mr. Aaron. That's correct. It's not, for example, if you were to establish a base in Florida for the purposes of harassing Cuban shipping. That would not come up here.

Mr. Kirbow. And the bracketed information, Mr. Chairman, was that I didn't feel at the time we considered this and I asked that it be bracketed, that the Attorney General who is never going to operate in this area alone, he is not going to make these decisions without staff support of some description, and if he's going to do that with people in the Department of Justice, which is where he gets the staff, the concern of the people in the Agency about broadening even within their own agency those people that know about the agent procurements and where they are and whom they are is of vital concern. It's probably one of the most carefully guarded secrets. Even to the extent that Mr. Colby testified before this Committee under oath, he said, I don't want to know the names of the agents because someone may want to decide some day to wrassle it out of me.

I don't know what the Attorney General certifying here does for you if on the same subcommittee you have the DCI, who is the President's principal man, you have the secretaries of state and all these other people apparently at the beck and call in intelligence matters to put the Attorney General and his staff into the agent procurement business.

Senator Hart. Not in the agent procurement business.

Mr. Kirbow. I mean with knowledge of agent procurement.

Senator Hart. Well, the Attorney General is in the business of upholding and defending the laws of this country and he can't do that if he doesn't know when one of the agencies of the Federal government might be breaking them.

It's a chicken and egg situation.

Mr. Kirbow. You think he should approve the policies or the actual procurement of the agent.

Senator Hart. The procedures. Nothing in here. I mean we have argued this thing for 13 months, there's nothing here that requires the Agency to turn over names of their sources or anything like that.

The Attorney General doesn't need to know the names even more than Bill Colby does. or less. Just to find out that the procedures of violating the laws of this country, that's all.

Ms. Culbreth. Could I raise another point, Mr. Chairman?

It seems to me that one of the concerns that you have with having the Attorney General certify in this specific case to the President and also to the oversight committee is a consistent problem that I think runs throughout our recommendations.

On the one hand, we are describing for accountability within the Executive Branch of the proper people, and on the other hand we are afraid that if we make him accountable, we're giving him so much power that they are going to disregard the Constitutional obligations.

In this specific situation, for example, we've already got the Attorney General being involved with the oversight responsibilities. When he takes office he already has the obligation to see that all the laws and activities of agencies are carried out as they're supposed to be.

And in addition to that, we are proposing in another part of our recommendations that the general counsel and the inspector general of the CIA be subject to Senate confirmation so that there are lots of other kinds of checks, and I would just hope that as the Senators consider additional proposals like this, that we don't get to the point that the Congress is hamstringing them inside the agencies on how they carry out the responsibilities.

Each one of these standing by itself may look like, well, this is a good idea and we should have this additional certification or this addition chain of reporting and making sure you get it authorized.

But I have a fear after having looked through a good bit of this, that we are getting too many layers in there, and I would just urge a caution if there are situations where we maybe have it pretty well covered until we get some opportunity to see how this new set-up is going to work, whether we're going to have the kind of abuses we had before. Maybe we don't need each of these details of Congress going down into the agencies and saying how they go about their day to day business.

Mr. diGenova. Mr. Chairman, I would add in that regard that with regard to the specific recommendation, this is not going down into the Agency. This is talking about the Attorney General who is the head of an agency, first of all, and the history has shown that other Attorneys General who took the same oath that this man did didn't do their jobs and one of the reasons was that they didn't know about certain things.

And the purpose of this provision is to make them aware of what is going on, to make legal judgements and to advise the President about the legality of procedures attending the recruitment of agents and other activities within the confines of the United States.

The provision for confirming the inspector general and general counsel is a wholly unrelated thing to this although it doesn't go to the problem of reaching down into the Agency.

I don't see how that does that because he's going to be dealing with the DCI.

Senator Huddleston. Contrary to many of the things that we do, we provide ways to correct abuses once they've happened and it seems to me this is a principal way of trying to avoid abuses to start with.

If I were on the oversight committee I would certainly, and if were getting the information that we contemplate the committee would get, then that is we would know about these things

TOP SECRET

I would certainly want to know whether or not the chief law enforcement officer of the country thought they were legal or illegal, or if there was a question about it.

Senator Mathias. I have a real question if I were Attorney General whether I would sign what we would call for here.

Senator Huddleston. The certification bothers me a little bit.

Senator Mathias. How could I as Attorney General say that I certify that all the actions in this area do not violate Constitutional rights of American citizens or any other provision of law?

I have worked in a state law department and had to sign some certifications much simpler than this, and I agonized over them. And this is so far beyond the personal knowledge of the Attorney General for him to make any kind of certification, I think we should get him involved but I question whether it should be a certifying.

Senator Huddleston. What's the step just under actually certifying?

He could review. He could certainly raise a red flag. His oath would require that he do something.

Senator Mathias. If you force him to certify, I think you're going to get such a wishy-washy thing that to his knowledge and he was not advised to the contrary and stuff like that.

Mr. Aaron. I think that's a fair point. The question, I guess, the case at which the certification would run most would add to what already is in the sentence preceeding it which is review by the Committee which the Attorney General is to chair, would be the case in which the Attorney General is aware of a particular activity, is aware that it is illegal but just doesn't do anything about it on the theory that it is somebody else's business. And he doesn't really, he doesn't have an obligation in this category of matters to render a judgment and bring it to the attention of the President or the Congress.

Senator Mathias. Why don't we say this, that the Attorney General be required to advise the President and the oversight committee that he is familiar with the procedures established to accomplish this purpose and that he is not aware of any violation of the Constitution or other law in the execution of the action.

I think you can lay that kind of a burden on the Attorney General.

Mr. Aaron. Would it be possible to just make it sort of a reporting function in which he said, and this is in the same direction, the Attorney General will be required to advise the President and the oversight committee if he finds that these options are being taken in a manner that violates?

Senator Huddleston. Yes. First he must review them.

Mr. Aaron. And if he finds a violation, evidence of violation, then he must report to the President and the oversight committee. Just place the responsibility there.

Senator Huddleston. If in his opinion.

Senator Mathias. I wouldn't have any trouble with that.

Mr. Maxwell. I have one other point on that paragraph and that is it provides for annual review by the counter-intelligence committee of the National Security Council.

I had understood we were dealing with the recruitment of agents for the United States foreign intelligence purposes, and the question is whether the counter intelligence committee which was to focus on resolving issues involving the bona fides of defectors, issues between the FBI and CIA, would be the body which would have the appropriate knowledge in the positive intelligence value, or whether it should be assigned to a counter-intelligence function.

It's simply a question of where the responsibility should be allocated for reviewing those within the National Security Council structure, and I wasn't clear whether the counter-intelligence committee was the appropriate one.

Mr. Aaron. Well, on that point, the purpose of setting up the counter-intelligence committee is essentially to look at the domestic impact of our intelligence activities, the primary ones being in the counter intelligence field but also in the positive intelligence field.

In fact, the resolution of the bona fides problem is a much smaller aspect of those two problems but the existence of the committee with some knowledge of the problem of counter-intelligence makes it possible to have a forum at the National Security Council level to address it.

Mr. Kirbow. What abuse that has been brought up in the past either in the press or accusations about a committee is this aimed at?

Has there been abuses that we have documented or reported that indicate that this has violated the Constitutional rights of anybody, including these foreigners for this purpose?

We must be aiming this at something other than just kind of pulling it out of the air?

Mr. Aaron. I think it really comes more in the category of questionable practices and I wish I had the domestic fellow here but it's really a question of, for example, when you're in the process of trying to recruit foreign assets or even Americans to perform foreign intelligence missions where you may begin collecting information on Americans for the purposes of assessing whether they are helpful to you in approaching the particular person or whether they would be a good access agent or whether you might conduct some other kinds of surveillance. It's more of a safeguard, I think.

TOP SECRET

I don't think we're really necessarily closing the barn door to some enormous abuse.

Mr. Kirbow. I had never heard of one in that area.

Mr. Aaron. I think by and large the FRD's quite clear. In other words, when we went through the CHAOS and some of these other programs that were questionable, there were some cases in which some of the reporting that took place as a result of the foreign resources division got into the CHAOS net. But the foreign resources division managed to stay clear of in general and resisted in fact the effort on the part of the CHAOS team to go out and actively recruit in this area on a clandestine basis.

This is really sort of more in the category of A. insuring that that doesn't take place and B. giving them help that they can say no, giving them a place to go if pressures such as the Huston Plan type pressures are brought to bear.

Senator Huddleston. Well, there are several places in our report findings, several cases indicated in the testimony we've taken that the Attorney General ought to review and recommend.

And I'm wondering whether or not rather than just spotting it at these various places whether we couldn't make a general recommendation. We've already got the Attorney General on the Committee and that he review, if not all practices but at least whatever practices, the same language we were just talking abo for this paragraph, that he review and that he advise the President and the committee if in his opinion any of these practices violate the Constitutional rights of American citizens or any other laws.

Mr. Kirbow. I would feel much better about this since it hasn't been an apparent abuse but to see that go in the general recommendation that all of the activities of the intelligence community be reviewed by him or be examined in whatever way you think it should be done for that purpose.

But it would seem that it cuts then to a general preventive type mechanism instead of being here kind of put in against the FBI, which as we say apparently has been doing it properly all along and not in violation of the law.

We don't appear to be accusing them of it here although the language may not be quite so specific.

Mr. Aaron. I might just say that there is a further recommendation that involves the Attorney General on page 40, which is number 27 dealing with the same committee, a different aspect of it.

What this does is it elaborates with the recommendation number 17, which establishes the counter intelligence committee and it deals with the two sides of these activities. On the one hand it's going to review program for positive foreign intelligence collection, clandestine within the United States and on the other hand it's going to review the counter intelligenc programs of the CIA and FBI that are conducted inside the United States both from the standpoint of their legality.

Now I think it's possible to consolidate those recommendations so that we don't say it twice, and I also think it's possible to take out any implication that these programs were not necessarily conducted properly in the past.

But I would hate to sort of just have, and my personal feeling is that I would hate to have a general kind of thing that the Attorney General ought to do this because he ought to do this already. And what we're trying to do is make some recommendations that are more specifically targeted on the subject matter that we have reviewed and give him, in effect, specific charge.

Senator Huddleston. Well, we are giving him the specific charge of reviewing it, which apparently he didn't have before. Now before when something came to his attention he certainly had the responsibility to move on it if in his opinion it was contrary to Constitutional rights.

Mr. Aaron. So I see you're discussing the last sentence still, is that right, not the review point?

Mr. Kirbow. He rightfully assumes, as the common law does, that all government officials in an official position are performing their duties properly.

Senator Huddleston. We want to go beyond that, though. We want him to know what they're doing.

Mr. Kirbow. And when you say he should review it in kind of a general recommendation, then you talk about all of the intelligence functions having any possibility of affecting the laws of the United States.

I really would like to see that kind of requirement placed on the Attorney General as a general requirement instead of trying to just pick out little specifics unless we have an abuse connected with it.

Now in the domestic task force they have specific abuses and they make specific recommendations of corrective action, but that doesn't appear to be the case in either of these here, either the true covert operations --

Mr. Aaron. I might make a suggestion along those lines just in terms of simplifying some of this. It might be possible to take the first part of the review section here, follow it with the recommendation on the top of 27 saying the domestic counter-intelligence activities of the CIA would be subject to this review and then follow that with a third recommendation that the Attorney General would be required to advise the President and the oversight committee if he found any irregularities in either one of these programs.

Senator Mathias. I think that's more reasonable and it does what you want to do which is to force the Attorney General's attention to it.

Mr. Aaron. All right. Could we turn for a moment to number 27 because it has a bracketed portion that we might considerably do away with.

That's page 40.

The bracketed portion says that the NSC would approve all counter-intelligence activities of the CIA in the United States and it spells out a kind of procedure there.

Now the net effect of this kind of procedure really is to establish that the FBI is without question, I mean the practical effect is that the FBI is without question the counter-intelligence agency and you've got to get the President to approve anything that the CIA is going to do in this field. And that is really it inside the United States. That's the net effect of this paragraph.

Now my own personal view of this paragraph is that it's probably not necessary. We have the NSC committee. It is supposed to resolve the question of where the FBI lets off and the CIA begins and it is an NSC committe that can report to the President if they have a disagreement.

I'm not sure I feel strongly about it.

Mr. diGenova. I would only add that I spoke to John Elliff about this paragraph and he also feels that it's unnecessary to do this. He thinks that this consolidation would be bad, first of all, and it's unnecessary second of all.

Mr. Miller. Which consolidation?

Mr. diGenova. Aren't you talking about the consolidation?

Mr. Aaron. No, we're talking about the paragraph that just precedes it. I'm sorry, this is the bracketed portion. I'll read it out.

"The CIA should receive NSC approval of all counter-intelligence activities within the United States. This approval should be given by the President and be supported by the recommendation of the NSC counter-intelligence committee, Attorney General and the Director of the FBI. All such projects should be reported annually to the oversight committee."

Mr. Maxwell. I would move that we just strike that as unnecessary.

Senator Huddleston. That's a vote. We'll be right back.

(A brief recess was taken)

Senator Huddleston. Well, it's 3:30. Let's see if we can resolve anything.

Mr. Aaron. Now the next recommendation, which is number 21 goes to the establishment of a special committee of the Committee on Foreign Intelligence, which would review human intelligence collection problems.

This is an area where there has been some effort institutionally to try to get a handle on it but it is essentially split about as widely in the government as you can do it. You have a State Department that produces at least in volume the most material and according to CIA analysts most of that information, a large proportion of that is keyed to their report and yet obviously a great deal of clandestine collection is carried out by the CIA itself and the military services account for a significant amount of collection, some of which is extremely important in countries with military governments.

The issue then becomes whether there shouldn't be a particular mechanism to deal with it and the proposal here is to create a subcommittee of the CFI for that purpose, or a special committee of the CFI. And the reason for that is to put in the chair the Department of State or the Secretary of State's designee and representatives of the Secretary of State and it would e a committee essentially of the CIA, the Department of State and the Department of Defense trying to bring some focus into those programs and making some choices and so forth.

I might have Bill Bader speak to it. I think the recommendation originates with him.

Mr. Bader. This recommendation is part of two basic recommendations that deal with the question of human intelligence collection.

First is the question of the approval mechanism. As you'l see when we get into the latter part of the paper, one of these very strong recommendations that we have as the committee, or is being offered to the committee as a possible recommendation is that human collection projects would go to the operations advisory group for approval. That is, for operational approval.

As you know from our testimony these kinds of projects do not go to the 40 Committee type organizations where they deal with covert action projects.

So on the one hand we're hoping to deal with the question of operational approval. In this particular subcommittee we go to the question of overall management and direction of tasking, what should we be doing, what should the United States be doing in the human collection field? Where should we be in x number of years? What should the principal objectives of human collection be?

And in this way we hope to bring the diversity that now exists in the community from the CIA to the military services and bring it together under the chairmanship of the Secretary of State who would help provide this kind of overall direction and management guidance.

It is not an important elaboration of the committee on foreign intelligence. It should be there in any event because it's a management problem. This gives it focus, this gives the Secretary of State the chairmanship of a committee and I think properly so, that deals with this larger problem of whither human intelligence collection.

Mr. Maxwell. It's unclear here whether it's chaired by a representative of the Secretary of State and the DCI and Secretary of Defense are expected to attend or whether they're all supposed to be designees.

I don't know what the protocol is but is it likely that the Secretary of Defense would attend if it were a designee of the Secretary of State?

Mr. Miller. Sometimes, sure.

Mr. Bader. They certainly did on these other committees. But what would you propose?

Mr. diGenova. The language is a little unclear.

Mr. Bader. Perhaps it should say that the Secretary of State is chairman and he presumably then could designate whomever he pleased.

Mr. Kirbow. As a matter of practicality, if the Secretary of State doesn't show up and the Secretary of Defense is there, who's going to chair the meeting?

Mr. Aaron. As a matter of practicality if the Secretary of State doesn't show up, the Secretary of Defense won't be there.

Mr. Kirbow. And you digress down because he's never going to go to this kind of meeting where he takes up the day to day operations.

Aren't you really talking here, don't you leave the language so vague that you fail to imply that what you want is a review of the policies and not the day to day, we need one more agent in Amsterdam and two more in Brussels?

Mr. Aaron. That is not what we want to convey and so you are correct.

Mr. Kirbow. They should review the policies and goals and requirements, really.

Mr. diGenova. How about policy at the end of the first sentence?

Mr. Aaron. Human intelligence collection policy.

Senator Huddleston. And eliminate the part about size.

Mr. Bader. Review and make recommendations with regard to policies and priorities, and then there's a misprint here. We don't need American U.S. clandestine.

Mr. Kirbow. Down through the word, the two words, human collection before the last sentence, you get into kind of a great deal of detail about what they're supposed to consider, whereas if you said they should consider the policies of human intelligence, human collection and the trade-offs between covert and overt collection and the sorts of things you have brought to a committee a consideration of this problem which they have never taken before.

Mr. Bader. I think we could add the word policy here and policies and we will underline that.

Recommend the establishment of a special committee of the CFI to review all foreign human intelligence collection policies. It would review and make recommendations with regard to the priorities and policies of U.S. clandestine human collectio operations and choices between overt and clandestine human collection.

Mr. Kirbow. And Mr. Chairman, without going back and belaboring one of the other recommendations, I think that the staff should do that in each instance where we may have given a task to a committee to do a great deal more detail because even on this domestic counter intelligence activities my earlier recommendation was that by statute the policies governing domestic counter-intelligence should be considered.

You don't want them to consider the day to day operation I don't believe.

Mr. Aaron. But I do think that we shouldn't lose sight of the fact that we are interested particularly in the latter case and I think in this case that you're interested in the program.

I mean you just don't want to say it will be the policy of the U.S. to do some or it would be the policy -- I mean you really want to have an opportunity in a management sense to look at the overall program -- is the program achieving what it's supposed to achieve, is the scale of the program here as opposed to there in the right balance to reflect our priorities?

In other words, I think that --

Mr. Miller. It's not a rubber stamp, you're saying.

Mr. Aaron. That's right and it isn't just to deal with words on paper. It tries to get at the problem of what are the programs and are they doing their job?

Mr. diGenova. Who do they make the recommendations to? The CFI?

Mr. Aaron. Yes, or the President.

Mr. Maxwell. One remark in connection with --

Mr. diGenova. Let's make that clear. It just says make recommendations.

Mr. Maxwell. In Bill's fix, to specify, I think it was intended that it's all human intelligence collection abroad.

Mr. Aaron. Yes, that's right.

All right, perhaps we can go on to the next recommendation. Now this is bracketed. I think it might be better first before we take up the bracket let's take up what is not bracketed and just indicate that this is in effect hortatory, if you will. It urges the oversight committee to examine the question of clandestine collection to ensure that it's really focused on things that need clandestine collection that are of high priority, not only the highest, but certainly deserve that kind of risk and effort and areas in which clandestine collection are the only means available so as to emphasize something of the extraordinary nature of espionage.

Now beyond that there's the recommendation that the clandestine services like the military services and the foreign service, be subject to a manpower ceiling.

TOP SECRET

I think this would not suggest that that ceiling be a public figure but that the Congress establish a manpower ceiling for that, just as it has these other services that serve in the field of national security.

Now I know Charley has some reservations about that.

Mr. Kirbow. Yes. But to put it in the proper context and I didn't bring it up at that point, nor did Elliot, if you look at the bottom of page 32, we in our findings section discuss a point on the fact that we don't know whether the size of the clandestine service is the right size.

We also indicate that over the past decade the size has been reduced significantly, particularly in the field.

Then we come over here and recommend that there be a manpower ceiling for the clandestine services only of the CIA. Today there is a budget ceiling on the number of people in the CIA that is governed by the amount of money that they get and the amount of money that they put forward to support that kind complement.

I objected to kind of the dipping down process of going into a segment of an agency and limiting its manpower because if we had a crystal ball, we could do that very carefully and properly, I think. But I can't see into the future and two years from now we may need the largest clandestine service we've ever had because of the problems that would confront the nation and I think that since it is carefully controlled by the Congress through its budget levels and manpower levels, let's let the agency decide how many people it takes to run a segment of its own organization.

Mr. Inderfurth. A very special segment, though.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, special only because we have concerned ourselves with the abuse aspects of it under the assassination type thing. Of more concern to us should be the fact that the analytical section out there probably needs strengthening instead of worrying about regulating the size of the clandestine service.

Mr. Inderfurth. Well, that comes up later as well.

Mr. Kirbow. Do you think that size in any way contributed to the plot against Castro or some of these other people?

Mr. Inderfurth. I think it has in covert action throughout Latin America.

Mr. Bader. Mr. Chairman, I would support Mr. Kirbow on this one.

My own view is unless you're going to go to the full extent of addressing the question of establishing manpower ceilings throughout the Central Intelligence Agency, to single out one directorate at this point doesn't really make much sense to me, though I understand the principle behind it.

End 3B. b 4A

Senator Huddleston. Well, I do too. I think we can make a flat statement that you could get too big, that there may be a point somewhere up there beyond which is a very dangerous situation. But I don't think we have determined that any specific size has yet been shown to be so detrimental and we could say that there ought to be a specific level.

I think the rest of that paragraph certainly ought to be continuously examined.

Mr. diGenova. The second part of that paragraph really assumes that that kind of review would go on and if necessary, the committee could make a recommendation at the appropriate time.

Mr. Aaron. It proposes that kind of a review. The purpose of having a manpower ceiling as it exists, as I say in other agencies where one could argue that you would have the same problem, the military might have an emergency next week which would require an enormous expansion of military services.

Now the point of it is to give really, simply to give or suggest that the oversight committee put in its arsenal of controls over the clandestine activities that the CIA, some handle on the clandestine services number because it makes a difference. I mean they could put their money elsewhere.

Senator Mathias. How about saying establish and annually adjust, or from time to time adjust?

Mr. Aaron. The point is not just to set a higher limit but rather to say, to have this tool, and even ask the Agency to tell us what that ceiling -- you know, they might well be under their authorized strength.

Mr. Inderfurth. Another alternative is to say should consider establishing a manpower ceiling.

Mr. Kirbow. Could I make the point that oversight of any agency necessarily entails looking at the number of people it has every year because you have to determine how much money they've got to support and they have to come tell you that.

If we're going to have an oversight committee that is one of the functions that it performs. We do it with our military services, but we don't tell them that we can't put them all over in, that they can't put all the Navy people in destroyers.

Senator Huddleston. That's right, but I don't think you can exactly equate clandestine operation with other types of agency operations.

I think there's a difference here in the potential impact. It's a secret operation.

Mr. Aaron. Should consider establishing?

Senator Huddleston. I think that it ought to follow the paragraph. Leave the paragraph as it was and say the committee should also consider the advisability of establishing a manpower ceiling.

Senator Mathias. Adjustable ceiling.

Mr. Kirbow. I don't really know what such a recommendation does for this committee to recommend to another committee that maybe they ought to do something, but I guess it's all right.

Mr. Aaron. I'm afraid we do that quite a bit.

Mr. Miller. We're just laying out the agenda.

Mr. Kirbow. Which is not binding on them.

Mr. Miller. In the Government Operations Committee one of the provisions of the bill, as you know, is an agenda, and many of the items that are in that agenda are subsumed in this.

Mr. Kirbow. Doesn't it go to the make-up of the individual divisions? Overall size of the intelligence community is the way they recommended it, and I think that's a reasonable approach.

Mr. Aaron. Turning to the question of the Agency itself, number 23, this again is not in the category of statutory proposals but in the category of urging the Agency to ensure that the skills of intelligence collection are the primary criteria for advancement within the clandestine services.

Senator Mathias. Versus management?

Mr. Aaron. Versus covert operations.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, on this one I can conceive of nothing that would do more harm to either side of this question than to say to a man who wants to devote his life and make a career in the clandestine service that you can't get promoted on being good at what you're supposed to be doing. You get promoted on being good at this other aspect of it, and think it's just totally out of keeping with what you want. If you want a good clandestine operation, you want the best you can find, and I think that he should get the same amount of credit for being good at whatever he's assigned to as being in this other intelligence business.

Mr. Aaron. The intelligence business, of course, is their primary mission.

Mr. Kirbow. Not if he's a clandestine operator. That's his primary business and he doesn't have any choice over whether or not he gets assigned when he goes in out there as a junior executive to the clandestine side of the day to day operation.

Senator Huddleston. What does this address?

Mr. Aaron. This addresses the problem of the clandestine service which goes to the several things. Primarily it collects intelligence. But it is in the nature of, or at least the past history of the Agency, which Bill can speak more directly to than I, that the covert operations people get the better advancement. It's in part built into the system in that you can measure the effect of the covert action operation easier than this endless effort to recruit a good agent many times which will fall through through no fault of the agent himself.

Furthermore, covert action operatives simply come to higher level attention easier than somebody who's a good agent handler but who is really operating off in a very secure and remote environment.

So in an effort to try to suggest that they make a real effort to compensate for what we have found in this area, this particular thing is designed to urge them to do their best to try to overcome that problem.

Now we wanted to put it in a way that was not pejorative and that did not exclude the advancement of good covert operators. If you want to keep covert operations, I agree with Charley, you have to have good ones and you've got to reward them.

I don't think that this particular recommendation which is to the Agency and not to statute does what perhaps Charley fears it would do. It simply urges that they give the proper weight to what for the clandestine services is their primary mission.

Mr. Bader. The problem of it is we're not after this really and perhaps it's a language problem. We're not trying to suggest here that the intelligence collectors in the career matters should be favored over the operator. What we were after really was that we have noticed over the years and in the record that the intelligence operator has tended to move along much faster.

What he has done, his projects are very quickly visible while intelligence collection can be something that runs over years and it's hard work in the trenches. And I think the

TOP SECRET

WARD & PAUL

Mr. Kirbow. I'm sorry. I don't believe that that's the case. What I'm really saying is this. Over the years from about 1947 on through the '60s, clandestine operations were a way of life in the CIA. Whether it is in favor today or not is probably on the side of no, it's not in favor at the CIA because there are only 165 versus some 500 or 600.

Senator Huddleston. I really don't see that as being relevant.

As I see this it's not a question of whether we like clandestine operations or not. It's seems to me the question is whether or not those individuals who serve are getting undue preferential treatment and advancement within the Agency.

TOP SECRET

WARD & PAUL

Is that what we're trying to get to here?

Mr. Kirbow. They say it's within the clandestine services, that the covert operator gets more advancement within the clandestine services side of the house than the other people, and I don't think our record supports that.

It may be that you have found more of the directors being from the covert side of the house but that is not what the attack is here.

Senator Huddleston. Can't we say that within the clandestine services our inquiry indicates that those in the covert section have advanced in great r numbers more rapidly?

Mr. Bader. Yes. I think the record is clear on that within the clandestine services.

Senator Huddleston. And the Committee believes that the Agency ought to ensure that all employees, whatever side, be given the opportunity based on their actual skills.

Mr. Aaron. That's the thrust of what we're trying to express here.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, I would like to reserve for Senator Tower on this one because I don't think the record of the Committee supports that.

Mr. diGenova. How about if we said this - the Central Intelligence should ensure that the skills of intelligence collection are given equal consideration as a criterion for advancement within the clandestine services.

TOP SECRET

WARD & PAUL

Ms. Culbreth. Then you get back in to what we struck out from the original, which was as opposed to covert action operations. We deleted that from the earlier thing to try to avoid --

Mr. diGenova. I'm trying to just paraphrase what the Senator just said, what they said was the thrust, which was that intelligence collection capabilities are put on an equal footing with operations.

Mr. Aaron. What I think is a better way to put the point, and it's along that same line, might be to simply say, to urge that the Agency ensure that the skills of intelligence collection are given importance in advancement within the clandestine services of that mission for the clandestine services, if you will.

In other words, the great bulk of the people in the clandestine services, as Charley pointed out, are in fact intelligence collectors. They are case officers for trying to acquire information, and I think that what we're trying to arrive at here is that it should be given an importance, that this skill should be given an importance and significance in proportion to the significance that the Agency accords to that particular task.

Senator Mathias. What skill are we trying to get at here? Are we getting at the fact that you get some stars who, becaus of their clandestine skills sop up all the available promotions, most of them, that they get ahead and I think that that is a problem. You see it in the armed services all the time. I remember Commander Buckley who, because he was a big PT boat man, and he just happened to be called on to take MacArthur off Corrigedor, ended up an Admiral, and I won't comment further.

Now I think there is such a human response to courage and daring and unusual skill that it's going to be very hard to deflect that from having its natural outlet in recognition.

Mr. Aaron. As I say, a lot of the problem is in the nature of things and the recommendation goes to an effort to put us on record as trying to compensate for what I think you rightly say.

Covert action draws attention to the operator. Clandestine collection, you do not draw attention to yourself.

Mr. Kirbow. There is a more basic problem to this at the Agency. I did spend some considerable time in this business. The excellent people, the people who turn out to be excellent in the Agency and get the quick promotions are not necessarily promoted because they are covert operators alone.

Most of the very fine people that they have, or that they had in the early years wanted to be in that business because that's what being a spy was, and they will end up with a majority of the good people.

Why shouldn't they be promoted? That's exactly the decision.

Senator Huddleston. Well, there are too many elements here involved in who ought to be promoted. There are too many human elements and somebody has to make a decision.

I just don't know how we can advise them on that. I think I would strike that. I would favor taking it out.

Mr. Aaron. Okay. Number 24 goes to the question of the relationship between the domestic contact division and the directorate of operations, or what is otherwise known as the clandestine services.

In 1972, I believe it was, when Mr. Schlesinger went to the CIA, this directorate whose primary responsibility is for collecting overt intelligence but which has a support function for the clandestine collection or the clandestine recruitment of agents within the United States was then moved into the directorate of operations.

The Committee's own hearings and testimony on the subject indicated that a reasonably large portion of their activity and their contacts are used for the initial stages of trying to spot, assess, and get people close to foreign intelligence agent recruitment targets.

Now there are, one concern about that is that unlike the foreign resources division whose mission is clearly clandestin the domestic contact division approaches their people on an open basis, it says, [illegible] I'm not a spy. I'm not doing any saying. I am an overt open person. I belong to the CIA. I would like you to tell me about your travels or advise us on some subject or what have you on an open basis, and that this relationship is completely above board in every way.

And you don't have to worry that this relationship is going to be used for any covert purpose.

However, it turns out that some of those relationships are or do or are brought to evolve into support for clandestine activities in which information is gathered on people who might be helpful in all the ways and I think we had a pretty good attendance at that session when this was discussed.

So the question comes down to this -- this blurring of the line between an organization as to whether its mission really is overt or not in every respect, should this be a concern to the Committee? And if it is of concern to the Committee, should we take some steps to try to reinforce its overt character and separate it out from the clandestine services where it is now located and where at least a few of the people in the DCD have expressed some concern that they will now become populated with real clandestine operators and that they will really sort of become another arm of that organization.

Now Bill Bader would like to talk to this point. It formerly was part of the directorate of intelligence which is the more overt arm of the Agency to begin with and collected that information.

TOP SECRET

In other governments this same function is done, for example, in Britain it's done by the board of trade because a lot of the information is technical, economic, or scientific in nature, which is also true for the DCD, as a matter of fact.

And so the question that is presented to the Committee is do we want to leave the DCD where it is in the Director of Clandestine Operations? Do we want to have the clandestine service, if you will, have a quasi-overt arm within the United States widely spread out throughout the United States? Would we want to confine the clandestine activities to the clandestine service and the overt activities to some overt organization, be that back in the directorate of intelligence in the Agency or moved out to the State Department or some other organization which does operate openly as a matter of course?

Mr. Inderfurth. What would that mean in terms of numbers? How large is the DCD?

Mr. Aaron. I believe it is about 150 or 200.

Mr. Bader. There are 38 offices.

Mr. Aaron. And they are about two or three man offices. A lot of the personnel in the DCD are in fact succunded from the military services or ERDA. You know there are different areas of the country that have different kinds, you know, or agriculture, for example, if they're interested in agricultural intelligence a lot of these people come out of agriculture. I mean it's a funny kind of mixture of people.

The CIA sort of does this in part as a service of common concern to the intelligence community and in part at least heretofore it does the overt collection function as a service to its own analysts.

This was particularly in the early days when we had less access to information in the denied areas of the world. It was a very rich source of information for us. It still is quite a good and important and economical source, and it's a good program. The question is how much it should be involved in clandestine support and if you want to find a way to encourage it, to, if you will, emphasize its overt mission over its covert mission or do you want to put it back into some overt side of the Agency or the government?

Mr. Maxwell. I have some very mixed feelings about this recommendation and the problem might be described better by looking at the flow of information from the end point.

The FRD now is involved in the recruitment of agents for foreign intelligence gathering within the United States. A number of times they need, and I think they have indicated to the Committee that they need some help in determining whether they should go to an individual and say, can you introduce me to this potential agent of influence in a country, can you introduce me to the student without that blowing up in their faces?

TOP SECRET

The question then is how can they be provided with the information that they need to allow them to make a recruitment that the Committee may find is valuable.

If it is from the DCD, it has all the problems that David articulated, and I appreciate those problems. The question the Committee has to face is where they are going to get that information, whether it should be for the DCD, whether it's located in DDO from the DCD, whether it's located in the DDI or from the DCD, or located in the State Department or under State Department control.

My own sense of that is that the decision that was made by Director Schlesinger in moving it from the DDI to the DDO did raise the potential of compromising the overt character, but it also made the liaison which we find important more efficient and easier to manage and potentially easier to control if both elements are under the same set of guidelines and regulations which would govern the DDO as a whole as to who may be approached, who may be used operationally.

If it's put in another directorate or outside, I think there's a difficulty in that kind of control and I think it's also, it obviously raises the question of whether the FRD was going to get the information that it needed for a valuable function of recruiting foreigners while they're in the United States.

I think the Committee can go any number of ways but I think that the end product has to be looked at in the recruitment of spies, and secondly you have to look at what kinds of assurances could be made in any branch of the government if overt collection is being done as to whether that information would be used by another branch of the government.

If DCD were entirely overt and a promise were made to Mr. Bader that this would never be used for an operational purpose or you would never be asked as a consenting adult to aid in an operational purpose, then the end production might well be that the FRD is going to be sending people out covertly within the United States to covertly obtain information to determine if they are going to make a covert approach to a foreign sov. and I think that I have real hesitation about, rather than the information being available from consenting individuals on an open basis.

Mr. Aaron. If I could add to that. I agree, I think the question is if you're going to allow the conduct of recruitments to take place and you're going to allow information to be collected on these people, somebody has to do it and so you're not going to avoid any of those questions by this.

The issue goes in part to whether the people who will initially begin developing that information will be people with every incentive to keep it within certain bounds or whether there will be incentives that work at cross purposes to that.

I think that [illegible] you have a situation in which the

TOP SECRET

DCD could legitimately have contact with academics and large numbers of people who otherwise, if our other recommendations in here are accepted and even some of the internal regulations of the CIA are written into law, people would be kind of off bounds for operational use.

Now the DCD, however, because it is overt, is allowed to deal with these people, and the question is, well, the incentives to be scrupulous in their activities, keeping them overt and not trying to use people sort of for operational support and so forth, the question is would those incentives be better outside the DDO or inside the DDO or would it make a difference.

The second point is, and this is a somewhat different point, the DCD is having an increasing problem, quite frankly, and we have had testimony from Mr. Nelson and others, he's having a problem because it is associated with the CIA.

Now people are reluctant to cooperate with them because of concern about being associated with the CIA. The fact that they actually do engage in operational support doesn't help that very much.

And so the question is if you really want the fullest exploitation of the foreign intelligence, open foreign intelligence potential of the American people who are willing to cooperate openly, shouldn't that be done by some organization which does not have this aura of clandestine activity?

associated with it?

That is somewhat separate but relevant.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, apparently they're not talking about doing it with any fewer people or any different people, but you're talking about calling it something else.

In discussing this with Mr. Nelson, under whom it comes now, and with Mr. Proctor, under whom it previously came, they do not distinguish any of the problems, that they are having any problems in maintaining contact with over 100,000 American citizens who are kind of returning travellers and that they are getting the type of information that these loyal citizens are willing to give to them.

These people advertize their address and probably put their telephone number in the public telephones in each of these 38 offices, and all you have to do is look it up and say that's a CIA function there.

It is probably as overt as anything they do except testify on the Hill, which has become very overt in the past year or two. But just to talk about moving it back into a place where they just moved it out of on the lack of some kind of record that is not working properly now or more properly there. I don't think we're in a position to decide that. To decide that you want to move it out of the CIA and into the Department of State. I think the record is totally void on that subject.

I just hate to see us recommend taking away from one place and putting it some place else without a record.

Senator Hart. Can't we recommend that we put it back in intelligence and the oversight committee consider that after it's created and so on.

Senator Huddleston. Why was it taken out of intelligence?

Mr. Bader. It was a question of consolidation of collection in one directorate.

End 4A, b. 4B

You see, while the domestic contract service was under the DDI, it was a collection service. It was in an analytical branch and Schlesinger, as I understand it, felt that it was the tidy thing to do to put all collectors under the same --

Senator Huddleston. Overt and covert?

Mr. Bader. Yes. And I think the issues here have been very well articulated.

I had very little to add to them. I think it is an issue. I have a personal concern that we have not taken the responsible officials at any length on the record on this question of the relative advantages or disadvantages.

My own personal view with some experience is that it seems to me it would make a great deal of sense for this function to be under the DDI to emphasize and underline its overtness and that the individuals who are in this particular service or office then would flow naturally from the analytical side and it would be very different kinds of people as they tended to be before 1971, 1972.

Senator Huddleston. Is there any chance that anybody would be denied the product of this investigation if we changed it?

Mr. Bader. One of the things we should bear in mind, Mr. Chairman, is that if you go down the road and talk about these various reforms or changes in the intelligence structure, that moving the DCI function and enhancing his powers and then perhaps eventually separating the Director of CIA from the DCI, that at this point it would seem logical for an overt collection side of an intelligence agency to be with the DCI.

But that is down the road as well and perhaps what we want to do with something like this is -- you don't understand that point?

Mr. Maxwell. No, I don't.

Mr. Kirbow. What he's really saying is that if you move all of this overt side out of the DCI, you leave the covert side out there without any of the support function, which this group furnishes to them.

Mr. Bader. Down the road when you have a DCI --

Mr. Maxwell. If you assume that the DCI is going to take the entire DDI --

Senator Huddleston. Could we have a situation where an agent might be both covert and overt?

Mr. Kirbow. These people out there are not agents. These are employees. And most of them, by the way, are former employees. They are retired CIA officers.

Senator Huddleston. They are not mixing the assignments?

Mr. Kirbow. No. They, for example. I don't mind putting this on the record.

We had a large international organization in the company I was with before I returned to the Senate. Before we departed we could get a briefing on the place where we were going to kind of safeguard against making defense mistakes, and when we came back, they came and had lunch with you and asked you to kind of reveal or when you were dealing with the director of whatever it was in Singapore, what was the situation? What was the atmosphere? What's going out there because you were in a business atmosphere and rubbed elbows and they came and met with you and did this. Or occasionally you would stop by the San Francisco office and you'd do this.

That's the business these people are in, principally. Isn't that correct?

Senator Huddleston. Mac, do you have any thoughts on this?

Senator Mathias. I don't think anyone has discussed option number 2 while I've been sitting here, and I haven't been sitting here consistently. But is there any value to cutting it out and sending it over to State?

Just to be the devil's advocate, one of the values that occurs to me is to bring the State Department in touch with reality.

Mr. Kirbow. Well you'll never get me to tell a member of the Department of State personal business that I was conductin for my company in Singapore because I don't think that it would be --

I'll put it personally. I don't think that I would have trusted them with the secrets of what my company's operations were versus an intelligence organization. Not an open organization like the Department of State.

Mr. Aaron. The information collected by the DCD is fully available to every agency of the government. It's not considered classified or secret or anything else.

Mr. Kirbow. They ask you a lot of questions.

Senator Hart. The principal argument, Mac, is that there's no record on this and for us just to haphazardly make this recommendation without our record --

The compromise I suggested was a recommended option 1 and that the new committee look at option 2 when it is in existence and has made a record.

Senator Huddleston. I'm inclined to go with option 1. I have a question, it says the Committee recommends the permanent oversight committee remove --

How is this going to work?

TOP SECRET

Mr. Aaron. I just think that in drafting the charter -- actually you can just say you recommend by statute or you could say that the Committee recommends that it be removed or moved back, and you can leave it to the DCI to do it.

Senator Huddleston. Just recommend that it be done.

Mr. Kirbow. May I respectfully reserve on that?

Mr. Aaron. All right. Now 25, we're going to get some testimony tomorrow morning on 25 and 26 as to what they actually do and we will have that on the record.

And 27 will be moved up, as we have talked about it earlier. And 28, then, was the order of business, and that is the proposal that in fact we ought to consider a model rather like the British, which is that counter intelligence by the CIA and by -- I'm sorry the author of this is not here -- by the counter intelligence, by the CIA, and the FBI, be consolidated into one organization along the lines of MI 5 or 6. I can never keep them straight.

Mr. Inderfurth. Five. This would --

Senator Huddleston. Where would that agency be in the structure?

Mr. diGenova. This is the point I was getting at before that the domestic task force and John Elliff has some problems with these recommendations that I'm just spotlighting this now. He doesn't understand the advisability of this. He doesn't see why it's a good reason.

Mr. Miller. That's because he hasn't heard the recommendations that this be done by others. It's just an idea to be considered.

Mr. Kirbow. He's read it. I reserve on this.

Mr. diGenova. I'm not sure that's --

Mr. Inderfurth. Well, the military intelligence services should be added to this FBI, CIA and military intelligence.

Mr. Aaron. If you're going to consolidate that function, it ought to be consolidated all the way around.

Mr. Miller. They're slightly different activities on the part of the military because they're involved in base protection.

Isn't that correct?

Mr. Snider. Well, that counter-espionage operation involves their own personnel world-wide.

Mr. Miller. But in connection with bases, that's their connection.

Mr. Snider. Not necessarily bases, but information, military information. As long as you are consolidating that function, I don't see why you shouldn't include the military services. It's just a small point.

Senator Hart. Mr. Chairman, I certainly favor the concept that if there's any one area where we saw even a little rogue elements, they were in the counter-intelligence areas. And I am, as you know, opposed to further complication of the hiding places for responsibility or accountability. But I think creation of a separate unit here and consolidation would enhance accountability rather than make it more difficult.

We have found out in our look at the Kennedy assassination and I think in a number of other instances, COINTELPRO and so on there was duplication and overlap and abuse and poor performance and misperformance and about everything you can think of going on here between the FBI and the CIA and maybe even the military.

So I think we have to look at something and not just a mandate on counter-intelligence. I think this is a sound recommendation to make.

Mr. Miller. It doesn't have to be into a new agency. It may be a relationship that is less than an agency.

Mr. Aaron. Is it the concept here that this organization would conduct all the counter-intelligence activities abroad? I mean in other words, the counter-intelligence functions that every station has to, in effect, conduct, for example that establishes, perhaps puts an agent in a local security service to make sure that local security service is cooperating with us and not cooperating with the Soviets.

That is the counter-intelligence action. Is that something this organization would do as well, or would there be departmental counter-intelligence permitted?

Mr. Kirbow. If we're talking about duplicating in major proportions, major aspects of the FBI because they use their agents for dual purposes -- if he isn't out here law enforcing on a Friday afternoon, then he's doing whatever else he's qualified to do in this field.

Mr. Miller. That's part of the reason perhaps that some of the abuses have occurred. The grey area becomes very murky indeed because of the dual nature of the agent's activities, whereas the pursuit of foreign enemies, and rather than having the hand-offs of the situation that we've had in the past, that consolidation might remove that problem and it might upon examination lead to clarification of role and remove the kinds of grey areas that existed in the past. But it's only a suggestion to look into more thoroughly. It's nothing more than that and I think it has merit to at least look into it thoroughly.

Mr. diGenova. That's a specific recommendation that the new oversight committee consider that question.

Mr. Kirbow. I was just reminded by my colleagues that that recommendation is rather innocuous. They can do anything or not do anything.

I do think here again, as we suggested earlier we should remove the words during the next year because if they do everything that we have recommended, they won't have time to go to lunch the way things are going. Why don't we say that the oversight committee should consider this? I think that you're now directing another committee to do many things within a short perid of time and they may have more important recommendations that they consider too.

Mr. Aaron. Now --

Senator Huddleston. I would like for our recommendations to be more specific, but I recognize that there are times when we can't.

The natural question is going to be to us as members what about recommending this study? Are you for it? Do you recommend it's a good thing or a bad thing? And our only response can be, well, we don't know. We just think we ought to look at it.

Mr. Aaron. Well, I think in some cases we're really talking about some ideas that deserve a measure of legitimacy to be seriously considered. I mean, for example, we were talking earlier about the DCI being separated from the Agency. I think the way the Committee came out it was essentially to give legitimacy to the idea and its practicality or wisdom one might well question and look at further with the oversight committee.

I think that sort of falls in that same category.

Senator Huddleston. Would it help any to say that because of the nature of this kind of activity or the fact that it does lend itself to specific abuses, that they ought to do this?

Mr. Kirbow. Senator, the individuals, we don't have any great big record that there were rogue agents out there in the FBI doing this. There were rogue policies down at the headquarter

Now if you have the same kind of rogue policy in a new agency, you'll have the same end result.

So it doesn't accomplish anything for us to do this and point at the individuals because it was a principal.

Senator Huddleston. I didn't specify individuals. I just said it has happened and it's the area where it is susceptible.

Mr. Kirbow. Certainly the potential for abuse is great in this area and it should be studied carefully and probably urgently by the Subcommittee. I mean the new oversight committee.

Senator Hart. It wasn't potential, it was actual. I'd like to see the committee recommend strongly that they go in this direction on the basis of our 13 months of looking at the damn thing.

I don't know how long you have to study some problem before you do something about it.

Senator Huddleston. Well, I'm content to leave it as it is, taking out during the next year.

Ms. Culbreth. Did we add military services?

Mr. Miller. That's a good point.

Mr. Kirbow. All counter intelligence functions and lea out the agencies individually. Leave out the FBI and the CIA.

TOP SECRET

Mr. Miller. I think naming them is a good idea.

Senator Huddleston. I guess this gets into the domestic task force also.

Mr. Aaron. Yes. The Committee will want to look at that.

Now if we go on to our next set of recommendations for covert action, we can be halfway through the report. That would be moving to page 48, where we will take up a number of recommendations related to covert action and paramilitary activities, which relate to what the stated purpose in law of these activities ought to be, what restrictions might be placed upon them, what review and accountability procedures might apply to them and what kind of controls from the Congress's standpoint might be placed on them from the standpoint of either the budget or some other aspects, particularly the paramilitary activities.

If we start with the first one on page 48 --

Senator Mathias. Mr. Chairman, don't you think we ought to skim lightly. Much as we are all desirous to get to that halfway mark, I think we had better look at the text very lightly beginning on page 42. It wouldn't take very long to do that.

(Pause)

Senator Mathias. Any problem with the Angola reference? What kind of controversy are we going to raise? Do we have a record to support the Indonesian reference?

Mr. Bader. Yes, we have a major study to support that. In fact, one of our biggest studies.

Mr. diGenova. That raises the issue, if I might say, of a question that I just want to know as a matter of information.

Have we resolved the question of whether or not the Agency agrees to the release of a second covert action paper when there was an agreement apparently reached before that there would be only one covert action paper and that was on Chile?

What's the status of negotiations now to release the Indonesia paper? The one you're talking about.

Wasn't there another detailed paper on a covert action paper that we were considering?

Mr. Aaron. There was a paramilitary paper on Laos which the Agency would like us to release and they are now reviewing with the view toward permitting us to do so.

Senator Mathias. What about the Indonesian?

Mr. Miller. That's classified.

Mr. Kirbow. And the one on Greece?

Mr. Miller. That's classified, too.

Mr. Kirbow. There is a classified record that will support this comment. There will not be a public record, but if you read this there, you could go look at it in our other report.

Senator Huddleston. Could we make some kind of a footnote

Mr. Bader. Senator, on the result of the Indonesian operation, the '57 operation is widely known but it was a failure. We went to support the Sumatra rebels and they failed and so did we.

This was when Pope was shot down.

Senator Huddleston. Back on page 44, this term sheep dip, is that sufficient?

Mr. Aaron. We had a long discussion of that, as a matter of fact. We'll be guided by the Committee.

Senator Huddleston. Sterilized equipment, what does that mean?

Mr. Aaron. That's equipment whose origin cannot be traced.

Senator Mathias. Whoever is the editor, I hope that some of these howevers that are used to begin sentences with will be put following the first verb instead of at the beginning of the sentence.

At the top of page 48 I think you should make that a little stronger, effective Congressional oversight, too, if they have the guts to use it. I mean if they don't use it, it isn't worth anything.

Mr. diGenova. Senator, would you move to put that language in there?

Senator Mathias. Well, I'm serious about it, although

I would like to be a little bit more liberal.

Mr. Aaron. If there is the will to exercise it.

Senator Mathias. Because you know, you head into the Executive Branch and there's an emotional appeal with the flag waving and the Star Spangled Banner being played on the Capitol steps and all that kind of thing. It takes some courage, and I don't think we ought to downplay the fact that, just the mere fact that you hold the power of the purse, that it makes it an easy power to exercise.

Senator Huddleston. All right, we're ready for recommendation number 1 on page 48.

Mr. Aaron. I'm going to ask Bill Bader to speak to these recommendations. He has done the major work on this. I'll just simply make one point with regard to the first one, and that is that in giving the Agency a charter and writing down some of the things that it is to do, including the conduct of covert operations, the concept would be to use the Title I device of trying to also set forth some of the purposes of these missions that the Agency would be given and in that context the general injunctions of --

The first recommenation would arise to be supplemented by the specifics that follow.

Mr. Bader. I trust the language is clear here. It is intended in the first instance to underline the view of the Committee that the use of covert action should be an exceptional act and not a routine procedure. It is also intended to underline the Committee position that covert action again in the exceptional nature should be used only when other means will not do.

And then it goes on to talk about that there should be procedures for seeing that there is both careful and thoughtful and thorough consideration of the general policies governing covert action and that these procedures include participation of policy makers at the highest level and be marked by accountability.

What we're intending to do here is to underline these various points, the exceptional nature, full accountability, thorough, systematic review.

Mr. Inderfurth. The first is legislation authorizing the conduct of covert actions makes clear. That seems to be sort of present legislation. There is none.

Mr. Aaron. It should say, recommendation 1, that the legislation authorizing the conduct of covert actions make clear that its purpose is to respond.

Mr. Maxwell. The problem is there isn't following from the charter section in the first set of recommendations the recommendation other than the very early one about NSC that a charter for the CIA authorizing the following functions should be drawn and that because there is not that recommendation in this section, I think Rick's comment is appropriate.

Mr. Inderfurth. Maybe just add a line that that charter should state that and then go into this.

Mr. Kirbow. Are you recommending a revision of the 1947 Act to change the charter of the CIA or to make it clearer or more specific, or do you want to simply indicate here that the Committee recommends that by statute, covert operations or covert action be authorized?

Mr. Inderfurth. I thin it should all be in one piece in the omnibus legislation.

Mr. Aaron. Yes. I think that in fact in the beginning and also in the section it simply says that the CIA is authorized to conduct, if you will, espionage and that it also ought to authorize. It also suggests that they're authorized to conduct a certain amount of counter-intelligence.

Mr. Bader. We can go now to page 49 where we have attempted here to lay out for the Subcommittee's consideration.

Mr. Maxwell. Just one comment on 48. The first clause after the semicolon, there may be a more artful way of saying that legislation should make sure that procedures be developed within the Executive Branch.

Is that designed to do that by legislation or is that a recommendation? We made some recommendations by statute to set up a mechanism, and there may be a more artful way of saying that.

Mr. Bader. Perhaps we can just go from that procedures be developed within the Executive Branch.

Mr. Miller. You can do this in various ways by requirement of reporting to the Congress.

Mr. Bader. On page 49, top of the page, we come to the hard problems here, and this section is addressed to the question of specific prohibitions on varieties of covert action. It notes that the Committee has after its investigation of alleged assassination attempts has recommended a statute to forbid such activities.

What we put before the Committee for consideration is a staff list of other possible recommendations. You can see the first bracketed one where there is some dispute as to whether that should be so included is all political assassinations That is to move from foreign leaders to all political assassinations, and we can come back to that. The others you can see are clear, and we would welcome comment.

Senator Mathias. What about religious assassiations?

Mr. Bader. That seems to be part of the problem, Senator, with using all political assassinations. It becomes a bit hard at that stage to be limited.

Mr. Davis. The Executive Order has all political assassinations. Theyare ahead of us.

Senator Huddleston. In the bill that we have prepared and introduced what does it say?

Mr. Bader. It does note that the Executive Order does take us a step further.

Senator Huddleston. No, we introduced an anti-assassination bill, didn't we?

Mr. Bader. Yes. That spoke to foreign leaders.

Mr. Maxwell. The bill itself, I think, would have covered foreign individuals as well as, because leadership was so broadly defined.

Part of the problem in the recommendation that came out at the staff level was that anything that we said about non-foreign leaders or domestic assassinations or the like implied that the Committee had investigated allegations about that and might imply that some credence should be given to charges that the Agency had been involved in attempts to assassinate people in the United States, and that was the problem of trying to word some prohibition that went beyond the bill that has already been introduced by the Senators.

Mr. Kirbow. Or of some lesser military-type individual in a foreign country. You know, assassinating a sergeant is pretty bad as far as he is concerned but it would not necessarily be political.

Senator Huddleston. What about peace time? Should that be in there?

Mr. Kirbow. I think our bill distinguished between peace time and war time, Mr. Chairman.

End 4B

I question whether or not having done that before, that political assassinations need to be discussed further as a prohibition at all.

Mr. Maxwell. Perhaps if the Senators think it is desirable to say something, the staff could get language which would not imply in any way that the Committee has found credible evidence that the CIA was engaged in activities beyond this, but which would reflect their desire not to; their desire to make clear that the CIA could not do that.

Mr. Kirbow. It's a moral finding that it isn't necessarily based on wrongdoing in the past.

Senator Mathias. It's repetitive but that's all right for emphasis.

Mr. Kirbow. We could work on the language and show it to you again.

Senator Mathias. What about the second one?

Mr. Aaron. I'm not quite clear on this first one. We will draft some language that makes clear that we did not find any evidence of anything other than what we've found?

Mr. Kirbow. That we didn't find any evidence that would indicate that they had engaged in these other types of assassination activities but that we would prohibit it anyway, other than political leaders. In that, though, we considered that major or colonel over in one of, in the health alteration committee thing. We considered that. We can make this clear and show you the additional languages because I think that the was concern that it not indicate that we had found some evidence that we had just not revealed.

Mr. Bader. Perhaps it would be helpful, Senator, but at the same time the Administration has come forward with language of all political assassinations, which seems to me would indicate that it's not a question of a finding.

Senator Huddleston. We ought to recommend passage of the bill that we have submitted, if nothing else.

Mr. Kirbow. And continue to support that legislation. I think you could just add right on to this. We recommended it then and the Committee continues to support enactment of such legislation.

Mr. Aaron. Number 2 begins the Committee has already recommended following its investigation of alleged assassination attempts, a statute to forbid such activities. The Committee continues to endorse that.

Mr. Maxwell. It could say the Committee also endorses or recommends that by statute the present Executive Order in regard to permitting any political assassination be enacted in peace time.

Senator Huddleston. What about democratically elected governments?

Senator Mathias. Why don't we do both? Why don t we say the Committee reiterates its support of that position and the Presidential directive? They may not be exactly parallel, but we support both.

Mr. Aaron. Would that include supporting the Executive Order provision being in the law or just supporting?

Senator Mathias. And the Presidential -- why don't we be ambiguous?

Mr. Kirbow. We endorse the concept.

Mr. Davis. If they're not different.

Mr. diGenova. There is a recommendation here that other types of covert action which should be banned, and since we're talking about a statute which we have submitted which bans it we would then ban by statute, recommend banning by statute all political assassinations which would enlarge the President's Executive Order into a law and then the rest of these just assuming for the sake of argument that the Committee wanted to do that, it would be a recommendation for legislation which would ban all peacetime political assassinations.

Mr. Kirbow. The staff could work on that language a little and get it back to you.

I think we know what you want to do here, don't you, David?

Mr. Aaron. Yes. I think we can make a fix, just make the point that the political assassinations point is putting in law what the Executive Order is as proposed by the Executive Order or as provided by the Executive Order.

Senator Huddleston. All right. It's then to overthrow democratically elected governments.

Mr. Inderfurth. I might mention that Cyrus Vance went beyond this. He said all interference in the electoral processes of a country should be banned, which goes beyond this.

Senator Mathias. Perhaps that was some subliminal influence on me, but I've written down efforts to subvert a valid electoral process.

It seems to me that that is better because when you talk about overthrowing a democratically elected government, God knows what that is. And I don't know that you're really going to know what a valid electoral process is. The Republic of Venice, where they have a very limited electorate, elected those. But nonetheless, it was their constitution and it wasn't very democratic. But whatever it is, and this would be in line with George Cannon's testimony also.

We finally have acknowledged that the Soviet Union has a legislature of sorts and we acknowledge their electoral process, although we don't think much of it.

Ms. Culbreth. Would your use of the term subvert, would you intend to include within that preventing the CIA from any kind of political or propaganda in connection with the elections in another country or any kind of support to one of the candidates that we might think was a better candddate?

Mr. Kirbow. Well, you said results of --

Ms. Culbreth. But could you not subvert the results by influencing the carrying out of the election?

Senator Huddleston. Well, we subvert our own elections every time we run.

Senator Mathias. The original suggestion was efforts to overthrow democratically elected governments. I mean both of these -- efforts to subvert the results of a valid electoral process.

Senator Huddleston. I think that's all right.

Mr. Inderfurth. In a sense what is a democratically elected government?

Moynihan says that in the U.N. there are 24, so in a sense we could actually list them.

Mr. diGenova. What about, what is a valid electoral process? Whatever it is in each country? I mean the communists have one party and that's a valid electoral process in that country.

Senator Mathias. This would be Cannon's advice.

Senator Huddleston. Well, I think we have to recognize the right of another country to have their electoral process and it would be valid if someone in that country were attempting to circumvent their established constitutional processes.

Mr. Maxwell. The qualifier in the Senator's proposal was democratic, so that at least in some way it restricts the notion of a dictator.

Senator Huddleston. Self-determination maybe should be in there.

Mr. Miller. What cases would this prohibit? In our actions in the past it would prohibit Chile. Iran --

Mr. Kirbow. That stage of the Chile operation.

Mr. Miller. Guatemala.

Senator Huddleston. It would not prohibit Angola.

Mr. Aaron. It would prohibit some things that transpired in Iraq.

Mr. Miller. It would prohibit the actions in Italy, wouldn't it, and France?

Senator Huddleston. It depends on the term subversion. We were just assisting one side.

Mr. Kirbow. Assisting the head of an election during the election process does not appear to be the intent of the Committee.

Mr. Aaron. I wouldn't think that what is going on in Portugal insofar as we know that that is would come under this prohibition.

Mr. Miller. So it would really affect the cases like Iran, Guatemala, and Chile.

Mr. Aaron. And Indonesia.

Senator Huddleston. Cuba?

Mr. Aaron. No.

Senator Huddleston. I think you'all might [illegible] on that a little bit, but I think that's pretty close.

TOP SECRET

Mr. Inderfurth. But just to be a devil's advocate for a moment, we don't want to insert then, using your language, Senator, the efforts to influence or subvert the results of a valid electoral process?

Senator Mathias. That may be too short a leash.

Mr. Inderfurth. But I think that's a question the Committee has to address. It would be a very short leash.

Senator Huddleston. Well, there are different ways to influence, and there may be a proper way to influence.

Mr. Inderfurth. If there were a proper, then perhaps one could define the improper way, influencing by passing money, covert propaganda, and that type of thing.

Mr. Kirbow. If the Committee's intention is after the person is elected and you don't want to prevent that kind of person being put into office by any means, then you do it here.

If you do not intend as a committee to preclude using the press or using other things to influence the outcome of the election, then we should be solid on that and stay out of that area. But it's up to the committee to decide.

Mr. Bader. This language speaks to subverting the results, not influencing the outcome.

Mr. Kirbow. And he says that was his intent.

Senator Huddleston. This does not preclude us from getting involved as we did in Italy.

TOP SECRET

Mr. Bader. Or in Portugal?

Senator Huddleston. That's not a subversion of the process, that's an assistance.

Senator Mathias. That's participation in the process.

Mr. Inderfurth. What about after an election but prior to the formation of a coalition government?

Senator Mathias. I would think that would be subverting, if you get in there and say, well, we are worried about who these people have elected.

I didn't know it was General Haig until this afternoon but I was aware that some American official had made a threat to Mitterand that he would be in trouble if he were elected Prime Minister and attempted to bring some radical leftists into the French Cabinet.

Now it seems to me that that is a threat to subvert the French electoral process and if in fact we carried out that threat I think that that would be prohibited by this language.

Mr. Aaron. I take it the word subvert goes to covert activities. In other words, if General Haig said that privately but didn't mean it in terms of covert action, he just said the United States government will --

Senator Mathias. I think the President of the United States or the Secretary of State or the Secretary of Defense might very well stand up in front of the television cameras and might say, look, if you put a communist in the French Cabinet and under the parliamentary system you give him access to NATO's secrets, then there's going to be hell to pay, and we're telling you right now.

I don't think that's prohibited.

But if we shadow men around and catch him in some compromising personal position and use the photographs to blackmail him, or anything of that sort --

Mr. Bader. That's a covert action project.

Senator Huddleston. There's no question that this whole matter of internal intervention in another country --

Mr. Kirbow. Senator, whatever you say here is going to be one of the highest considerations given by the Full Committee.

Senator Huddleston. I feel there ought to be some restrictions and constraint on our interference in the internal operation of the government.

Mr. Aaron. The next one, support for his beliefs or other internal security -- other security groups which engage in torture.

Senator Huddleston. Don't we have some legislation to that effect?

Mr. Aaron. There are amendments regarding foreign aid. Now this is open foreign aid. We're talking about covert assistance programs.

Mr. diGenova. This doesn't make sense to me.

TOP SECRET

Mr. Kirbow. Which language in torture.

Senator Mathias. Can I make a semantic suggestion here that we try to bring this in line with the language in the Constitution, cruel and unusual punishment, because I think this really reflects, if it's going to mean anything, we ought to be reflecting our national ethic in both of these, both in subverting the results of a valid electoral process--

Senator Huddleston. Except you get into the question of capital punishment.

Mr. Maxwell. There's another problem and that is one of the things that the torture is engaged in is before a person has been judged to be guilty of a crime, someone who is being tortured in an interrogation, that person would not be subject to cruel and unusual punishment but the systematic violation of human rights or some other --

Senator Mathias. That's a phrase, though, with which Americans have been familiar since 1787, and it seems to me it has some value.

Senator Hart. The problem is we don't give serious thought to the way we treat prisoners in this country.

Senator Mathias. Yes, I think that's a problem. I think that's a problem in this whole thing.

Someone once said at the time that the Italian payments were exposed, you know, the Russians do this all the time and nobody blinks at it. And of course the difference is we go around and preaching all over the world about our high ethical standards and then when we are shown that we don't live up to our own standards, that's what brings us the retribution.

But I still think that we ought to notwithstanding that this is an opportunity for some linkage with the Constitution. But I don't press the point. I just offer it.

Senator Huddleston. Well, I think this is something we should all give some thought to in the next few hours.

Mr. Kirbow. If we are going to do that, may I suggest that here we talk about support for police or internal security forces.

The remainder of that sentence shouldn't we apply it so that it is the policy of the country involved? Otherwise you're talking about aid in a covert manner governed by maybe an inadvertent, without authority type series of exposures of torture and whatnot, and you cut off the aid to a country.

Mr. Aaron. Can I speak to that point?

I think that Charley raises an interesting example and we have sort of that kind of situation today in Brazil where it is difficult to ascertain whether it is the policy of the government or whether the internal security forces which are very fragmented among the military and the states and what have you, whether these internal security forces and police are just on their own

Mr. diGenova. Should it matter?

TOP SECRET

Mr. Aaron. I think this is the question. It goes to the point not of assistance to the government in general or even covertly, but assistance to these particular forces, and that I think does narrow it down to the problem.

Senator Huddleston. What kind of support do we give the security forces?

Mr. Kirbow. Training.

Mr. Aaron. We have in the past, we can give them technical training, electronic devices.

Mr. Kirbow. A whole spectrum except for U.S. military support.

Mr. diGenova. Some of the proprietaries were used for exactly that purpose, to provide training and secure procurement and sale and loan of devices which ultimately found their way into the hands of foreign torturers.

We certainly don't deprive the Agency of any legitimate source of intelligence because they themselves claim that they have never engaged in this activity knowingly and don't want to.

They say they don't want anything to do with this type of activity and they say they don't want to be involved with internal police forces that conduct this type of activity.

They have said recently that they have discontinued those sorts of liaisons, so to prohibit them by banning it seems to me to say fine, we agree with you and we will do it.

TOP SECRET

Mr. Aaron. What occurs to me is that it would be helpful to have a finding on this point.

Mr. diGenova. That's the next issue I was going to raise. We don't write anything about this any place in the report.

Senator Huddleston. Does the Agency have a directive to that effect that they have discontinued or are discontinuing that we can refer to and say we approve of it?

Mr. Inderfurth. As well as in the Chile covert action study there is discussion of liaison with the current Chilean internal security forces and that the CIA was saying, well, we want to talk to them but we don't want to be involved in what they're doing and we want to try to stop them from their practices of torture and the rest.

So I mean that's something we can look to as a basis for our findings.

Mr. diGenova. There's also a parallel with the drug thing.

Mr. Aaron. Senator, shall we try to see if we can come back with some language that tries to work in the Constitutional point? I must say I personally have a little difficulty figuring out how you turn this around to try to apply to what the police do?

Senator Mathias. Let's think about it.

Senator Huddleston. Let's get back at 7:30. That's a whole two hours and a half.

(Whereupon, at 5:00 p.m., the hearing in the above mentioned matter was recessed, to reconvene at 7:30 o'clock p.m. of the same day.)

FOREIGN AND MILITARY SUBCOMMITTEE MEETING

Wednesday, March 10, 1976

- - -

United States Senate,
Select Committee to Study Governmental
Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities,
Washington, D. C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:45 o'clock p.m., in Room S-407, the Capitol, the Honorable Walter D. Huddleston presiding.

Present: Senators Huddleston (presiding), Hart of Colorado and Mathias.

Staff: William G. Miller, Staff Director, and David Aaron, Joseph diGenova, Lynn Davis, William Bader, Elizabeth Culbreath, Charles Kirbow, Rick Inderfurth, Pat Shea, Elliot Maxwell and Al Quanbeck, Professional Staff Members, And then the question is whether or not there is a prohibition on printing in the English language.

Mr. Bader. And as I heard the consensus this morning, we would not move to that recommendation for a prohibition. I did not hear whether on the distribution this would be by law, though I took it it was to be by law, though I can be corrected on that. I don't think we addressed that this morning.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, on these that we considered to be rather -- that we have a fairly light record on or that we are not too sure what the future holds, one of the members that I rode over with on the car suggested that perhaps in those instances we could recommend fairly strongly whatever we want the followon people to do to ensure that the recommendation does not create havoc within the Agency or does not leave the rights of citizens unprotected.

But that is not a cop out. It is something that you frequently do, say, let us reserve this for the permanent oversight committee or for whatever other group. We may have all the information we need.

Senator Huddleston. Let them make the determination whether or not it should be a statute.

Mr.Kirbow. Determine whether in the law whether it is working all right under the set of regulations.

Mr. Bader. Mr. Chairman, may I say in this instance in the publishing trade there is no lack of record? The evidence

P R O C E E D I N G S

Senator Huddleston. I call the Committee to order.

Mr. Aaron. I believe Bill Bader had the temerity to summarize where we stand.

Mr. Bader. Mr. Chairman, where I think we are at the moment is taking the three major issues before the Subcommittee in the order they were presented, and discussed this morning, the first being the academic issue, and as I heard the Subcommittee this morning, then I will have another go at the options, give enough options in the option paper and bring it back before the Committee for a further look before we go on.

Senator Huddleston. By Friday.

Mr. Bader. By Friday, without question.

I think by this time we will all have -- we will try to include a positive option, that is to say, to approve if not applaud the expanded efforts of FRD to undertake these activities, or at least to endorse them.

Now, going to the second was the covert use of books and publishing houses. We discussed two recommendations: one which I believe here the Committee has agreed to, and that is a prohibition on the distribution or subsidy of any books, magazines or other publications not attributed to the CIA inside the United States.

Senator Huddleston. I think we can all accept that, can't we.

and inquiry into it has been thorough, and I think we know this well. There is no dispute from the Agency.

Senator Huddleston. Well, is the law inconsistent with the statute on the information service?

Mr. Bader. It is the same thing. I would recommend, Mr. Chairman, that this would be by law, by statute.

Senator Huddleston. On the publication.

Mr. Bader. On the publication.

Senator Mathias. I would support that.

Senator Huddleston. I think Gary Hart would also, so I think we will make that recommendation, that this one on the academics is the one we are not sure of.

Mr. Bader. That's the one we would go forward with, and now we are moving to -- I would also reiterate that in our session the other night, I took it as agreement that the recommendation by statute the CIA should be prohibited from making operational use of all educational and cultural grantees of all U.S. Government sponsored programs, this was the issue which was raised of government funded programs such as the Fulbright program.

Senator Huddleston. And that's either already a regulation or a directive or something to that effect.

Mr. Aaron. Certain categories.

Mr. Bader. Certain categories.

Mr. Kirbow. That is brand new ground.

Mr. diGenova. The John McCloy exceptions to that rule, they are the only ones that are protected.

Mr. Aaron. That justifies Charles' view that there are some similarities between Ford Foundation and Government sponsored activities.

Mr. Bader. Where our discussion was left before lunch was on the question of the covert use of U.S. journalists and media institutions, and as it was laid out, it was indicated that the CIA's intended internal prohibition on the use of the media extended to the internal prohibitions on the use, operational use of individuals, American and foreign, who were accredited to American media organizations.

As I heard it this morning, what we were discussing and moving to was to extend that prohibition to cover all American individuals and media organizations, and that the question then was whether this would be recommended to be something done in law or a recommendation, or an insistence, if you will, to the Agency that it further amend its internal directives, its 50-10, to put all media personnel, American media personnel on the prohibited list, and that is I think where we were.

Senator Huddleston. I think that's an accurate statement. That's where we were.

I had expressed a thought that I thought that it ought to be expanded to include all, but we should hold off on the statute business for the time being.

Senator Mathias. My role here seems to be the Devil's advocate.

Senator Huddleston. Good.

Senator Mathias. There is no question about the writing American press or the value in print domestically. Maybe the role, any legitimate role that news men could, journalists, writers could fulfill is available through the information agencies, USIA and groups of that sort.

So does anybody know whether there is any real need for allowing some latitude, which is not covered by situations that can be envisioned under USIA or other programs?

Mr. Kirbow. Well, Senator, the one that I discussed earlier that I probably didn't make my point well because no one seemed to have picked it up, is we do, by the words here, if I understand Mr. Bader, prohibit an American citizen living in Brussels and working for a local newspaper there from having anything to do with the CIA.

Senator Huddleston. No we don't, do we?

You mean by his extension?

Mr. Kirbow. Yes, sir.

Senator Huddleston. But not by --

Mr. Kirbow. But wasn't that what you wanted to put in the law, that you didn't know if you wanted --

Senator Mathias. This is the point I wanted to raise here.

Mr. Kirbow. That kind of relationship is something that we should stay away from because I don't see any harm in it, nor do I think the record demonstrates any harm in it. I don't see -- I don't know how in the world this person doing that taints the minds of the American reading public, which is apparently what you are trying -- you're not trying to protect the newsman. You are trying to protect the reader who doesn't know that what he's getting is being spoonfed to him from the CIA, and I don't know why we would be so concerned about protecting newsmen from working, or prohibiting them from working, because I think they have a right to do that as American citizens, just as they do to work with the Department of Defense or any other agency.

Mr. Bader. You would then rescind the Agency's standing prohibition?

Mr. Kirbow. I just don't think you ever prohibit it in law.

Mr. diGenova. Are you talking about an affiliated, accredited journalist, because that's what the Agency regulation deals with. It doesn't deal with an American citizen. It deals with an accredited person, whether he is a foreign national or an American.

Mr. Bader. To an American media organization.

Mr. diGenova. But that's not the example Charles gave you.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, perhaps I misunderstand the extension that you, your full recommendation.

Do you want to go beyond where the administration is in their position?

Mr. Bader. I am recommending to go beyond where the Administration is at this stage, to extend the operational prohibition on the part of CIA to use American -- Americans in the media --

Mr. Kirbow. Wherever located.

Mr. Bader. Where they are using them undercover, at this stage, to the extent that it is a cover proposition.

Senator Huddleston. Even if they are in foreign media?

Mr. Bader. Yes, sir.

Senator Huddleston. And even though all of their activities are related to foreign; they are not writing for American news services.

Mr. Bader. Alternately, they could be with American media organizations.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, I don't think there is a single shred of evidence on our record that that is in any way wrongdoing or in any way adversely affects the rights of American citizens. Clearly it will prohibit or could prohibit in the future the proper use of an individual that could be essential to the intelligence collection processes of the CIA, and it singles out a specific agency which is not doing any harm to the American citizenry, and says no, you cannot do this because you happen to be a secret organization.

Senator Mathias. If I wanted to do it, Charlie, I think I could work out a scheme. I would hire a prominent American columnist to go and live in Paris, as Art Buchwald did, for example.

Mr. Kirbow. And to pick off his columns and run them in the New York Times.

Senator Mathias. And run them in the Paris Trib first, and then let the domestic press pick him up.

Mr. Kirbow. But if he's in the Paris Trib, that's an affiliated U.S. --

Mr. Aaron. Well, suppose he writes for the Financial Times?

Senator Mathias. Well, you could work out an echo program if you wanted.

Senator Huddleston. Well, the basic point, instead of picking instances, it seems to me, is whether or not as an official policy of the United States Government we want an institution such as the press with all it means and all it is supposed to be in American with its constitutional provisions and whatever, to be subverted to the secret, clandestine operation that it can; Anytime we put any prohibition anywhere, we are eliminating somebody as a potential agent. You can't use that as a guideline.

Mr. Kirbow. These people are not necessarily subverted.

Senator Huddleston. I'm talking about the institution of the free press being subverted, not the individual.

Mr. Kirbow. I'll extend that one further. I don't see how using them for cover, which has no direct effect, like the example I guess you gave, Senator, of a vice president of a bureau of some sort who has nothing to do with the writing or editing or anything; he is the business head of the operation just like any other corporation. This thing extends to that.

Senator Huddleston. He may have something do with the selection of the people who do write.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, if you could give us an abuse that we are trying to correct, or some reason for it?

Mr. Bader. It's not a question of abuse, it's a question of the use, the operational use of an institution such as the press for operational purposes.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, explain then, and perhaps I'm going -- explain the sanctity of the press if it is not to protect an uninformed reader from having his mind tainted by the relationship. What is the sanctity of the press as an organization?

It is not sanctity like the church and state. I just don't see the record for this.

Senator Huddleston. Well, the clergy and the press I think are institutions.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, I think the clergy and maybe the academic, like you say, that teaches the student directly, but a businessman who happens to have elected going into the business of running a newspaper or a magazine, to be singled out and say you as a patriotic American are proscribed against doing any business, and if you are going to do it with an agency, you should do it with the whole United States Government. I don't see how we can single out the CIA and not single out military or FBI.

Mr. Aaron. Well, I think the domestic group will have -- may well have some recommendations regarding the FBI's covert use of American media.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, domestic media, obviously.

Mr. Aaron. I would like to say, to take Charles' example of an American working for a foreign press, and what the problem is. I think the problem is that you have two kinds of problems with the press. One is the fact, if it is operating domestically, if it is working for American media institutions, it is clear that they are subject to some manipulation or at least questionable manipulation, and there are issues in people's minds as to its integrity.

Now, the question goes beyond that to what about people who might be working for some foreign -- American journalists, American writers or what have you, working for foreign media institutions. There you have a somewhat more extended situation. But it seems to me that what you have is the possibility of the American press getting discredited, having problems of being able to perform its normal functions in the world and performing in the United States because it is part of a clandestine intelligence organization.

Mr. Kirbow. Don't you think that's an individual right that a person has the right to exercise both ways, instead of one way?

Mr. Aaron. Charles, what I think I have told the Committee, I have a real problem with the concept of the American people having the right to spy, somehow, and these prohibitions don't go to what people are allowed to do on the outset. They go to what the Government is allowed to do.

Mr. Maxwell. Well, let's take a different kind of example.

What would happen if in some way -- and it's not, I think, impossible to imagine -- an American citizen was writing full time for the Communist Party paper in Italy or Portugal or France.

Now, that obviously would be covered by the example that Bill has provided as a prohibition.

There are two questions. One is whether the person has any real operational use that you want to preserve, and second, whether it goes to the question that David presents, which is the possible contamination of the American press, which seems a difficult extension in that example, as well as the possibility of distortion, the flowback problem in America.

And the second problem seems to be, with an example like that, is that it seems to -- there is very little stock in the argument, because the argument about distortion of what goes on in foreign countries and people's perceptions is at the heart of the question of whether the CIA or any government agency should be engaged in- propaganda, because it is quite possible the propaganda gets picked up in the same way, and the question is obviously of line drawing: how do you want to draw the line.

It strikes me that there may be better ways to draw the line than the suggested prohibition that Bill has for any American, regardless of status, or who they write for or what they are doing.

Mr. Kirbow. By having citizenship as an American --

Mr. Bader. Well, you misunderstood me. I was putting out the various possibilities.

Let's turn to the text for just a moment and maybe that will help.

First turn to 61. Let's try to get some idea of what the problem is before we get to the semantics of it. All right, just let me go through this, then we'll see what is actually being recommended here.

I have confused you, obviously, by giving a series of possibilities, not what the recommendations are.

"Ten U.S. news organizations and five U.S. publishing houses provide cover for CIA agents abroad. Four of the organizations do not know that they provide this cover."

Then there are some examples.

Mr. Kirbow. Meaning management or individual?

Mr. Bader. Management.

Mr. Kirbow. At any level.

Mr. Bader. At any level.

Mr. Kirbow. All right.

Mr. Bader. Then there are some examples of the kinds of relationships that the CIA officer engages in intelligence collection under cover as a roving international news correspondent, a CIA officer under cover as a European representative of an American company while working as a stringer for a United States publication engages in intelligence collection and covert action. In this case the company is aware of the CIA relationship while the publication is not. Bona fide journalists who regularly provide the CIA with intelligence, some are paid regularly while others are not. In one case the journalist is apparently not aware that the U.S. embassy official to whom he is providing information is actually a CIA officer.

Now, what the recommendation here on 64, or the bracketed recommendations -- and I'm sorry I created this situation by giving various options -- by statute the CIA should be prohibited from using American media organizations for cover. That is the extent of it.

What is the trouble, Joe?

Mr. diGenova. That seems to be somewhat -- that seems to be a back-off from what the Agency prohibits as well. I mean do you want to make a recommendation saying that the Agency's prohibition against using Americans who are accredited --

Mr. Bader. No.

This is the additive. The recommendation here is to take the Agency's prohibitions which go to the question of American and foreign journalists, accredited to American media organizations, and extend it to what is not covered under those prohibitions, which is the use of these American media organizations for cover purposes.

Mr. Maxwell. Is it clear that people who are in media organizations are not accredited to those organizations?

Mr. Aaron. If they were, then they would be covered. If they are accredited journalists, then they would not.

Mr. Maxwell. So the issue is whether individuals who don't write --

Mr. Aaron. But may edit.

Mr. Maxwell. But may edit.

Ms. Culbreath. Or may type it up.

Mr. Aaron. Or may type it up.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, is this the same point that we're talking about less than 25 people, where you are going to make a statutory prohibition against use of all people in that category because on page 61 it says, "of the 65 Americans employed by the CIA in the media field, only a little over one third are journalists; another third are CIA agents operating under media cover, and the remaining individuals are either employed as CIA media proprietaries abroad or are propaganda writers and consultants."

So we are really talking about making a major prohibition against a segment of our society where at the present time there is less than 25 people who have any direct contact with the reading mind, apparently.

Senator Hart of Colordado. I think, Charlie, it's called a principle. If it was only one person, you've still got the problem. I don't think it is the quantity.

Ms. Davis. Bill, in your examples on 61, the first one at the bottom, would that now be covered under your prohibition? CIA officer engages in intelligence collection under cover as a roving international news correspondent?

Mr. Bader. I can't remember from the text here whether the man is accredited or not.

If he is accredited, it would be covered.

Ms. Davis. If not, he is not additionally covered by your prohibition.

Senator Huddleston. This does not extend to the example that you gave, Charlie.

Mr. Kirbow. No, sir, it doesn't here.

Mr. Bader. Only if he is affiliated with that group.

Mr. Kirbow. His affiliation covers anybody who is an American citizen is forever and hereafter would be prohibited, if it goes into the statute, from dealing.

Mr. diGenova. That's only one of the possibilities.

Mr. Kirbow. That's one of those recommendations based on investigation.

Mr. Bader. I wasn't recommending that. I was saying that was one of the possibilities of the whole list.

Senator Huddleston. But the recommendation at the top of 64 doesn't cover an American citizen who is using the foreign media as cover.

Mr. Bader. This would not cover an American citizen who is, let's say, is working for Stompe, or Le Monde, and who is not accredited, and at the same time is not accredited to an American media organization.

It does not cover an American citizen who is a stringer to a Latin American newspaper unless he is accredited to an American media organization.

Mr. Kirbow. Let me try one more time, then, to state the position of not Senator Tower in this case, but another Senator, as I indicated, spoke to me on this very subject, and indicate to you that we not do to harm or to prevent the use by the agency of certain people unless in some way that use affects the rights and/or in some vague way affects the mental processes to the detriment of the American citizenry, that we don't concern ourselves with passing laws to protect the person who reads something that these people do. If you do this, you open that can of worms which gets you into a prohibition against any work in the press or elsewhere in a propaganda fashion.

Now, the Committee may decide that propaganda is in fact something that we should prohibit by law, but doing this piecemeal like this, it does just exactly that. I see nothing in our record that indicates that the use of certain of these people overseas or for cover in any way -- there is not any evidence that it has adversely affected the rights of the citizens of the United States. There is a potential for abuse in practically anything secret and covert.

Senator Huddleston. I don't believe the recommendation at the top of page 64 violates what you have just said.

Mr. Maxwell. I would not think that --

Mr. Kirbow. Well, it says, Mr. Chairman, that by statute, by statute, which means by law, the CIA should be prohibited from using American media organizations for cover. We apparently have 65 people, a portion of which are being used for cover, and apparently they consider them to be an essential asset, or they wouldn't be using them.

Is that correct, Mr. Bader?

Mr. Bader. The CIA?

Mr. Kirbow. Yes.

Mr. Bader. I would assume that they would have extended their prohibition to this, or on the other hand one could argue I don't know what their motives were. It could have been they felt that this, the first step they took was the one that was dealing with what the public was demanding.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, I really don't see anything in our record or any evidence that they have given us or anything other than a staff position on this which we are trying to sell the Committee that this is a harmful procedure.

Senator Huddleston. What this does is extends beyond the practice of journalists to any other person, be it an executive or clerk or typist or whatever, on the assumption that you can't be a little bit pregnant. If the agency is going to be subverted anywhere, not the agency, if the institution of the press is, that it is going to be subverted.

Mr. Bader. Mr. Chairman, the Agency has accepted the basic principle, because it has removed from its list of operational assets a rather larger number than this would call for.

Mr. Kirbow. But if I hear correctly what you are saying then, we are out to protect the American media from being made pregnant by the CIA and not worrying at all about the reading public or the other, but just the media.

Senator Huddleston. The assumption is if the media of the press is subverted, that it will affect the citizens, or they will suffer.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, in the interest of expedition, I move the passage of these three recommendations.

Senator Huddleston. All right. Let's see what the three are.

Mr. Aaron. Well, let me summarize the first one. I think we have agreed the first is that the prohibition on distribution of CIA funded, supported, subsidized and so forth, that that be prohibited within the United States.

Mr. Inderfurth. Printed.

Mr. Kirbow. Excuse me. Not printed.

Mr. Aaron. The word "printed" dropped out for the following reason. One, it makes it easier to prohibit the distribution if you don't identify where the printing is taking place, and secondly, while there is no printing going on here, the question really goes to distribution. I think that was the concurrence of the Committee.

The second point is that the prohibitions of -- that the Agency now has upon itself, be made law.

Mr. diGenova. On the use of media personnel and institutions?

Mr. Aaron. On the use of media personnel and institutions, and the third point is that it be extended to say by statute the CIA should be prohibited from using American media organizations for cover.

Senator Huddleston. Well, the style of this ought to be changed, it seems to me, because one of the recommendations, instead of listed under recommendations, is the last paragraph on 63, is that correct?

Mr. Aaron. Yes, that would be picked up as a recommendation, that is correct.

Mr. diGenova. Plus the other one, which is not on 64.

Mr. Aaron. Well, the one on 64, the bottom one comes out.

end 1a
begin 1b

Senator Huddleston. Right.

Senator Mathias. Before you leave that, as a matter of record, I am requested to note an exception on behalf of minority.

Mr. Aaron. The second section was the covert use of American clergy and laity. This is on Page 64.

Senator Huddleston. Was that included in your motion?

Senator Hart of Colorado. No.

Mr. Aaron. I think that covers the recommendation.

Mr. Maxwell. They hadn't discussed whether it should be made public.

Senator Huddleston. Well, if it becomes a statute, it becomes public .

Mr. Inderfurth. But the statute will remain secret.

Mr. Aaron. No, we are ready to move on it, to covert use of American clergy and laity.

Senator Huddleston. Well, the covert action is with the noted exception, those recommendations go before the Committee.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Just for clarification, Mac, is that the entire minority or what?

Senator Mathias. No, it's only one member.

Senator Huddleston. Now we are ready to deal with the clergy.

Mr. Aaron. The point here is, I think, the CIA takes the position that it has no covert arrangements with American clergy and laity, and that this will continue as policy, but they have relationship of a clandestine character which don't involve remuneration.

Senator Huddleston. Incidentally, is that a new policy?

Mr. Bader. Yes, as of February 10, 1976.

Mr. Aaron. It's pretty short. This is the sum total of our findings, and it explains it better than I can.

Mr. Bader. This has not been, obviously you can see, Senator and members of the Committee, from the text that the Committee has found the CIA has a total of 14 covert arrangements involving direct operational use of 21, that should be religious persons, and I found it very difficult in this to properly or respectively address the category here, whether they are American clergy, regligious persons, or what. It is a term of art I really haven't quite been able to deal with.

As of February 10th, the CIA announced that the CIA has not secret paid or contractual relationships with an American clergyman or missionary. This practice will be continued as a matter of policy.

Senator Huddleston. I think we ought to clarify that religious persons. That would include Chuck Colson.

Mr. Bader. The issue here is, we are saying in the first instance, we welcome this policy which they intend to put into their operational prohibitions, and the recommendation that we bring to you is a very simple one, in addition to that, is that it be extended from contractual to all operational relationships, paid and unpaid.

Senator Huddleston. By statute.

Mr. Bader. By statute.

Mr. Inderfurth. May I ask a question here?

How does this conform to Senator Hatfield's bill on this?

Mr. Bader. I don't know.

Mr.Inderfurth. I don't know. I'll get a copy of it, but I think to the degree possible, if the committee recommends by statute a prohibition, it should be made to conform to that because he has put in a great deal of work on that, or without knowing the facts, I might add.

Mr. Kirbow. The other thing is the Committee may want to support legislation that is already pending.

Mr. Maxwell. What is the nature of the covert relationship with religious persons now in effect?

Senator Mathias. A few patriotic volunteers.

Mr. Bader. Patriotic volunteers, at least one of them, from the operational records.

I think, too, they have what is called a memorandum of agreement which is not contractual in the sense that it involves paid or unpaid.

Mr. Maxwell. What are they doing?

Mr. Bader. They collect intelligence information.

Mr. Kirbow. What is a religious person, Mr. Bader, as they use it or as you use it here?

Would that mean the organ player that is a civilian who travels with a preacher and plays the organ?

Mr. Bader. No. It is intended to be the American clergy, although I certainly would lean on whoever can tell me what a proper term is to define American clergy.

Senator Mathias. What about this fellow around, Maharaja Rani?

Senator Huddleston. I'll think on your defintion.

Mr. Bader. I think we'll have to have a footnote as to what American clergy may be.

Mr. diGenova. American clergy or missionaries, certainly.

Senator Huddleston. Well, missionary gets a little fuzzy.

Mr. Bader. The Agency uses "American clergy or missionary."

Senator Huddleston. It has to be a person whose primary occupation is for a religious order or sect or something, it seems to me.

Mr. Kirbow. How about the Mormon youth who do their things overseas?

Would this take care of them and prevent them from getting gobbled up?

Senator Huddleston. I think that's a good question. They receive no pay.

Mr. Kirbow. They are not church people, per se. It is part of their religion, doing the service. You see, this gets tobe a rather broad extension, or you leave out certain things if you are not careful with your definition.

Senator Huddleston. I think there may be somewhere in our litany a definition. I am not sure.

Mr. Inderfurth. I would imagine that Senator Hatfield's bill, a definition of what clergy -- that would be spelled out. There are copies coming over now.

Mr. Bader. Well, I think maybe we will get a copy of the definition of clergy or missionary. Maybe that will clear that up.

Senator Huddleston. Well, I think, you know, some churches send people over for a very short period of time. They are lay people, really, but while they are there, they are there more or less under the auspices of the church group.

Mr. Kirbow. At least a local church frequently sponsored them.

Senator Huddleston. I don't think you can prohibit all those kinds of people. I think some kind of definition should include the primary occupation of clergy, clergy itself.

Senator Mathias. Well, why don't we commit to staff for the moment the question of definition?

Senator Huddleston. I think we will have to do that.

Okay. Are we ready to move on that?

Mr. Aaron. The recommendation is that whomever or however we define them -- and that's obviously an important question, that they either be prohibited by statute. The other alternative is to simply prohibit any further or recommend the prohibition of any further CIA recruitment in this field.

Ms. Culbreath. The way this is worded, this would get anybody who is a lay member of a church. You have got recruitments of American clergy or laity.

If I am a member of the Methodist church, I am in the laity of the church.

Mr. Miller. You have raised a question. There are people who are not priests in the religious hierarchy in a particular sect who may devote their entire lives to that particular church.

Senator Mathias. Well, I think the word "a religious" --

I'm serious here -- should be considered.

Mr. Aaron. "A religious?"

Mr. Bader. We'll have to obviously work on that. Laity was not meant here to be a member of a church, for technical terms, the technical terms Mr. Miller mentioned.

Mr. Miller. As distinct from the congregation, it was meant to deal with the administrators in a religious order.

Senator Huddleston. Well, some sects have lay preachers and lay clergy.

Mr. Kirbow. Senator Hart, do you want each of these categories like this examined in the light of the constitutional question that you raised earlier?

Senator Hart of Colorado. I just raised the issue where the academics were concerned to resolve it, so I'm sure it should be raised by somebody.

Senator Huddleston. Are you ready to go on the religious insofar as what is the definition? Then that will be --

Senator Hart of Colorado. Yes, sir.

Senator Huddleston. Then that will be moved up, I assume, with exceptions noted?

Mr. Kirbow. I don't have any exception to that one, sir.

Mr. Inderfurth. That is by statute, right?

Senator Huddleston. Pardon?

Mr. Inderfurth. Is that by statute?

Senator Huddleston. Right.

Mr. Maxwell. There may be a First Amendment argument here, particularly in fundamentalist groups whose religious beliefs are committed, are directed toward opposition toward Godless atheism.

Mr. diGenova. Except that the control of religious organization has historically been subject to governmental regulation in this sense: the Supreme Court in light of Senator Hart's question last night, I did a little bit of research. The example, the prime example of regulation doesn't deal so much with prohibition of the Government dealing with someone, although there are vast areas where the government is not permitted to get into. The question is, for years the Supreme Court has ruled that there are certain health regulations of states that religious sects must comply with, and they have to comply with it even if it conflicts with their basic religious belief, that they have to comply with it, like quarantines or things of that nature.

So there is clearly an area where the First Amendment of religious freedom concept falls in the face of a greater good, the need of the general public, and that has generally been in the health area, where there is some practice of the religion which conflicts with some standard which has been set in the community at large, and that generally has dealt with health.

Mr. Kirbow. Maybe the HEW Act can bring the CIA under one of these health threats.

Mr. diGenova. Self-immolation.

Senator Huddleston. The snake acts and innoculations.

Mr. diGenova. That's exactly right.

Mr. Maxwell. The problem is that's not quite applicable to this, and one has to argue in the past the Court has ruled on things that are found to be a threat to the personal livelihood or health of the individual rather than something that could be construed in a fundamentalist sense.

Senator Huddleston. This doesn't preclude a sect that may be anti-atheist and as such anti-Communist from pursuing its principles, but the restriction would be pursing them through a government agency, which happens to be the CIA, or any other methods.

Ms. Culbreath. Would this prohibit, then, somebody who was a member of one of these sects that was in an area where they gained information that would be helpful from them being sources?

Senator Huddleston. I wouldn't think so if they wanted to write letters to the CIA.

Ms. Culbreath. Well, just in terms of the debriefing kind of thing, or contact.

Ms. Davis. We are talking about operational, not coming in to the Domestic Contact Service.

Mr. diGenova. It is not very clear on this.

Mr. Maxwell. The problem in part goes back to the difficult we had with the Domestic Contact Division in trying to determine what was operational support, if operational support would be what did you learn about individuals there who might be receptive to American approaches. Then the clergy would be prohibited from providing that kind of information if that is operational support.

Senator Mathias. Well, it seems to me if the religious came in and said I was at a meeting of the Holy Rollers last night and we all went down on the mourner's bench, and I heard the most remarkable things, and this is what I heard, there would be no prohibition against listening. Now, if you say, go back to the Holy Rollers tonight --

Mr. Kirbow. And listen again.

Senator Mathias. Then you've got a question.

Senator Huddleston. Then it is operational.

I don't think there's a need to write in that it doesn't pertain to the voluntary furnishing of information. I don't know.

Mr. Aaron. I don't think -- no, that's really not an operational use, quite frankly. It's very similar to the DCD which takes information from lots of people, including people who are and have been for some time proscribed by CIA's own --

Senator Huddleston. Well, anyway, that would be worked out in the statute itself.

Mr. Aaron. We are spared the problem.

Senator Huddleston. We ought to move on.

Mr. Aaron. The next section is proprietaries and cover.

Senator Huddleston. I just wonder if in presenting this, these three, these four, now, that we have just approved, it would be of any value to assert in our report that we recognize that the Agency has to find proper cover for its agents, that restricting that cover is a matter of some importance, but there are certain institutions that the Committee feels because of their nature and because of their standing in the country, and because of the need for the public to have confidence in them, that they should be, in effect, off limits, and because of that we recommend that these four recommendations be brought. I don't know whether you want to make it sound any better or not.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, does the absence of brackets on the next set of recommendations mean that they are non-controversial?

Senator Huddleston. On the proprietaries?

Senator Hart of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. Aaron. That is correct.

Senator Huddleston. The gentleman did such a great job that nobody can question them.

Mr. Aaron. I think there is only one set of brackets, and the next section is on page 67 in which it says that --

Mr. diGenova. Oh, yes, there is something.

Mr. Kirbow. What page are you on?

Mr. diGenova. 67.

At the bottom of page 67 is a bracketed quote about Admiral Raborn, a former Director of Central Intelligence.

Now, if my memory serves me correctly -- now, first of all, this is the first time that anyone is mentioned by name in the findings.

Senator Huddleston. And the total findings are in that section.

Mr. Kirbow. The findings are this foreign and military.

Senator Huddleston. We referred to Helms and Laird, but I think we decided we could write around that.

Mr. diGenova. Well, here's what happened here. This paragraph deals with the fact that when the Agency disposes or dissolves a proprietary, it tries to avoid conflicts of interest.

However, when noted that sometimes pressures were brought to bear on the Agency to dispose of the entity as a favor to someone, so that it would benefit someone else.

Now, the most glaring example of this was this activity of the former Director, Admiral Raborn, who actually became involved in negotiations on behalf of a client, Overseas National Airways, which he represented, and he wanted the sale of Southern Air Transport, which was a CIA proprietary, large assets and large property, to Overseas National Airways, which of course would have acquired Southern Air Transport's lucrative routes.

Now, the way I originally had it written was "A former Director of the Central Intelligence Agency sought unsuccessfully to influence the sale." However, if it was left that way, people would have to guess at which one of these guys did this and it would unfairly impugn all of the directors. The name was inserted. Therefore, the question now becomes whether it should be left in at all since the name is inserted, and since the name is mentioned in the report, and whether or not the whole sentence--

Senator Hart of Colorado. Well, what if we just said "A former Director"?

Mr. diGenova. Well, the problem there, Senator, is then people say, which one was it?

Senator Hart of Colorado. Good.

Mr. diGenova. Oh, all right.

Mr. Inderfurth. I think the assumption would be Richard Helms.

Mr. diGenova. McCone more than Helms.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Well, we ran into this last summer with the Exener matter and all like that.

Ms. Culbreath. A former person.

Mr. diGenova. The Agency itself cited this as the most flagrant example of intercession on behalf of anyone. As a matter of fact, the memorandums on this refer to dozens of phone calls and overtures, and it is a former Director trying to gain a benefit. It is an unseemly situation, and they labeled it as a conflict of interest which they sought to avoid, and in fact they did, and they are praised for it in the report because they were really under tremendous pressure.

So I have no feeling one way or the other. I think to leave out his name unfairly impugns the other. To leave it in, also, is only the second time in the whole findings and conclusio that we mention anybody's name, so I don't care.

Senator Huddleston. And you've got one, Recommendation No. 5, related to the disposal of the proprietaries, that the Justice Department approve?

Mr. diGenova. Be consulted on the disposition.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, can I be heard on that?

Senator Huddleston. Yes, sir.

Mr. Kirbow. Senator Hart, in this regard we have consistently attempted by most every reasonable means to not use the names of people unless they had committed something illegal.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Well, don't side with me. I'm not taking a position.

Mr. Kirbow. But the Exener thing was a big example, but we must have had 20 other names that we went through on that assassination, and we wrote around them.

Senator Hart of Colorado. But a number of people argued strongly that we ought to name her and go into details, so I suppose the same arguments could be used here on this matter.

Mr. Kirbow. But the point I raised at the staff meeting just before the Committee came back, when the subject was raised, was did Admiral Raborn, as a retired military officer, currently in a civilian status, although he was former -- break any American law, or had they sold it to this, would it have been a violation of the law, and the answer was no.

If he was involved -- or they knew of no law that he had violated, and none is apparently cited in the record. Pressure was brought to bear, there is no doubt about it, by Admiral Raborn. I think there's another example. I'm not sure whether Joe described it to me or someone else, of a very senior official out there dealing back with the Agency.

Now, the military, as Senator Hart knows, is prohibited from this by regulations and I think by law. I know that as a regular military officer, you are not allowed to do contractual business with your agency forever, but with the other military departments and the Department of Defense, I think you have to have a cleansing period of five to seven years.

I don't believe there is any such provision in the Act that applies to former Directors, and probably what the Committee should do is consider this action without necessarily naming him unless he was in violation of some really serious wrongdoing, and make a prohibition, drawn similarly, with what now applies to senior officials going back and kind of exerting undue influence on those people.

Senator Huddleston. Joe, is it accurate to say that pressures were often brought to bear?

Mr. diGenova. We changed that to say sometimes. This is a rewrite. Someone else wrote this after I had submitted it, and we had a meeting today, and we changed several things in there.

So I leave it up to the Committee. This was a matter that I -- I wanted to flag it and leave it there. The explanation is as clear as I can give it.

Mr. Inderfurth. This is the first time he is mentioned in the entire paper.

Mr. diGenova. That's right.

Senator Huddleston. Why don't we delete that sentence and keep it in our full report, our big report.

Mr. Kirbow. There is a major classified report on this that would contain all the facts.

Senator Huddleston. I am concerned now whether any other instances of someone may be, of similar standing as Admiral Raborn.

Mr. diGenova. Yes. There are instances in the record which do not deal with proprietaries, of John McCone interceding on behalf of Pan American directly with the Director of Central Intelligence, and it is not mentioned in the report, and it should be, and it is a problem that we have had, Mr.

Chairman, has been that the work involving the relationship of the Central Intelligence Agency with American business companies was severed off from the proprietary work for the simple reason that they are not the same thing.

That work has been done. It has not been pursued vigorously, not because the individual who was responsible for itd didn't want to.

Senator Huddleston. That happened after he left.

Mr. diGenova. That's right, after Mr. McCone left the DCI, he had frequent contacts, according to the records, with the Agency, with high level Agency personnel, and in one instance he interceded personally with the Director of Central Intelligence to avoid actions which would be taken by another government and its airline which would adversely affect Pan American World Airways.

Senator Huddleston. It is hard to separate a man from his past totally.

Mr. diGenova. It seems particularly hard with DCIs.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, not only here, this is not with the Agency, but it came up in my experience with the Armed Services Committee involving Continental Airlines.

Senator Mathias. This sentence.

Senator Huddleston. Just the sentence in brackets.

Senator Mathias. Well, I think if you've got a Raborn Case, a McCone Case and whatnot, that you can't make fish of one and fowl of the other.

Senator Huddleston. I think we've already said that pressures sometimes were brought to bear and we make recommendations to correct that.

Ms. Culbreath. Mr. Chairman, could I suggest that maybe if we do delete that, that we perhaps redo that previous sentence to make it a little stronger, and perhaps in some way indicate that these were serious pressures, and they were, I think, hard pressures to withstand when somebody in that kind of position --

Senator Huddleston. They were withstood, though.

Mr. Maxwell. They would get lost the way the sentence is cut.

Mr. diGenova. I think what we will do is David and I will get together, and Elizabeth, and we will change this "however" sentence, the sentence that precedes the one that has just been deleted, and we will expand that sentence to more accurately explain that the pressures came from high sources sometimes. Some of them may have been maybe former Agency directors.

Senator Huddleston. I think we should make the point that it was former.

Senator Mathias. Well, if they were former directors, then you may as well leave in the last sentence.

Mr. diGenova. Maybe.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that maybe perhaps we use this type of part of the investigation and what we know from certain of the other files to prohibit this type of conduct by law in the future in our general recommendations?

Senator Huddleston. And make it similar to --

Mr. Kirbow. Similar. I think you would have to look at something from the staff.

Mr. diGenova. I didn't have that recommendation in there, but I think the record indicates it ought to be there.

Mr. Kirbow. It wouldn't be proper, necessarily, to put it right here under proprietaries, but let's put it in the general recommendations.

Mr. diGenova. David, did you get that?

Mr. Aaron. I'm sorry.

There's a recommendation that --

Mr. diGenova. That Agency personnel --

Mr. Kirbow. Senior officials.

Senator Huddleston.. Similar to what applies now for military.

Mr. Maxwell. Well, perhaps the statute, perhaps we could recommend a statute similar to that governing the Department of Defense.

Mr. Kirbow. Be enacted by the next Committee, similar in effect to.

Senator Huddleston. And find a proper place to put it in our recommendations.

1b begin 2a

Mr. Aaron. Okay.

Mr. Maxwell. Well, Charlie, correct me. I think the proprietary section would be the appropriate section because that would be where it came up most,,unless there is another one that you see more readily.

Mr. diGenova. We can work that out. I don't think that's terribly --

Mr. Kirbow. I think there have been two or three suggestions made here that will result in general recommendations on a page that isn't necessarily supported by findings, but you come to this overally conclusion based upon your total concept of the Agency and its procedures and everything else in view of the findings.

Mr. diGenova. The only thing I want to do is -- David, I know you have gone through this, but the Senators may want to look at page 68 through 70, which deal with cover, and particularly with Mr. Welch.

Ms. Culbreath. I had a point I wanted to raise on that.

Mr. diGenova. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the Senators want to read this.

Ms. Culbreath. Why don't we let them look through it.

(Pause.)

Senator Huddleston. Let's go back on the record.

Mr. diGenova. I do know the Agency is going to come in tomorrow to review the cover paper from which this summary is drawn. I know Eric has some problems with the cover paper, both editorially, because they view it as overly simplistic and harsh because it reflects all of the Inspector General's judgments, but they have some problems with cover in general, but I don't think this is going to be part of that problem.

Senator Huddleston. I have some problem with this page 70 relating to Welch because it seems the whole implication of that is that he was murdered because his cover was blown, and so far there has been no evidence that that is the case. It highlights the argument, I think, correctly, but it seems to me it leaves the impression that here is a case where a fellow's cover or lack of cover resulted in his death.

I think the Agency people have specifically said to us so far that they have no reason at this point yet to expect that that was the reason he got killed.

Mr. Maxwell. In regard to the specific quote, I think we have to be very careful as to getting involved in an argument which would imply that anything that we possibly did had an effect on it, and also, that it seems to point to Mr. Welch and say, well, it is all his fault.

Senator Huddleston. He didn't protect his cover, he didn't do what they advised him to do, and you see down here we have another quote which says, referring to international terrorism and incitement for these kind of people to take the kind of action which unfortunately led to the death of Dick Welch. There again we are ascribing something to the death of Dick Welch which nobody knows yet, you know, what terrorists killed him or why; at least our record doesn't show.

Mr. diGenova. These statements here, Senator, this is a direct quote from Eric Eisenstead's memo. Do you think that we should maybe in the findings and recommendations shorten this and maybe --

Mr. Kirbow. I think the part of the record which is an unknown fact is why Dick Welch was killed, and we should stay away from any quotes or other pronouncements in our paper which attribute his death to any particular thing unless we know something.

Mr. Aaron. I think that is a good point. We might put in here a statement which says the Committee has no information as to the reasons, purposes or cause, specific cause, of his death. The point is to get at the question of cover, to step out to the question of cover in the report, as we do, I think, appropriately, but not have talked about the one case where this all came out in public, rightly or wrongly.

Mr. Kirbow. Why don't we use the cover for the gentleman in London, then, where as the tour buses go by, of course, you know this is the home of the CIA chief, and he hasn't been killed yet or anything like that. If we want to use that kind instead of using this death example, which, by the way, has brought some thousands of letters from the constituency of certain southern Senators who shall remain unnamed or near-Southern Senators, because it kind of was a catalytic agent in getting a lot of complaints on the Committee and everything else, and this pointing out or explaining Welch's death goes back to it.

Senator Huddleston. I'm sort of southern.

Mr. Kirbow. And you've got a lot of them.

Senator Huddleston. Of course, it was used for that purpose by certain high officials for that.

Mr. Kirbow. The very highest, including attending the funeral.

Mr. diGenova. Well, I think one of the things we wanted to pinpoint here, and first of all, I think we can summarize the Agency's testimony a little better. The Agency said, nothing this Committee did, first of all, had anything to do with his death, as far as they know.

Ms. Culbreath. But they don't know.

Mr. diGenova. As far as they know, they don't know one way or another, but the impression that was created in the press was, and was pandered to by the DCI and the President, was that the general actions of exposure of Agency operations were responsible for the death of Mr. Welch, and they pandered that by inviting Committee members to the funeral as if they bore some responsibility.

Now, the obvious public relations value of Mr. Welch's death, the first time in history the DDO and the DCI go to a funeral in public, they never did that, and there is no doubt that they tried to make political hay out of his death. I think it is only fair that the Committee ultimately say --

Senator Huddleston. Right, but I think you've got two different problems. You've got a problem with whether the Committee wants to present its case and exonerate itself on the basis of everything that is known about the death of Welch, and whether that is pertinent to the problem of cover.

Now, we make a recommendation that the CIA shall make an effort to place a greater proportion of its officer abroad under nonofficial cover. It seems like what we need, there's a statement here is that official cover has not proved to be effective, and if we mention Welsh at all, I think the point we mention there is that his name was carried, that while he was there supposedly under cover, his name was in fact carried in a newspaper, the name of his newspaper had been carried in a foreign newspaper, and he was living in a house that was known to be the house.

Mr. Kirbow. His true identity was widely known.

Senator Huddleston. We can cite him as an example without indicating why he had been killed, of here is a case that everybody knows about, so-called official cover was not in fact very deep cover. There may be other instances that we want to refer to, but if we get into his death at all, I think we have got to present the case, that blowing his cover is not necessarily what killed him. Nobody knows that as of now, so far as I know. Nobody knows it wasn't just a street gang or an idiot.

Mr. Kirbow. It could have been like the Senator John Stennis case, where they buttonholed him in front of his house and killed him for robbery purposes.

Senator Huddleston. We've asked them two or three times here, have we not?

Mr. diGenova. Yes, we have. In fact they don't know.

Senator Huddleston. In fact, the last time Nelson was here we asked him.

Mr. Aaron. Can I try a fix on this, turning to page 70, instead of saying "the career and tragic death of the station chief," let's just say the "situation of the station chief in Athens illustrates the tension. As the Chief of the Cover Staff stated, by the time a person becomes a chief of station, there is not a great deal of cover left," leaving in the rest of that sentence, and then add in here, as you did, "Mr. Welch and his predecessor were both identified and named in the local press. Further, Mr. Welch occupied the same house."

Senator Huddleston. Which presumably was known to be the house of the station chief.

Mr. diGenova. In fact, the station chief's name and address in Athens had been presented, so when he was in there the address had already been printed previously.

Mr. Aaron. Which was also known.

Senator Huddleston. Now, if we want to say something about an added dimension to the seriousness on blowing cover or cover being diminished, is the situation in the world with terrorism or the vulnerability it makes of people --

Mr. Kirbow. To the unstable.

Mr. Aaron. Well, the point in the testimony is that this was an added danger, but because they've got a job to do, they're not going to really do too much about it. It's a real risk they are just going to have to bear.

Senator Huddleston. That's an occupational hazard, but we are talking about how to protect their cover, and our recommendation is that they use -- have an official cover.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, can the staff change the language, because we know exactly what you want to do, and without taking further time, why don't we just change it.

Mr. Maxwell. I would just hope that the two quotes after the one that David cited, the quote, he, Welch, was asked, the last quote, we could make the point in a different way because the impact of the first quote, I think, is this guy was stupid and irresponsible, and I don't think we need to have any implication like that in the report, and the second one, I think we can make the point that terrorism may constitute a greater threat now.

Senator Huddleston. I think that quote ought to go entirely because it does leave the implication that there was a direct link to losing his cover and his assassination.

Now, we don't know that.

Mr. Aaron. So just take out the last one.

Mr. diGenova. But still speak about the added danger of international terrorism. Just stop at the word "international terrorism."

Senator Huddleston. Down in the recommendations I've been talking to Joe about defining the small business, and I think we fairly well understand what the concern is, or do we, Joe?

Mr. diGenova. Senator, I was going to suggest, if you look at Recommendation No. 3, while it doesn't define what a large proprietary is, the Senator was concerned about what was meant by "should be kept small," and I tried to indicate really we are talking about Air America where you had 8000 employees of the CIA, both in Langley and abroad, and then another 8000 employees of the Air America complex. That is big.

But I think what we should say is, organizationally small, and organizationally and numerically small, because what we are really talking about is when they get big, whether it is in numbers or finances, and larger in terms of people usually means larger in terms of finances, also. Then you have both of the problems we addressed in the paper, which was the risk of unfair competition with private enterprise, and the risk of blowing cover, of compromising security.

So I think that --

Senator Huddleston. I was wondering if it could be designed in such a way as care should be taken that it not be any larger than necessary to achieve the objective for which it was established.

Mr. Kirbow. Excuse me, Senator. It would not get the Air America thing because at the time they needed one twice that size.

Senator Huddleston. They needed it that big, that's right.

Mr. diGenova. The reason this language is in here is that the Agency officials themselves who testified, all of them, including the DDO, said they would like to have small ones, in other words, a small number of employees, small operation.

Senator Huddleston. What about their insurance business?

Mr. diGenova. That's kind of an exception, although actually that is an example of a lot of money with only a few employees. There are only a couple of people that run that whole thing, Isenstead and a couple of -- one investor, Istenstead, and an auditor. There are three men that run that $32 million complex. So that is a different animal, really.

Senator Huddleston. So if you are going to use the term "small," you've got to say it from the standpoint of employees or resources.

Ms. Culbreath. I was just going to suggest that, since another of our recommendations suggests annual review of all of these criteria, and since their budgets are going to have to be included for the oversight committee with review for the others, and we have got a proposal that the Committee also establish guidelines for the approval of the creation of large proprietaries, should these become necessary.

Perhaps the better thing to do, since these proprietaries are for a specific need at a specific time, and since we have got the review procedure, is sort of trust it- to the oversight committee to see to it that they don't get too big, whatever that may be, and leave it to them, maybe just delete that second sentence.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, that's certainly a workable way.

Senator Huddleston. I don't see how you are going to keep that sentence in there without having it.

Mr. Aaron. I would also suggest that perhaps in the section on proprietaries, where we make a comment about how large proprietaries run risks in blowing their cover, we might would it be possible, do you think, to make a finding or make an example in regard to Air America?

Mr. diGenova. Absolutely, because they have conceded that's the one that ran all of the problems.

Senator Huddleston. You do mention that somewhere, don't you?

Mr. Aaron. It's not mentioned specifically, but it might be possible to say, you know, maybe you can put a footnote on the first paragraph which simply said --

Mr. diGenova. You mean on the findings of page 66 that "too often large proprietaries have created unfair" --

Mr. Aaron. "Unwarranted risks of unfair competition with with private business in compromising their cover." You should say, "for example," "Air America, for example, which had 8,000 employees," and so forth, ran into both of these problems.

Senator Huddleston. I think that would be all right.

Mr. Aaron. And then you would have at least some reference to what "large" was.

Senator Huddleston. Then you've got the review and the oversight.

Mr. Inderfurth. So the idea here in the recommendation was to take out the second sentence.

Mr. diGenova. Yes.

Mr. Inderfurth. Why not take out the first as well and just go to Recommendation No. 2 as No. 1?

Mr. diGenova. Well, I think -- can I just say this -- that by indirection, approving of an activity is, I suppose, one way of doing it. I don't see anything wrong with stepping up and saying we examined proprietaries, we found them to be -- they had problems but basically they were all right.

Mr. Inderfurth. Couldn't that be in the body as well?

Mr. Kirbow. The one thing we have failed to do on this Committee is where we are strongly in favor of, is to speak out in a manner supporting an agency under otherwise violent attack from many sources, and I think --

Mr. Inderfurth. I think that is not true, Charlie. I think you will find, if you read the findings of Bill Miller and others wrote in the first part, it says very strongly, intelligence is necessary; we need it.

Mr. Kirbow. I'm saying up until now it has been an agency under attack. I think this whole section on foreign and military has been to make a balance between past wrongdoing and current operations.

The Chairman. There can't be anything wrong with leaving the sentence in there.

Mr. Maxwell. May I raise a question to the second recommendation, as to the reason why by statute there would be an annual review rather than recommending that to Congressional Committees.

The second part of that is, my understanding of a number of the proprietaries is that they are not operating, and to require GAO audit of a whole group of in a sense notional organizations may be preempting the kind of review that the oversight committee should be doing rather than setting it out here. It's just a question.

Mr. diGenova. This is a rewrite of my original recommendation, and it is a good point. It may very well be that that is superfluous, if you are considering oversight by a committee.

Senator Huddleston. The Committee cannot conduct an audit, though.

Mr. diGenova. And that was the purpose for the Committee taking on board independent GAO auditors.

Mr. Maxwell. The Committee can request GAO auditors.

Mr. Kirbow. Anything that appears to be on an audit calls for an audit.

Senator Huddleston. Calls for a GAO audit or gives the Committee authority to call for one.

Mr. diGenova. I don't think we need a statute. We can talk about it as part of Congressional oversight. As part of the Congressional oversight function, the oversight committee should review proprietaries annually and where necessary conduct audits with the assistance of the General Accounting Office.

Mr. Kirbow. Here, Mr. Chairman, I think again the point we made yesterday, that we should say at least annually, so that they don't put you in a box if you want one every two months because of circumstances, "at least annually."

Senator Huddleston. You could add in Section 3, at least there, giving the Committee authority to establish guidelines, to establish for large proprietaries, should they become necessary.

You could also make the statement there that the Committee may call for a GAO audit periodically.

Mr. diGenova. So we will rewrite 2 to eliminate the statute

Senator Huddleston. Independent GAO audit.

Mr. Aaron. No. 2 is rewritten so it is not required by statute that there be an audit, internal audit?

Mr. Kirbow. No GAO audit.

Senator Huddleston. The only thing I had in mind of taking out of 2 was just the independent GAO audit being required by statute, and leave that to the discretion of the Committee, but leave the rest of the review, right?

Mr. Maxwell. You amend it by statute that an annual review of all proprietaries?

Senator Huddleston. An internal CIA audit.

Mr. Maxwell. Or would it recommend that, I'm not sure which.

Mr. diGenova. I'm wondering whether it should be done by statute. Maybe we should recommend to the oversight committee that there should be an annual review consisting of internal CIA audit.

Mr. Maxwell. An annual report to the oversight committee and such GAO audits as the Committee --

Mr. diGenova. May deem necessary.

Senator Huddleston. That's all right.

Mr. diGenova. And then we could add, as part of its annual report, the GAO should record all of its intercessions. That should be "report." They record all of them, so change "record" to "report".

We can rewrite that.

Senator Huddleston. Make that a little stronger.

Mr. diGenova. Must report?

Senator Huddleston. Shall be required to report.

Mr. Aaron. I'm sorry.

Could we now have a recapitulation by whomever thinks they followed this?

Mr. diGenova. Elliot?

I defer.

Mr. Maxwell. "There should be an annual review"--

Mr. Aaron. There is no longer a statute. The Committee recommends that there be, right?

Mr. Maxwell. -- "a review, at least annually, of all CIA proprietaries."

Mr. Aaron. By whom?

Ms. Culbreath. By the oversight committee.

Senator Huddleston. By the oversight committee.

Mr. Maxwell. Well, you're defining what the review is in the next part. "consisting of an internal CIA audit and a report to the oversight committee as well as such independent GAO audits as the committee shall direct. As part of its annual report to the oversight Committee" -- "As part of its report to the oversight Committee, the CIA shall report," and then the rest of the sentence, "all its intercessions on behalf of its proprietaries."

Mr. Aaron. May I just make a quick editorial fix? "The Committee recommends the overight Committee conduct an annual review of all proprietaries consisting of an internal CIA audit and report to the oversight Committee."

Mr. Kirbow. No, the Committee cannot conduct a GAO audit. They can insist that that's part of the report that is presented to it.

Mr. Aaron. That's it, consisting of a report to the oversight Committee of an internal CIA audit, is that rigt?

Mr. Kirbow. What you are trying to do is to require the CIA to reveiw it, to conduct a CIA audit, and to report fully all of the review entailed.

Mr. diGenova. Not just the audit themselves. There are certain operational details you are going to want to know about also, not just financial security.

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, let us rewrite that one. We will include it.

Senator Huddleston. Well, you see, you could combine 1 and 2 together, since we are just going to use one sentence, the first sentence in No. 1, and after we say the external and internal controls, the oversight committee should require an annual report of all proprietaries by the CIA, including an internal CIA audit and all intercessions that the CIA may have made on behalf of proprietaries.

Mr. diGenova. That's it, that's all in one sentence. We can fix that.

Mr. Aaron. All right. We'll take Joe's fix.

Mr. Kirbow. In three I am not sure what you mean, "In the DCI's budget presentation." That almost has a word of art connotation in the Senate. A budget presentation is that thing which the Secretary of Defense and the Director of the CIA makes to the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. diGenova. We are talking about an authorization, aren't we, an annual authorization here?

Mr. Inderfurth. Look on page 26 and you'll see the definition of that under (b). The DCI shall have responsibility for preparing the budget of the national intelligence program for presentation to the President and the Congress. This is the budget presentation that's being referred to under this.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, now you come to the real question, proprietaries being listed in the DCI's budget presentation. Most of his proprietaries neither use any money up nor make any money or anything. They are just shelf items.

Here again you come to the notional.

Mr. diGenova. No, no, Charles, because the point they made during our review out there was that never have the proprietaries appeared in the budget presentation. They have been hidden, and the object is to identify them in the budget as a line item, for example.

Mr. Maxwell. One suggestion might be, be listed, that implies a list of proprietaries.

Senator Huddleston. Where does this list go?

Mr. Kirbow. What you want to do is to require them to include a discussion of the proprietaries in his annual report to the oversight committee is what you want to do, isn't it, because they don't have that now. They don't report to the Armed Services Committee. They only report to Appropriations

Senator Huddleston. How would it be listed in the budget under your proposition here, Joe?

Mr. diGenova. Well, I'm just assuming -- well, I am assuming in terms of oversight the Committee is going to want to know, even though this is not going to be published, where this money is going and what it is going to be used for, if they are going to authorize it.

Mr. Aaron. I think the term really should be --

Mr. Kirbow. I think it ought to be more than in the budget.

Mr. diGenova. I know that's not just what they are going to be asking, but the thrust of this was to make sure that proprietaries found their way into the budget, and that Senators knew what they were authorizing when they authorized the budget.

Now, how it gets in there, I am not a budget expert.

Mr. Kirbow. That is what I am trying to supply here because in this process there is a procedure that when you say there shal be authorizing legislation, where the line items are discussed before the authorizing committee and not before the budget committee, which is the appropriations committee, and if you require that he discuss or report the annual operation of the proprietaries in his annual report to the oversight committee, you will accomplish what you are trying to do, and not exclude it only for the presentation before the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. Maxwell. Could I try a fix on this?

Mr. diGenova. You are invited.

Mr. Maxwell. The oversight committee should require that the DCI's budget presentation to the Appropriations Committee and the oversight committee include a specific discussion of the financial aspects of CIA proprietaries. I mean, we are trying to bring them out and see what the impact is on the budget, where do they fit in.

Senator Huddleston. Can they do that, though, without identifying the proprietary and where it is located and whatever.

Mr. diGenova. They have indicated they could.

Mr. Aaron. Jim, Taylor, when he was here talking to the Committee, talked about how they are beginning to -- drawing a way to work in the proprietaries so that they can both identify them and indicate their cash flow implications for the budget, and in effect --

Senator Huddleston. What would you have proprietaries --

Mr. Aaron. Proprietaries, income and outgo.

Mr. Kirbow. But that would never be published, Senator.

If you want to accomplish what you are suggesting here, that they report the cash status or the financial status, you add that additional sentence to this combined 1 and 2 up here that the Senator just proposed a minute ago, and indicate that that report should also include the financial status or the --

Senator Huddleston. But you do that with the audit, don't you, the internal audit?

Mr. Kirbow. Well, in fact you do, in fact you do.

Mr. Aaron. Well, I think the point -- maybe I'm not captioning this properly, Joe, but I think the point here is that proprietaries either earn money or cost money, sometimes a little of both, and it has an impact, therefore, on the overall CIA budget, particularly in the past when income from the proprietaries could be placed in either the contingency reserve or used to finance, in effect, operational purposes of the proprietary. In other words, Air America was earning money on its operations, and yet it was costing them more because they were engaged in certain risky operations. In

In effect, the proprietary was earning money which was financing the proprietary organization.

Mr. Kirbow. But they can no longer do that. What they earn now must go into the general Treasury.

Mr. Aaron. No, gross earnings do not go into the general Treasury. Their net, and part of the cost of doing business would include the cost of some of their operational purposes.

I think the point of this inclusion here was to see if one could require in connection with the budget, not just in general, with an audit of what it does specifically, but in terms of the entire activity of the CIA, to get a spelling out of its sort of macrobudget implications in terms of up or down, and secondly, its budget implications for the certain categories of operations which were involved, such as, if you are talking about the conduct of the support for the activities in Laos.

Mr. diGenova. Paramilitary operations.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, leave it like it is if that is what you are trying to do, because they will be sure to report it to the Appropriations Committee in excruciating detail, but they won't report it to the authorization committee unless they require it to get money.

So if you want to leave it a detailed budget, their presentation to the budget committee, this language will get that done.

Senator Huddleston. Well, what if you said something like this, furthermore, or adding to that, the fiscal impact or the budgetary impact of the proprietaries should be included or defined in the DCI's budget presentation.

Mr. Maxwell. Specifically discussed?

Mr. diGenova. That language would mean it's included in his presentation in some way because the allusion that David made to Jim Taylor is that they are beginning to put it into their budget presentation. I know that is a term of art.

Senator Huddleston. That eliminates any idea of listing them.

Mr. diGenova. Elliot's point also about the authorization committee should be added in there.

Senator Huddleston. We've got so much money invested, and 33 money made money and 40 made money for a net gain of so and so.

Mr. Maxwell. And you should have some notion of that and the problem was that you weren't able to get ahold of it.

Senator Huddleston. And we sold two or three of them for this amount.

Mr. diGenova. That is the whole issue of their visibility in the budget, the whole question.

Senator Huddleston. Well, where does that visibility disappear?

Mr. diGenova. Well, before they never showed up.

Mr. Maxwell. Before you had the covert action.

Senator Huddleston. Well, where will it disappear now? It won't come to the authorization committee and the appropriations committee. I mean, it won't be a line item.

Mr. Aaron. Proprietaries as a category?

Mr. Maxwell. I would assume it is going to be a subsection of operational support in covert action.

Mr. Aaron. Not necessarily. I think they are struggling with that at this point trying to define it properly and how it should be presented. I mean, I really don't think we know. They have an intention to do it because they recognize that potentially it is a source of real question as to how much money is being spent on clandestinc activities that is self-generated by the Agency because of its proprietary activities.

Mr. diGenova. The impact, Senator, was also to show that the Committee had looked at this broadly, was aware of possible budget and authorization implications of various entities, including proprietaries, and that it wanted to say something about that. It was not necessarily anything dramatic.

Senator Huddleston. Well, I will agree with that. I am just worried about if you say you expose proprietaries too much, you are exposing cover.

Mr. Aaron. Well, this is internal. This is classified.

Mr. diGenova. This is not public.

Mr. Maxwell. Well, I think the language the Senator suggested got to that.

Mr. Aaron. Well, let me see if I can read out what I would propose along the lines I think we discussed.

The oversight committee should require that the fiscal impact of proprietaries be made clear in the DCI's budget presentation to the oversight committee. If you want to add the appropriations committee, you can, but I think the point is that that happens.

Mr. Kirbow. If you'll listen just one minute, Mr. Miller knows and I believe the Senator knows that "in the Senate there is a formal budget presentation made to the Appropriations Committees." They are not made elsewyere. Reports are made to oversight committees on the status and all of these other things, and if they request any money for those proprietaries, they would request that before the authorizing committee. If you are just trying to accomplish getting it made known to the oversight committee, drop the word "budget presentation" and adopt the common usage of the annual report of the Agency or of the DCI.

But that is kind of a word of art. Those are words of art in the Senate, and they will seize on it because today they don't do it for anybody else but the Appropriations Committee.

Senator Huddleston. I think that's reasonable enough. It ought to be clear.

Mr. Aaron. Let me try another fix here because I'm not too sure.

The oversight committee shall require the fiscal impact of proprietaries in the CIA's budget be made clear in the Director's authorization presentation, or what phrase is that? In the Director's what?

Mr. Kirbow. The DCI's annual report to the appropriate oversight committee.

Senator Huddleston. The DCI's annual report.

Mr. Kirbow. The Agency would not report separately. They should make their presentation a part of the DCI's report to the appropriate oversight committee.

Mr. Maxwell. While we are on that, could I, on No. 6, we have already, I thought, by statute prevented any covert action being funded other than by (a) appropriation to a covert action budget, or (b) the contingency reserve.

Mr. diGenova. That's right.

Mr. Maxwell. D oes that make No. 6 redundant?

Mr. Kirbow. Yes.

Senator Huddleston. The only comment I would make is that the other is not an accomplished fact yet. This might be accepted and that might not.

Mr. Maxwell. Well, the reason I say that is that the way this reads, I would have or would be opposed to it because it provides an exception with the approval of the oversight committees, when we want, I think, to be able to go to the Congress and say, we recommend most strenuously that only these two methods be used for funding, rather than providing a third method and someone says, well, maybe we should have a fourth method, and I would like to go with the strongest possible recommendation in regard to the earlier statutory requirement that it only be by specific appropriation to covert action and the contingency reserve fund.

Mr. Kirbow. Otherwise, Mr. Chairman, we will stand a chance of getting the other amended, to allow the oversight committee to allow it.

Mr. diGenova. Why don't we say this by statute, and then have the rest of the sentence an addendum which would just allude to the fact that funding is to be accomplished to the method we set out if you want to eliminate it.

Well, this was the problem that was raised, or an issue that was raised during the study, and this is set in here for that reason. It can easily be removed if it is inconsistent with another recommendation of the Committee.

Mr. Aaron. Well, we have two or three different earlier provisions that relate to this. The first is that reprogramming authority, defining reprogramming authority, the possibility that something used for a program covert action X which involves a proprietary that generates a certain amount of money, can be used for program Y.

The second issue is we have proposed that covert actions be funded either by line item or by the contingency reserve.

The third thing we proposed is that the contingency reserve be replenished, if I am correct, only by appropriation, concurrence of the oversight Committee.

Now, what this in effect does, I think the question that he's driving at is, what do you do with the profits of a proprietary organization? Can you put it in the contingency reserve?

If so, our other recommendation would pick up the notion that it can only be done with the concurrence of the Committee.

Is there some other purpose, direct transfer? Well, presumably one of the limitations on reprogramming -- and this would be a fair point to make here, as part of its definition of limitations on reprogramming, it is recommended that the oversight committee proscribe the allocation of profits from any proprietary to a covert operation without their express consent. And this is really kind of -- if it doesn't go through the contingency reserve, it really goes to the question of reprogramming.

Now, I realize that we have said that our other recommendation by implication would prohibit this, but it is only by implication, I would think.

Mr. Maxwell. My sense is that by providing this --

Mr. Aaron. You kind of create a channel.

Mr. Maxwell. It's not that you create a channel, but you aid the, increase the temptation for the proprietaries to try to generate funds, and secondly, I think it is the easiest way for the oversight committee to have a handle on covert action, and particularly its funding, is to say there are two ways you can do it. You can do it either by the regular appropriation process, or you can do it through the contingency reserve fund. But if you start to build in the ways that the contingency reserve fund can be replenished, I think people -- I think there may be a loss of control.

Mr. Aaron. Well, this is a way it can be replenished, and this is not prohibited by anything we have recommended yet.

Mr. Maxwell. I understand that, but I guess I was trying to clean up the organizational structure.

Mr. Kirbow. I think this is the problem with recommending the legislation piecemeal, is that the insurance company out there is a covert operation. It is a secret operation at the agency conducted in that manner, and if you allow only covert operation to be funded only from the contingency reserve, whatever monies they generate will have to go back into the general treasury because they cannot be used to either replenish the contingency reserve or to operate a covert or to perform a covert function or operation.

So they are not even -- they can't not only use the profits to do that, they cannot use the general monies that they generate from that to conduct. They will have to fund that insurance program in the contingency reserve.

Mr. diGenova. No, not at all, because it is not a covert operation. That is not being use to fund a covert operation. It has been used to pay pensions and annuities to foreign agents. It's not a covert operation.

Senator Huddleston. Agents are covert. If you restrict it to use of funds, if it is not already done, no funds derived from the operations of proprietaries shall be used for any other purpose except the operation of the proprietary and any profits shall be returned to the general treasury.

It precludes it, doesn't it?

Mr. Aaron. That would solve the problem, yes.

Mr. Kirbow. And that's what they are doing today by regulation.

Senator Huddleston. Can we say that?

Mr. Aaron. I don't see why not.

Mr. diGenova. Well, we say that in our recommendation No. 4.

Mr. Aaron. Well, this says --

Mr. diGenova. That deals with terminations and liquidations.

Mr. Aaron. This is liquidations, and terminations. This is not just operations.

Mr. Maxwell. There is one problem, a slight problem. That is that some of the profits are reinvested. It is not that they take everything over or break even.

Senator Huddleston. Well, I didn't say that. I said all funds not needed in the operation.

Mr. Bader. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, you could amend No. 4 to all returns of funds or profits not needed for the operation.

Mr. diGenova. There you go, whether from liquidations, terminations or profits exceed for the needs of the operation of the individual proprietaries should be remitted to the U.S. Treasury.

Senator Huddleston. You can work that out so that it would be understood that there is a need to keep a certain reserve back.

Mr. diGenova. We will unite 4 and 6.

Senator Huddleston. That's all but 5.

Mr. diGenova. 5 is only about the Department of Justice being notified as to the disposition.

Mr. Aaron. Now, we have two recommendations with respect to cover. The first is just to recommend that the Department of State stop publishing data which makes it possible to identify people under cover.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, just a minute. On No. 5 I do have a question here.

The Agency doesn't sign off on any other disposal of United States properties and military bases or major edifices or anything like that.

Mr. diGenova. And the reason for that is every other government agency is subject to the rules and statutes of the Federal Disposal of Property Act, and the CIA isn't.

Mr. Kirbow. Do you see this could be an abuse area?

Mr. diGenova. I could see the Attorney General, if he knew that Admiral Raborn or some other Director is putting pressure on the CIA to dispose of a piece of property, would want to know about that, since they are not subject to the Federal Disposal of Property Act like every other government agency is.

I don't think -- I think the record clearly shows, and the General Counsel indicated that he was not opposed to having outside review of their disposals, provided it was classified or done in a classified way since they have never had any problem.

Mr. Kirbow. What you are doing here, approving the final disposition of disposal, if you are intending that he review the disposal process or participate in it, he wouldn't have known about Raborn. He wouldn't have known about Raborn at all because he didn't dispose of it to his client, and this would not pick up that kind of abuse that you have discussed here.

Mr. diGenova. Suppose it had been disposed of to Admiral Raborn, and they knew about it, and the AG said, why is this being done? It would raise a red flag which would not otherwise be raised since the Federal Disposal of Property Act would not have applied which would have flagged that legally to any other agency.

Mr. Aaron. It would also strengthen the Agency's hand to resist those purposes, to just simply say, hey, this has to be signed out by the Attorney General. This isn't going to work.

It seems to me that what we do need here --

Mr. Kirbow. If what we are trying to do is get his participation, just having him approve it doesn't get his participation, I think we ought to put that in if that's what we want to do.

Mr. diGenova. I think the word "approve" is wrong. It should be "participate." The sale or disposition of any CIA proprietary --

Senator Huddleston. How are you going to make it "participate?"

Mr. diGenova. I think the word we want is "consultation."

Senator Huddleston. I think what we are trying to do is replace what other agencies have to do in an overt way and under a specific law, which this agency is not under, so it will have some assurance that it is being done in a proper way.

Mr. Kirbow. I don't disagree with the AG being in on the act, but this one gets you participation on disposition.

Senator Huddleston. Well, figure a way to get it done.

Mr. Aaron. Well, what I wanted to say was I would like to note that back on page 67 where we have struck out the reference to Mr. Raborn and intend to expand on the pressures having been brought to bear, part of that expansion should include a statement that there is no -- or that the Federal Disposal of Property Act does not apply to the CIA, which is a crucial aspect.

Mr. Kirbow. They are exempt, and then bring in the requirement for CIA, or for the AG participation.

Mr. Aaron. And that includes that.

Mr. diGenova. So we will rewrite 5 to make it consultation.

Ms. Culbreath. David, on cover, may I just say, didn't we decide to delete the opening paragraph?

Mr. Aaron. You're right, you're right.

Ms. Culbreath. We were just going to list the recommendations.

Mr. diGenova. Yeah, we already said that.

Mr. Aaron. NOw, we have a recommendation that the CIA should make an effort to place a greater proportion of its officers abroad under nonofficial cover, and that recommendation is in brackets. Recommendation (a), that the CIA make a greater effort to place a greater proportion of its officers abroad, "under nonofficial cover" is in brackets.

Senator Huddleston. That relates to the Welch discussion.

Mr. Aaron. It relates to the Welch discussion and it relates to the difficulties and problems of official cover.

Mr. Bader. How do you feel about this, Joe?

Mr. diGenova. This is a problem because just like the man says, cover is a relative thing. I don't think there is anything wrong with saying that the CIA, that they should make an effort to put -- really not much of a recommendation -- should make an effort to place a greater proportion of its officers abroad under nonofficial cover, and the Agency does not see that in this form, wouldn't view that as a bad thing. They thin cover is, if it is deep and effective, is okay. They just say well, their answer this way, well, you know, you don't do much work under deep, nonofficial cover, and one of the prices you pay is you don't have a lot of operational freedom. You have to work hard at your regular job and you don't do a whole heck of a lot.

The recommendation, the way it is phrased, is sort of a push to them to see if they can find better ways. It also probably tells them that maybe they should use proprietaries abroad a little more, which are very, very efficient, according to Eric, according to both things, operations and cover.

Mr. Aaron. I think we have got to be careful on this point. I mean, we ought to wait until the staff director returns because I think he has a particular interest in this suggestion, but we are talking about moving more people into unofficial cover. I would like to express my own persional reservations about that in terms of its relationship to a number of things that the Committee has already decided to do.

Senator Huddleston. We are eliminating a lot of cover.

Mr. Aaron. That's the first thing.

Now, the second thing -- and these are nonoffocial cover categories. The second thing that we are doing is trying to place somewhat greater authority in the hands of the ambassador and the missions overseas to know what is going on. That is something that they can do when it is in their house. It is something that's extremely difficult for them to do when it is off in the forest someplace.

So it is -- and as Joe just said, it looks like a recommendation to use more proprietaries, in part because it is in the same section, but in reality because that is one of the ways they might do it, and I just wonder how much we have thought through for ourselves where the balance of our recommendations lie, particularly since most of the stuff is derived basically from operational experience anyway.

There was a period, toward the end of Mr. Bissell's career in the Agency, or maybe shortly thereafter, when they began to try to put more people in unofficial cover, and it wasn't a very good experience for them.

Mr. Kirbow. David, how does the ambassador lose control, whether it is official or unofficial, except that he has got them in his compound? It is an official government function over which he has absolute control.

Senator Huddleston. But if they keep coming to the embassy to check with him, they blow their cover, unless they do it by telephone.

Mr. Kirbow. Well, I don't think they should go to the embassy at all. I think their contact should become covert.

Mr. diGenova. Well, we're sort of caught between a rock and a hard place because we know the official cover is we cover it best .

Senator Huddleston. Well, maybe we could approach in that one way is to improve official covert

Mr. Aaron. That is the one recommendation we make here, but the limits on that are very -- they are just structural, like.

Senator Huddleston. It seems to me like we are in an area that we know a lot less about than the people who are in the business.

Mr. Aaron. That is sort of my feeling.

Mr. Kirbow. We are asking them to proscribe against anything that they can convince an oversight committee in the future is essential in the trend of that time.

Senator Huddleston. Shouldn't we say that the time has come for a whole review of cover to see whether or not they can find some better ways?

Mr. Maxwell. We might say that the first large scale study in '48 and '49 of the Agency, done by Mr. Dulles, among others, recommended very strongly that there be more unofficial cover.

I think the Agency has been under considerable pressure throughout its existence to do that, and as Joe pointed out there are certain limits to what it has been able to do.

Senator Huddleston. Well, I think rather than suggest what ought to be more or less official or unofficial cover, the whole matter ought to be studied immediately by the Agency, and see if they can find some new ways consistent with all the restraints and prohibitions that the Committee has placed upon them.

(General laughter.)

Senator Huddleston. All right, where does that leave us here today as we close out today's session?

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, might I suggest that in keeping with an earlier discussion today, that because it is a summary of findings as well as an introduction, that perhaps while we are nice and fresh, tomorrow we might take up the introductory section prepared by the Staff Director, so that if we change it much, we either make the rest of our --

Senator Huddleston. Have any of the other members seen it at all, Bill?

Mr. Miller. Just Senator Mathias.

Senator Huddleston. All right, do you want to meet at 10:00 o'clock in the morning?

Mr. Aaron. Are we going to terminate now?

Senator Huddleston. They've got a vote going and it's 5:10. I think we'd better.

(Whereupon, at 5:10 o'clock p.m., the Subcommittee recessed subject to the call of the Chair.)

Thursday, March 25, 1976

United States Senate,
Select Committee to Study Governmental
Operations with Respect to Intelligence Activities,
Washington, D. C.

The Committee met, pursuant to notice, at 2:43 o'clock p.m., in Room S-407, the Capitol, the Honorable Frank Church (Chairman) presiding.

Present: Senators Church (presiding), Mondale, Huddleston, Hart of Michigan, Morgan, Hart of Colorado, Tower, Mathias, Baker and Schweiker.

Also present: William G. Miller, Staff Director; Frederick A. O. Scwharz, Jr., Chief Counsel; and Charles Kirbow, Elizabeth Culbreath, Michael Madican, Charles Lombard, William Bader, Ted Rolson, Burt Wides, Walter Ricks, Rick Inderfurth, John Bayly, David Aaron, Elliot Maxwell, Joseph Dennin, Margaret Carpenter, Martha Talley, Paul Wallach and Jim Johnston, Professional Staff Members.

PROCEEDINGS

The Chairman. We will soon have a quorum. Why don't we begin with the Recommendation No. 43 on page 77, having to do with academics.

My understanding is that this recommendation has been redrafted along the lines of the Committee's recommendations, and as it now stands it calls for the CIA academics and the institution to be informed, and for any student being recruited to be so informed.

There is a choice in the latter case in informing him before he is paid or informing him before he leaves the U.S. Will you explain that to me, please?

Mr. Aaron. In the course of our discussion about the recruitment of students off campuses, there were two categories of concern. One was for the integrity of the institutions themselves, and the second was, in turn, for the students that might be involved.

To take the second one first, the Committee received testimony that some foreign students recruited as agents for the CIA were brought into kind of a holding status at a certain point in which they were working for, if you will, CIA proprietaries or CIA front organizations where they might conduct some operational activity, provide some information, under the impression that they were not working for the CIA but for a company or, I think as one put it, I think, a group of investors.

Concern was expressed by the Committee in considering this testimony that this might be rather severe for the student once he discovered the fact he had been working for the CIA, or should his government find that out, so that it was an element of coercion to hire somebody under, if you will, false pretenses.

That second proviso, then, in effect says that we may pitch and recruit a student as an agent, but you must, when you do that, when you really bring him into an operational relationship with the Agency, he should be so informed and not brought into this sort of --

The Chairman. Let's go off the record.

(Discussion off the record.)

The Chairman. The question that I have on this recommendation is why shouldn't the foreign student being recruited by the CIA be informed of his relationship with the CIA at the time that that relationship is established?

Why do you condition it upon payment or leaving the country?

Senator Huddleston. Well, I was going to say there are many, many initial contacts that do not advance maybe much further than that, and for the CIA to have to be exposed maybe on each of those might not be reasonable. What we have tried to do is to make the wittingness be known about the time that they are to perform some service. Up to that time they are still maybe prospects, where they may not have been recruited.

The Chairman. Which do you think the Committee should adopt of these two options?

Mr. Aaron. Actually, one could use both of these. I think the point is that the danger to the student, if there is any, comes when he leaves the United States, either to return to his own country or perhaps someplace else, but the commitment or involvement which ought to be witting really needs to come when he starts being paid, when he becomes in fact, or has a real relationship with the Agency. You could really establish both standards, because it might well be that he could leave the country but not have yet been paid, and not really have a relationship that was anything more than kind of an association or an option, something of that character.

The Chairman. Well, what is the will of the Committee as to these two options?

Senator Huddleston. Well, this represents a distillation of what we have been proposing as Senator Mondale develops for us, I believe, and I would move that we adopt this report, and use both of these, an either/or.

The Chairman. Whichever comes first, huh, either before he is given payment of any kind or leaves the United States, whichever may occur first.

Would that be satisfactory to the Committee?

All right. Without objection, then, that will be the decision of the Committee.

What else do you have?

Mr. Aaron. We have two other recommendations.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, could I be recorded in opposition to this?

The Chairman. Yes, Senator Hart of Colorado is recorded as in opposition.

Mr. Madigan. Senator, there is a proxy in opposition as well.

The Chairman. Senator Baker wants to be recorded in opposition as well.

Senator Mathias. I would, I think Senator Goldwater had a very strong proxy that I read into the record on this subject at the last meeting.

Mr. Kirbow. Against restricting any use of academics.

Senator Mathias. I don't have a proxy with him today, but I feel his position ought to be noted.

The Chairman. Very well, then, with those particular reservations made part of the record, the Committee will approve the amended Recommendation No. 43.

We move then to Recommendation 45 on page 78.

Mr. Aaron. We attempted to redraft this along the lines as we were instructed, I believe.

As it came out, it would prohibit the subsidy of any writing, publication, distribution within the United States or its territories, of any book, magazine, article and so forth. It has been pointed out that this formulation would prevent the writing of a book, even in a foreign language, within the United States, to be published abroad and distributed abroad, or any such materials from being published within the United States, even if they were distributed abroad.

Now, that may be too restrictive and go beyond what the Committee intended, and so therefore we wanted to raise this here, to get a better understanding of what we were attempting to accomplish.

As I understand it, what we were -- it was not clear, but it is possible that what the Committee had in mind was that any writing, publication for distribution in the United States would have been the appropriate formulation for this, and if that is correct, we can make a very easy fix.

Senator Morgan. Why wouldn't it?

The Chairman. Why wouldn't it accomplish it if we say that by statute the CIA should be prohibited from subsidizing the writing or production or distribution within the United States or its territories of any book, magazine, article, publication, film, or video or audio tape unless attributed to the CIA.

Wouldn't that take care of it?

Mr. Aaron. If that is what the Committee intends, that would take care of it.

Senator Mondale. Publicly attributed.

Mr. Aaron. Publicly.

Senator Huddleston. That is getting at what really we are trying to do.

The Chairman. How about the balance of 45, "nor should the CIA be permitted to undertake any activity to accomplish indirectly such distribution within the United States or its territories.

Well, I think that follows and should be a part of it.

Very well.

Senator Mathias. Mr. Chairman, I wonder, while we are in this area, if you could refresh my recollection, whether "grantees" in No. 44 applies to both foreign and American grantees.

Mr. Bader. Yes, it would, Senator, under this language, because the Fulbright program or the -- such government-sponsored programs to include, too, include foreigners. As I understood it from the discussion of the Committee, the intent here was to ensure that public funds that were publicly devoted to a specific purpose were so spent and that was the issue that was involved here, was the appropriated funds for educational programs be kept to educational programs and not to be used operationally. But the language here would certainly include foreigners.

Mr. Maxwell. Bill, would this prohibit the use of any individual person who is sponsored by an educational or cultural program, although not fully funded by the Federal Government?

Senator Tower. This is a question I wanted to ask.

Could one of our networks pick up a portion of a film broadcast abroad by the CIA and run it as part of a documentary to show what they are doing and that kind of thing?

The Chairman. I think the way it has been modified that is not a problem. This says "by statute the CIA should be prohibited from subsidizing writings," or production.

Senator Tower. That is what I mean, you are not precluded from showing it, but it should not be done under CIA auspices or government auspices.

The Chairman. And it should not be written for the purpose of being shown in this country.

Senator Tower. Yes.

Mr. Aaron. Nor under the indirect clause, I think, nor should the CIA go to CBS and say "we've got this wonderful film."

The Chairman. Using a network for the purpose of bringing it back. That would be an indirect way, and that would be wrong also.

Senator Tower. I understand, yes.

The Chairman. Well, then, if everybody understands the way we have recommended the change in 45, without objection the Committee approves it.

Let us go, then, to the next subject, the structural changes, the role of the DCI on page 61.

Mr. Aaron. I'm sorry, Mr. Chairman. We have one other question, that would be Recommendation 47. The Committee agreed to extend --

Mr. Kirbow. Excuse me, Mr. Aaron. Senator Mathias's question was on recommendation 44.

The Chairman. Were you satisfied with the answer?

Senator Mathias. Well, the question that was left floating was what about a student who is in a program which is primarily funded by some private institution, although there may be some small element --

Mr. Maxwell. For instance, any major university that sponsored an individual coming under 44, which receives Federal Government funds, might be barred under a broad reading of 44, and it might be helpful to make that intent clearer in 44, if that is a concern of the Committee.

Mr. Aaron. I think this goes to the grantee as opposed to the institution.

Now, if it is true --

The Chairman. It is the grantee that is receiving funds.

Mr. Aaron. If you have a grantee receiving funds from more than one source, then he receives them from more than one source, but if he is a grantee of a Federal program --

Mr. Maxwell. But the problem is receiving funds through educational and/or cultural programs.

For instance, if he were totally funded by the University of Maryland, which received financial support from the United States Government, arguably he is covered by that. It is not that he is receiving Federal grants. I think that is the intention.

Mr. Aaron. It should be U.S. Government educational --

Mr. Bader. Would that help?

The Chairman. Through educational and/or cultural programs sponsored by the United States Government. Wouldn't that take care of it?

Senator Huddleston. Well, grantees who are receiving directly from the United States Government or through educational or cultural programs supported by the United States Government.

The Chairman. Sponsored by.

Senator Huddleston. Well, in other words, whether he is getting them directly himself as a grantee, or whether he is receiving them from an educational program that is itself supported by the Federal Government.

Senator Mathias. I don't want to prolong this, but what about a program which is really directed right at this area which has been referred to, the armed services military educational operate?

Mr. Bader. I'm sorry, sir?

Mr. Aaron. Well, let me see if I understand the different examples. The student leader grant or the political leader grant that the State Department has where they bring foreigners to the United States for a period of time, presumably to acquaint them with the country and what have you, under this language those people while on the grant would be immune from being recruited by the CIA. This doesn't mean that they couldn't recruit them at some other point in their careers, but that during the period of that grant they would not be in effect brought here and used for that purpose. That is, I think, part of the intent of this particular provision.

nd 1

Senator Mathias. Let me give you another example. Say you have an Iranian naval officer who comes over here to Fort McNair.

Is he fair game?

Mr. Miller. That is not educational or cultural. It would be military.

Senator Huddleston. I believe if he were going through the War College --

Senator Tower. If he were going through the National War College, how do you classify that?

Senator Mathias. He could come to the industrial base or civilian --

Mr. Kirbow. He could go to the Industrial College or the War College.

Senator Schweiker. Can you exclude military training?

Senator Mathias. I don't know. I don't know what you want.

Senator Huddleston. We are training a lot of them or we entertain a lot of them.

Senator Schweiker. It seems to me you have to put some proviso about military training in there.

The Chairman. Well, it depends upon what the policy should be. I had thought the attempt here was to immunize any foreigner who comes here on a program sponsored by the Government of the United States and receives a grant for that program, to immunize him during that period from being recruited by the CIA.

Senator Schweiker. Well, if he is here for military purposes, then we know it is a military relationship, I would think that is suspect.

The Chairman. Would you want him subject to recruitment?

Senator Schweiker. Well, if he comes over here militarily, you are so close to him, what is the difference?

Mr. Aaron. Well, I think the point of the prohibition really is this, that these programs are created for one particular purpose. They are considered by the Congress for that particular purpose and the funds are voted for that particular purpose. If the programs are then used for another purpose by the Government, that was considered and suggested that that second purpose should not be used.

Now, if you want to exempt certain categories here and say, well, the military is a different thing, you can do that. You can find a way to express that.

The Chairman. Well, it could be done. If you want to recruit foreign military officers, we can bring them over to put them through the War College.

Mr. Miller. What other training?

Senator Huddleston. Well, we have a steady stream at Fort Knox, Kentucky of military people. I don't know what kind of training. Most of them are, of course, are from friendly nations to start with.

I don't know, you know, military. Once a person puts on a uniform, he becomes fair game in a number of ways. He gives up a lot of protections that civilians have.

Senator Schweiker. You allow him to recruit -- under other policies here we allow them to recruit foreign military officers because I think that's an even more valid relationship than the students, but I make it clear that what we don't want to do, which is to abort our honest to goodness cultural exchange and other programs.

The Chairman. This could be done by saying "By statute the CIA should be prohibited from using operationally grantees programs is much clearer.

Senator Schweiker. Can we talk about Defense and military training programs at the same time? It seems to me that's the criteria, bringing a guy over here and educating him on defense and military must be to the advantage of our military, so you know what the relationship is to begin with. You are not unwittingly using the guy. You are pretty witting.

If the guy goes to the American War College, he is pretty fair game.

The Chairman. You can write an exception for the American War College and all of the military and civilian personnel receiving training under the auspices of the United States armed services who are fair game.

(General laughter.)

Senator Huddleston. Except I agree with Dave, that is a little awkward to zero in on this particular group. Couldn't we find some way --

Mr. Kirbow. Mr. Chairman, I think it is not intended this apply only to foreign students coming this way, you include all American students going in the other direction, or under any other grant.

Mr. Aaron. The intention of the provision initially, as a matter of fact, its primary effect was for American students traveling abroad.

Senator Tower. Well, I see no problem with that. I know I don't have the votes here, but --

The Chairman. Which part do you have?

Senator Tower. Well, not being able to use American students abroad on some grant to gather intelligence, when most of the people the damned Soviets send over here on these cultural exchanges are really clued into the government program, indoctrinated and briefed thoroughly before they get here. I am not going to tie our hands like that. The rest of you can, but I'm not going to.

I will write a vigorous dissent on that.

Senator Morgan. May I make a comment on that?

I'm inclined to agree, and I'm also inclined to agree that we are going so far in our foreign intelligence that we are endangering the whole report, so you make that kind of an argument on the floor of the Senate on this and on two or three other things. I'm not picking at any of them. I am just sort of accepting the recommendations of the Subcommittee, but my reaction has been that maybe we are getting a little bit so far afield that we may endanger the acceptance of our whole report.

The Chairman. Senator Huddleston?

Senator Huddleston. I would just say this, that the Subcommittee has been cognizant of that situation. I think it is because of that that some of these recommendations are already softer than some of us thought would be appropriate, and this is one of the fields. There was a considerable amount of support of the idea that academics be off limits, period, and students in order to protect the integrity of our entire academic community, and it is the realization that if we continued to close the possibilities for recruitment, and the adverse effect that that would have, maybe, on our ability to gather intelligence, that some of us backed off of this, what would be the optimum, we think, position to take. So this already represents somewhat of a retreat from the principle that some would like to see established, and in this case I think we are again faced with the question of whether or not we want a government-sponsored program to enjoy a high level of integrity so that the people who are participating in it and the American taxpayer who is supporting it can have some confidence that it is doing what it was set out to do and what the publicly announced purposes of it are.

And if we don't do that, if we permit it to be used as an operational intelligence operation, then it seems to me like we ought to announce that, that that ought to be one of the purposes so stated in the grant to start with, while we are likely to get an education, it is also likely if we can we will have you gather intelligence for us.

Senator Morgan. Well, Dee, I think you are getting off base for us. There is nothing that says they are required to do it.

Senator Huddleston. That is correct.

Senator Morgan. In other words, we are not going to condition this grant on --

Senator Huddleston. Well --

Senator Morgan. Let me finish out, now. What you are leading up to is you are saying we are going to condition this grant on your cooperation with other governmental agencies.

Senator Huddleston. I am saying that is not beyond the realm of possibility in some cases, if we don't put some prohibition.

Senator Morgan. Well, I think there may be times, especially in the light of what we heard in the past year, when, you know, we might make that assumption, but I don't think that on the whole when you are dealing with the United States Government that you can really assume --

Senator Hudddleston. But you can't assume he is not, either.

The Chairman. But what worries me is you get a student who in good faith goes abroad for the purpose of study and qualifies for a Government grant, and he depends upon that money and then he, when he gets over there and wants to complete his studies, he is approached, and he can be approached in such a way that he can be made to feel that if he does not throw in with the CIA and do this and that, he may find that the grant will be cut off or he can't complete the study as he intended. He feels a certain dependency upon the money that he is receiving, and he has an expectation he wants to fulfill. And thus he is in a very vulnerable position when he is approached.

Senator Morgan. Well, that is a persuasive argument, but let me ask you, have we had any evidence that that sort of thing has happened?

The Chairman. Well, I don't know.

Senator Morgan. Well, it is a very persuasive argument, but I just wonder if we should, in the absence of abuse on that part, whether or not we should go this far.

The Chairman. What about it, Mr. Bader?

Mr. Bader. Mr. Chairman, I might say in partial response to Senator Tower's remarks that the Agency's basic instruction for the operational use of individuals, 50-10, specifically prohibits the operational use of Fulbright grantees. They have already made that decision in 1967, and reconfirmed in 1973. I assume part of that came from agitation at the time in '67 and Senator Fulbright's own determination that that program not be used for operational purposes.

It was the original intent of this language to extend that prohibition, which is now a matter of public record, this -- actually, that part of the instruction is in the public record now under the Freedom of Information Act, that part of 50-10 that talks about Fulbright grantees. It was the original intent of the recommendation that is now before you to extend that prohibition on Fulbright grantees to all of those under the Fulbright-Hayes legislation. Under the specifics of the Agency's interpretation, it makes a distinction between those students, or graduate students, or professors selected by the Board of Foreign Scholarships, and the rest -- and the rest includes cultural leader grants and the like.

Now, perhaps it might be the sensible thing in the language like this to confine it to the Fulbright-Hayes Act, which is the basic legislation which deals with this.

Senator Schweiker. How many others would you have outside of that? Would you have a lot of other programs?

Mr. Bader. Other programs?

Senator Schweiker. What percent of the total picture is the Fulbright-Hayes Act?

Mr. Bader. I really wouldn't know, Senator. I think it is the major part of it, actually. You could have a National Endowment for the Humanities fellowship in which a person would go overseas, and this, under the language we now have before you, that would include those individuals.

The Chairman. Well, I can see how vulnerable a grantee might be when approached, and if we have already written into law a prohibition that relates to the Fulbright scholars, I should think it ought to apply to any others that are receiving educational or cultural grants from the United States.

Senator Tower. That is not a law, that is a regulation.

Mr. Aaron. And CIA's own regulation.

The Chairman. But then it was adopted as part of the law, I thought you said.

Mr. Bader. No, sir. I said it has been made public through the Freedom of Information Act. This is an internal directive of the Agency, and as the Senators know, those directives are certainly subject to change, so there really are, in effect, two basic parts of this recommendation. One was to commit the present internal prohibitions of the CIA to law, and then to extend it, and the issue before the Committee, in addition to whether there should be an extension, is sort of how far and what language should be used to portray or convey that prohibition?

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman, do we have anything from the Agency on this?

Senator Huddleston. I think you've got to weigh, to some extent, the value of the two programs, of our cultural exchange programs' importance. I think the public knowledge of any one individual becomes known as a spy who is associated with a program, it has a devastating effect, in my judgment, on the program and on all students who are participating in it. I just think the risk is too great.

Senator Tower. Well, my question at that point would be to what extent does our cultural exchange program impact on people behind the Iron Curtain, to convince them as people that we are nice folks, that they ought to influence their government to be a little bit more friendly toward us? It doesn't have any impact at all in a totalitarian state, none.

It is really a one way street.

Now, I am all for cultural exchange, simply because I like to watch Russian ballet dancers, especially females, but the fact of the matter is cultural change does more to soften up the American public toward the Iron Curtain than the other way around.

The Chairman. That is an argument as to the merits of cultural exchange, and how you view ballerinas, but the question here we face is whether or not we should put American students in a position where they feel they must --

Senator Tower. I don't think they must be coerced.

The Chairman. But there is an element of intimidation involved if they are receiving a grant from the government.

Senator Tower. Well, I would favor a specific prohibition against making that a condition of getting a grant or scholarship of some sort.

Senator Baker. Or continuing one.

Senator Tower. Or continuing one.

Senator Hart of Michigan. Well, John, what do you say to Dee's point? If my roommate turns out to be a spy, it is automatically assumed I am, and every guy in the outfit. What does this do to the American that is over there, all of them? I don't think that is right.

Senator Tower. Well, I think in many instances American operations abroad that have been completely innocent have been labeled as spy operations for propaganda purposes by the other side, and they will do that if they choose to. They will not do it if they choose not to do it.

The Chairman. But you have many of these students who are not inside Russia or in a Communist country. We have educational and cultural programs in Third World countries and in the western world.

Senator Tower. I understand that.

The Chairman. And there, if someone is caught engaging in a CIA action of some kind, then everybody is contaminated. The whole thing then becomes suspect in France or England or wherever it might be.

Senator Tower. What if the grantee comes to CIA and says, I have made some contacts over here that I think would be of value in terms of passing intelligence along to you?

Are you going to turn him down and say, no, you are on a Fulbright grant, we can't let you do that?

Senator Huddleston. No, they could use his information to contact somebody else. He would not necessarily be operational.

Mr. Bader. Operational use, under the Agency's definition, has two major elements to it. First is that the purposes to be accomplished, and objectives, are established by the Agency, and the second is that the individual involved is tasked to do that, ordered to do it, if you please.

Operational use does not, by the Agency's definition, involve individuals who would come to the Central Intelligence Agency to voluntarily give whatever information that they think would be of value to the Agency, the kind of information that the Contacts Division normally would like to have.

Senator Tower. Yes, but once having done that, the Agency determines this person is valuable and they observe this person and they put him under a control officer.

Mr. Bader. Then he would come under this condition. That would be operational use.

Senator Huddleston. It would not include a debriefing of him when he came back.

Mr. Kirbow. Nor could he be asked to go to a single meeting more and report back on the very same subject that he just reported on, which might be a critical target to the United States Governments' national security.

Mr. Bader. Once he is operational, he has to accomplish a particular task or purpose, then he is operationally used under the terms.

Senator Tower. Even if he initiates the contact with the Agency in the first place.

Mr. Bader. Only, Senator, if there is a second stage in this, if the individual --

Senator Tower. I know. The second stage may be the most important.

Mr. Bader. It certainly may, and at that stage, under the Agency's definition, he would be operationally --

Senator Huddleston. I can't believe the Agency wouldn't have another entre of some sort.

Senator Tower. What kind of widespread abuse are we trying to prevent?

Has there been widespread abuse?

Mr. Bader. No, sir, there has not.

Senator Tower. There has not been.

Mr. Aaron. This occurs.

Mr. Bader. This occurs, yes.

Senator Hart of Michigan. What is the benefit -- there has been no abuse, but what benefit?

Senator Mondale. It's not -- that's not the word. It's not no abuse. It's not widespread.

Mr. Bader. The term is "not widespread."

Senator Tower. I said "widespread."

Mr. Bader. Yes, I said "widespread."

Senator Hart of Michigan. The question is, what benefits? Do we know?

Senator Huddleston. That is very difficult to ascertain.

Senator Tower. Significant abuse? Any record of abuse?

What record of abuse do we have?

Senator Hart of Michigan. Any record of significant benefit.

Mr. Bader. A record of significant abuse in the sense that Fulbright students or those under American educational programs have been used operationally. There is an extensive record over the years, but it is not of major importance to the Agency.

The Chairman. Well, apparently the Agency itself has restricted or has put the Fulbright scholars off limits, right?

Mr. Bader. That is correct, sir.

The Chairman. Well, then, --

Senator Hart of Michigan. That must be the result of a conclusion that either they were not beneficial or they didn't want to poison the program.

Why doesn't that reasoning apply to these others?

The Chairman. Well, I think it does, but we might as well come to a vote on it and decide whether we want to keep it or strike it.

Senator Huddleston. Well, to bring it to a vote, Mr. Chairman, I would move that Paragraph 44 --

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman, I would just kind of make one inquiry, I believe, and I already know the answer to it, that even though we are voting on this section, I believe the arrangement we had previously, that is to say, that none of this is final, and certainly not until we hear the comments of the Agency.

Is that still observed?

The Chairman. Yes, that is still the situation. Nothing becomes final until the final vote is taken, and anything can be reconsidered.

Senator Baker. Then we are going to have comments from the Agency. When, Bill, tomorrow?

Mr. Miller. Staff is going to get them tomorrow afternoon out there, and they are going to give it to us in writing, I think, tomorrow afternoon.

The Chairman. I suspect that the Agency will oppose many of these recommendations.

Senator Huddleston. No question about that.

The Chairman. I hope that won't be the single basis upon which we decide for or against.

Senator Huddleston. My motion includes, Mr. Chairman, that we exempt the military.

Senator Schweiker. You say it will include --

Senator Huddleston. That will be in my motion, in 44, that we exclude foreign military people.

The Chairman. All right.

The motion is made that Recommendation No. 44 be approved with the exception that it does not apply to foreign military personnel coming into this country, is that right?

Senator Huddleston. Yes.

The Chairman. Let's have a vote.

Do you want to call the roll, Mr. Miller?

Mr. Miller. Yes.

Mr. Hart of Michigan.

Senator Hart of Michigan. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Mondale.

Senator Mondale. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Huddleston.

Senator Huddleston. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Morgan.

Senator Morgan. No.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Hart of Colorado?

Senator Hart of Colorado. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Baker.

Senator Baker. No.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Mathias?

Senator Tower. You missed Goldwater. You missed Senator Goldwater.

Goldwater no by written proxy.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Mathias is in the phone booth.

Mr. Schweiker.

Senator Schweiker. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Tower?

Senator Tower. No.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Church?

The Chairman. Aye.

Senator Tower. I don't think it is going to affect the outcome, so I ask consent that he be recorded.

Mr. Miller. The ayes have it. It is six to four. Mr. Mathias is still in the phone booth.

Senator Tower. I ask consent that he be allowed to be recorded. It might change the outcome.

The Chairman. All right.

Let's go to 61 next.

Mr. Aaron. The next issue is on page 78A, Recommendation 47.

The Committee previously agreed to extend the CIA prohibitions on the use of media to the use of any person who regularly contributes material to publications and those involved directly or indirectly in the editing or setting policy and direction in the direction of the activities of U.S. media organizations.

What was unclear was whether this was the recommendation of the Committee to the CIA that it amend its regulations to do that, or whether this was to be embodied in statute as had been recommended in Recommendation 46.

ε 2

The Chairman. I'm sorry, I have lost you.

Mr. Aaron. You will find the words "proposed statutory CIA prohibition" and you see the words "proposed" and "statutory" are in brackets, reflecting uncertainty on our part as to whether it was the intention of the Committee that this prohibition simply be a CIA regulation or embodied in the statute, which is recommended in the recommendation of procedures.

The Chairman. Senator Huddleston, do you have any comment on this?

Senator Huddleston. I have a personal feeling that when we go too far statutorily in dealing with the press, that we sometimes get on thin ice. I don't know whether it would be appropriate to make some suggestion here that the press itself initiate certain standards and methods. Many of them in the press believe they ought to have anyhow.

I think the recommendation for the CIA is probably sufficient.

The Chairman. And let that be handled as a matter of CIA regulations.

Senator Huddleston. Rather than by statute.

The Chairman. Rather than by statute.

Is that acceptable to the Committee?

Senator Tower. I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. Would you repeat the proposition?

The Chairman. The proposition is that the Committee recommend that the CIA, by regulation, handle this matter rather than make it statutory.

Senator Tower. Well, I oppose it either by statute or by regulation, so I would suggest that those who favor the concept determine whether they want to do it by either statute or regulation. I am opposed to doing it by either.

Senator Schweiker. I would like to see it by statute if we are going to do it.

Senator Baker. Mr. Chairman, does this make any distinction between domestic media and -- on the media located physically within the United States and the U.S. media outside the United States?

The Chairman. No, it does not. It simply attempts to prevent the CIA from involving itself with personnel who are part of the U.S. media, whether here or abroad, as I read it.

Senator Tower. Okay, now, let me ask you a question.

What is there is a Reuters reporter in Moscow who is cooperating with us, and Reuters contributes regularly to U.S. media?

Senator Schweiker. We spent an hour on that. They are excluded. We argued that for an hour and I lost the point, so they would be excluded.

Senator Huddleston. This basically just extends to CIA's own prohibition that they had initiated against what we would normally think of as working journalists, and includes into it the executives and editors and those who may be freelancing.

Senator Tower. What if we got a freelancer for Time Magazine who is indeed a foreign national? Does he come under this prohibition?

Senator Huddleston. If he has some regular association with Time he would be.

Mr. Aaron. Under the Agency's current regulations and own prohibitions, a foreign journalist working for Time Magazine oversees would be prohibited from being used by them for operational purposes. That is their own position today. This would extend that prohibition to someone who is, what in the trade jargon is a stringer, or --

Senator Tower. This would include a stringer?

Senator Schweiker. It wouldn't cover Reuters or some other foreign news service.

Mr. Aaron. It would also apply to a foreigner who was, for example, if there were such a thing as an editor in the Paris Bureau of Time Magazine. I don't think they work that way, but say there were such a person, it would apply to him as well.

Senator Tower. What about the Paris Trib? What about that?

Mr. Aaron. A U.S. media organization.

Mr. Kirbow. It is excluded.

Senator Schweiker. That is a subsidiary of an American company.

Senator Tower. What about Reader's Digest Selecciones, which is their Spanish publication? Is that included?

Mr. Aaron. I assume so.

The Chairman. Well, according to the CIA's own restrictions, it is excluded now, except this would simply extend the exclusion to stringers, those who do not have regular employment.

Senator Huddleston. And editors and executives.

The Chairman. And editors and executives.

Mr. Bader. The present restriction, Senator Tower, that has been extended by the Agency in February, went to accredited journalists, accredited to U.S. media organizations. The only difference between this prohibition and the one already assumed by the Agency is that this moves further accreditation to include those who regularly contribute to U.S. media organizations or are a part of their structure.

Mr. Kirbow. The management structure.

Mr. Bader. The management structure, whether they contribute material to or are involved directly or indirectly in the preparation of material.

The Chairman. Well, I think if we are going to do it, we had better decide on the policy. If we want to keep the CIA out of U.S. media both at home and abroad, and we want to extend that to stringers as well, then I think it ought to be done by statute rather than just a recommendation by the Committee that the CIA do it, because the CIA regulations may or may not issue, and they can be changed at any time without notice.

Senator Tower. Well, Mr. Chairman, aren't we talking about two different things?

I don't mean foreign, you know, our foreign correspondents abroad writing CIA propaganda for American publications. We are talking about operations here, operational use, not use to write some article that the CIA wants planted in an American publication. That's not what I'm talking about. I'm talking about using him to gather intelligence, and it goes back directly to the CIA which doesn't serve as a publication.

The Chairman. But operational use can include many things, including writing propaganda and usually would if it involved journalists.

Senator Tower. Well, I think we have already got a prohibition on that.

Mr. Bader. The prohibition that the Central Intelligence Agency has self-imposed extends across the line from cover to placement to all operational use of individuals, accredited individuals to American media organizations. As I say, the difference between what the Agency has already taken upon itself and what this recommendation involves is this recommendation extends it to individuals who are not accredited.

There are a number -- the figures that the Committee has which have been authenticated by the Agency, that there are some 60 Americans who are affiliated or are part of American media organizations around the world, part of a larger network of some 400 journalists and the like who are part of the Agency's overall media asset program, and of those 60 under the Agency's present prohibitions, the ones recently imposed, it would go to just one third of those individuals.

This prohibition would extend it from the one third to all because the other two thirds include people that are under cover, who are in management, and who are not under the technical term accredited to U.S. media organizations.

Mr. Chairman, I might say if the Committee would look at the Recommendation 46 that goes before 47, perhaps it might bear in mind that the recommendation in 46, which takes the present Agency prohibitions and says that they should be established in law, if in 47, if the Committee should so decide to do it by recommendation, that they change their internal prohibitions, there will be a contrast between 46 and 47.

The Chairman. Well, let's have a vote. Let's go back to 46, and I take it that the recommendation is that this prohibition that the CIA has imposed upon itself ought to be written in statutory form.

Mr. Bader. That is the recommendation.

The Chairman. All right. Let's have a vote on that first of all, and then we'll take up 47.

Mr. Miller, will you call the roll?

Senator Huddleston. Mr. Chairman, I think I am probably the only one that has suggested that it should not be statutory, and I would just point out that that might be a result of the fact that I am in the media, so I would withdraw that unless somebody else wants to make that recommendation.

The Chairman. I thought yours went to 47.

This is 46.

Senator Huddleston. It did, but they both relate to the media.

The Chairman. Well, let's take a vote on 46, which would recommend that Congress enact a statute conforming to the CIA's self-imposed prohibition on U.S. journalists or foreign journalists accredited to the U.S. media abroad.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Hart of Michigan.

Senator Hart of Michigan. Did you want a roll call?

The Chairman. Yes.

Senator Hart of Michigan. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Mondale.

Senator Mondale. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Huddleston?

Senator Huddleston. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Morgan.

Senator Morgan. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Hart of Colorado.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Baker.

Senator Baker. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Goldwater.

Senator Tower. No by proxy.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Mathias.

(No response.)

Mr. Miller. Mr. Schweiker.

Senator Schweiker. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Tower.

Senator Tower. No.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Church..

The Chairman. Aye.

Senator Tower. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that Senator Mathias be recorded. It will not be changed.

The Chairman. All right.

Now can we go to 47 and vote it up or down on the understanding that this recommendation having to do with stringers and the use of executives would not take statutory form but it would be a recommendation to the CIA without such regulation.

Ms. Culbreath. Mr. Chairman, could I say just a word, please sir, with regard to whether it was done by directive or regulation or by statute. Yesterday one of the general recommendation that we discussed and the staff was asked to rewrite went to the question of any changes or waivers of Agency directives or recommendations, and as considered by the Committee yesterday. The agreement was -- and if that proposal is one of the general recommendations goes through any waiver of an existing regulation or any amendment of an existing regulation, that affected the significant policies or programs of the Agency, would have to go immediately to NSC and to the oversight committee so that they would know.

So what I am saying is that if you had a directive and there was a change in something like this which would be significant, there would have to be notice to the oversight committee and to the NSC.

The Chairman. Can we have a vote, then, on 47 before we go down to the Senate to this roll call.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Hart of Michigan.

Senator Hart of Michigan. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Mondale.

Senator Mondale. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Huddleston.

Senator Huddleston. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Morgan.

Senator Morgan. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Hart of Colorado.

Senator Hart of Colorado. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Baker.

Senator Baker. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Goldwater.

Senator Tower. No by proxy.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Mathias.

(No response.)

Mr. Miller. Mr. Schweiker.

Senator Schweiker. Aye.

Mr. Miller. Mr. Tower.

Senator Tower. No.

Mr.Miller. Mr. Church.

The Chairman. Aye.

Senator Tower. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that Senator Mathias be allowed to vote.

The Chairman. That will be so ordered.

All right, let's take a short recess and come back.

(Whereupon, at 4:05 o'clock p.m. the Committee recessed to reconvene at 10:00 o'clock a.m., Friday, March 26, 1976.)

The "Executive Action" Capability

Along with the question of authorization for actual assassination attempts, the Committee considered the extent and nature of authorization for a CIA project which included, as one element, the development of an assassination capability.

(a) Introduction

Sometime in early 1961, Richard Bissell (Deputy Director of Plans) instructed William Harvey, who was at that time the Chief of one of CIA's Foreign Intelligence staffs, to establish an "executive action capability" which included research into a capability to assassinate foreign leaders. (Bissell 6/9/75, p. 51; Harvey 6/25/75, pp. 36-37.) At some time within the same period, Bissell and McGeorge Bundy (Special Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs) had a conversation about the matter.

Bissell, Harvey and Helms all agreed that the "generalized" capability was never used" (Bissell 6/9/75, p. 87; Harvey 6/25/75, p. 45; Helms 6/13/75, p. 52).

"Executive action" is a CIA euphemism, defined by the testimony before the Committee as a project for research into developing means for overthrowing foreign political leaders, including a "capability to perform assassinations". (Harvey 6/25/75, p. 34.) Bissell indicated that executive action covered a "wide spectrum of actions" to "eliminate the effectiveness" of foreign leaders, with assassination as the "most extreme" action on the spectrum (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 32). The Inspector General's Report described executive action as a "general stand-by capability" to carry out assassination when required (I.G., p. 37). The project was given the code name ZR/RIFLE by the CIA.*

A single agent ("asset"), given the cryptonym QJ/WIN, was placed under Harvey's supervision for the ZR/RIFLE project, but never used in connection with any actual assassination efforts. Richard Helms described QJ/WIN's "capability":

> "If you needed somebody to carry out murder, I guess you had a man who might be prepared to carry it out." (Helms, 6/13/75, p. 53).

Harvey did use agent QJ/WIN, however, to spot "individuals with criminal and underworld connections in Europe for possible multi-purpose use" (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 50). For example, QJ/WIN reported that a potential asset in the Middle East was "the leader of a gambling syndicate" with "an available pool of assassins" (CIA file, ZR/RIFLE/Personality Sketches).

However, Harvey testified that:

> "during the entire existence of the entire ZRRIFLE project . . . no agent was recruited for the purpose of assassination, and no even tentative targeting or target list was ever drawn." (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 45.)

Project ZR/RIFLE involved, generally, assessing the problems and requirements of assassination and developing a standby assassination capability; more specifically, it involved "spotting" potential agents and "researching" assassination techniques that might be used (Bissell, 7/17/75, p. 11 and 6/9/75, p. 73; Harvey, 6/25/75, pp. 37-A, 45). Bissell characterized Project ZR/RIFLE as "internal and purely preparatory" (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 32). The I.G. Report of 1967 found "no indication in the file that the Executive Action Capability of ZR/RIFLE-QJ/WIN was ever used", but said that "after Harvey took over the Castro operation, he ran it as one aspect of ZR/RIFLE". (I.G. pp. 40-41.)*

---

* ZR/RIFLE was a cryptonym relating to two programs. One was the executive action assassination capability. The other was another program which is not part of the subject matter of this report. (William Harvey had been in charge of the CIA section with general responsibility for such programs.) This second program was genuine, but it was also to provide a cover for any executive action operation. (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 49.)

(b) The Question of White House Initiation, Authorization, or Knowledge of the Executive Action Project

There is general agreement on one fact: at some point in early 1961 Bissell discussed the executive action capability with Bundy. The timing of that conversation and whether "the White House" urged that a capability be created were matters on which the evidence varied widely.

Harvey testified that Bissell had told him that "the White House" had twice urged the creation of such a capability and the Inspector General's Report quoted notes of Harvey's (no longer in existence) to that effect. Bissell did not recall any specific conversation with the "White House". However, his initial testimony assumed the correctness of Harvey's notes, and stated that, while he could have created the capability on his own, any urgings would have come from Bundy or Walt Rostow. In a later appearance, however, Bissell said he merely informed Bundy of the capability and that the context was a briefing by him and not urging by Bundy. Bundy said he received a briefing and gave no urging, though he raised no objections. Rostow said he never heard of the project.

---

* A discussion of whether ZR/RIFLE was related to the actual assassination efforts against Castro is found at Section (d), infra.

William Harvey testified that he was "almost certain" that on January 25 and 26, 1961, he met with CIA officials Sidney Gottlieb, the new Chief of CIA's Technical Services Division, and Arnold Silver, a CIA recruiting officer, to discuss the feasibility of creating a capability within the Agency for "executive action" (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 52). After reviewing his notes of those meetings,* Harvey testified that they took place after his initial

---

* As to the date of these notes, Harvey was asked whether his notations "25/1-Sid G" and "26/1-AS" indicate that he spoke to Sidney Gottlieb and Arnold Silver in 1961, as opposed to 1962. Harvey testified as follows:

> Q: And is it your judgment that that is January 26, 1961 and is about the subject of Executive Action?
>
> Harvey: Yes, it is.
> Q: And it followed your conversation with Mr. Bissell that you have recounted?
> Harvey: . . . . [W]ell, when I first looked at this, I thought this, well, this has got to be '62, but I am almost certain now that it is not. If this is true, this might place the first discussion that I had with Dick Bissell in early January and this is difficult to pinpoint because there were several such discussions in varying degrees of detail during the period in the spring, and very early in '61 to the fall of '61 period, but I did find out fairly early on that Silver discussion of executive action with Bissell, which, he said, might have transpired in "early January" (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 52). When Bissell was shown these notes, he agreed with Harvey about the timing of their initial discussion (Bissell, 7/17/75, p. 10).

> had -- or that Bissell had discussed the question of assassination with Arnold Silver, and this discussion, at the very least, had to take place after I know Bissell already had discussed the matter with Silver. (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 52).

Harvey had also testified that, after receiving Bissell's initial instructions to establish an executive action capability:

> the first thing I did . . . was discuss in theoretical terms with a few officers whom I trusted quite implicitly the whole subject of assassination, our possible assets, our posture, going back, if you will, even to the fundamental questions of A, is assassination a proper weapon of an American intelligence service, and B, even if you assume that it is, is it within our capability within the framework of this government to do it effectively and properly, securely and discreetly. (Harvey, 6/25/75, pp. 37-A, 38).

The Inspector General's Report connected Silver and Gottlieb to the early stages of the executive action project as follows:

> Harvey says that Bissell had already discussed certain aspects of the problem with Arnold Silver and with Sidney Gottlieb. Since Silver was already cut in, Harvey used him in developing the Executive Action Capability.... Harvey's mention of him [Gottlieb] in this connection may explain a notation by Dr. Gunn that Harvey instructed Gunn to discuss techniques with Gottlieb without associating the discussion with the Castro operation. (I.G. Report, pp. 37-38).

It is evident from the testimony of Harvey and Bissell that the turnover to Harvey of the Roselli contact in November 1961 was discussed as part of ZRRIFLE (see Section (d), infra). Thus, their initial discussion of executive action can, at the least, be dated before November 1961 and the "25/1" and "26/1" notations would have to refer to January 1961.

Harvey testified that the "executive action" capability was intended to include assassinations (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 35). His cryptic handwritten notes of the January 25/26 meetings, preserved at the CIA, contain phrases which suggest a discussion of assassination--and Harvey confirmed this interpretation: "last resort beyond last resort and a confession of weakness", "the magic button", and "never mention word assassination". (Harvey, Ex. 1, 6/25/75).*

The Inspector General's Report did not mention these notes, or their dates. However, in describing Richard Bissell's initial assignment of the "executive action" project to Harvey, it referred to another set of Harvey's notes, which were destroyed after the preparation of the Report. The excerpt from these notes quoted Bissell as saying to Harvey, "The White House had twice urged me to create such a capability" (I.G., P. 37). Harvey also testified that this "urging" was mentioned in his initial discussion of "executive action" with Bissell (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 37). However, the testimony from Bissell and White House aides in the Kennedy and Eisenhower Administrations is in conflict with Harvey's testimony as to whether such "urging" had in fact been given to Bissell.

---

* Harvey's notes also contained a phrase which suggests his concern that any U.S. assassination attempts might breed retaliation from other governments: "dangers of RIS (Russian Intelligence Service) counter-action and monitor if they are blamed." (Harvey, Ex. 1, 6/25/75; Bissell, Ex. 1, 7/17/75).

The following testimony regarding the relationship between "the White House" and the executive action capability was obtained by the Committee:

Harvey: Harvey testified that his missing notes indicated that Bissell mentioned White House urgings to develop an executive action capability (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 37). Harvey said that he "particularly remember[ed]" that Bissell said that he received "more than one" urging from the White House (Harvey, 6/25/75, pp. 36-37; 7/11/75, p. 59). However, he had no direct evidence that Bissell actually had any such discussion with "the White House." No specific individual in the White House was named to Harvey (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 31). Moreover, he said that it would have been "improper" for him to have asked Bissell who he had talked to and "grossly improper" for Bissell to have volunteered that name (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 37).

Bissell: Bissell specifically recalled assigning Harvey to investigate the capability (Bissell, 6/9/75, p. 51). However, Bissell did not recall "a specific conversation with anybody in the White House as the origin" of his instruction to Harvey (Bissell, 6/9/75, p. 51).

During the course of several appearances before the Committee, Bissell's testimony varied as to whether or not he had been urged by the White House to develop an executive action capability.

In his initial appearances before the Committee on June 9 and 11, 1975, Bissell made statements that tended to indicate that White House authorization had been given. In response to the "twice urged" quotation of Harvey's notes in the Inspector General's Report, Bissell said, "I have no reason to believe that Harvey's quote is wrong." (Bissell, 6/9/75, p. 51). Bissell accordingly said in his initial testimony that as far as he knew, it was true that he was asked by the White House to create a general stand-by assassination capability. (Bissell, 6/9/75, p. 49).

Based again upon Harvey's missing notes ("White House urging") and his initial statement that he had no reason to challenge their accuracy, Bissell initially gave the opinion that McGeorge Bundy (Id., 6/9/75, p. 49), Special Assistant to President Kennedy for National Security Affairs, and Walt Rostow (Id., p. 51), Deputy Assistant to President Kennedy during 1961, were the two people from whom such a request was most likely to have come (Id., p. 53) because they were "the two members of the White House staff who were closest to CIA operations." (Id., p. 54).

At another point in his initial testimony, Bissell said that the creation of the capability "may have been initiated within the Agency" (Id., p. 81). And still later he said: "there is little doubt in my mind that Project RIFLE was discussed with Rostow and possibly Bundy" (Bissell, 6/11/75, p. 46).

When Bissell returned to the Committee on July 17 and 22, his testimony, given in light of information gained since his earlier appearances, was that there was no White House urging for the creation of the executive action project, although tacit approval for the "research" project was probably given by Bundy after it was established.

First, he was shown the Harvey notes which had been preserved and which, without any mention of the White House, indicated Harvey had received his assignment prior to January 25/26, 1961. Those dates -- just 5 days after the change of administration -- made Bissell conclude that it was "very unlikely that that assignment to [Harvey] was taken as a result of White House urging or consultation" (Bissell, 7/17/75, p. 10). Bissell said that Bundy did not have any influence on the performance of his Agency duties before the Presidential inauguration (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 23). Bissell added that he did not remember meeting with anyone in the new administration on matters prior to the inauguration (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 23).

Second, when he returned in July, Bissell also said he was convinced by telephone conversations with Rostow and Bundy that based upon Rostow's duties -- which, in 1961, had nothing to do with covert action -- he "never discussed" executive action with Rostow (Bissell, 7/17/75, p. 10; 7/27/75, p. 22).

As for Bundy, Bissell's final testimony (after telephone contact with Bundy) was that he believed that he had informed Bundy about the capability after it had been created (Bissell, 7/17/75, pp. 10-11; 7/22/75, pp. 21-22). But Bissell confirmed his original testimony (6/9/75, pp. _____) that he did not brief Bundy on the actual assassination plots against Castro already undertaken by the CIA (Bissell, 6/11/75, p. 47; 7/22/75, p. 31). Bissell was "quite certain" that he would not have expected Bundy to mention the executive action capability to the President. (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 35). Bissell testified:

> Q. Would you think the development of a capability to kill foreign leaders was a matter of sufficient importance to bring to the attention of the President?
> Bissell: In that context and at that time and given the limited scope of activities within that project, I would not." (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 35).

Bissell said that he and Bundy spoke about an untargeted "capability" rather than the plan or approval for an assassination operation (Bissell, 7/17/75, p. 11). Bissell said that although he does not have a specific recollection, he "might have" mentioned Castro, Lumumba, and Trujillo in the course of a discussion of executive action "because these were the sorts of individuals at that moment in history against whom such a capability might possibly have been employed." (Bissell, 6/11/75, pp. 50-51).

Bissell said his impression was that Bundy, in addition to expressing no unfavorable reaction to the project, might have actually given a more affirmative reaction (Bissell, 7/22/75, pp. 25, 28). Bissell testified that he might have interpreted Bundy's reaction as approval for the executive action concept (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 30).

> Q: ... I think the testimony of this witness is going further in saying what you received from (Bundy) was, in your view, tantamount to approval?
> Bissell: I, at least, interpreted it as you can call it approval, or you could say no objection. He (Bundy) > was briefed on something that was being done, as I now believe, on the initiative of the Agency. His (Bundy's) comment is that he made no objection to it. I suspect that his reaction was somewhat more favorable than that, but this is a matter that probably someone listening to the conversation on which such a person could have had differing interpretations. (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 33).

Bissell's testimony on any conversation with Bundy regarding executive action was speculative reconstruction from first appearance to last because he had no "clear recollection" of the events (Bissell, 7/22/75, pp. 29, 36). But Bissell maintained that more "formal and specific and explicit approval would have been required" before any "actual overt steps in use of the capability." (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 31).

Bissell said that Harvey's notation about White House urgings to develop an executive action capability may have been a slightly confused account of a conversation subsequent to the initiation of the project in which Bissell relayed Bundy's reaction to Harvey (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 25).

Bissell testified that the development of an executive action capability was "undoubtedly" initiated within the Agency (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 22). He had acknowledged on his first day of testimony that this would not have been unusual:

> it was the normal practice in the Agency and an important part of its mission to create various kinds of capability long before there was any reason to be certain whether those would be used or where or how or for what purpose. The whole ongoing job of ... a secret intelligence service of recruiting agents is of that character.... So it would not be particularly surprising to me if the > decision to create ... this capability had been taken without an outside request. (Bissell, 6/9/75, pp. 67-68).*

Bundy: McGeorge Bundy also testified that he had a conversation with Bissell, during which the executive action capability was discussed (Bundy, pp. 4-5). Bundy's testimony comports with Bissell's on the fact that they spoke about an untargeted capability, rather than an assassination operation (Bundy, pp. 4-5). But Bundy said that the capability included "killing the individual" (Bundy, p. 5). Bundy's impression was that the CIA was "testing my reaction," not "seeking authority" (Bundy, p. 15). Bundy summarized his testimony by saying:

> I am sure I gave no instruction. But it is only fair to add that I do not recall that I offered any impediment either. (Bundy, p. 10)

Bundy said that he did not take steps to halt the development of the executive action capability or "pursue the matter at all" (Bundy, p. 19) because he was satisfied > that this was not an operational activity, and would not become such without two conditions: first, that there be a desire or a request or a guidance that there should be planning against some specific individual; and second, that there should be a decision to move against the individual. (Bundy, p. 7).

---

* For example, Bissell testified that on his own initiative, he had requested a CIA officer to go to the Congo to "make plans and develop the capability" for an assassination attempt against Lumumba, if ordered (Bissell, 6/11/75, p. 55).

 Bundy also testified that he had a vague recollection of hearing about poison in relation to Cuba, but he did not connect this to the conversation about executive action. (See footnote, p. 6, Kennedy Pre-Bay of Pigs section, supra.)

Bundy testified that he believed that neither of these conditions had been fulfilled (Bundy, p. 7).

Bundy recalled the conversation as taking place "sometime in the early months of 1961." (Bundy, p. 4). When questioned about the dates in Harvey's notes, Bundy rated the chance that the conversation about executive action took place before January 25 -- when Harvey was already discussing the project at the CIA pursuant to Bissell's directive -- as "near zero" because the new Administration had been in office less than a week and he had been preoccupied with other problems, including the Berlin crisis and reorganizing the National Security staff (Bundy, p. 9).

Bundy testified that he did not brief the President on the executive action project:

> Chairman: And you have testified that you did not take the matter to the President?
> Bundy: As far as I can recall, Mr. Chairman.
> (Bundy, p. 16)

Bundy explained that the division of responsibility for national security affairs excluded Rostow from jurisdiction over covert operations, making it unlikely that Rostow would be briefed on a project like ZRRIFLE (Bundy, p. 11; Rostow, p. 11).

Rostow: Rostow testified that he was "morally certain" that during his entire tenure in government, he never heard a reference to executive action or "such a capability or such an intention to act by the U.S." (Rostow, pp. 10, 13).

Goodpaster and Gray: The responsibility for national security affairs during the latter part of the Eisenhower Administration was borne by Andrew Goodpaster and Gordon Gray. However, there was no evidence which raised the name of either man in connection with the development of an executive action capability. Both Goodpaster and Gray testified to having no knowledge of it. (Goodpaster, p. 11; Gray, p. 56.)

(c) Authorization or Knowledge of Executive Action Project by DCI

Richard Bissell said he was "quite certain" that Allen Dulles had full knowledge of the executive action project for two reasons: first, it "would have come to the DCI's attention" at the time of the transfer of William Harvey between components of the Agency to work on Cuban operations;* and second, Bissell "would imagine" it was mentioned to Dulles at the initiation of the project (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 35). Bissell and Harvey briefed Richard Helms on Project ZRRIFLE when he became DDP (Bissell, 6/11/75, p. 53; Harvey, 7/11/75, p. 63). But Bissell did not recall briefing John McCone about the project when McCone took over as DCI (Bissell, 7/17/75, p. 11). McCone testified that he had no knowledge of such a project (McCone, p. 43).

William Harvey said it was assumed that the project was within the parameters permitted by the DCI. But Harvey testified that officially advising the DCI of the existence of the project was "a bridge we did not cross" and would not have crossed until "there was either specific targeting or a specific operation or a specific recruitment." (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 59).

---

* Harvey's transfer to Cuban operations was not completed until late in 1961.

(d) The Question of Whether Project ZRRIFLE was Connected to Any Actual Assassination Plots

The Committee has sought to determine whether the CIA development of an executive action capability was related in any way to the actual assassination efforts. One question raised by this inquiry is whether the participants in the assassination operations might have perceived the executive action capability as in some way lending legitimacy to the actual assassination efforts.

(i) Conversation Between Bissell and Bundy

In his early testimony, Bissell said he did not have a recollection of whether he discussed the names of Castro, Lumumba, and Trujillo with anyone in the White House in the course of discussing the project to develop an executive action capability (Bissell, 6/11/75, p. 51). However, Bissell testified that it was "perfectly plausible that I would have used examples" (Bissell, 6/11/75, p. 51). He continued:

> in such a discussion of a capability, I might well have used the three names that I just gave, because these were the sorts of individuals at that moment in history against whom such a capability might possibly have been employed." (Bissell, 6/11/75, p. 51).

Bissell and Bundy both testified, however, that their discussion of the development of the capability for assassination did not involve any mention of actual assassination plans or attempts (see detailed treatment at Section (b), supra). There is no testimony to the contrary. The account of this conversation raises a question as to whether Bissell acted properly in withholding from Bundy the fact that assassination efforts against Castro had already been mounted and were moving forward. Bundy was responsible to a new President for national security affairs and Bissell was his principal source of information about covert operations at the CIA.

(ii) Bissell's Instruction to Take Over Responsibility for Underworld Contact: November 1961

Both Bissell and Harvey recall a meeting in November 1961 in which Harvey was instructed to take over the contact with John Roselli (Bissell, 6/11/75, pp. 19, 47; Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 86; and 6/11/75, p. 19)--which had been used for the initial poison pill plot as part of Project ZR/RIFLE. Harvey's notes placed the meeting on November 15, 1961 (I.G., p. 39), during the period in which Harvey was freed from his duties on another Agency staff to take over direction of Task Force W, the locus of CIA activity against the Castro regime.

According to Bissell and Harvey, the November meeting involved only the planning and research of a capability rather than a targeted operation against Castro (Bissell, 7/17/75, p. 13; Harvey, 7/11/75, p. 60). But Bissell acknowledged that the purpose of the Roselli contact had been to assassinate Castro, and that "it is a fair inference that there would have been no reason to maintain it [the contact] unless there was some possibility of reactivating that operation" (Bissell, 6/11/75, p. 19). Bissell stated that because the assassination plot against Castro involving the syndicate > had been stood down after the Bay of Pigs . . . and there was no authorization to pursue it actively . . . . the responsibility that was given to him [Harvey] was that of taking over an inactive contact." (Bissell, 7/17/75, p. 14)

Bissell said that he had, in effect, asked Harvey to stand watch over the contact in case any action should be required and further testified that it was never required.

The Inspector General's Report stated: "After Harvey took over the Castro operation, he ran it as one aspect of ZRRIFLE." (I.G., p. 40). Harvey recalled that during a discussion with Bissell of the creation of an executive action capability, Bissell advised him of "a then going operation" involving the names of Maheu and possibly Roselli and Giancana, "which was a part of the Agency's effort to develop . . . a capability for executive action." (Harvey, 7/11/75, pp. 55, 61). Harvey said that at the time of this discussion, the operation had been "in train" for "approximately two years or perhaps 18 months." (Harvey, 7/11/75, p. 54).

Although his "net impression" was that both the "exploratory project" and the "specific operation" were "fully authorized and approved", Harvey said he could not testify that "specific White House authority for this given operation was implied or stated". (Harvey, 7/11/75, p. 54.) Bissell does not recall telling anyone in the White House that something had been done to bring a CIA officer together with the criminal syndicate (Bissell, 6/11/75, pp. 19-20). Harvey did not recall any mention of the White House or any higher authority than the DDP in his November meeting with Bissell (Harvey, 7/11/75, pp. 60-61).

Although Richard Helms was briefed and given administrative responsibility (as DDP) for Project ZR/RIFLE three months later, he did not recall that ZR/RIFLE was ever contemplated as a capability to assassinate Castro (Helms, 6/13/75, p. 55). Asked whether the actual assassination efforts against Castro were related to ZR/RIFLE (executive action), Helms testified: "In my mind those lines never crossed" (Helms, 6/13/75, p. 52). However, Bissell's testimony leaves more ambiguity: "the contact with the syndicate which had Castro as its target . . . folded into the ZR/RIFLE project . . . and they became one" (Bissell, 6/11/75, p. 47). When asked by Senator Baker whether the executive action "capability . . . for assassination" was "used against Castro", Bissell replied that it was "in the later phase". (Bissell, 6/11/75, p. 47). The instruction from Bissell to Harvey on November 15, 1961, however, preceded the reactivation of the CIA-syndicate assassination operation against Castro by approximately five months.

(iii) Use of Agent QJ/WIN in Africa

QJ/WIN was a foreign citizen with a criminal background who had been recruited by the CIA for certain sensitive programs involving surreptitious entries which pre-dated Project

ZR/RIFLE. Harvey testified that QJ/WIN's function after the advent of Project ZR/RIFLE in 1961 was restricted to the "spotting" of potential assets for "multi-purpose" covert use.

However, in the Fall of 1960--before Harvey was assigned to create Project ZR/RIFLE by Richard Bissell--agent QJ/WIN had been dispatched to the Congo by Arnold Silver, his supervising CIA case officer in Europe. William Harvey, as the Chief of the CIA Foreign Intelligence staff on which Silver worked, had ordered QJ/WIN's mission to the Congo (CIA Dispatch AUDW-147, 11/2/60) and arranged the financial accounting for the mission afterward (Memorandum to Finance Division from William K. Harvey, 1/11/61). [QJ/WIN's activities in the Congo are treated in detail in the discussion of the Lumumba case; see Section ___, supra.]

There are two factors which may raise a question as to whether QJ/WIN was being used in an ad hoc capacity to develop an assassination capability before ZR/RIFLE was formally initiated. First, there is a similarity in the cast of characters: Harvey, QJ/WIN, Silver, and Gottlieb were connected with the Lumumba matter and reappear in connection with the subsequent development of ZR/RIFLE. Second, Bissell informed Harvey that the development of an assassination capability had already been discussed with Silver and Gottlieb before Harvey's assignment to ZR/RIFLE (Harvey, 6/25/75, p. 52; I.G. Report, pp. 37-38).

Nevertheless, there does not appear to be any firm evidence of a connection between QJ/WIN and the plot to assassinate Lumumba.

FINAL DRAFT

TOP SECRET

R948

TRUJILLO

Agreed to by drafting subcommittee on August 28, 1975*

Summary

Rafael Trujillo was assassinated by a group of Dominican dissidents on May 30, 1961.

Trujillo was a brutal dictator, and both the Eisenhower and Kennedy Administrations encouraged the overthrow of his regime by Dominican dissidents. Toward that end the highest policy levels of both Administrations approved or condoned supplying arms to the dissidents. Although there is no evidence that the United States instigated any assassination activity, certain evidence tends to link United States officials to the assassination plans.

Material support, consisting of three pistols and three carbines, was supplied to various dissidents. While United States' officials knew that the dissidents intended to overthrow Trujillo, probably by assassination, there is no direct evidence that the weapons which were passed were used in the assassination. The evidence is inconclusive as to how high in the two Administrations information about the dissidents' assassination plots had been passed prior to the spring of 1961.

Beginning in March of 1961, the dissidents began asking United States officials for machine guns. By the time four M-3 machine guns were shipped to the CIA Station Chief in the Dominican capitol in April, it was well known that the dissidents wanted them for use in connection with the assassination. Thereafter, however, permission to deliver the machine guns to the dissidents was denied, and the guns were never passed. Two days before the assassination, President Kennedy personally authorized a cable to the U.S. Consul General in the Dominican Republic stating that the United States government, as a matter of general principle, could not condone political assassinations, but at the same time indicating the United States continued to support the dissidents and stood ready to recognize them in the event they were successful in their endeavor to overthrow Trujillo.

I. Background

Rafael Trujillo came to power in the Dominican Republic in 1930. For most of his tenure, the United States government supported him and he was regarded throughout much of the Caribbean and Latin America as a protege of the United States. Trujillo's rule, always harsh and dictatorial, became more arbitrary during the 1950's. As a result, the United States States' image was increasingly tarnished in the eyes of many Latin Americans.

Increasing American awareness of Trujillo's brutality and fear that it would lead to a Castro-type revolution caused U.S. officials to consider various plans to hasten his abdication or downfall.

As early as February 1960 the Eisenhower administration gave high level consideration to a program of covert aid to Dominican dissidents. (Special Group minutes, 2/10/60). In April 1960 President Eisenhower approved a contingency plan for the Dominican Republic which provided, in part, that if the situation deteriorated still further:

> "...the United States would immediately take political action to remove Trujillo from the Dominican Republic as soon as a suitable successor regime can be induced to take over with the assurance of U.S. political, economic, and -- if necessary -- military support." (Memo from Secretary of State Herter to the President, 4/14/60; Presidential approval indicated in Herter letter to Secretary of Defense Gates, 4/21/60.)

Simultaneously, the United States was trying to organize hemispheric opposition to the Castro regime in Cuba. Latin-

American leaders, such as President Betancourt of Venezuela, pressed the United States to take affirmative action against Trujillo to dispel criticism that the U.S. opposed dictatorships of the left only. A belief that Castro's road to power was paved by the excesses of Batista led to concern that the Dominican Republic might also eventually fall victim to a Castro-style Communist regime. (Rusk, pp. 8,9)

II. Initial Contact with Dissidents and Request for Arms

During the spring of 1960, the U.S. ambassador to the Dominican Republic, Joseph Farland, made initial contact with dissidents who sought to free their country from Trujillo's grasp. They asked for sniper rifles. Although documentary evidence indicates that a recommendation to provide these rifles was approved both within the State Department and the CIA, the rifles were never provided.

A. Dissident Contacts

Ambassador Farland established contact with a group of dissidents regarded as moderate, pro-U.S. and desirous of establishing a democratic form of government.* (Farland affidavit) Prior to his final departure from the Dominican Republic in May 1960, the Ambassador introduced his Deputy-Chief-of-Mission, Henry Dearborn, to the dissident leaders, indicating that

---

* This loosely-organized group, with which contact was established, was referred to in cables, correspondence, and memoranda as "the dissidents" and is so referenced herein.

Dearborn could be trusted. Then on June 16, 1960, CIA Headquarters* cabled a request that Dearborn become the "communications link" between the dissidents and CIA. The cable /stated/ that Dearborn's role had the "unofficial approval of /Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, Roy R./ Rubottom" (Emphasis in original.) (HQS to Station cable 6/16/60).

Dearborn agreed. He requested, however, that the CIA confirm the arrangement with the dissidents as being that the U.S. would "clandestinely" assist the opposition to "develop effective force to accomplish Trujillo overthrow," but would not "undertake any overt action itself against Trujillo government while it is in full control of Dominican Republic" (Station to HQS cable 6/17/60). CIA Headqaurters confirmed Dearborn's understanding of the arrangement (HQS to Station cable 6/19/60).

B. The Sniper Rifles

During the course of a cocktail party in the Dominican Republic, a leading dissident made a specific request to Ambassador Farland for a limited number of rifles with telescopic sights. The Ambassador promised to pass on the request (Farland affidavit). He apparently did so after returning to Washington in May 1960 (CIA memorandum for the record, 6/7/61).

---

* As used herein "Headquarters" refers to Headquarters of the Central Intelligency Agency; "Department" indicates the Department of State.

Documents indicate that consideration was given within the CIA to airdropping rifles into the Dominican Republic. At a June 21, 1960, meeting with Ned Holman of the CIA Western Hemisphere Division, Ambassador Farland reportedly suggested possible sites for the drops.
(CIA memo, 6/21/60)

Documents also indicate that a meeting was held around the end of June 1960 between Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Roy R. Rubottom and Col. J. C. King, Chief of CIA's Western Hemisphere Division. Apparently King sought to learn the Assistant Secretary's view regarding "To what extent will the U.S. government participate in the overthrow of Trujillo." A number of questions were raised by King, among them:

> "c. Would it provide a small number of sniper rifles or other devices for the removal of key Trujillo people from the scene?"

King's handwritten notes indicate that Rubottom's response to that question was "yes" (CIA memo of 6/28/60; King affidavit)*/

On July 1, 1960, a memorandum directed to General Cabell, the Acting Director of Central Intelligence, was prepared for Colonel King's signature and, in his absence, signed by his principal deputy, Rudy Gomez (I.G. Report, p. 26). The memorandum stated that a principal leader of the anti-Trujillo opposition had asked Ambassador Farland for a limited number of arms to precipitate Trujillo's overthrow, and recognized that such arms

---

* Neither King nor Rubottom recalls such a meeting, nor does either recall any proposal for supplying sniper rifles. (Rubottom affidavit, King affidavit.)

"presumably would be used against key members of the Trujillo regime." The memorandum recommended that the arms be provided, since the fall of the Trujillo regime appeared inevitable, and therefore U.S. relations with the opposition should be as close as possible. "Providing the arms as requested would contribute significantly toward this end." (CIA memo, 7/1/60)

Specifically, the recommendation was to deliver to dissidents in the Dominican Republic 12 sterile* rifles with telescopic sights, together with 500 rounds of ammunition.

Paragraph 4 of the memorandum stated:

> "4. Approval for delivery of these arms has been given by Assistant Secretary of State Roy Rubottom, who requests that the arms be placed in hands of the opposition at the earliest possible moment." (Id.)

Gomez's recommendation was concurred in by Richard Helms, as Acting DDP, and approved by General Cabell, (I.G. Report, p. 26).

The kind of arms approved, sterile rifles with telescopic sights, together with the statement that they would be presumably used against key members of the Trujillo regime clearly indicated the "targeted use" for which the weapons were intended. (Bissell, 7/22/75, p. 77).

On July 1, 1960, a cable was sent to Dearborn by CIA Headquarters informing him of the plan to airdrop 12 telescopically-sighted rifles into the Dominican Republic. The cable inquired whether the dissidents had the capability to realign the sights if thrown off by the drop. On July 14, 1960, Dearborn replied that the dissident leaders were against any further action in the Dominican Republic until after resolution by the OAS of a Venezuelan complaint then pending against Trujillo. The dissidents reportedly believed that sufficiently strong action by the OAS could bring Trujillo's downfall without further effort on their part. (Station to HQS cable, 7/14/60) The 12 sniper rifles were never furnished to the dissidents.

*"Sterile" rifles are "untraceable" rifles. (Bissell, 7/22/75, p.69)

On August 26, 1960, Dearborn cabled Deputy Assistant Secretary of State Lester Mallory reporting on a meeting between a dissident leader and John Barfield, the Consulate's political officer. The dissident leader was reported to have lost enthusiasm for an assassination attempt and was then speaking of an invasion from Venezuela. However, by September 1, 1960, dissidents were again speaking about the possible provision to them of arms. This time the request was for 200 rifles. For the next several months, consideration centered on providing 200 to 300 guns.

II. Summer and Fall of 1960

In August 1960, the United States severed diplomatic relations with the Dominican Republic and recalled most of its personnel. Dearborn was left as Consul General and de facto CIA Chief of Station. Consideration was given both to providing arms and explosive devices and to the use of high level emissaries to persuade Trujillo to abdicate. By the end of the year, a broad plan of general support to anti-Trujillo forces, both within and without the country, was approved.

A. Diplomatic Development -- Withdrawal of U.S. Personnel

Events occurring during the summer of 1960 further intensified hemispheric opposition to the Trujillo regime. In June agents of Trujillo tried to assassinate Venezuelan President Betancourt. As a result, the OAS censured the Trujillo government. At the same time, in August 1960, the United States broke interupted diplomatic relations with the Dominican Republic and imposed economic sanctions.

With the severance of diplomatic relations, the United States closed its Embassy. Most American personnel, including the CIA Chief of Station, left the Dominican Republic. With the departure of the CIA Chief of Station, Dearborn became de facto CIA Chief of Station and was recognized as such by both CIA and the State Department. Although on January 20, 1961, a new CIA Chief of Station came to the Dominican Republic, Dearborn continued to serve as a link to the dissidents.

B. Dearborn Reports Assassination May be Only Way to Overthrow Trujillo Regime

Dearborn came to believe that no effort to overthrow the Trujillo government could be successful unless it involved Trujillo's assassination.

He communicated this opinion to both the State Department and the CIA. In July 1960, he advised Assistant Secretary Rubottom that the dissidents were > "... in no way ready to carry on any type of revolutionary activity in the foreseeable future except the assassination of their principal enemy."

> (Dearborn to Rubottam letter, 7/14/60)

It is uncertain what portion of the information provided by Dearborn to State was passed above the Assistant Secretary level. Through August of 1960, only Assistant Secretary Rubottom, his Deputy, Lester Mallory, and Staff Assistant Frank Devine, were, within the Latin American Division of the Department, aware of Dearborn's "current projects." (Devine to Dearborn letter, 8/15/60)*

By September 1960, Thomas Mann had replaced Roy Rubottom as Assistant Secretary for Inter-American Affairs, and Frank Devine had become a Special Assistant to Mr. Mann. While serving as Special Assistant to the Assistant Secretary, Devine reportedly spent ninety percent of his time coordinating State activities in Latin America. It was in this capacity that Devine maintained almost daily communication with Ned Holman and other officials of the CIA's Western Hemisphere Division (Devine, p.7)

---

*Dearborn's candid reporting to State during the summer of 1960 raised concern with the Department and he was advised that certain specific information should more appropriately come through "the other channel" (presumably, CIA communications). Dearborn was advised that his cables to State were distributed to at least 19 different recipient offices. (Id.)

Mann solicited Dearborn's comments concerning plans under discussion for forcing Trujillo from power. Dearborn replied in a detailed letter which concluded:

> "One further point which I should probably not even make. From a purely practical standpoint, it will be best for us, for the OAS, and for the Dominican Republic if the Dominicans put an end to Trujillo before he leaves this island. If he has his millions and is a free agent, he will devote his life from exile to preventing stable government in the D.R., to overturning democratic governments and establishing dictatorships in the Caribbean, and to assassinating his enemies. If I were a Dominican, which thank heaven I am not, I would favor destroying Trujillo as being the first necessary step in the salvation of my country and I would regard this, in fact, as my Christian duty. If you recall Dracula, you will remember it was necessary to drive a stake through his heart to prevent a continuation of his crimes. I believe sudden death would be more humane than the solution of the Nuncio who once told me he thought he should pray that Trujillo would have a long and lingering illness." (Dearborn to Mann letter, 10/27/60)

C. Efforts to Convince Trujillo to Abdicate

Throughout the fall of 1960, efforts were made on both the diplomatic and economic fronts aimed at pressuring Trujillo into relinquishing control, and ideally, leaving the Dominican Republic. The use of high level emissaries, both from within and without the ranks of government, was considered. (Special Group Minutes, 9/8/60; Mann to Dearborn corres., 10/10/60) None of the efforts proved successful, and at the end of 1960 Trujillo was still in absolute control.

D. CIA Plans of October 1960

A CIA internal memorandum dated October 3, 1960 entitled

"Plans of the Dominican Internal Opposition and Dominican Desk for Overthrow of the Trujillo Government" set forth plans which "have been developed on a tentative basis which appear feasible and which might be carried out..covertly by CIA with a minimal risk of exposure." These plans provided, in part, for the following:

> "a. Delivery of approximately 300 rifles and pistols, together with ammunition and a supply of grenades, to secure cache on the South shore of the island, about 14 miles East of Ciudad Trujillo.
>
> "b. Delivery to the same cache described above, of an electronic detonating device with remote control features, which could be planted by the dissidents in such manner as to eliminate certain key Trujillo henchmen. This might necessitate training and introducing into the country by illegal entry, a trained technician to set the bomb and detonator." (Emphasis added) (CIA Memorandum, 10/3/60)

E. December 1960 Special Group Plan of Covert Action

On December 29, 1960, the Special Group considered and approved a broad plan of covert support to anti-Trujillo forces. The plan, presented by Bissell, envisioned support to both Dominican exile groups and internal dissidents. The exile groups were to be furnished money to organize and undertake anti-Trujillo propaganda efforts and to refurbish a yacht for use in paramilitary activities. Bissell emphasized to the Special Group that "the proposed actions would not, of themselves, bring about the desired result in the near future, lacking some decisive stroke against Trujillo himself." (Special Group Minutes, 12/29/60)

IV. January 12, 1961 Special Group Approval of "Limited Supplies of Small Arms and Other Material"

On January 12, 1961, with all members present,* the Special Group met and, according to its Minutes, took the following action with respect to the Dominican Republic:

> "Mr. Merchant explained the feeling of the Department of State that limited supplies of small arms and other material should be made available for dissidents inside the Dominican Republic. Mr. Parrott said that we believe this can be managed securely by CIA, and that the plan would call for final transportation into the country being provided by the dissidents themselves. The Group approved the project." (Special Group Minutes, 1/12/61)

A. Memoranda Underlying the Special Group Action

On January 12, 1961, Thomas Mann sent a memorandum to Under Secretary Livingston Merchant. The memorandum, sent through Joseph Scott, Merchant's Special Assistant, reported on the disillusionment of Dominican dissidents with the United States for its failure to furnish them with any tangible or concrete assistance. Further, it reported:

> Opposition elements have consistently asked us to supply them with "hardware" of various types. This has included quantities of conventional arms and also, rather persistently, they have asked for some of the more exotic items and devices which they associate with revolutationary effort. (Mann to Merchant memo of 1/12/61)

---

* The members of the Special Group were at the time: Livingston Merchant, Under Secretary of State for Political Affairs; Gordon Gray, Advisor to the President for National Security Affairs; John N. Irwin, Deputy Secretary of Defense; and Allen Dulles, Director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

Mann suggested for Merchant's consideration and, if he approved, for discussion by the Special Group, the provision of token quantities of selected items desired by the dissidents. Mann specifically mentioned small explosive devices which would place some "sabotage potential" in the hands of dissident elements, but stated that there "would be no thought of toppling the GODR (Government of Dominican Republic) by any such minor measure." (Mann to Merchant memo, 1/12/61) This memorandum was drafted on January 11 by Mann's Special Assistant for CIA liaison, Frank Devine.

A covering memorandum from Scott to Merchant, forwarding Mann's memo, was apparently taken by Merchant to the Special Group meeting. Merchant's handwritten notations indicate that the Special Group "agreed in terms of Tom Mann's memo" and that the Secretary of State was informed of that decision by late afternoon on January 12, 1961. (Scott to Merchant memo, 1/12/61)

There is no evidence that any member of the Special Group, other than Allen Dulles, knew that the dissidents had clearly and repeatedly expressed a desire for arms and explosives to be used by them in assassination efforts.* While it is, of course, possible that such information was passed orally to some or all of the members of the Special Group, and perhaps even discussed by them on January 12, 1961, there is no documentary evidence of which the Committee is aware which would establish this to be the case.

---

*Various CIA cables, including those dealing with the sniper rifles, indicate that copies were sent to the DCI, Allen Dulles.

On January 19, 1961, the last day of the Eisenhower administration, Consul General Dearborn was advised that approval had been given for supplying arms and other material to the Dominican dissidents (HQS to Station cable, 1/19/61). Shortly thereafter, Dearborn informed Devine that the dissidents were "delighted" about the decision to deliver "exotic equipment." (Dearborn to Devine cable, 1/31/61)

V. January 20, 1961 - April 17, 1961
(the Kennedy Administration Through the Bay of Pigs)

On January 20, 1961, the Kennedy administration took office. Three of the four members of the Special Group (all except Allen Dulles) retired.

Prior to the failure of the Bay of Pigs invasion on April 17, 1961, a number of significant events occurred. These events included meetings with Dominican dissidents in which specific assassination plans were discussed, requests by dissidents for explosive devices, the passage by U.S. officials of pistols and carbines to dissidents inside the Dominican Republic, and the pouching to the Dominican Republic of machine guns which had been requested by the dissidents for use in connection with an assassination attempt.*

---

*As indicated in the post-Bay of Pigs section, infra, permission to pass those machine guns was denied and the guns were never passed.

These events are discussed below under subheading A.

Evidence reflecting the degree of knowledge of those events possessed by senior American officials is treated thereafter. As used herein, "senior American officials" means individuals in the White House or serving as members of the Special Group.

A. Specific Events Indirectly Linking U.S. to Dissidents' Assassination Plans

1. Assassination Discussions and Requests for Explosives

At meetings held with dissident leaders in New York City on February 10 and 15, 1961, CIA officials were told repeatedly by dissident leaders that "the key to the success of the plot [to overthrow the Trujillo regime] would be the assassination of Trujillo." (CIA memo for the record, 2/13/61) Among the requests made of the CIA by dissident leaders were the following:

(a) Ex-FBI agents who would plan and execute the death of Trujillo.

(b) Cameras and other items that could be used to fire projectiles.

(c) A slow-working chemical that could be rubbed on the palm of one's hand and transferred to Trujillo in a handshake, causing delayed lethal results.

(d) Silencers for rifles that could kill from a distance of several miles. (Id.)

Other methods of assassinating Trujillo proposed by dissidents

TOP SECRET

at the February 10 or February 15 meetings included poisoning Trujillo's food or medicines, ambushing his automobile, and attacking him with firearms and grenades. (CIA memo for the record, 2/13/61; 2/16/61)*

The dissidents' "latest plot", as described in the February CIA memoranda, was said to involve the planting of a powerful bomb, which could be detonated from a nearby electric device, along the route of Trujillo's evening walk. (Id.)

On March 13, 1961, a dissident in the Dominican Republic asked for fragmentation grenades "for use during the next week or so." This request was communicated to CIA Headquarters on March 14, 1961, and was followed the next day by an additional request for 50 fragmentation grenades, 5 rapid-fire weapons, and 10 64 mm anti-tank rockets. This further request was also passed on to CIA Headquarters. (Station to HQS cable, 3/15/61) There is no evidence that any of these arms were supplied to the dissidents.

The documentary record makes clear that Frank Devine at the State Department was also advised of related developments in a March 16, 1961, "picnic" letter from Dearborn who complained that his spirits were in the doldrums because:

> ". . . the members of our club are now prepared in their minds to have a picnic but do not have the ingredients for the salad. Lately they have developed a plan for the picnic, which just might work if they could find the proper food. They

---

* There is no record that the CIA responded affirmatively to any of these requests and the CIA officer who drafted the February 13 memorandum stated the view that some of the questions raised by the dissidents did not require an answer.

> have asked us for a few sandwiches, hardly more, and we are not prepared to make them available. Last week we were asked to furnish three or four pineapples for a party in the near future, but I could remember nothing in my instructions that would have allowed me to contribute this ingredient. Don't think I wasn't tempted. I have rather specific guidelines to the effect that salad ingredients will be delivered outside the picnic grounds and will be brought to the area by another club. (Dearborn letter to Devine, 3/16/61)

After reviewing his "picnic" letter, together with the requests in the March 14 and 15 cables discussed above, Dearborn concluded during his testimony before the Committee that the "pineapples" were probably the requested fragmentation grenades and the restriction on delivering salad ingredients outside of the picnic grounds was, almost certainly, meant to refer to the requirements of the January 12 Special Group order that arms be delivered outside the Dominican Republic. (Dearborn 7/29, pp. 25-27)

2. The Passage of Pistols

a. Pouching to the Dominican Republic

In a March 15, 1961 cable, Chief of Station Owen reported that Dearborn had asked for three .38 caliber pistols for issue to several dissidents. In reply, Headquarters cabled: "Regret no authorization exists to suspend pouch regulations against shipment of arms" and indicated that their reply had been coordinated with State. (HQS to Station cable, 3/17/61) The Station Chief then asked Headquarters to seek the necessary authorization and noted that at his last two posts, he had received pistols via the pouch for "worthy purposes" and, therefore, he knew it could be done. (Station to Hqs cable, 3/21/61) Two days later, Headquarters cabled that the pistols and ammunition were being pouched. However, the Station Chief was instructed not to advise Dearborn. (Hqs. to Station cable, 3/24/61)*

b. Reason for the CIA Instruction Not to Tell Dearborn

Owen testified that he believed the "don't tell Dearborn the pistol is being pouched" language simply meant that the sending of firearms through the diplomatic pouch was not something to be unnecessarily discussed. (Owen, pp. 78,79) Dearborn said he never doubted the pouch was used, since he knew Owen had no other means of receiving weapons. (Dearborn, 7/29, p. 33)

c. Were the Pistols Related to Assassination?

Dearborn testified that he had asked for a single pistol for purposes completely unrelated to any assassination consideration. (Dearborn, 7/29, pp. 29-31) He said he had been approached by a Dominican contact who lived in a remote area and was concerned for the safety of his family in the event of political reprisals. Dearborn testified that he had believed the man's fears were well-founded and had promised to seek a pistol.*

---

* The Inspector General's Report, issued in connection with a review of these events, concludes that:

> "There is no indication in the EMDEED operational files that the pistols were actually pouched. The request for pistols appears to have been overtaken by a subsequent request for submachine guns." (I.G. Report, p. 60)

This conclusion is difficult to understand in light of the March 24, 1961, Headquarters to Station cable, which provides:

> "C. Pouching revolvers and ammo requested TRUJ 0462 (in 20040) on 28 March. Do not advise (name Dearborn deleted) this material being pouched. Explanation follows."

Although there is no direct evidence linking any of these pistols to the assassination of Trujillo, a June 7, 1961, CIA memorandum, unsigned and with no attribution as to source, states that two of the three pistols were passed by Owen to Lorenzo "Wimpy" Berry, a United States citizen who was in direct contact with the action element of the dissident group. It should also be noted that the assassination was apparently conducted with almost complete reliance upon hand weapons. Whether one or more of these .38 caliber Smith & Wesson pistols eventually came into the hands of the assassins and, if so, whether they were used in connection with the assassination, remain open questions.

Both Dearborn and Owen testified that they regarded the pistols as weapons for self-defense purposes and they never considered them in any way connected with the then-current assassination plans. (Dearborn 7/29, p.70; Owen, pp.38,73) However, none of the Headquarters cables inquired as to the purpose for which the handguns were sought and Owen's cable stated only that Dearborn wanted them for passage to dissidents. (Station to HQS cable, 3/15/61) Indeed, the March 24, 1961, cable advising that the pistols were being pouched is the very cable which was sent in response to a request by the dissidents for machine guns to be used in an assassination effort which had been previously described to Headquarters. As with the carbines discussed below, it appears that little, if any, concern was expressed within the Agency over passing these weapons to would-be assassins.

---

*Dearborn is clear in his recollection that he asked Owen to request only one pistol. (Dearborn, 7/29, pp.30,31) Owen, on the other hand, testified that if his cables requested three pistols for Dearborn then Dearborn must have asked for three pistols. (Owen, p.72)

The pistols were, however, apparently sent in one package (HQS to Station cables, 3/27/61 and 3/24/61) and Dearborn testified that, what he believed to be the one gun, came "wrapped up" and that he passed it. (Dearborn, 7/29, p.30)

3. Passing of the Carbines

a. Request by Owen and Dearborn and Approval by CIA

In a March 26, 1961 cable to CIA Headquarters, Owen asked for permission to pass to the dissidents three 30 caliber M1 carbines. The guns had been left behind in the Consulate by Navy personnel after the U.S. broke formal diplomatic relations in August 1960. Dearborn testified that he knew of and concurred in the proposal to supply the carbines to the dissidents. (Dearborn 7/29, pp. 42,43) On March 31, 1961 CIA Headquarters cabled approval of the request to pass the carbines. (Hqs to Station cable, 3/31/61)

b. Were the Carbines Related to Assassination?

The carbines were passed to the action group contact, Wimpy Berry, on April 7, 1961. (Station to HQS cable, 4/8/61) Eventually, they found their way into the hands of one of the assassins, Antonio de la Maza. (Station to HQS cable, 4/26/61; I.G. Report pp. 46, 49) Both Dearborn and Owen testified that the carbines were at all times viewed as strictly a token show of support, indicating U.S. support of the dissidents' efforts to overthrow Trujillo. (Dearborn 7/29, pp. 46-48; Owen p. 39)

c. Failure to Disclose to State Department Officials in Washington

There is no indication that the request or the passage of the carbines was disclosed to State Department officials in Washington until several weeks after the passage. In fact, on April 5, Headquarters requested its Station to ask Dearborn not to comment in correspondence with State that the carbines and ammunition were being passed to the dissidents. This cable was sent while Owen was in Washington, and it indicated that upon his return to the Dominican Republic, he would explain the request. The Station replied that Dearborn had not commented on the carbines and ammunition in his correspondence with State and he realized the necessity not to do so. (Station to HQS cable, 4/6/61)

Dearborn testified, however, that he believed, at the time of his April 6 cable, that someone in the State Department had been consulted in advance and had approved the passage of the carbines (Dearborn 7/29, p. 44)

3. Requests For and Pouching of the Machine Guns

a. Owen Requests Machine Guns for Use in Assassination

The Station Chief suggested that Headquarters consider pouching an M3 machine gun on February 10, 1961 (Owen, pp. 63,64; Station to HQS cable, 3/15/61). The request was raised again in March but no action was taken. On March 20, 1961, Owen cabled a dissident request for five M3 or comparable machine guns specifying their wish that the arms be sent via the diplomatic pouch or similar means. The dissidents were said to feel that delivery by air drop or transfer at sea would overly-tax their resources. (Station to HQS cable, 3/20/61)

The machine guns sought by the dissidents were clearly identified, in Owen's cable, as being sought for use in connection with an attempt to assassinate Trujillo. This plan was to kill Trujillo in the apartment of his mistress and, according to Owen's cable:

> "4. To do they need five M3 or comparable machine-guns. and 1500 rounds ammo for personal defense in event fire fight. Will use quiet weapons for basic job." (Id.)

In essence, CIA's response was that the timing for an assassination was wrong. Owen was told that precipitious or uncoordinated action could lead to the emergence of a leftist, Castro-type regime and the "mere disposal of Trujillo may create more problems than solutions." It was Headquarters' position that:

> "...we should attempt to avoid precipitous action by the internal dissidents until opposition group and HQS are better prepared to support /assassination/*, effect a change in the regime, and cope with the aftermath." (HQS to Station cable, 3/24/61)

---

* Word supplied by CIA in previously sanitized cable.

The cable also stated that Headquarters was prepared to deliver machine guns and ammunition to the dissidents when they developed a capability to received them, but that security considerations precluded use of U.S. facilities as a carrier.* Soon, thereafter, on April 6, 1961, while Owen was in Washington for consultation with Headquarters, he reported on events in the Dominican Republic and

> "especially on the insistence of the EMOTH [dissident] leaders that they be provided with a limited number of small arms for their own protection (specifically, five M3 caliber .45 SMG's)." (CIA memo for the record, 4/11/61)

b. Pouching the Machine Guns is Approved by Bissell

Accordingly, on April 7, 1961, a Pouch Restriction Waiver Request and Certification was submitted seeking permission to pouch "four M3 machine guns and 240 rounds of ammunition on a priority basis for issuance to a small action group to be used for self protection." (Pouch Restriction Waiver Request 4/7/61)

The request, submitted on behalf of the Chief, Western Hemisphere Division, further provided:

> "B. A determination has been made that the issuance of this equipment to the action group is desirable if for no other reason than to assure this important group's continued cooperation with and confidence in this Agency's determination to live up to its earlier commitments to the group. These commitments took > the form of advising the group in January 1961 that we would provide limited arms and assistance to them provided they develop the capability to receive it. Operational circumstances have prevented this group from developing the assets capable of receiving the above equipment through normal clandestine channels such as air drops or sea infiltration."

The Waiver Request was approved by Richard Bissell, as Deputy Director (Plans), on April 10, 1961. (Id.)

The machine guns were pouched to the Dominican Republic and were received by the station on April 19, 1961.* (I.G. Report, p. 42; Station to Headquarters cable, 4/19/61).

On April 10, Walter Elder, Assistant to the Director, had issued a memorandum which stated:

> "Mr. Dulles wants no action on drops of leaflets or arms in the Dominican Republic taken without his approval." (Elder memorandum of 4/10/61).

The Elder memorandum suggests that Dulles did not know that an air drop of arms was regarded as unfeasible and that pouching had been approved.

B. Knowledge of Senior American Officials (pre-Bay of Pigs)

On February 14, 1961, prior to the passage of weapons, but a month after the generalized approval of the passage of arms by the prior administration, a meeting of the Special Group was held with Messrs. McNamara, Gilpatric, Bowles, Bundy, Dulles, Bissell, and General Cabell in attendance.

---

* Permission to pass the machine guns was never obtained and the guns never passed into the hands of the dissidents. The matter is discussed in detail beginning at page ;

 Elder testified that this note, sent the weekend before the Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba, was intended to make sure that there were no unusual planes shot down or any unnecessary noise in the Dominican Republic" prior to the Cuba invasion. (Elder, p. 51)

The minutes state that:

> "Mr. Dulles, assisted by Mr. Bissell, then summarized for the benefit of the new members of the Special Group the specific actions taken by the predecessor group during the past year, and also a list of significant projects which antedate the beginning of 1960 and which it is planned to continue." (Special Group Minutes of 2/14/61)

In the course of the discussion, the following point, among others, was made:

> "(a) Dominican Republic -- Mr. Bundy asked that a memorandum be prepared for higher authority on the subject of what plans can be made for a successor government to Trujillo." (Id.)

The request attributed to Bundy suggests that the Dominican Republic had been one of the matters on which Dulles and Bissell briefed the new members.

What is unclear from the February 14 minutes (just as it is unclear from the January 12 minutes) is the degree to which the Special Group was informed concerning the means by which the dissidents planned to accomplish the overthrow of the Trujillo regime. Specifically, it is not known if the new members of the Special Group were told that the dissident group had expressed the desire to assassinate Trujillo. Nor is it known if the Special Group was advised that the State Department representative in the Dominican Republic had made the assessment that the Dominican government could not be overthrown without the assassination of Trujillo.

Bissell testified that he had no clear recollection of the details of the February 14 briefing and he was unable to say whether or not the method of overthrow to be attempted by the dissidents was discussed. (Bissell, 7/22, pp. 101, 102) Robert McNamara, one of the new members of the Special Group in attendance for the briefing, has no recollection as to the specificity in which the Dominican Republic was discussed at the February 14 meeting. He does not recall any mention by either Dulles or Bissell of dissident plans to assassinate Trujillo. (McNamara affidavit).

February Memoranda

The Secretary of State sent the President a memorandum on February 15, 1961, in response to a request concerning progress to assure an orderly takeover "should Trujillo fall." The memorandum advised that:

> "Our representatives in the Dominican Republic have, at considerable risk to those involved, established contacts with numerous leaders of the underground opposition . . . /and/ . . . the CIA has recently been authorized to arrange for delivery to them outside the Dominican Republic of small arms and sabotage equipment."

This reference to recent authorization for delivery of arms indicates that Secretary Rusk had received some briefing concerning events in the Dominican Republic and the January 1961

Special Group decision to provide arms to anti-Trujillo elements. Assistant Secretary for Inter-American Affairs, Thomas Mann; Deputy Assistant Secretary William Coerr; and Special Assistant Frank Devine continued in their respective positions throughout the transition period. The Committee has been furnished no documents indicating that Secretary Rusk or Under Secretary Bowles were specifically advised as to the intentions of the Dominican dissidents to kill Trujillo; intentions of which the Bureau of Inter-American Affairs certainly had knowledge. Indeed, Secretary Rusk testified that he was not personally so advised. (Rusk, 7/10, pp. 41,42)

On February 17, 1961, Richard Bissell sent a briefing paper on the Dominican Republic to McGeorge Bundy, President Kennedy's National Security Advisor. The paper made note of the outstanding Special Group approval for the provision of arms and equipment to Dominican dissidents and stated that the dissidents had been informed that the U.S. was prepared to provide such arms and equipment as soon as they developed the capability to receive them.

The briefing paper also indicated that dissident leaders had informed CIA of "their plan of action which they felt could be implemented if they were provided with arms for 300 men, explosives, and remote control detonation devices." Various witnesses have testified, however, that supplying arms for 300 men would, standing alone, indicate a "non-targeted" use for the arms (i.e., a paramilitary or revolutionary implementation as opposed to a specifically targeted assassination use). (Bissell, 7/29, p.80),

Concerning the briefing paper, Bissell testified that:

> "... it is perfectly clear that I was aware at the time of the memorandum to Mr. Bundy that these dissident groups were, and had for a long time, been hoping they could accomplish the assassination of Trujillo. As a matter of fact, the requests since some seven or eight months earlier was a perfectly clear indication of that, so that fact was not new knowledge." (Bissell 7/22, p.102)

When asked why the memorandum did not include the fact that the dissidents intended the assassination of Trujillo, Bissell replied:

> "I cannot tell you, Mr. Chairman. I do not remember what considerations moved me. I don't know whether it was because this was common knowledge and it seemed to me unnecessary to include it, or as you are implying, there was an element of concealment here. I would be very surprised if it were the latter, in this case." (Bissell, 7/22, p.101)

In response to questions concerning the lack of information in the February 17, 1961 briefing paper concerning the uses to which the requested arms might likely be put by the dissidents, Bissell stated:

> " . . . I would say that the Agency's failure, if there be a failure here was [not] (sic) to state in writing that the plans of the dissidents would include assassination attempts." (Bissell, 7/22, p.99)

Bissell's briefing paper for Bundy concluded with the assessment that a violent clash might soon occur between Trujillo and the internal opposition, "which will end either with the liquidation of Trujillo and his cohorts or with a complete roll up of the internal opposition." In this regard, the fear was expressed that existing schedules for the delivery of weapons to the internal opposition might not be sufficiently timely, and it was therefore recommended that consideration be given to caching the requested arms and other materials. (Bissell to Bundy memo, 2/17/61)

Thus, by the middle of February 1961, the senior members of the new administration, and in view of the "for higher authority" nature of Bundy's request, presumably President Kennedy himself, were aware of the outstanding Special Group approval for the passage of arms and other materials to opposition elements within the Dominican Republic. There was no modification or recision of the "inherited" Special Group approval and it would seem fair, therefore, to regard the approval as having been at least acquiesced in by the new administration.

During March and early April 1961, operational levels within both the CIA and the State Department learned of increasingly detailed plans by the dissidents to assassinate Trujillo. There is no evidence that this information was passed to the White House or to any member of the Special Group, except Allen Dulles.* Similarly, there is no evidence that the passage of the pistols or the carbines or the pouching of the machine guns to the Dominican Republic was disclosed to anyone outside of the CIA during this period.

VI. April 17, 1961 - May 31, 1961 (Bay of Pigs Through Trujillo Assassination)

Following the failure of the Bay of Pigs invasion, attempts were made by State and CIA representatives in the Dominican Republic to dissuade the dissidents from a precipitous assassination attempt. These efforts to halt the assassination of Trujillo were the result of instructions from CIA Headquarters and were prompted by concern over filling the power vacuum which would result from Trujillo's death.

The machine guns arrived in the Dominican Republic but permission to pass them to the dissidents was never given and the guns never left the Consulate.

Dearborn returned to Washington for consultation and a contingency plan for the Dominican Republic was drafted.

Two days before Trujillo's assassination, Dearborn received a cable of instructions and guidance from President Kennedy. The cable advised that the U.S. must not run the risk of association with political assassination, since the U.S., as a matter of general policy, could not condone assassination. The cable further advised Dearborn to continue to hold open offers of material assistance to the dissidents and to advise them of U.S. support for them if they were successful in overthrowing the Trujillo government. The cable also reconfirmed the decision not to pass the machine guns.

---

* Copies of CIA cables, including the March 20, 1961 cable describing the plan to assassinate Trujillo in the apartment of his mistress were apparently sent to the office of the Director of Central Intelligence.

 Although a copy of the CIA cable advising that the pistols were being pouched was sent to the Director's office, Dulles apparently did not receive copies of the cables approving passage of the carbines or pouching of the machine guns.

A. Decision Not to Pass the Machine Guns and Unsuccessful U.S. Attempt to Stop Assassination Effort

By April 17, 1961, the Bay of Pigs invasion had /operation was a failed/. As a result, there developed a general realization that precipitous action should be avoided in the Dominican Republic until Washington was able to give further consideration to the consequences of a Trujillo overthrow and the power vacuum which would be created. (Bissell, 6/11, p.113) A cable from Headquarters to the Station, on April 17, 1961, advised that it was most important that the machine guns not be passed without additional Headquarters approval.

The machine guns arrived in the Dominican Republic on April 19, 1961, and Headquarters was so advised. The earlier admonition that the machine guns should be held in Station custody until further notice was repeated in a second cable from Headquarters, sent April 20, 1961. This decision was said to have been "based on judgment that filling a vacuum created by assassination now bigger question than ever view unsettled conditions in Caribbean area." (HQs. to Station cable, 4/20/61)

The dissidents continued to press for the release of the machine guns and their requests were passed on to Headquarters in cables from Dearborn and Owen. (Station to HQS cables 4/25/61) On April 25, 1961, Owen advised Headquarters that Wimpy Berry had informed him that Antonio de la Maza was going to attempt the assassination between April 29 and May 2. Owen also reported that this attempt would use the three carbines passed from the American Consulate, together with whatever else was available. (Id.)

In response to the April 26 cable, Headquarters restated that there was no approval to pass any additional arms to the dissidents and requested Owen to advise the dissidents that the United States was simply not prepared at that time to cope with the aftermath of the assassination. (See C/S comments, Station to HQS cable, 4/27/61) The following day, April 27, 1961, Owen replied that, based upon further discussions with the dissidents, "We doubt statement U.S. government not now prepared to cope with aftermath will dissuade them from attempt." (Station to HQS cable, 4/27/61)

Dearborn recalls receiving instructions that an effort be made to turn off the assassination attempt and testified that efforts to carry out the instructions were unsuccessful. In effect, the dissidents informed him that this was their affair and it could not be turned off to suit the convenience of the U.S. government.

(Dearborn, 7/29, p.52)

On April 30, 1961, Dearborn advised Headquarters that the dissidents had reported to him the assassination attempt was going to take place during the first week of May. The action group was reported to have in its possession three carbines, four to six 12-gauge shotguns and other small arms. Although they reportedly still wanted the machine guns, Dearborn advised Headquarters that the group was going to go ahead with what they had, whether the U.S. wanted them to or not. (Station to HQS cable, 4/30/61)

Dearborn's cable set forth the argument of the action group that, since the U.S. had already assisted the group to some extent and was therefore implicated, the additional assistance of releasing the machine guns would not change the basic relationship. The cable concluded:

> "Owing to far-reaching political implications involved in release or non release of requested items, Headquarters may wish discuss foregoing with State Department." (_Id._)

B. Further Consideration of Passing Machine Guns

In reponse, a cable was drafted at CIA Headquarters authorizing passage of the machine guns. The cable which was sent to Allen Dulles, with Bissell's recommendation for its dispatch, provided:

> "Since it appears that opposition group has committed itself to action with or without > additional support, coupled with fact ref. C items [the carbines] already made available to them for personal defense; station authorized pass ref. A items [the machine guns] to opposition member for their additional protection on their proposed endeavor." (Draft of HQS to Station cable, 5/2/61).

The cable was never sent.

In his testimony before the Committee, Bissell characterized his reasoning for recommending release of the machine guns as:

> " . . . having made already a considerable investment in this dissident group and its plans that we might as well make the additional investment." (Bissell, 7/22, p.127)

The following day, May 3, 1961, Ray Herbert, Deputy Chief of the Western Hemisphere Division of CIA, who frequently acted as liaison with the State Department in matters concerning covert operations in the Dominican Republic, met with Adolph Berle, Chairman of the State Department's Interagency Task Force on Latin America.

A Berle memorandum of the meeting states that Herbert informed Berle that a local group in the Dominican Republic wished to overthrow Trujillo and sought arms for that purpose. The memorandum continued:

> "On cross examination it developed that the real plan was to assassinate Trujillo and they wanted guns for that purpose. Herbert wanted to know what the policy should be.
> "I told him I could not care less for Trujillo and that this was the general sentiment. But we did not wish to have any thing to do with any assassination plots anywhere, any time. Herbert said he felt the same way." (Berle, Memo of Conversation, 5/3/61)

Copies of Berle's memorandum were sent to Wymberly Coerr, the Acting Assistant Secretary for Inter-American Affairs, and to Special Assistant Frank Devine.

Both Herbert and Devine, who had been in almost daily contact with each other since August of 1960, had been advised of the assassination plans of the dissident group. In fact, Herbert, along with Bissell, had signed off on the proposed cable of May 2, releasing the machine guns for passage.

C. Special Group Meetings of May 4 and May 18, 1961

On the day following the Berle-Herbert meeting, the Special Group met and, according to the minutes:

> "The DCI referred to recent reports of a new anti-Trujillo plot. He said we never know if one of these is going to work or not, and asked what is the status of contingency planning should the plot come off. Mr. Bundy said that this point is covered in the Cuba paper which will be discussed at a high level in the very near future." (Special Group Minutes, 5/4/61)

Once again, the cryptic reporting of Special Group Minutes makes subsequent analysis as to the scope of matters discussed speculative. It is not known to what extent and in what detail Allen Dulles referred to "recent reports" of a new anti-Trujillo plot. Certainly, the most recent report of such a plot was Dearborn's April 30 cable -- disclosing an imminent assassination attempt potentially utilizing U.S.-supplied weapons.

On May 18, 1961, the Special Group again considered the situation in the Dominican Republic and, according to the minutes:

> " Cabell [Deputy DCI] noted that the internal dissidents were pressing for the release to them of certain small arms now in U.S. hands in the Dominican Republic. He inquired whether the feeling of the Group remained that these arms should not be passed. The members showed no inclination to take a contrary position at this time."* (Emphasis supplied). (Special Group Minutes, 5/18/61)

D. Final Requests by Dissidents for Machine Guns

On May 16, 1961, Dearborn cabled the State Department, attention Acting Assistant Secretary Coerr, with an urgent request from the dissidents for the machine guns. The cable advised that the assassination attempt was scheduled for the night of May 16 and that, while the chances of success were 80 percent, provision of the machine guns would reduce the possibility of failure. The dissidents reportedly stressed to Dearborn that if the effort failed,due to U.S. refusal to supply the machine guns, the U.S. would be held responsible and would never be forgiven. Dearborn reported that he had informed the dissidents that, based on his recent conversations in Washington, he was reasonably certain that authorization could not be obtained for handing over machine guns. (Dearborn to State cable, 5/16/61)

A return cable from the State Department to Dearborn, sent the same day, confirmed Dearborn's judgment. It instructed him to continue to take the same line until he received contrary instructions which clearly indicated they had been cleared in advance by the State Department itself. This cable from State was approved by Under Secretary Bowles. (Department to Dearborn, 5/16/61)

---

* There was no meeting of the Special Group at which the Dominican Republic was discussed between May 4 and May 18. The language attributed to General Cabell as to whether the feeling of the Group remained not to pass the arms, tends to suggest that the question of passing these arms must have been raised prior to the May 18 Group meeting, perhaps at the May 4, 1961 meeting.

Ray Herbert referred to Dearborn's May 16 request in a memorandum he sent to Devine on the same date and asked to be advised as to the Department's policy concerning passage of the machine guns. Herbert noted that when this request was last taken to the Department, Berle made the decision that the weapons not be passed. (Memo to ARA from CIA, 5/16/61)

Devine responded to Herbert's memorandum on the same day, advising Herbert that the Department's policy continued to be negative on the matter of passing the machine guns.* Herbert's attention was directed to the January 12, 1961 Special Group limitation concerning the passage of arms outside of the Dominican Republic. A copy of Devine's memorandum to Herbert was forwarded to the Office of the Under Secretary of State, to the attention of his personal assistant, Joseph Scott. (Devine to Herbert memo, 5/16/61)

E. Dearborn in Washington for Consultation -- Drafting of Contingency Plans

At a meeting of the National Security Council on May 5, 1961, the question of U.S. policy toward the Dominican Republic was considered and it was:

> "Agreed that the Task Force on Cuba would prepare promptly both emergency and long-range plans for anti-communist intervention in the event of crises in Haiti or the

* By May 27, 1961 Dearborn was advising the State Department that the group was no longer requesting the arms and had accepted the fact that it must make do with what it had. (Dearborn to State cable, 5/27/61)

> Dominican Republic. Noted the President's view that the United States should not initiate the overthrow of Trujillo before we knew what government would succeed him, and that any action against Trujillo should be multilateral." (Record of Actions by National Security Council, 5/5/61) (Approved by the President, 5/16/61)

Although the precise dates are uncertain, Dearborn was recalled to Washington to participate in drafting of these contingency plans and recommendations. Dearborn was in Washington at least from May 10 through May 13, 1961.

While in Washington, Dearborn met with State Department personnel and with Richard Goodwin and Arthur Schlesinger of the White House staff. When testifying before the Committee, he was unable to recall the substance of his discussions with Goodwin and Schlesinger, aside from his general assumption that the current situation in the Dominican Republic was discussed. He did not recall any discussion with Goodwin or Schlesinger concerning arms, either those which had been passed to the dissidents or those which were being sought. (Dearborn, 7/29, pp. 58-61) Dearborn left the meeting at the White House, however, with the firm impression that Goodwin had been reviewing cable traffic between Washington and the Dominican Republic and was very familiar with events as they then stood. (Dearborn, 7/29, p.62)

On May 11, 1961, Dearborn prepared a two-page draft document which set forth ways in which the U.S. could overtly aid and encourage the opposition to Trujillo. The draft noted that means of stepping up the covert program were considered in separate papers. (Dearborn draft document of May 11, 1961) This Dearborn draft of May 11, 1961, was apparently used as a basis for portions of the "Dominican Republic -- Contingency Paper" discussed below.

Two documents entitled, "Program of Covert Action for the Dominican Republic" were provided to the Committee staff from State Department files. Each appears to be a draft of the covert activities paper described in Dearborn's May 11, 1961 memorandum. One draft recommended an expanded U.S. offer to deliver small explosive devices and arms. (Document indicating it was attached to "Dominican Republic -- Contingency," dated 5/12/61 and bearing Nos. 306-308). The other draft is very similar except that it concludes that delivery of arms within the Dominican Republic to members of the underground is not recommended. (Document from State Dept. files bearing No. 310).

Attached to the second draft was a one-page document which Frank Devine believes he wrote. It listed eight numbered points including the following:

> "1. The USG should not lend itself to direct political assassination.
> "2. US moral posture can ill afford further tarnishing in the eyes of the world.

"3. We would be encouraging the action, supplying the weapons, effecting the delivery, and then turning over only the final execution to (unskilled) local triggermen.

"4. So far we have seen no real evidence of action capability. Should we entrust ourselves and our reputation to this extent in the absence thereof?

"7. Can we afford a precedent which may convince the world that our diplomatic pouches are used to deliver assassination weapons?" (Document from State Department files bearing No. 313)

The other points raised in document No. 313 related to the likelihood that any such involvement by the U.S. would ultimately be revealed.

On May 15, 1961, Acting Assistant Secretary Coerr sent to Under Secretary Bowles a document entitled "Covert Action Programs Authorized With Respect to the Dominican Republic". That document outlined the existing Special Group approvals for covert assistance to Dominican dissidents and, while making no recommendation as to further policy, suggested that the Special Group review the outstanding approvals and communicate to interested agencies the status of such authorizations. (State Dept. document from Coerr to Bowles, 5/15/61)

During this period a document dated May 13, 1961, was prepared at the request of Richard Goodwin and was thereafter circulated within the State Department.* This document, entitled "Program of Covert Action for the Dominican Republic" reported:

> "CIA has had in the direct custody of its Station in Ciudad Trujillo, a very limited supply of weapons and grenades. In response to the urgent requests from the internal opposition leaders for personal defense weapons attendant to their projected efforts to neutralize TRUJILLO, three (3) 38 Cal revolvers and three (3) carbines with accompanying ammunition have been passed by secure means to the opposition. The recipients have repeatedly requested additional armed support."

This memorandum is the first direct evidence of disclosure to anyone on the White House staff of the fact that arms had been passed to dissidents in the Dominican Republic.

The original ribbon copy of the memorandum has the above quoted material circled in pencil and the word "neutralize" is underscored. Goodwin testified before the Committee that he circled the above paragraph when first reading the memorandum because the information concerning passage of the arms was new to him and struck him as significant. (Goodwin 7/18, pp. 48,49)

Under the heading of "Possible Covert Actions Which Require Additional Authorization," the memorandum to Goodwin indicated that the CIA had a supply of four 45 caliber machine guns and a small number of grenades currently in the direct custody of the Station in Ciudad Trujillo and that a secure means of passing these weapons to the internal opposition "for their use in - personal defense attendant to their projected efforts to remove Trujillo" could be developed by the Station. The memorandum made no recommendation to approve or disapprove passage of these weapons. (Id.)

On May 15, 1961, Bundy forwarded to Goodwin another memorandum. This one, entitled "The Current Situation in and Contingency Plans for the Dominican Republic," had been received by Bundy from the State Department. Attached was an underlying document which began:

> "Recent reports indicate that the internal Dominican dissidents are becoming increasingly determined to oust Trunillo by any means, and their plans in this regard are well advanced."

The May 15 memorandum stressed that it was highly desirable for the U.S. to be identified with and to support the elements seeking to overthrow Trujillo. The attachment recommended that Consul General Dearborn inform the dissidents that if they succeed "at their own initiative and on their own responsibility in forming an acceptable provisional government they can be assured that any reasonable request for assistance from the U.S. will be promptly and favorably answered." (Documents from State Dept. files bearing Nos. 279-286).

F. Drafts Leading to and Final Cable of May 29, 1961

A copy of Dearborn's cable of May 16, 1961, requesting urgent State Department guidance, was forwarded to Richard Goodwin. At the specific request of Goodwin, the State Department replied to Dearborn on May 17, and advised him to keep in mind the President's view, as expressed at the May 5 National Security Council Meeting, that the United States should not initiate the overthrow of Trujillo before knowing what government would succeed him. (Department to Dearborn, 5/17/61)

Dearborn responded on May 21, 1961, pointing out that for over a year State Department representatives in the Dominican Republic had been nurturing the effort to overthrow Trujillo and had assisted the dissidents in numerous ways, all of which were known to the Department. It was, Dearborn stated, "too late to consider whether United States will initiate overthrow of Trujillo." Dearborn invited further guidance from State.

In response to Dearborn's request for guidance, the State Department drafted a reply on May 24. The draft discussed a conflict between two objectives:

> "(1) To be so associated with removal Trujillo regime as to derive credit among DR dissidents and liberal elements throughout Latin America;
> "(2) To disassociate US from any obvious intervention in Dominican Republic and even more so from any political assassination which might occur."

It was said to be the Department's considered opinion that "former objective cannot, repeat not, easily override latter." (State Dept. to Dearborn cable, 5/24/61 - not sent)

This State Department draft was forwarded to Under Secretary Bowles with the comment that Goodwin considered it "too negative" and that he would try his hand on a draft "for Bundy to present tomorrow morning." (Memo from Achilles to Bowles, 5/24/61)

A May 26, 1961, memorandum from Bowles to Bundy begins:

> "Following up on our discussion of the Dominican Republic at yesterday's meeting of the Special Group, I am forwarding you a draft telegram which we would like to send to Henry Dearborn, our Consul General in Ciudad Trujillo, supplementing the guidance he will be receiving on the recently approved contingency plans."

Minutes of the Special Group meeting on May 25, 1961 do not, however, reflect any discussion of the Dominican Republic. If, as Bowles' memorandum suggests, a discussion concerning the Dominican Republic did occur at the May 25 meeting, it is not known what the discussion involved or what decisions, if any, were made.

Richard Goodwin personally prepared alternate drafts to the proposed State Department cable to Dearborn. Goodwin testified that it was his intent in revising the cable to communicate to Dearborn, President Kennedy's personal belief that the United States:

> " . . . didn't want to do anything that would involve us further, the United States further, in any effort to assassinate Trujillo." (Goodwin, 7/10, p.32)

At the same time, Goodwin's draft raised the issue of further covert action and transfer of arms to the dissidents and advised Dearborn to hold out the arms as being available to the dissidents pending their ability to receive them.

It was the twofold intent of the cable as revised by Goodwin, (1) to express the desire to remain in the good graces of the dissidents who, it was believed, would constitute the new government following Trujillo's assassination, and (2) to avoid any action which might further involve the United States in the anticipated assassination. This dual purpose is clearly evident in the cable which advised:

> " . . . we must not run risk of U.S. association with political assassination, since U.S. as matter of general policy cannot condone assassination. This last principal is overriding and must prevail in doubtful situation." (Emphasis added)

* * * * * * *

> "Continue to inform dissident elements of U.S. support for their position."

According to Goodwin, the underscored material was inserted in the cable at the specific direction of President Kennedy. (Goodwin, 7/10, pp. 22, 23).

With respect to the four machine guns which were in the Consulate and which had been repeatedly requested by the dissidents, the cable advised Dearborn that the U.S. was unable to transfer these arms to the dissidents. Dearborn was instructed to:

> "Tell them that this is because of our suspicion that method of transfer may be unsafe. In actual > fact, we feel that the transfer of arms would serve very little purpose and expose the United States to great danger of association with assassination attempt."

The cable, as revised by Goodwin and approved by President Kennedy, was sent to Dearborn on May 29, 1961. (State Dept. to Dearborn cable, 5/29/61)

VII. May 30, 1961 and Immediately Thereafter:

A. Trujillo Assassinated

Late in the evening of May 30, 1961, Trujillo was ambushed and assassinated near San Cristobal, Dominican Republic. The assassination closely paralleled the plan disclosed by the action group to American representatives in the Dominican Republic and passed on to officials in Washington at both the CIA and the State Department. (Dearborn cable to State, 5/30/61) The assassination was conducted by members of the action group, to whom the American carbines had been passed, and such sketchy information as is available indicates that one or more of the carbines were in the possession of the assassination group when Trujillo was killed. (I. G. Report, pp. 60-61). This evidence indicate however, that the actual assassination was accomplished by handguns and shotguns. (I.G. Report, p.61)

B. Cables to Washington

After receiving the May 29 cable from Washington, both Consul General Dearborn and Station Chief Owen sent replies. According to Dearborn's testimony, he did not regard the May 29 cable as a change in U.S. policy concerning support for assassinations. (Dearborn 7/29/75, p. 74).

He interpreted the May 29 cable as saying:

> "...we don't care if the Dominicans assassinate Trujillo, that is all right. But we don't want anything to pin this on us, because we aren't doing it, it is the Dominicans who are doing it." (Dearborn, 7/29, p. 104)

Dearborn testified that this accorded with what he said had always been his personal belief; that the U.S. should not be involved in an assassination and that if an assassination occurred it would be strictly a Dominican affair. (Dearborn 7/29, pp. 100, 101)

In contrast the CIA Station Chief, Owen, did regard the cable as manifesting a change in U.S. policy, particularly on the question of supplying arms. (Owen p. 120) He believed the May 29 cable was the final word in U.S. policy on this matter and consequently felt that the government had retreated from its prior position, of offering material support to the dissidents, and had adopted a new position of withholding such support. Owen's responsive cable to Headquarters stated:

> "HQS aware extent to which U.S. government already associated with assassination. If we are to at least cover up tracks, CIA personnel directly involved in assassination preparation must be withdrawn." (Station to HQS cable, 5/30/61)

Immediately following the assassination, all CIA personnel in the Dominican Republic were removed from the country and within a few days Consul General Dearborn was back in Washington. The State Department cabled the CIA station in the Dominican Republic to destroy all records concerning contacts with dissidents and any related matters, except not to destroy the contingency plans or the May 29, 1961 cable to Dearborn. (HQS to Station cable, 5/31/61.

C. Immediate Post-Assassination Period

The U.S. Consulate in the Dominican Republic was quick to dispatch its early reports that Trujillo had been assassinated, and the U.S. communications network transmitted the report to President Kennedy in Paris. The President's Press Secretary, Pierre Salinger, made the first public announcement of the assassination, preceeding by several hours release of the news in the Dominican Republic. Secretary of State Rusk testified that when he learned of Salinger's announcement he was most concerned. Rusk said that Trujillo's son Ramfis was also in Paris and he was afraid that Ramfis, upon first learning of his father's death from the press secretary to the President of the U.S., might try to retaliate against President Kennedy. I. Summary

On September 4, 1970, Dr. Salvador Allende Gossens won a plurality in Chile's Presidential election.* Since no candidate had received a majority of the popular vote, the Chilean constitution required that a joint session of its Congress decide between the first and second place finishers. This constitutional requirement had, in the past, been pro-forma. The Congress had always selected the candidate who received highest popular vote. The date set for the Congressional joint session was October 24, 1970.

On September 15, 1970, President Richard Nixon informed CIA Director Richard Helms that an Allende regime in Chile would not be acceptable to the United States. The CIA was instructed by President Nixon to play a direct role in organizing a military coup d'etat in Chile to prevent Allende's accession to the presidency. The Agency was to take this action without coordination with the Departments of State or Defense and without informing the U.S. Ambassador in Chile. While coup possibilities in general and other means of seeking to prevent Allende's accession to power were explored by the 40 Committee throughout this period, the 40 Committee was never informed of this direct CIA role. Nor did it ever approve that role. The only institution to which the Agency was to report, both for informational and approval purposes, was the White House.

---

*Dr. Allende, a long-time Senator and founder of the Socialist Party in Chile, was a candidate of Popular Unity Coalition. The Coalition was made up of Communists, Socialists, Social Democrats, Radicals, and dissident Christian Democrats. Allende was a self-proclaimed Marxist and was making his fourth try for the presidency. His opponents were Radomire Tomic Romero, candidate of the ruling Christian Democratic Party, and Jorge Alessandri Rodriquez, candidate of the right-wing National Party. Dr. Allende won 36.3% of the popular vote; Alessandri was second with 35.3% of the vote. Dr. Allende's margin of victory was 39,000 votes out of a total of 3 million votes cast in the election. The incumbent President, Eduardo Frei Montalvo, a Christian Democrat, was ineligible for re-election. Chilean law prohibits Presidents from succeeding themselves.

In practice, this meant that the CIA was to keep the President's Assistant for National Security Affairs, Henry Kissinger, informed of its activities.

Between October 5 and October 20, 1970, the CIA made 21 contacts with key military and Carabinero (police) officials in Chile. Those Chileans who were inclined to stage a coup were given assurances of strong support at the highest levels of the U.S. Government, both before and after a coup.

One of the major obstacles faced by all the military conspirators in Chile was the strong opposition to a coup by the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, General Rene Schneider, who insisted the constitutional process be followed. As a result of his strong constitutional stand, the removal of General Schneider became a necessary ingredient in the coup plans of all the Chilean conspirators. Unable to have General Schneider retired or reassigned, the conspirators decided to kidnap him. An unsuccessful abduction attempt was made on October 19, 1970, by a group of Chilean military officers whom the CIA was actively supporting. A second kidnap attempt was made the following day, again unsuccessfully. In the early morning hours of October 22, 1970, machine guns and ammunition were passed by the CIA to the group that had failed on October 19. That same day General Schneider was mortally wounded in an attempted kidnap on his way to work. The attempted kidnap and the shooting was apparently conducted by conspirators other than those to whom the CIA had provided weapons earlier in the day.

A Chilean military court found that high-ranking military officers, both active and retired, conspired to bring about a military coup and to kidnap General Schneider. Several of the officers whom the CIA had contacted and encouraged in their coup conspiracy were convicted of conspiring to kidnap General Schneider. Those convicted of carrying out the actual kidnap attempt and the killing of General Schneider were associates of retired General Roberto Viaux, who had initially been thought by the CIA to be the best hope. However, later the CIA discouraged General Viaux because the Agency felt other officers, such as General Camilo Valenzuela, were not sufficiently involved. General Viaux was convicted by the military court and received a twenty-year prison sentence for being the "intellectal author" of the Schneider kidnap attempt. General Valenzuela was sentenced by the military court to three years in exile for taking part in the conspiracy to prevent Allende's assumption of office. The military court found that the two Generals had been in contact throughout the coup plotting.

The principal facts leading up to the death of General Schneider (all of which are discussed in more detail below) are as follows:

1. By the end of September 1970, it appeared that the only feasible way for the CIA to implement the Presidential order to prevent Allende from coming to power was to foment a coup d'etat.

2. All of the known coup plots developed within the Chilean military entailed the removal of General Schneider by one means or another.

3. United States officials continued to encourage and support Chilean plans for a coup after it became known that the first step would be to kidnap General Schneider.

4. Two unsuccessful kidnap attempts were made, one on October 19, the other on October 20. Following these attempts, and with knowledge of their failure, the CIA passed three submachine guns and ammunition to Chilean officers who still planned to kidnap General Schneider.

5. In a third kidnap attempt on October 22, apparently conducted by Chileans other than those to whom weapons had been supplied, General Schneider was shot and subsequently died. The guns used in the abortive kidnapping of General Schneider were, in all probability, not those supplied by the CIA to the conspirators. The Chilean military court which investigated the Schneider killing determined that Schneider had been murdered by handguns, although one machine gun was at the scene of the killing.*

6. While there is no question that the CIA received a direct instruction from the President on September 15th to attempt to foment a coup, the Committee received sharply conflicting testimony about whether the White House was kept informed of, and authorized, the coup efforts in Chile after October 15. On one side of the conflict is the testimony of Henry Kissinger and General Alexander Haig; on the other, that of CIA officials. Kissinger testified that the White House stood down CIA efforts to promote a military coup d'etat in Chile on October 15, 1970. After that date, Kissinger testified--and Haig agreed--that the White House neither knew of, nor specifically approved, CIA coup activities in Chile. CIA officials, on the other hand, have testified that their activities in Chile after October 15 were known to and

---

* The Committee has not been able to determine whether or not the machine gun at the scene of the Schneider killing was one of the three supplied by the CIA.

thus authorized by the White House.*

This conflict in testimony, which the Committee has been unable to resolve through its hearings or the documentary record, leaves unanswered the most serious question of whether the CIA was acting pursuant to higher authority (the CIA's view) or was pursuing coup activities in Chile without sufficient communication (the Kissinger/Haig view).

---

* The basic issue is whether or not the CIA informed the White House of its activities. In context, informing was tantamount to being authorized. No one who testified believed that the CIA was required to seek step-by-step authorization for its activities; rather the burden was on the White House to object if a line of activity being pursued by the CIA seemed unwise. Both Kissinger and Haig agreed that if the CIA had proposed a persuasive plan to them, it almost certainly would have been approved. The CIA did not believe it needed specific White House authorization to transfer weapons to the Chileans; in fact, CIA Deputy Director (Plans) Thomas Karamessines testified that he did not formally approve the transfer, but rather that in the context of the project it was clear that the Agency had the authority to transfer weapons and that it was clear to Karamessines' subordinates that he would approve their decision to do so. He believed he probably was informed before the weapons actually were sent.

II. The President's Initial General Instruction and Background

A. September 15 White House Meeting

On September 15, 1970, President Nixon met with his Assistant for National Security Affairs, Henry Kissinger, CIA Director Richard Helms, and Attorney General John Mitchell at the White House. The topic was Chile. Handwritten notes taken by Director Helms at that meeting reflect both its tenor and the President's instructions:

> 1 in 10 chance perhaps, but save Chile!
> worth spending > not concerned risks involved
> no involvement of Embassy
> $10,000,000 available, more if necessary > full-time job--best men we have > game plan > make the economy scream
> 48 hours for plan of action

In his testimony before the Select Committee, Director Helms recalled coming away from the meeting on September 15 with:

> ...(the) impression...that the President came down very hard that he wanted something done, and he didn't much care how and that he was prepared to make money available....This was a pretty all-inclusive order....If I ever carried a marshall's baton in my knapsack out of the Oval Office, it was that day.* (Helms testimony, July 15, pp. 6,10,11)

---

* Director Helms also testified that the September 15th meeting with President Nixon may have been triggered by the presence of Augustin Edwards, the publisher of the Santiago daily El Mercurio, in Washington. That morning, at the request of Donald Kendall, President of Pepsi Cola, Henry Kissinger and John Mitchell had met for breakfast with Kendall and Edwards. (Mitchell calendar) The topic of conversation was the political situation in Chile and the plight of El Mercurio and other anti-Allende forces. According to Mr. Helms:

> I recall that prior to this meeting (with the President) the editor of El Mercurio had come to Washington and I had been asked to go and talk to him at one of the hotels here, this having been arranged through Don Kendall, the head of the Pepsi Cola Company....I have this impression that the President called this meeting where I have my handwritten notes because of Edwards' presence in Washington and what he heard from Kendall about what Edwards was saying about conditions in Chile and what was happening there.
> (Helms testimony, July 15, pp. 4-5)

However, none of the CIA officers believed that assassination was within the guidelines Helms had been given.

> Senator Hart of Colorado. ...did the kind of carte blanche mandate you carried, the marshall's baton that you carried out in a knapsack, to stop Allende from assuming office, include physical elimination?
> Mr. Helms. Well, not in my mind, because when I became Director, I had already made up my mind that we weren't going to have any of that business when I was Director, and I had made that clear to my fellows, and I think they will tell you this.

The following day, September 16, Director Helms called a meeting at the CIA to discuss the Chilean situation. At this meeting, he related to his colleagues his understanding of the President's instructions:

> 2. The Director told the group that President Nixon had decided that an Allende regime in Chile was unacceptable to the United States. The President asked the Agency to prevent Allende from coming to power or to unseat him. The President authorized $10,000,000 for this purpose, if needed. Further, the Agency is to carry out this mission without coordination with the Departments of State or Defense.
> (Memorandum/Genesis of the Project, 16 Sept. 1970)

Henry Kissinger's recollection of the September 15 meeting with President Nixon is in accord with that of Richard Helms.* Although Dr. Kissinger did not recall the President's instructions to be as precise as those related by Director Helms, he did testify that:

> ...the primary thrust of the September 15th meeting was to urge Helms to do whatever he could to prevent Allende from being seated. (Kissinger testimony, p. 13)

---

* The documents, and the officials from whom the Committee has heard testimony, are in substantial agreement about what President Nixon authorized on September 15, namely CIA involvement in promoting a military coup d'etat in Chile. There is not, however, agreement about what was communicated between the CIA and the White House--and hence what was authorized by the latter--in the week between October 15 and the death of General Schneider, October 22. This matter will be discussed in Part V of this report on the Schneider killing.

> It is clear that President Nixon wanted him (Helms) to encourage the Chilean military to cooperate or to take the initiative in preventing Allende from taking office. (Kissinger testimony, p. 12)

Operationally, the CIA set the President's instructions into motion on September 21. On that day two cables were sent from CIA Headquarters to Santiago informing the CIA Chief of Station (COS) of his new directive:

> 3. Purpose of exercise is to prevent Allende assumption of power. Parliamentary legerdemain has been discarded. Military solution is objective.
> (Hqs. to Stn. 236, 21 September 1970)

> B. (Track Two)--This is authority granted to CIA only, to work toward a military solution to problem. As part of authority we were explicitly told that 40 Committee, State, Ambassador and Embassy were not to be told of this Track Two nor involved in any matter. (Hqs. to Stn. 240, 21 September 1970)

B. Background: Tracks I and II

United States Government concern over an Allende regime in Chile did not begin with President Nixon's September 15 instruction to the CIA.* For more than a year, Chile had been on the 40 Committee's agenda. At an April 15, 1969, meeting of the 303 Committee (the predecessor of the 40 Committee) the question arose as to whether anything should be done with regard to the September 1970 Presidential election in Chile. At that time, Director Helms pointed out that "an election operation will not be effective unless an early enough start is made.* On March 25, 1970, the 40 Committee approved a joint Embassy/CIA proposal recommending that "spoiling" operations--propaganda and other activities--be undertaken by the CIA in an effort to prevent an election victory by Allende's Popular Unity (UP) Coalition. A total of $135,000 was authorized by the 40 Committee for this anti-Allende activity. On June 18, 1970, the U.S. Ambassador to Chile, Edward Korry, submitted a two-phase proposal to the Department of State and the CIA for review. The first phase involved an increase in support to the anti-Allende campaign. The second was a contingency plan to make "a $500,000 effort in Congress to persuade certain shifts in voting on 24 October 1970." Phase II was, stated simply, a proposal to bribe Chilean Congressmen to vote against Allende should he win a plurality in the September 4 election. On June 27, 1970, the 40 Committee increased funding for the anti-Allende "spoiling" operation to $390,000. A decision on Ambassador Korry's bribe proposal was deferred pending the results of the September 4 election.

* Covert U.S. Government involvement in large-scale political action programs in Chile began with the 1964 Presidential election. As in 1970, this was in response to the perceived threat of Salvadore Allende. Over $3 million was spent by the CIA in the 1964 effort.

The 40 Committee met twice between the time Allende received a plurality of the popular vote on September 4 and President Nixon issued his instruction to Director Helms on September 15. At both these meetings the question of U.S. involvement in a military coup against Allende was raised. Kissinger stressed the importance of these meetings when he testified before the Select Committee:

---

*This and other references to 40 Committee discussions and actions regarding Chile are contained in a memorandum provided to the Committee by the CIA entitled "Policy Decisions Related to Our Covert Action Involvement in the September 1970 Chilean Presidential Election," dated October 9, 1970. On August 25, 1975, we subpoenaed all White House/National Security Council documents and records relating to the effort by the United States Government to prevent Salvadore Allende from assuming office. On September 4, the Committee received 46 documents from the White House relating to Chile covering the period September 5 to October 14, 1970.

TOP SECRET

Following the September 4 election, the CIA's Directorate of Intelligence circulated an intelligence community assessment of the impact of an Allende government on U.S. national interests. That assessment, dated September 7, 1970, stated:

> Regarding threats to U.S. interests, we conclude that:
> 1. The U.S. has no vital national interests within Chile. There would, however, be tangible economic losses.
>
> 2. The world military balance of power would not be significantly altered by an Allende government.
>
> 3. An Allende victory would, however, create considerable political and psychological costs:
>
>   a. Hemispheric cohesion would be threatened by the challenge that an Allende government would pose to the OAS, and by the reactions that it would create in other countries. We do not see, however, any likely threat to the peace of the region.
>   b. An Allende victory would represent a definite psychological set-back to the U.S. and a definite psychological advance for the Marxist idea. (Intelligence Memorandum/ "Situation Following the Chilean Presidential Election," CIA's Directorate of Intelligence, 7 September 1970)

> I think the meeting of September 15th has to be seen in the context of two previous meetings of the 40 Committee on September 8th and September 14th in which the 40 Committee was asked to look at the pros and cons and the problems and prospects of a Chilean military coup to be organized with United States assistance.
> (Kissinger testimony, p. 5)

According to the summary of the 40 Committee meeting on September 8, the following was discussed:

> ...all concerned realized that previous plans for a Phase II would have to be drastically redrawn.... The DCI made the point, however, that congressional action against Allende was not likely to succeed and that once Allende was in office the Chilean opposition to him would disintegrate and collapse rapidly. While not advocating a specific course of action, the Director further observed that a military golpe against Allende would have very little chance of success unless undertaken soon. Both the Chairman and the Attorney General supported this view....At the close of the...meeting the Chairman directed the Embassy to prepare a "cold-blooded assessment" of:
> 1) the pros and cons and problems and prospects involved should a Chilean military coup be organized now with U.S. assistance, and
> 2) the pros and cons and problems and prospects involved in organizing an effective future Chilean opposition to Allende.
> (CIA Memorandum/Policy Decision Related to Our Covert Action Involvement in the September 1970 Chilean Presidential Election, 9 October 1970)

Ambassador Korry responded to the 40 Committee's request for a "cold-blooded assessment" on September 12. He stated that "We /the Embassy/ believe it now clear that Chilean military will not, repeat not, move to prevent Allende's accession, barring unlikely situation of national chaos and widespread violence." The Ambassador went on to say that "Our own military people /are/ unanimous in rejecting possibility of meaningful military intervention in political situation." He concluded by stating: "What we are saying in this 'cold-blooded assessment' is that opportunities for further significant USG action with the Chilean military are nonexistent." (Memorandum/Ambassador's Response to Request for Analysis of Military Option in Present Chilean Situation, 12 September 1970)

The CIA's response was in the same vein. Viron Vaky, Kissinger's assistant for Latin American affairs on the NSC staff, summarized the CIA's "cold-blooded assessment" in a memo to his boss: "Military action is impossible; the military is incapable and unwilling to seize power. We have no capability to motivate or instigate a coup." (Memorandum for Dr. Kissinger/Chile--40 Committee Meeting, Monday--September 14, September 14, Viron P. Vaky)

On September 14, the 40 Committee met to discuss these reports and what action was to be taken:

> Particular attention was devoted to a CIA prepared review of political and military options in the Chilean electoral situation based on the Embassy and Station's "cold-blooded assessment." The Committee focused on the so-called "Rube Goldberg" gambit which would see Alessandri elected by the Congress on October 24th, resigning thereafter to leave Frei constitutionally free to run in a second election for the presidency.

TOP SECRET

> Ambassador Korry was asked to go directly to President Frei to see if he would be willing to commit himself to this line of action. A contingency of $250,000 was approved for "covert support of projects which Frei or his trusted team deem important." It was further agreed that a propaganda campaign be undertaken by the Agency to focus on the damage of an Allende takeover....
> (CIA Memorandum/Policy Decision Related to Our Covert Action Involvement in the September 1970 Chilean Presidential Election, 9 October 1970)

Following the September 14 Forty Committee meeting and President Nixon's September 15 instruction to the CIA, U.S. Government efforts to prevent Allende from assuming office proceeded on two tracks.* Track I comprised all covert activities approved by the 40 Committee, including the $250,000 contingency fund to bribe Chilean congressmen as well as propaganda and economic activities. These activities were designed to induce the opponents to Allende in Chile to prevent his assumption of power, either through political or military means. Track

---

*The terms Track I and Track II were known only to CIA and White House officials who were knowledgeable about the President's September 15 order to the CIA. The Committee sent letters to various senior officials inquiring if they were, in fact, not knowledgeable of the Track II activities. Those letters were sent to Secretary of State William Rogers, Secretary of Defense Melvin Laird, Deputy Secretary of Defense David Packard, Undersecretary of State for Political Affairs U. Alexis Johnson, Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Admiral Thomas Moorer, NSC Staff Member for Latin America Viron P. Vaky, Director of the State Department's Bureau of Intelligence and Research Ray S. Cline, and the Deputy Chief of Mission in Santiago Harry W. Shlaudeman. Thus far the Committee has received written responses from Messrs. Moorer, Johnson, Vaky, Shlaudeman and Cline. All except Cline have indicated that they had no knowledge of the Track II activity at the time; Cline indicated he heard of the activities in a general way, from his subordinate who handled 40 Committee work and from former associates at the CIA. In oral communications with Committee staff members, Secretaries Rogers and Laird have indicated they were unaware of Track II.

II activities in Chile were undertaken in response to President Nixon's September 15 order and were directed towards actively promoting and encouraging the Chilean military to move against Allende. In his testimony before the Committee, Kissinger stressed the links between Tracks I and II:

> ...There was work by all of the agencies to try to prevent Allende from being seated, and there was work by all of the agencies on the so-called Track I to encourage the military to move against Allende ...the difference between the September 15th meeting and what was being done in general within the government was that President Nixon was encouraging a more direct role for the CIA in actually organizing such a coup. (Kissinger testimony, p. 13)

Tracks I and II did, in fact, move together in the month after September 15. The authorization to Ambassador Korry, who was formally excluded from Track II, to encourage a military coup became broader and broader. In the 40 Committee meeting on September 14, he and other "appropriate members of the Embassy Mission" were authorized to intensify their contacts with Chilean military officers to assess their willingness to support the "Frei gambit"--a voluntary turn-over of power to the military by Frei, who would then have been eligible to run for President in new elections. (Memorandum/Policy Decisions Related to Our Covert Action Involvement in the September 1970 Chilean Presidential Election, 9 October 1970)

In a situation report to Dr. Kissinger and Assistant Secretary Charles Meyer on September 21, Ambassador Korry indicated that in order to make the Frei gambit work, "if necessary, General Schneider would have to be neutralized, by displacement if necessary."* (Korry to Meyer and Kissinger/Situation Report, 21 September 1970) In testifying, Kissinger felt the Korry report indicated "the degree to which Track I and Track II were merging, that is to say, that individuals on Track I were working on exactly the same problem as the CIA was working on Track II." (Kissinger testimony, p. 21)

Ambassador Korry's activites in Chile between September 4 and October 24 support Kissinger's view that the line separating Track I and Track II often became blurred. For example, the Ambassador was authorized to make his contacts in the Chilean military aware that if Allende were seated, the military could expect no further military assistance (MAP) from the United States. Later, in response to his own recommendation, Korry was authorized to inform the Chilean military that all MAP and military sales were being held in abeyance pending the outcome of the Congressional election on October 24. On October 7, Ambassador Korry received the following cable from Kissinger and Under Secretary of State U. Alexis Johnson:

*In this same situation report, Ambassador Korry related a message that he had sent to President Frei through his Defense Minister indicating the economic pressures that would be brought to bear on Chile should Allende assume office.

> Frei should know that not a nut or bolt will be allowed to reach Chile under Allende. Once Allende comes to power we shall do all within our power to condemn Chile and the Chileans to utmost deprivation and poverty, a policy designed for a long time to come to accelerate the hard features of a Communist society in Chile. Hence, for Frei to believe that there will be much of an alternative to utter misery, such as seeing Chile muddle through, would be strictly illusory.

The use of economic instruments as levers on Frei and the Chilean military was a persistent subject of White House/CIA discussions and of instructions to the field. Helms' notes from the September 15 meeting with the President and Kissinger included the notation "make the economy scream." Economic leverage was the primary topic of a September 18 White House meeting involving Kissinger, Helms and Karamessines.

> 2. ...you are now authorized to inform discreetly the Chilean military through the channels available to you that if a successful effort is made to block Allende from taking office, we would reconsider the cuts we have thus far been forced to make in Chilean MAP and otherwise increase our presently programmed MAP for the Chilean Armed Forces.... If any steps the military should take should result in civil disorder, we would also be prepared promptly to deliver support and material that might be immediately required. (Hqs. to Stn. 075517, 7 October 1970)

The essential difference between Tracks I and II, as evidenced by instructions to Ambassador Korry during this period, was not that Track II was coup-oriented and Track I was not. Both had this objective in mind. The difference between the two tracks was, simply, that the CIA's direct contacts with the Chilean military, and its active promotion and support for a coup, were to be known only to a small group of individuals in the White House and the CIA. Kissinger testified that Track II matters were to be reported directly to the White House "for reasons of security." (Kissinger testimony, p. 14) Thomas Karamessines, the CIA's Deputy Director for Plans at the time and the principal CIA contact with the White House on Track II matters, testified on his understanding of why State, Defense, the 40 Committee and Ambassador Korry were excluded from Track II:

> That was not a decision that we made. But the best I can do is suggest that there was concern about two things. Number one, that there might be serious objections lodged, for example, by the State Department particularly if Track 2 were to be laid out at a Forty Committee meeting. And the only other thing I can contribute to that is that it was felt that the security of the activity would be better protected if knowledge of it were limited. (Karamessines testimony, p. 122)

C. CIA Views of Difficulty of Project

On one point the testimony of CIA officials who were involved in Track II is unanimous: they all said they thought Track II was unlikely to succeed. That view ran from the working levels of the Agency to the top. They all said they felt they were being asked to do the impossible, that the risks and potential costs of the project were too great. At the same time, they felt they had been given an explicit Presidential order, and they tried to execute that order.

A few excerpts from the testimony follow:

Richard Helms, CIA Director -

> ...my heart sank over this meeting, because...the possibility of bringing off something like this seemed to me at that time to be just as remote as anything could be. In practical terms, the Army was constitutionalist....And when you look here at the time frame in which the man was suddenly asking you to accomplish something, it seemed really almost inconceivable....
>
> What I came away from the meeting with the distinct impression that we were being asked to do almost the impossible and trying to indicate this was going to be pretty tough.... (Helms testimony, July 15, 1975, pp. 6-7)

David Phillips, Chief, Chile Task Force -

> ...it is my feeling that the odds are unacceptable, it is something that is not going to work, and we are going to be burned if we get into it ...what are the chances of pulling off a coup successfully, or in any way stopping Allende from assuming the presidency?...we never even got to two chances out of 20. (Phillips testimony, p. 16)
>
> ...I assure you that those people that I was in touch with at the Agency just about universally said, my God, why are we given this assignment? (Phillips testimony, p. 53)

James Flannery, Deputy Chief, Western Hemisphere Division -

> There was just no question that we had to make this effort, no matter what the odds were. And I think that most people felt that the odds were just pretty long. (Flannery testimony, p. 20)

Further, CIA officials believed their judgment of the endeavor's difficulty was known to the White House. Helms commented on the September 15th meeting: "So realizing all of these things, I'm relatively certain that day that I pointed out this is going to be awfully tough." (Helms testimony, July 15, 1975, p. 16) Karamessines recalled pointing out to the President that "the Chilean military seemed to be disorganized and unwilling to do anything. And without their wanting to do something, there did not seem to be much hope." (Karamessines testimony, p. 10)

III. CIA's Implementation of Track II

A. Evolution of CIA Strategy

The President's instruction to the CIA on September 15 to prevent Allende's assumption of power was given in the context of a broad U.S. Government effort to achieve that end. The September 15 instruction to the CIA involved from the beginning the promotion of a military coup d'etat in Chile. Although there was talk of a coup in Chilean military circles, there was little indication that it would actually take place without active U.S. encouragement and support.

> There was much talk among Chilean officers about the possibility of some kind of coup...but this was not the kind of talk that was being backed by, you know, serious organizational planning.
> (Karamessines testimony, Aug. 6, 1963, p. 32)

1. The "Constitutional Coup" Approach

Although efforts to achieve a political solution to the Allende victory continued simultaneous with Track II, the Agency premised its activities on the assumption that the political avenue was a dead end. On September 21, CIA Headquarters cabled its Station in Santiago:

> Purpose of exercise is to prevent Allende assumption of power. Paramilitary legerdemain has been discarded. Military solution is objective.
> (Hqs. 236, Sept. 21, 1970, para. 3)

The initial strategy attempted to enlist President Frei in promoting a coup to perpetuate his presidency for six more years. The Agency decided to promise "help in any election which was an outgrowth of a successful military takeover." (Nov. 18, 1970 Helms memo to Kissinger) Under this plan Frei would invite the military to take over, dissolve the Congress, and proclaim a new election. A private U.S. citizen who had been a conduit for CIA funds to Frei's 1964 campaign was sent to see him with this message on September 24. (Task Force Log, September 23)

Thomas Karamessines, the Deputy Director for Plans, testified:

> So this was in a sense not Track II, but in a sense another aspect of a quiet and hopefully non-violent military coup....This was abandoned when the military were reluctant to push Frei publicly...and, number two, Frei was reluctant to leave on his own in the absence of pressure from the military....There was left as the only chance of success a straight military coup.
> (Karamessines testimony, Aug. 6, 1975, p. 6)

At the same time, the Station in Santiago reported:

> Strong reasons for thinking neither Frei nor Schneider will act. For that reason any scenario in which either has to play an active role now appears utterly unrealistic. Overtures to lower echelon officers (e.g., Valenzuela) can of course be made. This involves promoting Army split.
> (Stn. to Hqs. 424, September 23, 1970)

2. Military Solution

President Frei's failure even to attempt to persuade his own party convention on October 3-4 from reaching a compromise with Allende ended all hope of using him to prevent an Allende presidency. (November 18 memo, Helms to Kissinger, page 16) Thus, by the beginning of October, it was clear that a vehicle for a military solution would have to be found in the second echelon of Chilean officers, and that the top leadership of the Armed Services, particularly General Rene Schneider, constituted a stumbling block. (Santiago 424, September 23, 1970; Santiago 439, September 30, 1970) The Agency's task was to cause a coup in a highly unpromising situation and to overcome the formidable obstacles represented by Frei's inaction, Schneider's strong constitutionalism, and the absence of organization and enthusiasm among those officers who were interested in a coup.

A three-fold program was set into motion:

TOP SECRET

a. Collect intelligence on coup-minded officers;

b. Create a coup climate by propaganda, disinformation, and terrorist activities intended to provoke the left to give a pretext for a coup;*(Hqs. 611, October 7, 1970)

c. Inform those coup-minded officers that the U.S. Government would give them full support in a coup short of direct U.S. military intervention. (Hqs. 762, October 14, 1970)

B. The Chile Task Force

Because of the highly sensitive nature of the operation, a special task force was created in the CIA's Western Hemisphere Division to manage it. The task force was placed under the daily direction of the Deputy Director for Plans, Thomas Karamessines, and a group of the Agency's most experienced and skilled operators were detailed to the task force.

---

*A cable sent from CIA Headquarters to Santiago on October 19 focused on creating an appropriate justification for a coup. The cable stated:

1. It still appears that Ref A coup has no pretext or justification that it can offer to make it acceptable in Chile or Latin America. It therefore would seem necessary to create one to bolster what will probably be their claim to a coup to save Chile from communism...You may wish include variety of themes in justification of coup to military for their use. These could include but are not limited to: A) Firm intel. that Cubans planned to reorganize all intelligence services along Soviet/Cuban mold thus creating structure for police state....B)Economic situation collapsing.....C)By quick recognition of Cuba and Communist countries Allende assumed U.S. would cut off material assistance to Armed Forces thus weakening them as constitutional barriers. Would then empty armories to Communist Peoples Militia with task to run campaign of terror based on alleged labor and economic sabotage (Use some quotes from Allende on this.)
2. Station has written some excellent prop guidances. Using themes at hand and which best known to you we are now asking you to prepare intel report based on some well known facts and some fiction to justify coup, split opposition, and gain adherents for military group. With appropriate military contact can determine how to "discover" intel report which could even be planted during raids planned by Carabineros.
3. We urge you to get this idea and some concrete suggestions to plotters as soon as you can. Coup should have a justification to prosper.

(Headquarters 882, 19 October 1970)

David A. Phillips, Chief of Station in Rio de Janeiro, was summoned back to Washington to head the operation. With the exception of the Division Chief, William Broe, his deputy James Flannery and the head of the Chile Branch, no other officers in the Division were aware of the task force's activities, not even those officers who normally had responsibility for Chile. The task force had a special communications channel to Santiago and Buenos Aires to compartment cable traffic about Track II. (November 18, 1970, Helms to Kissinger memo, page 3) Most of the significant operational decisions were made by Phillips, Broe and Karamessines, who met on a daily basis.

It should be noted that all those involved with the task force described the pressure from the White House as intense. Indeed, Karamessines has said that Kissinger "left no doubt in my mind that he was under the heaviest of pressure to get this accomplished, and he in turn was placing us under the heaviest of pressures to get it accomplished." (Karamessines testimony, August 6, 1975, page 7) The Deputy Chief of the Western Hemisphere Division, James Flannery, testified that pressure was "as tough as I ever saw it in my time there, extreme." (Flannery testimony, July 15, 1975, page 20) Broe testified that "I have never gone through a period as we did on the Chilean thing. I mean it was just constant, constant....Just continual pressure....It was coming from the White House." (Broe testimony, August 4, 1975, page 55)

C. The Use of the Army Attache and Interagency Relations

The CIA Station in Santiago had inadequate contacts within the Chilean military to carry out its task. However, the U.S. Army Attache in Santiago, Colonel Paul Wimert, knew the Chilean military very well due to his five years of service there and his broad personal contacts among the Chilean officers. Following a proposal by the Chief of Station, the CIA decided to enlist Colonel Wimert in collecting intelligence concerning the possibility of a coup and to use him as a channel to let the interested Chilean military know of U. S. support for a coup. Karamessines described this procedure for the Committee:

> We also needed contact with a wider segment of the military, the senior military which we had not maintained and did not have, but which we felt confident that our military representative in Chile had....And we got the approval of the DIA to enlist the cooperation of Colonel Wimert in our effort to procure intelligence.
> (Karamessines testimony, August 6, 1975, p. 6)

To obtain Wimert's services, CIA officials prepared a suggested message for the Director of DIA to send to the Army Attache in Santiago through CIA communications channels. Because the DIA Director, General Donald V. Bennett, was in Europe on official business, the Deputy Director of Central Intelligence, General Cushman, invited DIA Deputy Director Lt. General Jammie M. Philpott to his office on September 28, 1970.* During that meeting, General Cushman requested the assistance of the Army Attache, and General Philpott signed a letter which authorized transmission of a message directing the Army Attache:

> ...to work closely with the CAS chief, or in his absence, his deputy, in contacting and advising the principal military figures who might play a decisive role in any move which might, eventually, deny the presidency to Allende.
> Do not, repeat not, advise the Ambassador or the Defense Attache of this message, or give them any indication of its portent. In the course of your routine activities, act in accordance with the Ambassador's instructions. Simultaneously, I wish--and now authorize you--to act in a concerted fashion with the CAS chief.

---

* General Bennett returned to the United States on the evening of October 10, 1970. General Philpott was Acting Director in Bennett's absence.

TOP SECRET

> This message is for your eyes only, and should not be discussed with any person other than those CAS officers who will be knowledgeable. CAS will identify them. (Headquarters 380 to Santiago)

For this and all subsequent messages intended for the Army Attache, the secret CIA communications channel was used.

Both General Philpott and Thomas Karamessines testified that initially the Army Attache would be used only to "obtain or procure" intelligence on Chilean military officers.* (Philpott, p. 11; Karamessines, p. 6) The September 28, 1970 message to the Army Attache, however, did in fact trigger his deep involvement in the coup attempt. According to the Attache's testimony, he received day-to-day instructions from the Chief of Station, and on occasion, the COS would show him messages ostensibly from Generals Bennett and/or Philpott, directing him to take certain actions. The COS also transmitted messages from the Army Attache to these Generals.

General Bennett testified that he never had knowledge of Track II and that he never received any communication relating thereto, nor did he ever authorize the transmission of any messages to the Army Attache. General Philpott also testified that he had no recollection of anything connected with Track II after his initial meeting with General Cushman on September 28. (Philpott, p. 16)

U. S. Army Colonel Robert C. Roth, who in September and October 1970 was the Chief of the Human Resources Division, Director of Collection, DIA,

---

* In this connection it should be noted that when questioned about this letter, General Philpott testified that he recalled signing an authorization such as that contained in the first paragraph of Headquarters 380 but that he did not recall the authorizations and instructions in paragraphs two and three.

TOP SECRET

testified that he recalled working for Generals Bennett and Philpott on "a priority requirement to identify Chilean personalities who might be helpful in preventing the election of Allende as President of Chile." (Roth, Vol. I, p. 6) Though Roth recalls no mention of Track II as such, the goal of this mission is identical to that described in the message of September 28 bearing Philpott's signature.

Beginning on October 15, Roth kept a chronology of his activities connected with Chile. This chronology reflects that there was a meeting on October 21 regarding the preparation of biographic material on Chilean generals which focused on their willingness to participate in a military coup. Generals Bennett, Philpott, and a CIA representative attended. The chronology also shows that on October 21, Roth delivered a message to Mr. Broe to be sent by CIA channels.* A message was sent to Col. Wimert that same day, ostensibly from General Bennett, which authorized:

> FYI: Suspension temporarily imposed on MAP and FMS has been rescinded. This action does not repeat not imply change in our estimate of situation. On the contrary, it is intended to place us in a posture in which we can formally cut off assistance if Allende elected and situation develops as we anticipate. Request up date on situation. (Santiago 446; Ref: Headquarters 762) (Headquarters 934, 21 October 1970)

Roth testified that this DIA project ended on October 23 when he followed Philpott's instructions to deliver biographic information on Chilean figures to Mr. Broe at CIA. Philpott also instructed him that

---

* Roth believes that General Philpott directed him to deliver this message and also pressed him on several occasions to seek a response from Broe to an earlier message to Colonel Wimert. (Roth, Vol. II, p.   )

TOP SECRET

"any further action on the subject would henceforth be the responsibility of the CIA and that DIA would perform normal support functions." (Roth, p. 8)*

Both Bennett and Philpott testified that the activities described by Roth were routine DIA activities. However, Colonel Roth testified:

> I believe my impression at the time, or my recollection, is that I was informed that there was concern at the highest U.S. Governmental level over the possible election of Allende, that DIA then had a priority responsibility of coming up with the identities of key Chilean personalities that would be helpful, and so forth. I have nothing specific as to the nature of the instructions or the channels through which they came.
> Q. It was your sense at the time that you were working on a project that if it had not been initiated by, at least had the attention of or concern of, the highest level?

---

* Roth's chronology also indicates that Philpott had asked that Broe be queried on two or three occasions regarding a report from Wimert and that Philpott instructed that only he (Philpott) would communicate with Cushman if the need arose. (Roth, p. 11) Roth also testified that Philpott advised him that communications with Wimert would be by CIA channels. (Roth, p. 41)

TOP SECRET

Colonel Roth. That was my impression at the time.

Q. You understand from your work in the Defense Department that the highest level of government usually indicated the President of the United States?

Colonel Roth. I would assume that.

The CIA produced copies of several messages which identify Generals Bennett and Philpott as either the sender or recipient. Among these documents is a message relating to Track II which bears Philpott's purported signature. (Undated message. ca. 14 October 1970) General Philpott admitted that the signature appears to be his but doubted that it was and he could not recall signing it, or having seen it. (Philpott, p.) CIA also produced messages of October 14 (Headquarters 762) and October 21 (Headquarters 934) conveying instructions from General Bennett to the Army Attache. General Bennett testified he did not authorize these messages:

> It is beyond the responsibilities which I had in the military assistance area. It goes beyond the responsibility which I had in terms that I would have to get the authority or the approval of the Secretary through the Chairman for covert action of this magnitude. This message would not have been signed by me. (Bennett testimony, p. 21)

According to Karamessines, only the White House had the authority to issue the directives contained in those messages (Karamessines testimony, p. 84)

The Department of Defense was unable to provide any documents bearing on the issue of Wimert's Track II instructions or responses. A DOD file search under the direction of General Daniel O. Graham, the present Director of DIA, produced no copies of communication documents for the September-October 1970 period. (Graham, p. 6) However, Roth testified that detailed memoranda for the record which he prepared on his activities are missing from the files. (Roth, Vol. II, p.)

CIA officials maintain that they acted faithfully in transmitting messages to Generals Bennett and/or Philpott and in never sending a message without proper authorization. Mr. Karamessines was particularly forceful in this regard:

> ...I can recall no instance in my experience at the Central Intelligence Agency in which a message was received for an individual, an officer of the government anywhere, in whatever department, which was not faithfully, directly, promptly and fully and accurately delivered to that officer, or to his duly authorized representative.
> (Karamessines testimony, p. 79)

> We may have played tricks overseas, but it stopped at the water's edge, and we didn't play tricks among ourselves or among our colleagues within the Agency or in other agencies.
> (Karamessines testimony, p. 79)

> We could not remain in business for a day...if this had been the practice of the Agency. It would have been no time at all before we would have been found out, a single instance of the kind of thing you are suggesting might have taken place would have put us out of business.
> (Karamessines testimony, p. 80)

Dr. Kissinger denied he was ever informed of the Army Attache's role or that he authorized any messages to be sent to the Army Attache. (Kissinger testimony, p. 22)

The investigation to date has not resolved the conflict between the statements of the senior CIA, DIA and White House officials. There are four possibilities that could explain the conflict. First, Generals Bennett and Philpott were cognizant of Track II and communicated their general instructions to the Army Attache. This possibility would be contrary to their sworn testimony. Second, General Bennett was not aware of Track II but General Philpott was and communicated general instructions to the Army Attache. This possibility is supported by Roth's testimony but would be contrary to Philpott's sworn testimony and his duty to keep General Bennett informed. Third, the CIA acted on its own, and, after receiving initial authority from General Philpott, co-opted and ordered the Army Attache without further informing any member of the Department of Defense of the White House. This possibility would be contrary to the sworn testimony of David Phillips, William Broe, Thomas Karamessines, and William Colby. Fourth, members of the White House staff authorized the CIA to convey orders to the Army Attache on the basis of high or highest government authority. Further, that the White House staff directed that the Army Attache's superiors in the Pentagon not be informed. This possibility would contradict the sworn testimony of Dr. Kissinger and General Alexander Haig.

D. The False Flag Base

In order to minimize the risks of making contact with the dissident Chilean officers, the task force decided in late September to set up a "False Flag Base," i.e., to send four staff officers to Chile posing as nationals of other countries to supplement Colonel Wimert's contacts with Chilean military officers.* Given the limitations of the Station's resources and Colonel Wimert's visibility, Headquarters felt the use of "False Flag Officers" was necessary because "We don't want to miss a chance." One of these officers posed as a Brazilian intelligence officer so that "any flap would be a Brazilian one." (Headquarters 363, September 27, 1970)

---

*The use of "False Flag Officers" is not, according to David Phillips, "an unusual practice," either by the CIA or foreign intelligence services. (Phillips testimony, pp. 47-48)

The False Flaggers were compartmented from each other and reported separately on their contacts to a "deep cover" CIA officer in Santiago who in turn reported to the Station. According to the testimony of the Chief of Station, they received their instructions from Washington and not from him. (Chief of Station testimony (Felix), August 1, 1975, p. 27)

E. Chief of Station

Although most of the Station officers in Santiago did not know of Track II, the Chief and Deputy Chief of Station were knowledgeable and the Chief of Station initiated contacts on his own with Chilean officers. The COS has testified that he regarded Track II as unrealistic:

> I had left no doubt in the minds of my colleagues and superiors that I did not consider any kind of intervention in those constitutional processes desirable....And one of the reasons certainly for my last recall (to Washington) was to be read the riot act--which was done in a very pleasant, but very intelligible manner. Specifically, I was told at that time that the Agency was not too interested in continuously being told by me that certain proposals which had been made could not be executed, or would be counterproductive. (Chief of Station (Felix) testimony, August 1, 1975, p. 10)

The Chief of Station's objection to Track II did not go unnoticed. The following instruction to the COS was sent on October 7: "Report should not contain analysis and argumentation but simply report on action taken." (Headquarters 612, 7 October) Very simply, Headquarters wanted the Station to take orders quietly as was the Agency itself.

Three examples of the Chief of Station's reporting bear out his claim to have dissented:

> Bear in mind that parameter of action is exceedingly narrow and available options are quite limited and relatively simple.
> (Santiago 424, September 23, 1970)

> Feel necessary to caution against any false optimism. It is essential that we not become victims of our own propaganda. (Santiago 441, October 1, 1970)

> Urge you do not convey impression that Station has sure-fire method of halting, let alone triggering coup attempts. (Santiago 477, October 7, 1970, p.2)

IV. CIA Efforts to Promote a Coup

A. The Chilean Conspirators

Anti-Allende coup plotting in Chile centered around several key individuals. One of these was retired General Roberto Viaux, the General who had led the "Tacnazo" insurrection a year before.* Following the "Tacnazo" revolt, and his dismissal from the Army, Viaux retained the support of many non-commissioned and junior officers as well as being the recognized leader of several right-wing civilian groups. (CIA Briefing Paper, "Special Mandate from the President on Chile," July 15, 1975)

Another individual around which plotting centered was General Camilo Valenzuela, Commander of the Santiago Garrison. General Valenzuela was in league with several other active duty officers, including Admiral Hugo Tirado, Navy Commander in Chief; General Vicente Huerta, Director General of the Carabinero (police) Corps; General Canales, Director of the Military Academy; and General Joaquin Garcia, second in command, Air Force. (CIA Report on Chilean Task Force Activities, November 18, 1970) All of these officers, with the possible exception of Canales, were in contact with Viaux as well.

*This revolt was engineered by Viaux ostensibly for the purposes of dramatizing the military's demand for higher pay, but was widely interpreted as an abortive coup.

The record of meetings between Viaux and the active duty military officers is incomplete. The record does show, however, that Viaux met with General Huerta around October 7. (Chile Task Force Log, October 7). On October 12 Viaux met with General Valenzuela (Chile Task Force Log, 14 October). One cable from Santiago indicates that Admiral Tirado may have been a member of Viaux's inner circle of conspirators. (Station 545, 16 October 1970) At the very least, Tirado was in contact with Viaux.

Although a distinction can be made between the Viaux and Valenzuela groups, as CIA witnesses did throughout their testimony before the Committee, the principal distinction between the two was that the latter was led by active duty military officers. The two groups were in contact with each other. The record also indicates that they worked together in at least two of the three Schneider kidnap attempts.

There was considerable communication among the various plotting elements. As Thomas Karamessines testified:

> ...I might add here that it seemed that a good dozen or more, maybe 20 Chilean senior officers were privy to what was going on in addition to President Frei and they were all talking to one another exchanging views and trying to see how best to mount the kind of coup that they wanted to see take place. (Karamessines testimony, p. 10)

B. Contacts Prior to October 15

The CIA's initial task in Chile was to assess the potential within the Chilean military to stage a coup. It recognized quickly that anti-Allende currents did exist in the military and the Carabineros (police), but were immobilized by "the tradition of military respect for the Constitution" and "the public and private stance of General Schneider, Commander in Chief of the Army, who advocated strict adherence to the Constitution." (CIA Report on Chilean Task Force Activities, 18 November 1970, p. 17) The Agency's task, then, was to overcome "the apolitical, constitutional-oriented inertia of the Chilean military." (Ibid, p. 2)

Since the very top of the Chilean military, embodied by General Schneider and his second-in-command, General Prat, were hostile to the idea of a coup against Allende, discreet approaches were made to the second level of general officers. They were to be informed that the U.S. Government would support a coup both before and after it took place.* (Headquarters to Station 611, 7 October 1970) This effort began in earnest on October 5 when Colonel Wimert informed both an Army General ("Station's priority contact") an an Air Force General of the pro-coup

---

*The military officers were told, for example, that should Allende be prevented from taking office, "The Chilean military will not be ostracized, but rather can continue to count on us for MAP support and maintenance of our close relationship." (Hqs. 075517, 7 October 1970)

U.S. policy. (Santiago 469, October 5; Santiago 473, October 6)*
Three days later the Chief of Station told General Huerta, Commander of the Carabineros that "the U.S. Government favors a military solution and is willing to support it in any manner short of outright military intervention." (Task Force Log, 9 October) General Huerta informed the COS that there was no chance of a coup by the Chilean Army high command. (Task Force Log, 10 October)

On October 7, Colonel Wimert approached members of the War Academy in Santiago who in turn asked him to provide light weapons. This was Colonel Wimert's first contact with the Army Lt. Colonel to whom he would ultimately pass three submachine guns on October 22. At this meeting, the Lt. Colonel told Colonel Wimert that he and his colleagues were > trying to exert force on Frei to eliminate Gen. Schneider to either replace him, send him out of the country. They had even studied plans to kidnap him. Schneider is the main barrier to all plans for the military to take over the government to prevent an Allende presidency. (Santiago 483, 8 October)

---

*According to the CIA's wrap-up report on Track II, between October 5 and October 20, the CIA Station and the Army Attache--for the most part the latter--made 21 contacts with key military and Carabinero officials. (CIA Report on Chilean Task Force Activities, 8 November 1970)

In his testimony, Colonel Wimert indicated that the Lt. Colonel was affiliated with General Canales. (Wimert testimony, p. 52) In a cable sent to Headquarters on October 18, in which the Lt. Colonel's request for three submachine guns was made, the Station indicated that Wimert believed the Army officer, and his companion, a Navy Captain, were in league with Admiral Tirado. (Station 562, October 18) At another point in his testimony, Wimert stated, "There was Valenzuela here and the Navy Captain and the Army Lt. Colonel and the Air Force General over here." (Wimert testimony, p. 107) The Committee has been unable to determine the exact affiliation of the Army Lt. Colonel. However, as previously stated, both General Canales and Admiral Tirado were affiliated with General Valenzuela and Admiral Tirado was in contact with General Viaux.

TOP SECRET

The next day, October 8, Headquarters cabled the Station in response to the Wimert-Lt. Colonel meeting. Headquarters took note of Schneider's resistance to coup plans and stated:

> ...This would make it more important than ever to remove him and to bring this new state of events...anything we or Station can do to effect removal of Schneider? We know this rhetorical question, but wish inspire thought on both ends on this matter.
> (Hqs. 628, 8 October)

During the first week of intensive efforts chances of success looked unusually bleak. The Chile Task Force Log commented:

> President Frei and the highest levels of the armed forces unable to pull themselves together to block Allende. The Chilean military's tradition of non-intervention, Frei's reluctance to tarnish his historical image, General Schneider's firm constitutional stand, and most importantly, the lack of leadership within the government and military are working against a military takeover.
> (Task Force Log, 8 October)

The following day the Station made reference to the "rapid(ly) waning chances for success." (Santiago 487, 9 October) This pessimism was not dispelled by their simultaneous judgment: "Station has arrived at Viaux solution by process of elimination." (Santiago 504, 10 October) Three days later the Task Force agreed: "We continue to focus our attention on General Viaux who now appears to be the only military leader willing to block Allende." (Task Force Log, 13 October)

If Viaux was the CIA's only hope of staging a coup, things were bleak indeed. His own colleagues, Generals Huerta and Valenzuela described him as "a General without an army." (Santiago 495, 9 October) Yet in the first two weeks of October he came to be regarded as the best hope for carrying out the CIA's Track II mandate.

Although Colonel Wimert was instructed not to involve himself with Viaux because of the high risk involved (Santiago 461, 5 October), he served initially as a contact to Viaux through an Argentine military Attache. The Argentine reported on October 5 that Viaux wanted several hundred paralyzing gas grenades to launch a coup on October 9. (Santiago 476, 6 October) Headquarters turned down the request, concluding that a "mini-coup at this juncture would be counterproductive" and Viaux should postpone his plans, "while encouraging him in a suitable manner to maintain his posture so that he may join larger movement later if it materializes." (Headquarters 585, 6 October)

The primary purpose of the "False Flag Base" was to contact Viaux, and it very rapidly relieved Wimert and the Argentine Attache of that task. Viaux reiterated his demand for an air drop of weapons to the "False Flagger," and again the response was the same: reject the demand for arms, but encourage him to keep planning. In essence the Agency was buying time with Viaux: "We wish to encourage Viaux to expand and refine his coup planning. Gain some influence over his actions." (Headquarters 689, 10 October) To achieve this latter purpose, Headquarters authorized passing $20,000 in cash and a promise of $250,000 in life insurance to Viaux and his associates, as a demonstration of U.S. support. (Headquarters 729, 13 October)

On October 13, Headquarters again indicated its concern over Schneider by asking: "What is to keep Schneider from making statement in early hours which will freeze those military leaders who might otherwise join Viaux?" (Headquarters 729, 13 October) The Station's response later that same day was "Viaux intends to kidnap Generals Schneider and Prats within the next 48 hours in order to precipitate a coup." (Santiago 527, 13 October) This Viaux kidnapping of Schneider was reported by the Station "as part of a coup that included Valenzuela." (Station 529, 13 October)

At about this time the Station began to receive encouragement from its other contacts. On October 14, ten days before the Chilean Congress was to vote, the Task Force Log concluded:

> Now we are beginning to see signs of increasing coup activity from other military quarters, specifically, an Army General (name deleted), Admiral Tirado, the forces in Concepcion and Valdivis and perhaps even Frei and Ossa.
> (Task Force Log, 14 October)

C. October 15 Decision

To summarize, by October 15, General Viaux had advertised to his contact a desire to proceed with a coup, had indicated he would deal with the Schneider obstacle by kidnapping him, had met at least once with Generals Huerta and Valenzuela and had once postponed his coup plans.*

On October 15 Thomas Karamessines met Henry Kissinger and Alexander Haig at the White House to discuss the situation in Chile. According to the Agency's record of this meeting, Karamessines "provided a rundown on Viaux, the Canales meeting with Tirado, and, in some detail, the general situation in Chile from the coup-possibility viewpoint." (Memorandum of Conversation/Kissinger, Karamessines, and Haig, 15 October 1970) A decision was made at the meeting "to de-fuse the Viaux coup plot, at least temporarily:"

---

* The reason for Viaux postponing his coup plans was the subject of a cable from Santiago to Headquarters:

> We discount Viaux's statement that he had called off his coup attempt because of False Flag Officer's impending visit. Other reporting indicated Viaux probably not able or intending move this weekend. (Santiago 499, 10 October)

There is also reason to believe that General Valenzuela was instrumental in persuading Viaux to postpone. According to the Chile Task Force Log:

> Station reported that on 12 October General Valenzuela met with General Viaux and attempted to persuade him not to attempt a coup." (Chile Task Force Log, 14 October)

> It was decided by those present that the Agency must get a message to Viaux warning him against any precipitate action. In essence the message should state: "We have reviewed your plans and based on your information and ours, we come to the conclusion that your plans for a coup at this time cannot succeed. Failing, they may reduce your capabilities in the future. Preserve your assets. We will stay in touch. The time will come when you with all your other friends can do something. You will continue to have our support." (15 October Memorandum of Conversation, Kissinger, Karamessines, Haig)

The meeting concluded, according to the Agency's record, "on Dr. Kissinger's note that the Agency should continue keeping the pressure on every Allende weak spot in sight--now, after the 24th of October, after 5 November, and into the future until such time as new marching orders are given. Mr. Karamessines stated that the Agency would comply."*

The following day CIA Headquarters cabled the results of the White House meeting to the Station in Santiago:

> 2. It is firm and continuing policy that Allende be overthrown by a coup....We are to continue to generate maximum pressure toward this end utilizing every appropriate resource.
> 3. After the most careful consideration it was determined that a Viaux coup attempt carried out by him alone with the forces now at his disposal would fail. Thus it would be counterproductive to our Track Two objectives. It was decided that CIA get a message to Viaux warning him against precipitate action. (Headquarters 802, 16 October)

The message was supplemented by orders to "continue to encourage him (Viaux) to amplify his planning; encourage him to join forces with other coup planners." (Headquarters 802, 16 October) The message concluded: "There is great and continuing interest in the activities of Tirado, Canales, Valenzuela _et al_ and we wish them optimum good fortune." (Ibid.)

---

* Secretary Kissinger's recollection of the October 15 meeting is not in accord with that of Mr. Karamessines or the cable (Headquarters 802) that was sent the following day to the Station in Santiago. This matter will be discussed in Part V of this report.

D. Coup Planning and Attempts After October 15

The decision to "de-fuse" General Viaux was passed to Viaux's father-in-law on October 17. The in-law responded that it did not matter because they had decided to proceed with the coup in any case. (Santiago 533, 17 October) At the final meeting of the CIA "False Flagger" and Viaux's father-in-law on October 18, the Agency was informed that the coup would proceed on October 22, "and that the abduction of General Schneider is first link in chain of events to come." (Santiago 568, 19 October) An "emergency channel" of communication with Viaux was maintained. (Report on CIA Chilean Task Force Activities, 18 November 1970, page 21)

As previously stated, by mid-October things suddenly looked brighter for a coup being mounted by the high-level Chilean military contacts.* As a CIA overview statement in Track II stated:

> Coup possibilities afforded by the active duty military group led by General Valenzuela and Admiral Tirado had always seemed more promising than the capabilities of the Viaux group. These military officers had the ability and resources to act providing they decided to move and organized themselves accordingly.
>
> (CIA Briefing Paper, "Special Mandate from the President on Chile," July 15, 1975, p. 5)

By mid-October those military officers appeared to be moving in this direction.

On the evening of October 17, Colonel Wimert met with the Army Lt. Colonel and the Navy Captain. They requested 8 to 10 tear gas grenades, three 45-caliber machine guns and 500 rounds of ammunition. The Navy Captain said he had three machine guns himself "but can be identified by serial numbers as having been issued to him. Therefore unable to use them." (Santiago 562, 18 October) Colonel Wimert and the Chief of Station have testified that the officers wanted the machine guns for self-protection. The question, of course, is whether the arms were intended for use, or were used, in the kidnapping of General Schneider. The fact that the weapons were provided the Lt. Colonel and the Navy Captain and that Viaux associates were convicted of the Schneider killing suggests that the guns were not involved.

*Two coup plotters, Generals Canales and Garin, made one last attempt to persuade General Schneider to change his anti-coup position on October 15. The Station reported that the meeting turned out to be a "complete fiasco. Schneider refused to listen to General Canales' eloquent presentation of Communist action in Chile...and adament in maintaining his non-involvement stance." (Santiago 548, 16 October)

The machine guns and ammunition were sent from Washington by diplomatic pouch on the morning of October 19, although Headquarters was puzzled about their purpose: "Will continue make effort provide them but find our credulity stretched by Navy Captain leading his troops with sterile guns. What is special purpose for these guns? We will try send them whether you can provide explanation or not." (Headquarters 854, 18 October) The first installment was delivered to the Army Lt. Colonel and the Navy Captain late in the evening of October 18 and consisted of the six tear gas grenades intended originally for Viaux.*

* As previously stated, after October 15 CIA efforts to promote a coup in Chile focussed on the active duty military officers--Valenzuela, et. al.--rather than Viaux. An example of this shift in focus was the decision to provide the Army Lt. Colonel and the Army Captain the tear gas grenades originally intended for Viaux. A cable from Santiago explained the purpose of this action:

> Station plans give six tear gas grenades to Colonel Wimert for delivery to Armed Forces officers (deletion) instead of having False Flag Officer deliver them to Viaux group. Our reasoning is that Wimert dealing with active duty officers. Also False Flagger leaving evening 18 October, and will not be replaced but Wimert will stay here. Hence important that Wimert credibility with Armed Forces officers be strengthened.
> (Santiago 562, 18 October)

That same day, General Valenzuela informed Colonel Wimert that he, General Huerta, Admiral Tirado and an Air Force General were prepared to sponsor a coup. (CIA Report on Chilean Task Force Activities, 18 November 1970) Their plan was to begin with the kidnapping of General Schneider on the following evening, October 19, at a military dinner being given for Schneider,* after which Schneider would be flown to Argentina, Frei would resign and leave Chile, Admiral Tirado would head the military junta, and dissolve Congress. With respect to the kidnapping of Schneider, the cable reports:

> General Viaux knowledgeable of above operation but not directly involved. He has been sent to Vina to stay with prominent physician. Will be seen in public places during 19 and 20 October to demonstrate fact that above operation not his doing. Will be allowed to return to Santiago at end of week. Military will not admit involvement in Schneider's abduction which is to be blamed on leftists. (Santiago 566, 19 October)

The kidnapping of the evening of October 19 failed because General Schneider left in a private vehicle, rather than in his official car, and his police guard failed to be withdrawn, but the Army Lt.Colonel assured Colonel Wimert that another attempt would be made on October 20. (Santiago 582, 20 October) Colonel Wimert was authorized to pay Valenzuela $50,000 "which was the price agreed upon between the plotters and the unidentified team of abductors."

---

* The "False Flag Officer" who was in contact with Viaux at the time the Valenzuela plan was given to Colonel Wimert apparently understood that Viaux was involved in the October 19 attempt. He stated:

> Q. Were you told any of the details of how the (Viaux) kidnapping would be carried out?
>
> Mr. Sarno. They indicated it was going to be at some sort of a banquet which the General (Schneider) would be attending.
> (Sarno testimony, p. 37)

but Wimert insisted that the kidnapping be completed before he paid the money. (Task Force Log, 20 October) At the same time General Valenzuela assured Colonel Wimert that the military was now prepared to move. (Task Force Log, 20 October) The second abduction attempt on the 20th also failed and the Task Force concluded

> Since Valenzuela's group is apparently having considerable difficulty executing even the first step of its coup plan, the prospects for a coup succeeding or even occurring before 24 October now appears remote. (Task Force Log, 22 October)

E. The Killing of General Schneider

In the early morning hours of October 22 (2 am), Colonel Wimert delivered the three submachine guns with ammunition to the Army Lt. Colonel in an isolated section of Santiago.*

---

*Although Colonel Wimert's testimony and the cable traffic do not clearly establish the identity of the group to which the Lt. Colonel was affiliated (see page 31) two CIA statements on Track II tie the weapons, and therefore the Lt. Colonel, to the Valenzuela group:

> ...The only assistance requested by Valenzuela to set the plan /of October 19/ into motion through Schneider's abduction was several sub-machine guns, ammunition, a few tear gas grenades and gas masks (all of which were provided) plus $50,000 for expenses (which was to be passed upon demand.
> (CIA Report on Chilean Task Force Activities, 18 November 1970, p. 22)

> ...Three sub-machine guns, together with six gas cannisters and masks, were passed to the Valenzuela group at 2 am on 22 October. The reason why they still wanted the weapons was because there were two days remaining before the Congress decided the Presidential election and the Valenzuela group maintained some hope they could still carry out their plans.
> (CIA Briefing Paper, "Special Mandate from the President on Chile," p. 7, July 15, 1975)

At about 7 am that day the group that intended to kidnap General Schneider met to discuss last-minute instructions. According to the findings of the Chilean Military Court which investigated the Schneider killing, neither the Army Lt. Colonel nor the Navy Captain were there. Shortly after 8 am, General Schneider's car was intercepted, on his way to work, by the abductors and he was mortally wounded when he drew his handgun in self-defense. The Military Court determined that hand guns had been used to kill General Schneider, although it also found that one unloaded machine gun was at the scene of the killing.*

The first Station reports following the Schneider shooting said "Military Mission sources claim General Schneider machine gunned on way to work" (Santiago 587, 22 October) and "Assailants used grease guns." (Santiago 589, 22 October) The submachine guns had previously been described as "grease guns." Thus the initial reaction of the Station was that Schneider had been shot with the same kind of weapons delivered several hours earlier to the Army Lt. Colonel. Santiago then informed Headquarters "Station has instructed Col. Wimert to hand over $50,000 if Gen. Valenzuela requests " (Santiago 592, 22 October), thus indicating that the Station thought the kidnapping had been accomplished by Valenzuela's paid abductors. Later that day, the Station cabled Headquarters:

---

* The Military Court determined that those who participated in the shooting of General Schneider on October 22 were part of the Viaux-led conspiracy. The Court also found that this same group had participated in the October 19 and 20 kidnap attempts.

In June 1972 General Viaux was convicted for complicity in the plot culminating in the death of General Schneider. He received a 20-year prison sentence for being "author of the crime of kidnapping which resulted in serious injury to the victim," and a five-year exile for conspiring to cause a military coup. Also convicted on the latter charge were Generals Valenzuela and Tirado. They received sentences of three years in exile.

> Station unaware if assassination was premeditated or whether it constituted bungled abduction attempt. In any case, it important to bear in mind that move against Schneider was conceived by and executed at behest of senior Armed Forces officers. We know that General Valenzuela was involved. We also near certain that Admiral Tirado, Army Lt. Colonel and Navy Captain witting and involved. We have reason for believeing that General Viaux and numerous associates fully clued in, but cannot prove or disprove that execution or attempt against Schneider was entrusted to elements linked with Viaux. Important factor to bear in mind is that Armed Forces, and not retired officers or extreme rightests, set Schneider up for execution or abduction.... All we can say is that attempt against Schneider is affording Armed Forces one last opportunity to prevent Allende's election if they are willing to follow Valenzuela's scenario.
> (Santiago 598, 22 October)

F. Post October 22 Events

The shooting of General Schneider resulted immediately in a declaration of martial law, the appointment of General Prats to succeed Schneider as Commander in Chief, and the appointment of General Valenzuela as chief of Santiago province. These measures, and others taken, caused the Chile Task Force to make the following initial judgment:

> With only 24 hours remaining before the Congressional runoff, a coup climate exists in Chile....The attack on General Schneider has produced developments which closely follow Valenzuela's plan....Consequently the plotters' positions have been enhanced.
> (Chile Task Force Log, 22 October)

On October 23, Director Helms reviewed and discussed Track II:

> It was agreed...that a maximum effort has been achieved, and that now only the Chileans themselves can manage a successful coup. The Chileans have been guided to a point where a military solution is at least open to them. (Task Force Log, 24 October)

Although it was not immediately clear to CIA observers, the Station's prediction of October 9 that the shooting of Schneider (as a result of an abduction attempt) would "rally the Army firmly behind the flag of constitutionalism" was correct. (Santiago 495, 9 October) On October 24 Dr. Allende was confirmed by the Chilean Congress. General Schneider died the next day.

TOP SECRET

V. CIA/White House Communication During Track II

The testimony given to the Committee by Henry Kissinger and General Haig conflicts with that given by CIA officials.

Kissinger and Haig testified that on October 15, 1970, the White House stood down CIA efforts to promote a military coup d'etat in Chile. Both testified that after that date they were neither informed of, nor authorized, CIA Track II activities, including the kidnap plans of General Schneider and the passage of weapons to the military plotters.

By contrast, CIA officials testified that they operated before and after October 15 with the knowledge and approval of the White House.

The conflict pertains directly to the period after October 15, but it bears on the degree of communication between the White House and the CIA in the earlier period as well. For instance, Henry Kissinger testified that he was informed of no coup plan which began with the abduction of General Schneider. He was aware of General Viaux's plan--which he and Karamessines decided on October 15 to try to forestall--but did not know that it was to begin with Schneider's abduction.

CIA officials, especially Thomas Karamessines, stated that there was close consultation throughout Track II between the Agency and the White House. Karamessines testified that he met with Kissinger some six to ten times during the five weeks of Track II (Karamessines testimony, page 66); and that he kept Kissinger generally informed of developments. (Ibid., page 56) The Committee has records of two meetings between Karamessines and Kissinger and of one telephone conversation between Karamessines and Kissinger's deputy, General Alexander Haig. Karamessines' daily calendar indicates that three other meetings with General Haig took place--but does not establish with certainty that the topic was Track II. The calendar also suggests that Karamessines and Kissinger met on three other occasions and so might have had the opportunity to discuss Track II.

Henry Kissinger's testimony before the Committee differs from Karamessines in two respects: He believed Track II was "turned off" on October 15; and, after that date, he was informed neither of the coup plans of the Chilean conspirators nor of the passage of weapons to them. He said that Track II was > in the nature of a probe and not in the nature of a plan,...no plan for a coup was ever submitted to the White House. So my recollection of events, this was a request by President Nixon for Track II which led to two or three meetings which then on October 15th led to being turned off by the White House, after which Track II was dead as far as my office was concerned, and we never received another report on the subject. (Kissinger testimony, p. 15)

> In my mind Track II was finished on October 15th and I never received any further CIA information after October 15th on the basis of any records that I have been able to find. (Ibid., p. 59)

General Haig's testimony generally coincided with Kissinger's recollection:

> I left (the October 15th meeting) with the distinct impression that there was nothing that could be done in this covert area that offered promise or hope for success. I had the distinct impression that was Dr. Kissinger's conclusion, and that in effect these things--and I wasn't even really familiar with what these two groups were to do and how they were to do it, but they were to cease and desist. (Haig testimony, pp. 26-27)
> My recollection would be that we had no hope for a viable, covert plan of action. That is the impression I got. (Ibid., p. 29)

The following pages present the Committee's record of communication between the White House and the CIA from September 18 through December 2:

TOP SECRET

A. September

September 18

Helms and Karamessines met with Kissinger at the White House. As Helms' notes of the September 15 meeting indicate, Kissinger wanted a plan within 48 hours. In the meeting on the 18th, according to CIA records, there was little discussion of a military coup. Rather the conversation focused on "what economic leverage could be exercised in the Chilean situation...." (Memorandum/Meeting with DDP, 18 September)

The efficacy of economic pressure continued to be a subject of concern during the last days of September. Apparently that pressure was viewed as another inducement to Frei to opt for the "Frei gambit."

September 21

The 40 Committee met. The Select Committee has no confirmation that Chile was on the agenda at this meeting. Karamessines' calendar confirms that he attended; presumably Kissinger, the 40 Committee chairman, also attended, although the Committee has not been able to review his calendar. All that can be said about this meeting--and the meetings of the Senior Review Group, which Kissinger also chaired--is that the meetings afforded Karamessines and Kissinger an opportunity to meet privately and discuss Track II if they desired. In all these instances save the 40 Committee meeting on September 22, the Committee has no evidence to confirm that such a private Kissinger/Karamessines meeting actually took place. That the CIA prepared a memorandum of conversation for the private meeting on the 22nd but has been able to find none for other meetings may provide some support for the argument that no other such private meetings occurred.

September 22

Kissinger asked Karamessines to stay behind after a 40 Committee meeting called to discuss Track I. The two men discussed Track II actions, especially the contacts with then-Chilean-President Frei. According to

TOP SECRET

CIA records of the meeting, Kissinger told Karamessines that "our handling of the problem during the earlier meeting had been perfect and he added we were doing fine and keep it up." (Memorandum for the Record/Chile, 22 September 1970, by Thomas Karamessines)

B. October

October 5

A cable sent to Santiago, released by Karamessines, requested a report on how the Station planned to contact the three Chilean Generals --Prats, Valenzuela and Huerta--named in a cable of September 30. (Headquarters 449) The October 5 cable indicated that the report was needed for a discussion with Kissinger on October 6. (Santiago 556, 5 October 1970) Karamessines presumed such a meeting had taken place, although he had no specific memory of it. (Karamessines testimony, pp. 69-70) His calendar for October 6 indicates that he attended a 40 Committee meeting on Chile. (Karamessines calendar) Kissinger chaired the 40 Committee.

October 6

The Station reported that General Viaux was "ready to launch golpe evening 9 October, or morning 10 October." (Santiago 472, 6 October 1970) In response, CIA Headquarters labeled the prospective coup one "with scant chance of success which will vitiate any further more serious action." The Station was directed to try to "stop ill-considered action at this time." (Headquarters 585, 6 October 1970)

Kissinger testified he had not been informed of the Viaux plan, supporting his recollection with the fact that the CIA memorandum of an October 10 conversation between Karamessines and Haig (see below) makes no mention of any previous plots. (Kissinger testimony, p. 24)

Similarly, Kissinger did not remember having been informed that the CIA had called off a coup it regarded as premature. He stated:

> My perception at that period was that if they had a coup they would come...back to us before triggering it...at no time during the period did they, in fact, tell us...that they had a coup that might be ready to go. And, indeed, they generally told us the opposite.
> (Kissinger testimony, pp. 25-26)

As Karamessines' calendar indicated, there was a 40 Committee meeting on October 6. He attended this meeting, along with Richard Helms and William Broe of the CIA. According to the minutes of that meeting, CIA efforts to promote a military coup in Chile were not discussed. However, in an exchange with Charles Meyer, who was then the State Department's Assistant Secretary for Latin American Affairs, Dr. Kissinger stressed the desire of "higher authority" (President Nixon) to prevent Allende's assumption of office. According to the minutes:

> Mr. Meyer pointed to the need to determine a post-Allende position such as proposed in NSSM 97. It was agreed that an early NSC meeting was desirable on that subject. Mr. Kissinger said this presumed total acceptance of a fait accompli and higher authority had no intention of conceding before the 24th; on the contrary, he wanted no stone left unturned. (Memorandum for the Record/Minutes of the Meeting of the 40 Committee, 6 October 1970, 7 October 1970)

October 8

Karamessines met for lunch with General Haig. (Karamessines calendar)

In his testimony, Haig recalled being aware that the CIA was in touch with two differenct groups of military plotters. He believed there must have been another meeting in which the CIA informed him of its on-going contacts.

TOP SECRET

> It seems to me, although the records don't reflect it, that there was a meeting in September, a very brief one, in which I must have been told that there was a specific program going underway. That probably would have been by Henry (Kissinger) and perhaps with Karamessines there. I am not sure. (Haig testimony, p. 12)

October 10

Karamessines discussed the Chilean situation by telephone with General Haig. He indicated that the Station had "made direct contact with a number of the senior military officers, especially those who had been reportedly very activist-minded and had received pessimistic reactions from all." (Memorandum/FUBELT, by William Broe, 10 October 1970)

Haig recalled the telephone conversation with Karamessines on the 10th. His recollection accords with the CIA memorandum of conversation.

> I do know, and I know that from looking at the record this morning, that Karamessines made a telephone call to me in which he gave a progress report. I recall that. It was in effect a negative progress report, that they were just not coming up with it. (Haig testimony, p. 12)

Haig indicated to the Committee that he would have passed along the substance of that conversation to Kissinger, and that in general his role at the time was one of a conduit to Kissinger:

> I am quite confident that, given my own conception of my role at that time, that I would have conveyed that information to Henry,...
> (Haig testimony, p. 13)

> Q. If Mr. Karamessines was unable to see Dr. Kissinger, and talked to you, what degree of latitude did you have concerning what you would pass on to Dr. Kissinger?
>
> General Haig. At that time I would consider I had no degree of latitude, other than to convey to him what had been given to me. (Ibid., p. 15)

October 14

A cable to Santiago for Colonel Wimert, ostensibly from General Bennett, authorized Wimert to select two Chilean general officers and convey to them the following message: "High authority in Washington has authorized you to offer material support short of armed intervention to Chilean Armed Forces in any endeavors they may undertake to prevent the election of Allende on October 24...." (Headquarters to Station cable 762, October 14, 1970) Karamessines testified that in this case "high authority" would have been Kissinger or the President, for no one else could have given Wimert such broad authorization. Karamessines presumed that the message had been drafted in, or at least cleared with, the White House. (Karamessines testimony, p. 91)

However, Kissinger did not recall having authorized the October 14th cable. He found the sequence of events puzzling: having been told on the 10th that little was happening, he would have expected in the meeting on the 15th (see below) to have discussed the results of the October 14th message. But the CIA record makes no mention of any such discussion. (Kissinger testimony, p. 53)

October 14

The 40 Committee met to discuss, among other topics, Chile. In addition to the 40 Committee principals (Kissinger, John Mitchell, David Packard, Alexis Johnson, Admiral Moorer), the meeting was attended by Karamessines, William Broe and General Robert Cushman of the CIA, Charles Meyer from State, Viron Vaky, and Ambassador Korry, who had returned to Washington from Santiago for a short period of consultation.

According to the minutes of that meeting, Kissinger asked Karamessines to give a rundown on the latest developments and present situation in Chile. Karamessines pointed out that "a coup climate does not presently exist." He noted that "the unpredictable General Viaux is the only individual seemingly ready to attempt a coup and...his chances of mounting a successful one were slight." Ambassador Korry agreed with Karamessines' assessment and stated that "as of now it seemed almost certain that Allende would be voted into office on October 24th." Kissinger then observed that "there presently appeared to be little the U.S. can do to influence the Chilean situation one way or another." Other participants at the meeting concurred. (Memorandum for the Record/Minutes of the Meeting of the 40 Committee, 14 October 1970, 16 October 1970)

TOP SECRET

October 15

Karamessines met with Kissinger and Haig at the White House to discuss Track II. According to the CIA memorandum of conversation, Karamessines gave a run-down on Viaux, Canales and Tirado and "the general situation in Chile from the coup-possibility viewpoint." It was concluded that Viaux did not have more than one chance in twenty--perhaps less--to launch a successful coup. Kissinger ticked off the list of negative repercussions from an unsuccessful coup. The CIA record of the meeting continues:

> 5. It was decided by those present that the Agency must get a message to Viaux warning him against any precipitate action. In essence our message was to state: "We have reviewed your plans, and based on your information and ours, we come to the conclusion that your plans for a coup at this time cannot succeed. Failing, they may reduce your capabilities for the future. Preserve your assets. We will stay in touch. The time will come when you with all your other friends can do something. You will continue to have our support."
> 6. After the decision to de-fuse the Viaux coup plot, at least temporarily, Dr. Kissinger instructed Mr. Karamessines to preserve Agency assets in Chile, working clandestinely and securely to maintain the capability for Agency operations against Allende in the future.
>
> 8. The meeting concluded on Dr. Kissinger's note that the Agency should continue keeping the pressure on every Allende weak spot in sight--now, after the 24th of October, after 5 November, and into the future until such time as new marching orders are given. Mr. Karamessines stated that the Agency would comply.
> (Memorandum of Conversation/Dr. Kissinger, Mr. Karamessines, Gen. Haig at the White House, 15 October 1970)

Kissinger, in his testimony before the Committee, regarded the CIA memorandum of conversation as substantially correct, although somewhat more detailed than he would have remembered. (Kissinger testimony, p. 52) He believed the Agency had been told to "stand down and preserve your assets."

Kissinger believed that the gist of the October 15th meeting as recorded in the CIA memorandum was incompatible with the order the CIA issued to its Station the next day, an order ostensibly based on the October 15th meeting. And, he noted, in writing its memorandum of the meeting of the 15th, the CIA had a "high incentive to preserve the maximum degree of authority." (Ibid., pp. 55-56) The October 16th order indicated that Track II had been reviewed at "high USG level" the previous day, and stated:

> 2. It is firm and continuing policy that Allende be overthrown by a coup. It would be much preferable to have this transpire prior to 24 October but efforts in this regard will continue vigorously beyond this date....
>
> 4. There is great and continuing interest in the activities of Tirado, Canales, Valenzuela et al and we wish them optimum good fortune.
> (Headquarters 802, 16 October 1970)

Kissinger recalled the October 15th conversation as "turning off the coup plans rather than giving a new order to do them." (Kissinger testimony, p. 56) Haig agreed in his testimony.

> The conclusions of that meeting were that we had better not do anything rather than something that was not going to succeed....My general feeling was, I left that meeting with the impression that there was nothing authorized."
> (Haig testimony, p. 13)

October 10-October 22 (approximate)

Karamessines and one or two others went with Kissinger to speak with the President, after a larger meeting. Karamessines believed this meeting took place between October 10 and 24. (Karamessines testimony, p. 89) According to Karamessines, the "President went out of his way to impress all of those there with his conviction that it was absolutely essential that the election of Mr. Allende to the presidency be thwarted."* As they were leaving the Oval Office, the President took Karamessines aside to reiterate the message. (Karamessines testimony, p. 8)

October 19

Station cabled Headquarters early in the morning, advising that the tear gas had been passed and outlining the Valenzuela coup plan, beginning with the kidnap of Schneider. In testimony before the Committee, Karamessines indicated he certainly would have reported the Valenzuela plan to Kissinger "very promptly, if for no other reason than that we didn't have all that much promising news to report to the White House...." (Karamessines testimony, p. 72)

> And as I say, if for no other reason we would have wanted to get this kind of hopeful report to the White House as soon as possible, and it would be my best estimate now that that is precisely what we did. (p. 72)

In the afternoon of the 19th, Karamessines met with General Haig for an hour at the White House. (Karamessines calendar) By then, Karamessines would have had in hand the cable outlining the Valenzuela

---

*If the meeting with the President occurred after October 15, that would lend credence to the testimony of CIA officials that they were not directed to end their coup efforts in the October 15th meeting. Unfortunately, the Committee has not had access to the daily calendars of President Nixon or Secretary Kissinger, which might pinpoint the date of the President's conversation with Karamessines. Those calendars, along with other White House documents bearing on Track II, have been subpoenaed.

TOP SECRET

plan, since the cable had arrived that morning. However, General Haig had no recollection of the meeting with Karamessines on the 19th. Nor did he believe he had been informed of the Valenzuela plan. "This is all very new to me. I hadn't seen any of this, and I was not familiar with this particular plan...or $50,000, or any of the characters that are described in here." (Haig testimony, pp. 38-39)

Similarly, Kissinger testified that he had not been informed of the Valenzuela plan. He said he "was informed of nothing after October 15th...." (Kissinger testimony, p. 65) He indicated that, according to his daily calendar, he had no conversation with either Karamessines or Helms between the 15th and the 19th. (Ibid., p. 53) He indicated that he never knew that the CIA was in the process of passing guns and tear gas to Chilean military conspirators. He said "...there was no further meeting on that subject. In anybody's record, mine or theirs (the CIA's), none of the information from the 16th on was familiar to me." (Ibid., p. 62)

Kissinger further testified he did not know that the United States was dealing with Chilean officers who plotted a coup which involved the abduction of General Schneider:

> Senator Hart of Colorado. I am not sure that the record clearly shows you answer to the direct question of whether you knew or did not know that we were negotiating with military officers with regard to a plot that did involve the abduction of General Schneider.
>
> Secretary Kissinger. I said I did not know.
> (Kissinger testimony, p. 86)

Nor did General Haig believe he had been informed of any abduction plans before the fact.

Q. Were you aware during that period of time of the plans to kidnap General Schneider?

General Haig. I was aware after the fact....

Q. But you were never informed prior to his attempted abduction?

General Haig. I don't believe I was at all.

October 20

A cable to the Station indicated that "while awaiting word on whatever events may have occurred 19 October, please let us know what you can on interim basis....Headquarters must respond during morning 20 October to queries from high levels." (Headquarters 883, 20 October 1970) Karamessines testified that the references to "high levels" in the cable of the 20th meant White House officials, probably Kissinger. He felt quite certain that Kissinger would have been briefed in advance about Valenzuela's plan for the 19th and so would have been expected to ask what happened on the morning of the 20th. (Karamessines testimony, p. 73) In contrast, Kissinger interpreted that cable in precisely the opposite light. He felt it indicated that he had not been informed of the Valenzuela plan in advance. When news of the Schneider kidnap reached the White House, Kissinger believed he would have had "somebody pick up a telephone and say, 'What is this all about?'" (Kissinger transcript, p. 68)

October 22

Karamessines met with Haig at the White House. (Karamessines calendar) General Haig remembered that word of the shooting of Schneider came as "a great shock" to him, and he believed that Karamessines had told him about it in their meeting on the 22nd. He thought that Kissinger either was present at the meeting or that he, Haig, had gone immediately in to Kissinger's office to relate what Karamessines had told him. (Haig testimony, p. 36)

C. December

December 2

A memorandum, dated December 2, 1970, from Helms to Kissinger stated that Helms had given a recapitulation on Track II to Attorney General Mitchell, who would deliver it personally to Kissinger. A handwritten note on the memorandum reads: "sent to Kissinger via DCI (Helms)." (Helms memorandum for Kissinger, 2 December 1970) The report, which was dated November 18, 1970, contained a full account of CIA activities during Track II, including the several plans to kidnap Schneider and the passage of weapons to the Chilean conspirators. (Report on CIA Chilean Task Force Activities, 15 September to 3 November 1970, 18 November 1970)

In his testimony to the Committee, Kissinger did not recall receiving the report, although he doubted that he would have read such an "after action" report in any case. He testified that he could not find it in his files, in contrast to his finding a CIA report on Track I, dated November 19, 1970. Kissinger was puzzled by a number of aspects of the memorandum and report: why there were two reports, why the report of the 18th apparently was only called to his attention on the 2nd of December, and why it was to be delivered through Mitchell. (Kissinger testimony, pp. 71, 74)

D. Did Track II End?

The Committee also received conflicting testimony about whether or not Track II ever ended, formally or in fact. As noted above, Kissinger indicated that Track II was supposed to have ended, as far as he was concerned, on October 15. It was formally terminated, according to Kissinger, by a new Presidential marching order issued prior to the October 24 vote of the Chilean Congress.

The Committee does not have this new "marching order" in its possession. However, CIA officials from whom the Committee took testimony believed that there had been no such definitive end to Track II. It merely tapered off, to be replaced by a longer-term effort to effect a change of government in Chile. Karamessines' testimony was most explicit:

> Mr. Karamessines. I am sure that the seeds that were laid in that effort in 1970 had their impact in 1973. I do not have any question about that in my mind either. (Karamessines testimony, p. 26)

> Q. Was Track II ever formally ended? Was there a specific order ending it?
> Mr. Karamessines. As far as I was concerned, Track II was really never ended. What we were told to do in effect was, well, Allende is now President. So Track II, which sought to prevent him from becoming President, was technically out, it was done. But what we were told to do was to continue our efforts. Stay alert, and to do what we could to contribute to the eventual achievement of the objectives and purposes of Track II. That being the case, I don't think it is proper to say that Track II was ended.

When informed of Karamessines' testimony that Track II was never ended, Kissinger testified:

> The Chairman. Would you take issue with that, with the (Karamessines) testimony?
> Secretary Kissinger. Totally....It is clear that...after October 15th that there was no separate channel by the CIA to the White House and that all actions with respect to Chile were taken in the 40 Committee framework. There was no 40 Committee that authorized an approach to or contact with military people, no plots which I am familiar with, and all the covert operations in Chile after Allende's election by the Congress were directed towards maintaining the democratic opposition for the 1976 election. And that was the exclusive thrust, and if there was any further contact with military plotting, it was totally unauthorized and this is the first that I have heard of it. (Kissinger testimony, pp. 75-77)

A. Summary

South Vietnamese President Ngo Dinh Diem and his brother, Ngo Dinh Nhu, were assassinated during a coup by Vietnamese generals on November 2, 1963. Evidence before the Committee indicates that the United States Government offered encouragement for the coup, but neither desired nor was involved in the assassinations. Rather, Diem's assassination appears to have been a spontaneous act by Vietnamese generals, engendered by anger at Diem for refusing to resign or put himself in the custody of the leaders of the coup.

On one occasion, General Duong Van Minh ("Big Minh") outlined to a CIA officer the possible assassination of Nhu and another brother, Ngo Dinh Can, as one of three methods being considered for changing the government in the near future. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge and Deputy Chief of Mission William Trueheart were informed of this possibility by the Saigon Chief of Station, who recommended that "we do not set ourselves irrevocably against the assassination plot, since the other two alternatives mean either a bloodbath in Saigon or a protracted struggle which would rip the Army and the country asunder" (CIA cable SAIG 1447, Saigon Station to DCI, 10/5/63). Upon being informed, Director McCone sent two cables. The first stated "[w]e cannot be in the position of stimulating, approving, or supporting assassination", and the second directed that the recommendation be withdrawn because "we cannot be in position actively condoning such course of action and thereby engaging our responsibility therefor" (CIA cable, DCI to Saigon 10/5/63); CIA cable DIR 73661, DCI to Saigon, 10/6/63).

B. The Abortive Coup of August 1963

On May 8, 1963, South Vietnamese troops in the City of Hue fired on Buddhists protesting against the Diem Government, killing nine and wounding fourteen. This incident triggered a nationwide Buddhist protest and a sharp loss of popular confidence in the Diem regime.*

On May 18, United States Ambassador Frederick E. Nolting met with Diem and outlined steps which the United States desired him to take to redress the Buddhist grievances and recapture public confidence. These steps included admitting responsibility for the Hue incident, compensating the victims, and reaffirming religious equality in the country. (Pentagon Papers, p.208) On June 3, Madame Nhu, the wife of Diem's brother, Nhu, publicly accused the Buddhists of being infiltrated with Communist agents; Truehart protested her remarks to Diem and threatened to dis-associate the United States from any repressive measures against the Buddhists in the future (Pentagon Papers, p.308). Shortly thereafter, Madame Nhu commented on the self-immolation of Quang
